¶ 341. A decision on the hearing of a suit in equity, that complainants are proper parties to the bill, renders the question res judicata in a supplemental proceeding by them in aid of execution based upon the decree in such suit.—Campbell v. Western Electric Co., 113 Mich. 333.

¶ 342. Where a judgment is regularly rendered and not appealed from, it cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the suit should have been brought in the name of a different official plaintiff.—Somers v. Losey, 48 Mich. 294.

¶ 343. A judgment regular on the record but against a minor is not void but voidable for failure to appoint a guardian ad litem.—Schimpf v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 103.

¶ 344. A judgment cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the Christian name of the defendant was nowhere shown in the record—only the initials having been given.—Vicborn v. Pollock, 133 Mich. 524.

§ 107. ——Defects in pleadings.

Conformity of judgment to pleadings, see ante § 13.

Misjoinder of actions, see ante § 103.

¶ 345. Where the pleadings present an issue which it is within the province of the court to determine, his determination cannot be attacked collaterally for the invalidity of counts in the declaration.—Curtis v. Board Sup'rs Charlevoix Co., 154 Mich. 646.

¶ 346. A complaint not technically accurate but sufficient to give jurisdiction is not open to collateral attack.—Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33.

§ 108. ——Defects in notice or process.

Want of notice or process as ground for vacating judgment, see ante § 52.

Defects in notice or process as ground for collateral attack, see post § 108.

Presumptions as to validity and sufficiency of notice or process, see also post §§ 115, 116.

¶ 348. An injunction decree, though erroneous in law wherein it settled on petitions interposed between the complainant and another party certain questions affecting rights of the defendant in the subject-matter, cannot be assailed collaterally by defendant after he has failed to appeal for such errors.—Vincent v. Sherwood, 118 Mich. 64.

¶ 349. The signing of an erroneous order of publication in a divorce proceeding, which, as signed read "four months" instead of "five months," which mistake was corrected by solicitor for the complainant, and as such the order was duly published, does not affect the jurisdiction of the court, as the error was one which could have been corrected by the court under Comp. L. 1897, § 10260, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12969.—Jankovich v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 188 Mich. 284.

¶ 350. Where proper service of declaration has been had in an action begun by declaration, failure to serve notice of the rule to plead is not such a defect as avoids the whole proceeding and subjects the default judgment to collateral attack.—Griffin v. McGavin, 117 Mich. 372.

Terms and amount of judgment, generally, see ante § 28 et seq.

Collateral attack on sentence for excessiveness of costs, see Indictment ¶ 2336.

¶ 351. A judgment, reciting that the amount due plaintiff is for labor in "cutting, skidding, scaling, hauling, and manufacturing the property mentioned in the declaration," is not open to collateral attack on the ground that it includes a claim for scaling and hauling lumber, for which no lien is given by the statute, where the declaration avers the labor to have been performed in "cutting, skidding, scaling, hauling, banking, driving, running, rafting, booming, and manufacturing into lumber, boards, plank, and scantling" all of the lumber in and about a certain mill, the words "scaling" and "hauling," appearing in the judgment entry, being properly referable to labor upon the timber from which the lumber was manufactured.—Backus v. Barber, 107 Mich. 468.

¶ 352. Judgments and decrees cannot be attacked collaterally because they include items which courts, other than those by whom they were rendered, might hold to be illegal.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Phoenix Furniture Co., 108 Mich. 170.

¶ 353. A party to a judgment is precluded by it from going behind it to dispute the grounds on which it was rendered.—Pierson Tp. v. Reynolds Tp. Board, 49 Mich. 224.

¶ 354. The defendants in a suit upon a bond given to release logs in a log lien suit sought to attack the judgment, in so far as costs were included therein, on the ground that the amount of plaintiff's lien, as found by the jury, was less than $100, and that costs should have been awarded to the defendant. Held, that this was at most but an irregularity, remediable only by proceedings in the original suit, and did not render its judgment open to collateral attack.—Gill v. Backus, 108 Mich. 417.

§ 110. ——Irregularities in entering, enrolling or recording judgment.

Necessity and sufficiency of entry, enrollment or record, see ante §§ 35-40.

Necessity and sufficiency of entry or enrollment, see ante § 36 et seq.

¶ 355. Failure to enter all of the orders and papers in the common rule book is a mere irregularity, which can only be attacked by direct proceedings or appeal, and not collaterally.—Curtis v. Board Sup'rs Charlevoix Co., 154 Mich. 646.

¶ 356. A judgment, in a case tried by the court without a jury, which is inadvertently filed before the filing of findings of fact is not void, but may be regarded as in the nature of a provisional action, which only becomes perfected when the findings are completed.—Wisconsin Chair Co. v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 189 Mich. 548.

¶ 358. A judgment entry by default in ejectment that the plaintiff "do recover against the said defendant the possession of the premises aforesaid according to the description thereof contained in the said declaration," etc. (Comp. L. 1871, § 6234, How. St., § 7818), though formally inaccurate in omitting to describe the premises except by reference to the declaration, is not so defective as to render the judgment invalid when attacked collaterally; this imperfection is a mere technical irregularity, and the premises being specifically described in the declaration, and title in fee claimed, the recovery is made certain by the reference to the declaration; this miscarriage in the entry of the judgment is obviated by the statute of amendments (Comp. L. 1871, § 6051, How. St., § 7635). It cannot be said that such a judgment entry does not purport to decide that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession.—Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481.

§ 111. Collateral attack upon particular kinds of decisions.

Upon judgment in replevin for return of property, see ante ¶ 324.

Injunction decree, see also ante ¶ 348.

Invalidity of judgment rendered against infant on stipulation with guardian ad litem waiving irregularities and allowing decree to be taken without answer, see Guardian ad Litem ¶ 41.

Collateral attack on letters of administration, see Estates of Decedents § 32.

Validity of foreclosure decree on collateral attack on letters of representative, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 33.

Conclusiveness of tax decrees against collateral attack, see Taxes.

¶ 360. A mortgagor filed a bill to set aside a statutory foreclosure sale on the ground that the amount claimed to be due in the notice of sale was excessive, and because the sale was made for the principal sum secured by the mortgage, which was not due, as well as for the accrued interest. The court made a decree holding the sale null and void, and permitting the mortgagor to redeem by paying the amount actually due at the date of the notice of sale, less the costs, in default of which payment the bill was to be dismissed. The mortgagor failed to make such payment, and a decree was entered dismissing the bill, from which he did not appeal; whereupon summary proceedings were instituted to recover possession of the mortgaged premises. Held, that the mortgagor cannot attack such decree collaterally, but must be held to have rested satisfied with it as a decree of strict foreclosure.—Huyck v. Graham, 82 Mich. 353.

¶ 361. On an ancillary petition, in proceedings for a receiver to harvest growing crops by the vendor of property against a contract purchaser who was holding over after a judgment against him in summary proceedings, for the payment to plaintiff of the proceeds of a judgment on a bond given by defendant conditioned upon his payment of the proceeds of such crops to the clerk of court if a judgment was entered against defendant in the summary proceedings on appeal, held that the decision of the court in an action on the bond that a court of equity had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver or compel the giving of a bond was binding. —Brown v. Brown, 196 Mich. 677.

¶ 362. The orders, judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States within the scope of their jurisdiction cannot be collaterally impeached; nor need their records and proceedings show jurisdiction. —Ward v. Cozzens, 3 Mich. 252.

¶ 363. A decree of a court of chancery under which complainant's lands were sold for taxes cannot be collaterally attacked.—Carpenter v. Auditor General, 144 Mich. 251.

§ 112. ——Default or pro confesso decrees.

Judgments by default or pro confesso, see ante § 3.

Disqualification of judge as ground for attack, see ante ¶ 311.

Premature default on attachment, see also Attachment §§ 77, 136.

Invalidity of default in attachment on face of the record, see also Attachment ¶ 390.

Collateral attack on pro confesso divorce, see also Divorce ¶ 393.

¶ 364. A pro confesso decree is as binding upon the parties thereto upon all questions involved in the suit as is a contested decree upon the same questions, and since if a party appears and makes defense to a suit by the auditor general for a sale of land for unpaid taxes, and does not appeal from a decree allowing the sale, he cannot attack the decree collaterally, he cannot make a collateral attack upon the decree if he did not appear and defend.—Harrington v. Dickinson, 155 Mich. 161.

§ 113. ——Judgments by confession.

Nature of judgments on confession, see ante § 6.

Judgments on stipulation or agreement as bar or estoppel, see Former Adjudication § 20.

¶ 365. The complainant in foreclosure proceedings who sought priority over a judgment against the mortgagor partnership, entered by confession prior to the recording of the mortgage, was not in a position to successfully question the judgment on the ground that the confession was signed by only one of the partners; the record failing to show that the other partner ever questioned the right of his copartner to confess judgment.—Belcher v. Curtis, 119 Mich. 1.

Amendment of judgments, see ante V.

¶ 366. The court's action permitting such amendment after term is not, though irregular, void for want of jurisdiction; and it cannot be attacked collaterally.—Reynolds v. Reynolds, 115 Mich. 378.

§ 115. Presumptions supporting judgments and decrees.

See also ante ¶ 329.

Necessity that jurisdictional facts appear upon the record, see ante § 40.

Presumption as to authority of attorney to appear, see ante § 105.

Presumption on appeal or error in favor of judgment, see Appeal § 352 et seq.

Presumption on appeal as to penal and forfeiture judgments, see Appeal § 393.

Presumption on appeal as to jurisdiction below, see Appeal § 361.

Presumptions as to jurisdiction in general, see also Courts § 80.

¶ 367. Since equity has no general jurisdiction to grant money decrees, it cannot be presumed what was the basis for a decree on which execution issued.—Kintner v. Pickard, 67 Mich. 125.

¶ 368. Holding of probate court by circuit judge is presumed to have been regular on a record silent as to the statutory grounds for so doing.—Landon v. Comet, 62 Mich. 80.

¶ 369. A judgment dependent on published service pursuant to an affidavit and order cannot be supported by a presumption that there was a sufficient affidavit merely because an order for appearance recites that there was one; since the order and the affidavit being interdependent foundations of the jurisdiction are both essential things to appear affirmatively of record.—Platt v. Stewart, 10 Mich. 260.

¶ 370. An order of the probate court, within its jurisdiction, will, after a lapse of more than 20 years, be presumed to be based on due notice and appearance of the necessary parties.—Lasley v. Preston, 132 Mich. 208.

¶ 371. It cannot be presumed that an order appointing a special guardian was "upon such notice as [the probate judge] shall direct," required by Comp. L. 1897, § 8710, where the order recites that "on reading and filing the petition, duly verified * * * praying" for such appointment it was made, it also appearing that the appointment was made on the same day as the filing.—Devereaux v. Janes, 141 Mich. 265.

¶ 372. Suit was brought upon a statutory bond for discharge from imprisonment conditioned that one of the obligors should, within thirty days, apply for an assignment of his property and a discharge as an insolvent, and diligently prosecute the same until he procured his discharge. The plaintiff gave in evidence a petition for such discharge, dated on the thirtieth day, but so defective as not to confer jurisdiction upon the officer to proceed upon it; also an order made by the officer upon the petition, requiring creditors to appear. Held, that this petition and order raised a presumption that no proper application was made within the prescribed time.—Young v. Stephens, 9 Mich. 500.

¶ 373. A party seeking relief by virtue of the proceedings of a court of inferior jurisdiction must set forth in his pleadings all the facts necessary to show that the court had jurisdiction in the case.—Miles v. Seitz, How. N. P. 55.

¶ 374. The presumption in favor of jurisdiction is overthrown if it appears from the record of a court of general jurisdiction, that a personal decree was rendered against the defendant, that the defendant was out of the court's territorial jurisdiction at the time of the alleged service, so that process could not have reached him, and that he never appeared in the action.—Marshall v. R. M. Owen & Co., 171 Mich. 232.

Presumptions and evidence as to regularity of execution sale, see Executions § 94.

§ 375. Where, in a suit against the board of supervisors of a county, service is had on the deputy clerk, the presumption, upon a collateral attack on the judgment rendered, is that the county clerk was absent, and the service valid under Comp. L. 1897, § 2477.—Curtis v. Board Sup'rs Charlevoix Co., 154 Mich. 646.

¶ 376. All intendments should be indulged in favor of the legality of judicial action when attacked collaterally where it appears that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties.—Stegeman v. Fraser, 161 Mich. 35.

¶ 377. Where the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, all possible intendments will be made in support of the judgment, and only jurisdictional defects appearing on the face of the judgment record can be attacked collaterally.—Curtis v. Board Sup'rs Charlevoix Co., 154 Mich. 646.

¶ 378. The presumption that official action is regular applies to justices of the peace when it appears that jurisdiction has attached.—Saunders v. Tioga Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 520; Love v. Wood, 55 Mich. 451.

¶ 379. Where no attempt has been made to have an attachment dissolved, it is presumed in a collateral suit that there were valid grounds for its issue.—Van Kleeck v. McCabe, 87 Mich. 599.

¶ 380. A decree rendered upon the merits, notwithstanding a previous voluntary order of discontinuance made without leave or notice, cannot be questioned collaterally, if at all; it is presumed the court knew of the order and intended to disregard it.—Newark v. Newark, 22 Mich. 292.

§ 117. Verity of record; parol evidence to explain or vary.

Necessity and sufficiency of record, see ante §§ 39, 40.

Presumptions in support of judgment, see ante § 116.

Necessity and sufficiency of showing of jurisdiction in record of inferior court judgments, see also Courts § 79.

Necessity and sufficiency of showing in the record of jurisdiction in special and statutory proceedings, see Courts § 79.

Judgments and judicial records as documentary evidence, see Evidence §§ 544-546.

Parol evidence in action for money that judgment on which it was realized was recovered for assignor plaintiff's benefit, see Evidence ¶ 1070.

Conclusiveness and effect of returns to process, see Attachment § 75; Executions § 111; Process, II, D.

Admissibility of extrinsic evidence to show or rebut bar or estoppel by judgment, see Former Adjudication § 97.

Sufficiency of record of foreign judgment to show jurisdiction, and presumptions on the record, see Foreign Judgments § 6.

¶ 381. When a court of record has jurisdiction, no proof can be given in opposition to the record; and it seems that this rule applies to a justice's docket.—Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

¶ 382. When the written entries or files in the nature of a record, or constituting a record, furnish the only written evidence of the character of the proceeding, or of the identity of the tribunal, they must, when compatible with the general jurisdiction and course of such court, be necessarily conclusive in a collateral inquiry as to those points.—Richards v. Morton, 18 Mich. 255.

¶ 383. Where the judgment record recites that the judgment was rendered at a regular term of court, and no evidence is introduced to show that under Act No. 168, Pub. Acts 1887, the circuit judge had appointed another time for the term of court, the record imports absolute verity, and the judgment will be deemed as rendered at a regular term despite previous adjournments of court by the clerk, in the absence of the judge, which might indicate the contrary.—Curtis v. Board Sup'rs Charlevoix Co., 154 Mich. 646.

¶ 384. Evidence is admissible to show the assent of a party to and his understanding of a consent decree, not to vary the decree, but to establish that it was not entered without his knowledge and approval.—Owen v. Yale, 75 Mich. 256.

¶ 385. Parol evidence is inadmissible to supply a jurisdictional defect.—New York Baptist Union v. Atwell, 95 Mich. 239.

¶ 386. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or explain a justice's docket so as to give him jurisdiction that does not appear on its face.—Toliver v. Brownell, 94 Mich. 577; Holmes v. Cole, 95 Mich. 272.

¶ 387. Where the record of the judgment in another cause is introduced in evidence in a cause, parol evidence is not admissible to supply jurisdictional defects. The record must be complete in itself.—Montgomery v. Merrill, 36 Mich. 97; Mudge v. Yaples, 58 Mich. 307.

Right of stockholder to show aliunde the record that judgment against corporation invalid, see ante ¶ 300.

¶ 389. The record of an inferior court may be contradicted for the purpose of showing a want of jurisdiction of the person or of the subject-matter.—Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

¶ 390. A judgment which on its face shows jurisdiction imports absolute verity when attacked collaterally, and cannot be impeached by parol testimony that the court had no jurisdiction of the party against whom it was rendered.—Allured v. Voller, 112 Mich. 357.

¶ 391. Parol testimony to impeach, for want of jurisdiction of the party against whom it was rendered, a judgment that on its face shows jurisdiction, is inadmissible.—Allured v. Voller, 112 Mich. 357.

¶ 392. Parol evidence is admissible to contradict a return of personal service made by a private person.—Campbell v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 247.

¶ 393. The files in attachment proceedings, including the affidavit upon which the writ is based, may be introduced to impeach the docket entries and to show that the attachment judgment was void.—Dutcher v. Grand Rapids Fire-Ins. Co., 131 Mich. 671.

§ 120. Retroactive operation or effect of judgment or decree.

¶ 394. A decree for specific performance cannot relate back so as to make him a trespasser who was in possession under the holder of the legal title.—Goetchius v. Sanborn, 46 Mich. 330.

VIII. LIEN AND DURATION.

Recitals as to lien upon realty as affecting lien upon personalty, see ante ¶ 88.
General law as to liens, see Liens.
Lien of attorney on judgment, see Attorneys §§ 46-56.
Attorney's lien as equitable assignment, see Attorneys § 47.

Duration of lien of levy with respect to duration of judgment, see Executions § 31.
Validity of sale after ten years on levy made during ten-year period, see also Executions ¶ 163.
Bar of judgment by time as barring execution, see Executions § 6.
Priority of chattel mortgage over judgment, see Chattel Mortgages, III.

¶ 395. A judgment in this state creates no lien.—Campau v. Barnard, 25 Mich. 381; West v. Laraway, 28 Mich. 464; Udell v. Kahn, 31 Mich. 195.

¶ 397. A judgment erroneously declared to constitute a lien under the log lien act, but unsupported by necessary findings, may be sustained as an ordinary personal judgment. —Demars v. Conrad, 73 Mich. 151.

¶ 398. The act of a court proceeding under a void mechanics' lien law (Laws 1887, Act No. 270) in the form of an ordinary action of assumpsit for materials in giving a personal judgment and by consent adjudging that it was lien on the land, is coram non judice in so far as it adjudges a lien, though valid as to the personal judgment.—Kirkwood v. Hoxie, 95 Mich. 62.

IX. ASSIGNMENT AND DEVOLUTION.

As affecting rights of set-off of judgment, see post § 132.
Assignment as carrying incidentally the release bond in attachment, see Attachment ¶ 165.
Assignment of judgment to one of defendants to creditors' bill as bar to bill, see Creditors' Suits ¶ 115.
Contract to find leviable property for share of proceeds as pro tanto assignment of judgment, see Contracts ¶ 881.
Effect of assignment of invalid certificate of execution sale to carry assignment of the judgment, see Executions ¶ 205.
Assignment of right as affecting right to set-off executions, see Executions § 106.
Assignment of foreclosure decrees and rights thereunder, see Foreclosure § 105.
Provisions as to acknowledging and recording assignments, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 127; Comp L. 1915, § 12942.

¶ 399. An assignment by one partner of a part of a judgment owned by the firm is good in equity against the judgment debtor.—Line v. McCall, 126 Mich. 497.

¶ 400. An assignment of a part interest in a judgment by one member of a partnership and an agreement by the partnership to pay 15 per cent of the amount recovered to other parties enables the assignees and the parties in interest to interfere to set aside a compromise and settlement made without their consent.—Line v. McCall, 126 Mich. 497.

¶ 401. An agreement between attorney and client for compensation to former out of prospective judgment operates as an assignment of judgment to extent of attorney's claims.—Weeks v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 73 Mich. 256.

§ 124. Rights of assignee.

Right of assignee of judgment to maintain creditors' suit on return of execution made before assignment, see Creditors' Suits ¶ 38.

Parties in creditors' suits by assignees, see Creditors' Suits § 24.

¶ 402. An assignee of a judgment takes with knowledge that it may be reversed on error and is in no better position than the assignor.—Bennett v. Hanley, 91 Mich. 143.

¶ 403. An assignee of a judgment takes subject to such matters of set-off as existed in favor of the judgment debtor against the assignor up to the time when the debtor received notice of the assignment.—Finn v. Corbitt, 36 Mich. 318.

¶ 404. Judgment cannot be discharged after assignment of a part interest therein, so as to cut off the assignee's rights without his asset, the debtor having notice of the assignment.—Line v. McCall, 126 Mich. 497.

¶ 405. Where a complainant has voluntarily assigned a regular decree in his favor, the assignee must resort to the court to obtain the benefit of it.—Terry v. McClintock, 41 Mich. 492.

¶ 406. Where the judgment creditor has assigned the demand upon which the judgment was rendered, to secure a debt of equal amount, the assignee alone, or those succeeding to his rights, can bring suit in equity to enforce the judgment.—Andrews v. Kibbee, 12 Mich. 94.

¶ 409. Where a judgment had been assigned and was afterward paid to the attorneys of the judgment creditor, who had knowledge of its assignment, they cannot set up as a defense to an action of trespass on the case for its amount, that a right of action on the case is not assignable since no assignment was made after such right of action accrued.—Reynolds v. Cavanagh, 139 Mich. 387.

X. REVIVAL.

Release of imprisoned judgment debtor as revival of judgment, see post ¶ 415.

Scire facias, see Scire Facias.

Revivor of actions and suits, see Abatement §§ 19, 20; Equity §§ 63, 233 et seq.

Suggestion of death nunc pro tunc, see also Abatement ¶ 83.

Taking out execution before reviving suit, see Abatement ¶ 88.

Effect of revivor of partition decree to adjust accounting, see also Abatement ¶ 106.

Revivor nunc pro tunc to cure issuance of levy before revival, see also Executions ¶ 300.

¶ 410. Defendants were defaulted May 14, 1897. On June 13, 1910, plaintiff without notice to defendants obtained judgment against defendants on the strength of the former default. Held, that the judgment had been outlawed and could not be renewed without result and service of process.—Hoeft v. Kock, 171 Mich. 564.

¶ 411. Omission to revive suit before taking out an execution after plaintiff's death may be cured by an order nunc pro tunc.—Jenness v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 469.

XI. PAYMENT, DISCHARGE AND SET-OFFS.

§ 127. In general; sufficiency of satisfaction or tender.

Equitable relief from satisfied or discharged judgment, see ante § 83.

Effect as against assignee of judgment of discharge after assignment, see ante ¶ 404.

Acceptance of smaller sum than face as settlement by attorney, see Attorneys § 24.

Effect of arrest on capias as satisfaction of the debt, see also Creditors' Suits ¶ 78.
Payment of judgment by indemnitee as condition to recovery against indemnitor, see Indemnity § 5.
Discharge of bond conditioned on payment of decree in foreclosure proceedings, see Indemnity § 9.
General law as to payment, see Payment.
Provisions as to acknowledging payment and satisfaction, see Jud. Act, chap. XXII, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 12808.

¶ 412. A tender for the purpose of canceling a judgment should include damages as well as costs, and a tender of the damages with the clerk's receipts for the costs is not sufficient.—Thurber v. Jewett, 3 Mich. 295.

¶ 413. The attorney of a judgment defendant paid the judgment with his own means, on the plaintiff's attorney agreeing that if he was not reimbursed by the defendant he should return the satisfaction and have his money repaid him, he neglected, however, to take an assignment of the judgment for his protection. Plaintiff supposed the judgment had been satisfied. Held, that the payment must, as far as plaintiff was concerned, be considered as one by defendant, and sufficient to cancel the judgment.—Rogers v. Welte, 61 Mich. 258.

¶ 414. A chancery decree directed the payment of a certain sum of money to complainants, or their solicitor, within a stated time. Defendant failed to pay or tender the amount to complainants, and refused to pay it to their solicitor, although complainants gave the solicitor written authority to receive the money, which he showed to defendant, and demanded payment. On the last day fixed for payment, defendant deposited with the register in chancery the amount claimed to be due, and notified complainants of such deposit, the validity of which they refused to recognize. Defendant thereupon filed a petition praying the court to adjudge the decree paid and discharged. Held, that an order finding that defendant had substantially performed all of the requirements of the decree, and declaring it satisfied and discharged of record, cannot be sustained.—Lewis v. Kean, 102 Mich. 605.

Enforcement of judgment by final process, see post § 136.

¶ 415. The imprisonment of a defendant on a body execution issued on a judgment in a civil suit is a satisfaction of the debt, and his discharge by reason of plaintiff's failure on demand to pay the expenses of his board and keeping will not revive the judgment.—Strawsine v. Salsbury, 75 Mich. 542.

¶ 417. The levy of an execution upon sufficient personal property to pay the demand is prima facie a satisfaction of the judgment.—Spafford v. Beach, 2 D. 150; and see Henry v. Gregory, 29 Mich. 68.

¶ 418. The levy of an execution upon sufficient personal property to pay the demand is not conclusive evidence of satisfaction of the judgment.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank of Michigan v. Kingsley, 2 D. 379.

¶ 419. A levy on personal property sufficient to satisfy the execution will not operate as a satisfaction of the judgment where the property is left in charge of the execution debtor, and by some act for which he is responsible, or in which he acquiesces, it is placed beyond the power of the officer, or when the debtor converts it to his own use, or where he has not been actually divested of the property.—Lustfield v. Ball, 103 Mich. 17.

¶ 420. A levy on real estate of the debtor is not a prima facie satisfaction of the judgment.—Spafford v. Beach, 2 D. 150; Thurber v. Jewett, 3 Mich. 295; Ackerman v. Pfent, 145 Mich. 710.

¶ 421. One cannot claim that a judgment is satisfied by a levy which he has himself unlawfully defeated.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

¶ 422. Where separate judgments are obtained against two or more joint trespassers, the suing out of execution on one of them is an election by the plaintiff to enforce that judgment; and no action will afterwards lie on the others.—Boardman v. Acer, 13 Mich. 77.

§ 129. Satisfaction of judgment of restitution or in specie.

§ 130. Effect of payment, discharge or satisfaction.

Discharge of judgment by new agreement as bar to creditors' suit, see Creditors' Suits ¶ 11.
Voluntary payment of judgment as bar to objections to defect in execution thereon, see Executions ¶ 296.
Liability of garnishee paying plaintiff under void judgment, see Garnishment § 119.
Liability of garnishee respecting money paid on invalid judgment subsequently vacated, see Garnishment ¶ 352.

Right of party paying judgment to contribution from other judgment defendants, see Indemnity, § 13 et seq.
Provisions as to ordering decrees discharged, see Jud. Act, chap. XXII, § 20; Comp L. 1915, § 12809.

¶ 424. Voluntary payment of a judgment waives all objections to it, and there can be no relief.—Hoag v. Breman, 8 Mich. 160.

¶ 425. On a showing of payment in full to plaintiff's attorney of a judgment, and of his authority to receive the same, a perpetual stay of proceedings is justifiable.—Whitney v. McConnell, 30 Mich. 421.

¶ 426. Discontinuance of a writ of error, or payment or settlement of a judgment, not vacating it, leaves its judicial force as res adjudicata unimpaired.—Cummerford v. Paulus, 66 Mich. 648.

¶ 427. A. and B. being sued as makers of a note, A. employed an attorney and conducted the defense without help from B., taking a successful appeal and obtaining judgment for costs. B., who was insolvent, collusively receipted to plaintiff for the costs in the name of both defendants. Held, that the satisfaction should be set aside and a retaxation ordered in A.'s favor, and to protect the interests of A.'s attorney, to whom A. had turned over the bill of costs.—Potter v. Hunt, 68 Mich. 242.

§ 132. Set-off of judgments.

Set-off against assignee of judgment, see ante ¶ 403.
Set-offs and recoupment in the action, see Set-off.
Set-off of executions, see Executions § 106.
Power of other court to entertain bill to offset judgments, see Courts § 74.
Averments as to amount in controversy in bill to offset judgments, see also Equity § 84.

¶ 428. A set-off against a judgment cannot be made in equity of demands which might have been proved in reduction of plaintiff's claim in the former suit but for laches.—McGraw v. Pettibone, 10 Mich. 530.

¶ 429. Whether, since the adoption of Comp. L. 1871, § 6125, How. St., § 7710, governing the set-off of executions, there is any propriety in resorting to equity for the set-off of judgments, in the absence of special reasons, quære; at any rate, equity can give the moving party no greater advantages than the statute does.—Wells v. Elsam, 40 Mich. 218.

¶ 430. A judgment assigned by a client to his attorney, in payment for the latter's services, cannot be subjected to the set-off of a judgment recovered against the client, so far as it does not exceed the attorney's proper claims.—Wells v. Elsam, 40 Mich. 218; Kinney v. Tabor, 62 Mich. 517.

¶ 430a. The satisfaction of a judgment may be wholly or partly produced by setting off a judgment against the judgment creditor in favor of the judgment debtor; and the judgments so sought to be set off against each other need not have been rendered in the same court.—Robinson v. Kunkleman, 117 Mich. 193.

¶ 432. Where, under How. St., § 7709, the sheriff has allowed a set-off of an execution against a larger one in his hands, and has received in money the balance of the latter, with the consent of both parties, and has returned the latter satisfied, it was error on a motion to set aside such return on the ground that the larger judgment had been previously assigned, and that consent to the set-off was given by mistake. A bill or other procedure is necessary in such case.—Lyon v. Smith, 66 Mich. 676.

¶ 433. Where a judgment allowed to be taken for the full amount of a claim without deduction for payments has been assigned, a judgment subsequently obtained against the assignor in a suit to recover such payments cannot be set off against it in an action thereon by the assignee.—Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316.

¶ 434. If a defendant allows judgment to be taken for the full amount of a claim against him without setting up payments he has made thereon, he cannot set up such payments in an action afterwards brought by an assignee of the judgment, nor can he set off against such judgment a subsequent judgment obtained by him in a suit to recover back such payments from the assignor.—Huntoon v. Russell, 41 Mich. 316.

Effect of opening or vacating judgment, see also ante § 68.
Provision for order of restitution of money paid under judgment afterward reversed, see Jud. Act, chap. XXII, § 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 12797.

¶ 435. Since in respect to judgments of the circuit court there is no statute corresponding to Comp. L. 1897, § 951, providing for an order of restitution of money paid on a justice's judgment afterward reversed or vacated, where a litigant has been compelled to pay costs by means of process issued upon a void judgment, his only remedy is to bring an independent action for such amount.—Swantek v. Jarmozski, 174 Mich. 698.

XII. ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE.

Kinds of judgments on which garnishment lies, see Garnishment § 7.
Judgment as garnishable debt, see Garnishment § 37.
Stay of proceedings upon judgment, see Stay of Proceedings.

¶ 436. A judgment rendered in favor of A. by mistake for B. cannot be sued on by B. even if the mistake be proved.—Gilbert v. Hanford, 13 Mich. 40.

¶ 437. Henry V. Libhart is not entitled to recover in an action upon a judgment in favor of H. V. Libhart, without any allegation or proof of his identity with the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered. —Bennett v. Libhart, 27 Mich. 489.

§ 135. Enforcement of federal decisions in state courts.

¶ 438. Where a federal court has rendered judgment against a township upon bonds issued by the latter the state courts will compel an apportionment, between such township and a new one set off therefrom, of the liability under such judgment, although such courts would not in the first instance have rendered judgment upon the bonds, because of the unconstitutionality of the statute that authorized them.—Township of Grant v. Township of Reno, 107 Mich. 409.

§ 136. Possessory and execution or other final process.

Levy of execution or arrest of debtor as payment or discharge, see ante § 128.
General law as to executions, see Executions.
Execution on justices' judgments, see Justices of the Peace, IV, H.

Inclusion of contract damages in judgment by consent as preventing capias to enforce it, see Civil Arrest ¶ 121a.
Writs of scire facias, see Scire Facias.

¶ 439. One in possession under a forged deed can claim no rights, and, notwithstanding improvements, ejectment need not be resorted to for possession after a decree against him; a writ of restitution is enough. —Crawford v. Hoeft, 58 Mich. 1.

Amendment nunc pro tunc of default order in action on judgment, see ante ¶ 145.
Actions on foreign judgments, see Foreign Judgments, III.
Question of fact as to settlement by attorney with authority, see also Attorneys ¶ 72.
Defense that plaintiff holds by illegal assignment to bring suit as attorney, see also Assignments ¶ 103.

Action at law on alimony decrees, see Divorce § 183.
Judgment against deceased res adjudicata upon the estate in an action upon the judgment, see Former Adjudication ¶ 392.
Necessity of enrollment of decree before issuance of process or procedure to enforce it, see 1916 C. C. Rule 55, § 1.

¶ 440. An action at law does not lie for damages resulting from the neglect to obey a decree requiring the specific performance of a contract, where the decree itself was unwarranted, as where it has been charged on an ex parte application and without notice to the defendant.—Berry v. Innes, 46 Mich. 518.

¶ 440a. An action of debt lies on a judgment recovered before a justice of the peace immediately on its rendition, notwithstanding execution upon it has been stayed pursuant to the statute.—McDonald v. Butler, 3 Mich. 558.

Variance as to date of judgment in suit thereon, see also Equity ¶ 649.

¶ 441. Where the parties in interest to a decree remain unchanged, and no new rights have arisen, a defendant interested in having the decree executed should proceed by petition. But where a third person has acquired an interest in the decree, a bill is necessary to bring him before the court.—Griggs v. D. & M. Ry. Co., 10 Mich. 117.

¶ 442. A judgment must be declared on specially, and cannot be sued on the common counts.—Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439.

¶ 443. Though by statute assumpsit may be brought, a judgment must be declared on specially and with accuracy. The count on an account stated will not lie thereon.—Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439.

¶ 444. Declarations on justices' judgments require no further allegations as to jurisdiction than would be necessary in declaring on judgments of courts of record.—Goodsell v. Leonard, 23 Mich. 374.

¶ 445. Failure to allege in a declaration upon a judgment, the name of the plaintiff, the date of rendition of judgment and that it is in force, is ground for demurrer, which is waived by filing the general issue.—Smith v. Cowles, 123 Mich. 4.

¶ 446. The failure to identify in a special count the judgment upon which an action is brought, is not aided by a notice given under the common counts.—Smith v. Cowles, 123 Mich. 4.

Proof in garnishment of judgment against principal debtor, see ante ¶ 114.

Judgment roll or record, see ante ¶ 39 et seq.

Mode of proving judgments, see Evidence §§ 545, 546.

Provisions as to admission in evidence of certified copies of judgment record, Jud. Act, chap. XVII, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12517.

¶ 447. In an action upon a justice's judgment stated in the docket entry to have been entered on confession without process, the files are competent evidence to show the insufficient character of the writing which was treated as a confession.—Dodge v. Bird, 19 Mich. 518.

¶ 448b. Under the proper entitling of a cause with the names of the parties, an award of judgment was entered as follows: "It is therefore considered that the said P. do recover of the said D. the sum," etc. Debt being brought on this judgment it was held that the entry did not show with sufficient certainty in whose favor and against whom the judgment was rendered, and that therefore a transcript thereof offered in evidence was inadmissible.—Rood v. Bloomfield School Dist. No. 7, 1 D. 502.

¶ 449. In a proceeding to enforce a decree rendered several years previously, it was held that defendant should have been permitted to introduce proof that through change in conditions the provisions of the decree had become inequitable.—Pinel v. Pinel, 178 Mich. 596.

¶ 450. The fact that the judgment was received in evidence by consent does not preclude the defendant from disputing the right to recover on it; proof of the judgment was only one of the steps necessary to make out a case.—Bennett v. Libhart, 27 Mich. 489.

¶ 450a. In an action on a judgment for the surplus left from proceeds of mortgaged land conveyed to the mortgagee and sold by him under agreement to pay the mortgage debt and account for the surplus, where it stood established by the judgment sued on that the conveyance was a mortgage, it is immaterial that the property was obtained by an exchange with the mortgagee or how it was paid for.—Hunt v. Middlesworth, 44 Mich. 448.

¶ 450b. On exchanging real estate one of the parties gave notes secured by a mortgage upon that which he received, but afterwards, being unable to pay them, reconveyed the property on an oral agreement that the other party should sell it, satisfy the mortgage from the proceeds, and pay him the surplus. The latter sold the property, but did not pay over the surplus, and the former recovered judgment for it in another state, on which judgment he afterwards brought suit in this state. Held, that the plaintiff's right to recover in the former suit was based on the fact that the reconveyance was meant only as a mortgage; and hence that defendant's offer in the latter suit to show how the property was paid for when first conveyed was rendered immaterial by the judgment; and that in the later suit the defendant's offer of the reconveyance to show that he was entitled to wheat growing on the land, and to the rent of the premises to the date of their sale, the plaintiff having kept possession, was properly rejected, it having been adjudged that the conveyance was only a mortgage, and that the mortgagee had received the full amount of his debt, and since the matter might have been litigated in the first suit.—Hunt v. Middlesworth, 44 Mich. 448.

Injunction to prevent unauthorized sale, see Injunctions § 67.

¶ 1. Chancery Rule 80, in forbidding proceedings to enforce a decree before its enrollment, does not refer to orders of the court, but to proceedings in execution of the decree itself, as by sale; advertising and other preliminaries are allowed in advance of enrollment.—Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 Mich. 232.

¶ 2. Under a decree authorizing a sale of lands by a commissioner "according to the course and practice" of the court "in such convenient and reasonable parcels" as in his opinion would be most conducive to the interest of all parties, a sale upon a notice which fails to give any description of the lands, and by putting up and striking off numerous and distinct bodies upon one offer and bid, is unwarranted and illegal.—Griswold v. Fuller, 33 Mich. 268.

¶ 4. Whether, where the probate judge refused an administrator's petition to sell real estate to pay debts, but authorized a mortgage, that court afterwards, upon the administrator's failure to effect a mortgage, could, after continuances without a new petition and notice, act upon the prayer it had before denied, and grant a license to sell, quære; the court being equally divided.—Cahill v. Bassett, 66 Mich. 407, affirming decision below that it was valid.

¶ 5. Whether a notice of an administrator's sale of lands that is defective because for too short a time of publication can be cured by adjournment of the sale and further publications with an underwritten notice of adjournment, quære: the court being equally divided.—Cahill v. Bassett, 66 Mich. 407.

¶ 6. A judicial sale of separate tracts or parcels of land as one contrary to statute, is voidable only and not void, and cannot be attacked collaterally.—Brown v. O'Donnell, 123 Mich. 100.

¶ 7. The fact that an executor before the sale secured an agreement to bid does not bear against the good faith of the purchasers. Such an agreement would not prevent higher bids.—Norman v. Olney, 64 Mich. 553.

¶ 8. A master having charge of a sale under a decree in chancery of property of large value at the end of a prolonged litigation is not bound at the last moment to postpone the sale in response to a dispatch from a stranger. Pewabic Mining Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 36 L. ed. 732, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887.

§ 3. Right to bid and bidding.

Invalidity of agreement to suppress competition in bidding, see Contracts § 87.

¶ 9. At a sale made by a special master under a decree in chancery either party may bid without leave given by the court.—Pewabic Mining Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 36 L. ed. 732, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887.

¶ 11. The court will not for any light or technical reason disturb a sale consummated at the end of seven years of litigation.—Pewabic Mining Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 36 L. ed. 732, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887.

¶ 12. A sale under a decree in chancery will not be set aside for mere inadequacy of price unless so great as to shock the conscience.—Pewabic Mining Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 36 L. ed. 732, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887.

¶ 13. A sale will not necessarily be set aside because made at a time of severe financial depression, especially at the instance of a party who by strenuous resistance has long delayed such sale.—Pewabic Mining Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 36 L. ed. 732, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887.

¶ 14. General equity rule 83 (U. S. courts) does not refer to a report by a master of a mere ministerial matter like a sale, and the sale will be confirmed upon application unless cause is shown against it within eight days from service of an order nisi.—Pewabic Mining Co. v. ¶ 16. The purchaser at sales under decrees and judgments is not concerned with anything except the judgment, levy and sale. All other questions are between the parties to the judgment and the officer.—Crane v. Hardy, 1 Mich. 56.

¶ 16a. Where a sale of land belonging to an infant was made without authority of court, the mere fact that she received one hundred dollars of the proceeds after she was twenty-one years old, and that considerable time elapsed after she became of full age without action on her part, does not constitute legal ground for holding that she is estopped to object to a confirmation of the sale made by the person claiming to act in capacity of next friend.—In re Flynn's Estate, 171 Mich. 136.

§ 7. Liability for wrongful sale.

§ 17. Where an officer of court has authority to make a sale, e. g., a receiver or assignee in bankruptcy, he is liable in trover if he actually makes a sale, and subsequently refuses to deliver the property sold.—Ives v. Tregent, 29 Mich. 390.

¶ 1. The constitutional provision that "the right of trial by jury shall remain" means the right as it had become known to the previous jurisprudence of the state.—Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443.

¶ 2. All the safeguards ordinarily attaching to jury trials are implied in the use of the term "jury" in the constitutional provisions on this subject.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108; People v. Mangold, 71 Mich. 335.

¶ 3. The remedy provided by the fraudulent debtors' act is not a criminal proceeding; and therefore the statute is not void for requiring it to be carried on before a judicial officer without a jury.—Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

¶ 4. Litigants are entitled to have a jury constituted in substantial conformity with the law as established; and violations of the positive provisions enacted to secure the right of trial by jury cannot be regarded as harmless irregularities.—Hewitt v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 71 Mich. 287.

¶ 5. Cases holding that the legislature may not impair the right of trial by jury have no application to an engagement between a mutual benefit association and a member that the decision of a specially constituted committee or tribunal upon a death claim shall be final.—Hembeau v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 101 Mich. 161.

¶ 6. The constitutional number of jurors is twelve, except in courts that are not courts of record (Const. art. VI, § 28). In a court of record a conviction by less than twelve jurors, where twelve were demanded, must be quashed.—People v. Luby, 56 Mich. 551.

¶ 7. The Wayne County Juvenile Court Act, No. 684, Local Acts 1907, is unconstitutional in so far as it attempts to provide for the trial by a jury of six of offenses committed against children.—Robison v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 151 Mich. 315.

Right under constitution to jury of vicinage, see Constitutional Law § 210.

¶ 9. On organizing a new county out of territory belonging to an existing county it is competent for the legislature to provide for the retention by the circuit court for the old county of a pending suit in ejectment for land embraced in the new.—Spalding v. Kelly, 66 Mich. 693.

¶ 10. Act No. 225, Pub. Acts 1901, authorizing the joining as defendants of nonresidents of the county in which the action is brought, is not in violation of section 27, of art. VI of the Constitution, guaranteeing a trial by a jury of the vicinage.—Halladay v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 436.

¶ 11. Act No. 82, Laws 1873, enables the receiver of an assessment insurance company to bring suit against members in the court appointing him, and to serve them with process anywhere in the state. Held, the act is not unconstitutional as robbing a member of trial by jury in his home county.—Nichol v. Newman, 160 Mich. 582.

¶ 12. The constitutional provisions (art. VI, §§ 27, 28) in regard to the right of trial by jury are not infringed by a change of venue in a criminal case on the application of the people for cause shown.—People v. Peterson, 93 Mich. 27; People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593.

¶ 13. The tax law of 1893 (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206) is not unconstitutional, as depriving a landowner of the right of trial by jury in an action of ejectment, in providing for a writ of assistance on a decree of chancery for the sale of lands for delinquent taxes.—Ball v. Ridge Copper Co., 118 Mich. 7; Youngs v. Peters, 118 Mich. 45.

¶ 14. Under the rule of Ball v. Ridge Copper Co., 118 Mich. 7, the Tax Law of 1893 (Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206), authorizing the issuance of a writ of assistance is not void as denying trial by jury.—Hooker v. Bond, 118 Mich. 255.

¶ 15. In a proceeding to enjoin continuing trespass with damages, the court has power to call a jury and take its advice as to damages.—Hall v. Nester, 122 Mich. 141.

Jury for laying out private road, see Highways § 416.

¶ 16. The respondent in disbarment proceedings is not entitled to a jury trial.—In re Shepard, 109 Mich. 631.

¶ 17. An action of debt before a justice of the peace to recover a penalty under the prohibitory Liquor Law of 1853, § 5, was not a criminal prosecution within the meaning of Const. art. VI, § 28; so defendant was not entitled to a jury without paying the fees therefor.—People v. Hoffman, 3 Mich. 248.

General law of contempt, see Contempt.

¶ 18. The respondent in a proceeding to punish for contempt of court is not entitled to a jury trial.—In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588.

§ 8. On retrial of referred case.

On retrial after remand, see Appeal § 552, ¶ 2361.

¶ 19. A previous reference and trial thereon had before a referee under a stipulation will not cut off the right to a jury trial where a new trial has been ordered on reversal by the supreme court.—Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 Mich. 243.

§ 9. On appeal from probate.

Impropriety of submitting matters within discretion of probate judge, see also Estates of Decedents ¶ 1074.

Practice in submitting questions, see Probate Courts, III.

Provisions as to jury on appeals from probate, see Jud. Act, chap. LXV, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 14155.

¶ 20. When the trial of an appeal in probate matter involves questions of fact, a party is entitled, under statute, to a jury if he insists upon it.—Grovier v. Hall, 23 Mich. 7; Norton v. Sherman, 58 Mich. 549; Wisner v. Mabley's Estate, 70 Mich. 271.

¶ 21. Upon an appeal from the probate to the circuit court in a case where unintentional omission from a will is claimed, a party is entitled to have all questions of fact tried by a jury.—In re Stebbin's Estate, 94 Mich. 304.

¶ 22. Disputed questions of fact on appeal from decisions of the probate court must be tried by jury if either party requests.—Nowland v. Rice's Estate, 138 Mich. 146.

¶ 22a. Under How. St. §§ 6314, 6315, specific issues should be left to jury on appeal from order granting guardianship of incompetent person.—Storick's Case, 64 Mich. 685.

¶ 22b. If the jury, called on appeal from a probate order, disagrees, the court should call another jury on request of either party.—Grovier v. Hall, 23 Mich. 7.

§ 10. Demand and waiver in criminal cases.

In civil cases, see post § 11.

Waiver of objections to drawing of jurors, see post § 55.

Waiver and cure of objections to juror, see post § 71.

Waiver of jury in trial for crime before justice, see Indictment § 652.

¶ 23. The right of one charged with crime to be tried by a jury is imperative, and cannot be waived.—People v. Jackson, 8 Mich. 110.

¶ 24. A person accused of crime cannot waive any essential of the right of trial by jury.—Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443.

¶ 25. A person charged in the recorder's court of Detroit with an offense against the general laws of the state cannot waive his right to a trial by jury, notwithstanding a charter provision requiring jury trial unless such right "be, with consent of the court, waived."—People v. Smith, 9 Mich. 193.

¶ 26. It is incompetent for one on trial for crime in a court of record to waive his constitutional right of a trial by twelve duly qualified jurors.—Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351.

¶ 28. The constitutional provision preserving the right of trial by jury does not, in criminal cases triable before a justice of the peace, preclude a trial by a justice without a jury if defendant expressly so elects. But it seems that it does not authorize any waiver of a jury to be implied from the defendant's silence or his mere failure to demand a jury, notwithstanding the authority given to the justice by Comp. L. 1871, § 5530, How. St. § 7097, to proceed to try the issue and determine the case "if no jury be demanded."—Ward v. People, 30 Mich. 116.

¶ 29. A person accused of crime has no constitutional right that requires the court to dispense with the aid of a jury in the trial of questions of fact.—City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135.

¶ 30. Under How. St. § 6485, providing for the trial before a jury of all actions of tort "and all other actions the subject matters whereof are, in the opinion of the court, peculiarly proper for the consideration of a jury," the defendant in a prosecution before the superior court of Grand Rapids for violating a city ordinance cannot waive a jury and insist on a trial by the court.—City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135.

¶ 31. Where the statute gives the accused his choice of jury trial or trial by the justice without jury, the right is substantial, and the court cannot deprive him of it by ordering a jury after he has waived trial thereby.—People v. Steele, 94 Mich. 437.

§ 11. Demand and waiver in civil cases.

Waiver and cure of objections to juror, see post § 71.

Demand for jury after special appearance as rendering it a general one, see Appearance § 7, ¶ 19.

¶ 32. Comp. L. 1857, § 3635, How St. § 6783, does not prevent a trial by the court without a jury if neither party demands one.—American Baptist Missionary Union v. Peck, 9 Mich. 445.

¶ 33. Constitutional provision, art. VI, § 27, does not, by implication forbid a jury trial where the demand is not made in due season.—Van Sickle v. Kellogg, 19 Mich. 49.

¶ 34. The right to a jury trial is not, even in a civil case, waived by failing to demand it, where no method of demand is prescribed, or where the conditions make the constitutional provision inapplicable or impracticable.—Odell v. Reynolds, 40 Mich. 21.

¶ 35. The right to trial by jury is waived in civil cases by neglecting to demand it, and if the judge orders one for his own satisfaction it does not concern the parties. But where neither party has demanded a jury, the assignment of the case for a particular day in term is a plain intimation that no jury will be called.—People ex rel. Mabley v. Detroit Superior Judge, 41 Mich. 31.

¶ 36. Under Const. art. VI, § 27, providing that the right of trial by jury "shall be deemed to be waived in all civil cases unless demanded by one of the parties in such manner as shall be prescribed by law," it is competent for the court to assess damages after interlocutory judgment without calling a jury, if none is demanded.—O'Flynn v. Holmes, 8 Mich. 95.

¶ 37. The right to a jury trial is voluntarily waived where, according to the bill of exceptions, defendant's counsel, being engaged in a trial in another court, asks to have the case set down for trial by court at a later day, which is done, and trial is had by the court accordingly without objection from defendant, and where there is no record of any application by him to have the trial adjourned.—Hudson v. Roos, 72 Mich. 363.

¶ 38. Where a cause is placed on the circuit court nonjury calendar for the September term, and is adjourned from time to time until it is tried on December 9th, a party is not entitled to have the case tried by jury from the fact that he had the case noticed for trial at the December term with a demand for a jury trial.—In re McNamara's Estate, 166 Mich. 451; McNamara v. Michigan Trust Co., Id.

¶ 39. The constitutional provision in regard to waiver of jury in cases where one is not demanded relates to the ordinary trial by jury in civil actions, and is not applicable to condemnation proceedings.—Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. v. Callanan, 61 Mich. 12.

§ 12. ——Payment or tender of jury fees.

Compensation of jurymen, see post § 75.

Payment and taxation of jury fees, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 12594.

¶ 40. Payment of the jury fee at the time the demand is made necessary to make the demand valid.—Odell v. Reynolds, 40 Mich. 21.

II. ELIGIBILITY, GENERAL QUALIFICATIONS AND EXEMPTIONS FROM JURY SERVICE.

§ 13. In general; constitutional and statutory provisions.

Presumptions as to qualifications, see post § 20.

Persons to be placed on jury lists, see also post § 41.

Constitutional qualifications of jurors, see Constitutional Law § 209.

Qualifications of jurors in street opening proceedings, see Highways § 78.

Provisions as to period for which jurors to serve, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 128; Comp. L. 1915, § 12197.

¶ 41. In Michigan the qualifications of jurors are expressly prescribed by statute, and may be changed from time to time.—People v. Collins, 166 Mich. 4.

§ 14. Assessment and payment of taxes as qualification.

Selecting names for jury lists from assessment rolls, see post § 41.

¶ 42. The fact that a juror summoned as a talesman was not named on any of the assessment rolls of the county either for the year in which the trial took place or for any preceding year did not disqualify him from jury duty.—Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63.

¶ 43. It is good ground of challenge for cause that the name of a juror chosen from the regular panel does not appear upon the assessment roll of his township or ward, as required by How. St. §§ 7554, 7555.—Schlacker v. Ashland Iron Min. Co., 89 Mich. 253.

¶ 44. It is a ground for challenge that a juror is not on the assessment rolls of the county and that he was not a taxpayer in the county (How. St. §§ 7554, 7555).—People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652.

¶ 45. The discharge of a talesman on the ground of not being a taxpayer is error in the absence of showing that he failed to possess the necessary qualifications of an elector.—Reed v. Peacock, 123 Mich. 244.

§ 15. Citizenship, alienage or disfranchisement.

Mistrial resulting from presence of alien on panel, see ante ¶ 8.

Discharge of alien juror, see also post ¶¶ 192, 193.

Rights and disabilities of aliens generally, see Aliens.

Eligibility of electors, see Elections, III.

Provisions as to right of alien to jury of part aliens or strangers, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 23; Comp. L. 1915, § 12595.

¶ 46. An alien, who is not an elector, is not a competent juror.—Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351.

¶ 47. An alien can be a juror if he can vote (How. St. § 7555).—People v. Rosevear, 56 Mich. 158.

¶ 48. A juror, like an elector, may be a foreigner not yet naturalized, but who has declared his intention to become a citizen; the simple fact of alienage does not disqualify him, and nothing will be presumed against his right to act (Const. art. VII, § 1).—People v. Scott, 56 Mich. 154.

¶ 49. Under Laws 1893, Act No. 204, § 5, which provides that the persons whose names shall be returned by the board of jury commissioners shall have the qualifications of "electors" in the town or ward in which they reside and for which they are returned by said board, a person so drawn who is an elector, though not a full citizen, is eligible to sit as a juror.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 50. Where a talesman has resided in Michigan for the period prior to November 8, 1894, specified in section 1, art. III of the Michigan Constitution, and has declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States at the time specified in said section, thereby becoming an elector, he is duly qualified to serve as a juror.—People v. Collins, 166 Mich. 4.

¶ 51. The disqualification of a juror to sit in a civil case, by reason of noncitizenship, cannot be taken advantage of even though his incompetency was not discovered until after judgment.—Neal v. Neal, 181 Mich. 114.

§ 16. Residence or domicile of juror.

Necessity that juror be a citizen, see ante § 15.

Domicile or residence of juror, see Domicile.

¶ 52. Where a regularly drawn juror swears that his wife and children, who are in another city, are residing there only temporarily in order to educate their children, and that he has never intended to change his residence, he should be regarded as qualified, although he voted in such other city a year before the trial.—People v. Johnson, 81 Mich. 573.

¶ 53. An elector of a township who removes to another township in the same county less than ten days prior to being summoned as a juror under an order made pursuant to How. St. § 7580, directing the sheriff to summon a certain number of persons from among the neighboring citizens, having the qualifications of jurors, to complete the panel, does not cease to be an elector so as to disqualify him from serving as such juror.—People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70.

Disqualification of juror who has previously served, see post § 38.

¶ 54. A juror who has already sat upon one trial during the same term is not challengeable under Laws 1869, p. 106, § 3, authorizing the challenge of those who have served upon the regular panel within the year. The service intended is for a whole term and not merely one case.—Burden v. People, 26 Mich. 162.

¶ 55. Whether a talesman who has sat upon one case during the term may be challenged for that cause if called again during the same term, quære. But it is not error to reject him.—Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 Mich. 308.

¶ 56. How. St. § 7584a, in providing that it shall be a ground for challenge if a juror has already served in the same court within a year, excludes one who has served as talesman in a street-opening case.—Williams v. City of Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 271.

¶ 57. That a juror has served as a juror upon the regular panel in the same court within a year previous to the challenge is good ground of challenge by express provision of How. St. § 7584.—People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652.

§ 18. Exemptions from jury service.

Discharging or excusing venireman from service, see post § 52.

Persons exempt from jury service, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 138; Comp. L. 1915, § 12207.

¶ 58. The exemption of justices of the peace from jury duty is a privilege personal to the jurors, and not the subject of challenge for cause.—People v. Lange, 90 Mich. 454.

Effect of placing exempt jurors on lists, see post § 42.

Excusing aged juror from service, see also post § 52.

Effect of instructing jury officers not to return names of persons over sixty years of age, see post ¶ 126.

¶ 59. The presence upon jury of talesman over sixty years of age is not ground for challenge to the array, but will sustain a challenge for cause, as the only persons qualified for talesmen are those who are not exempt from jury duty (How. St. § 7555).—People v. Baumann, 52 Mich. 584.

¶ 60. A juror is not subject to a challenge for cause because he is over sixty years of age, and therefore exempt from jury duty under How. St. § 7571; since the right to claim such exemption is a personal privilege of the juror.—People v. Rawn, 90 Mich. 377.

Correcting dictum in People v. Baumann, 52 Mich. 584.

¶ 61. It is not error for the court to discharge on a challenge for cause persons returned as jurors who are over sixty years of age, and therefore by statute (How. St. § 7555) improperly returned and also by statute (How. St. § 7571) exempt, particularly where the discharged jurors had expressed a desire to be excused.—McGrail v. City of Kalamazoo, 94 Mich. 52.

§ 20. Presumptions as to qualifications.

Burden of proof on examination of jurors, see post § 66.

Presumptions on appeal or error, see Appeal § 362; Indictment § 617.

¶ 62. The record in error showed that talesmen were called and sworn on a jury, but did not show that they had the requisite qualification of jurors. It was held—no challenge appearing to have been taken on that ground—that they must be presumed to have been properly qualified.—The Milwaukie v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

¶ 63. The competency of a juror will be presumed in civil cases, in the absence of proof to the contrary.—Neal v. Neal, 181 Mich. 114.

III. DISQUALIFICATIONS RESPECTING THE CAUSE.

Presumptions and burden of proof as to qualifications, see post § 66.

Validity of stipulation to remove disqualification of juror in condemnation proceedings, see Eminent Domain ¶ 276.

Juror as interpreter of witness's testimony, see Examination of Witnesses § 19, ¶ 84.

§ 21. Prejudice, bias or interest.

Challenges for cause, see post § 58.

Examination of juror to ascertain bias, prejudice or interest, see post § 68.

Waiver and cure of objections to juror, see post § 71.

Disqualification of electors, taxpayers or inhabitants of municipal corporation involved in the litigation, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, §§ 26, 27; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12598, 12599.

¶ 64. It is within the discretion of a court to sustain a challenge for cause where the juror is shown to have been seen talking with the agent of the adverse party and the agent suspended the conversation on the appearance of opposing counsel.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 65. An examination of a juror disclosing acquaintance with a party to an action, and slight business relation with such party, as well as reluctance to act as juror, does not disqualify the person from acting when he states that he can and will give a verdict in accordance with the evidence.—Brennan v. O'Brien, 121 Mich. 491.

¶ 66. One who entertains such a prejudice against a liquor seller that he cannot give his testimony the same credit that he would to that of a person not engaged in the business of selling liquors is not a competent juror in an action against a liquor seller for damages from an injury caused by an intoxicated man.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 67. A nephew of one of the parties is an incompetent juror at the common law.—Hasceig v. Tripp, 20 Mich. 216.

¶ 68. A juror in a criminal prosecution is not rendered incompetent by the fact that he is an own cousin of the prosecuting attorney within the second degree of consanguinity.—People v. Waller, 70 Mich. 237.

§ 24. ——Employer, employee or associate of party.

¶ 70. A juror who is an employee of the defendant is disqualified to sit.—Pearce v. Quincy Min. Co., 149 Mich. 112.

¶ 71. An employee of a corporation which owns stock in and actively controls and manages another corporation is disqualified to sit as a juror in a case in which the latter corporation is a party.—Peklenk v. Isle Royale Copper Co., 187 Mich. 644.

§ 25. ——Membership in lodge or association.

¶ 72. Membership of a juror in a lodge of Odd Fellows other than that of which the plaintiff in a suit, who sues as assignee of the lodge, is a member, is not ground for challenge.—Reed v. Peacock, 123 Mich. 244.

§ 26. ——Special interest in outcome of suit.

¶ 73. In an action against a mutual fire insurance company, members thereof who will be assessed for the loss if the company loses the case, are incompetent to sit as jurors.—Martin v. Farmers' Mut. Fire-Ins. Co. of Calhoun Co., 139 Mich. 148.

¶ 74 If, in a street-opening case, a juror is specially interested he is disqualified, and may be challenged for cause.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 355.

§ 27. ——Taxpayers in action involving county or city.

Freeholder qualification of condemnation jurors, see Eminent Domain § 79.

Making inhabitants competent as jurors where county is party, denial of impartial jury, see Constitutional Law § 192.

¶ 75. Jurors are not incompetent at common law because they are taxpayers of a city which is a party to the proceeding.—City of Detroit v. Detroit Ry., 134 Mich. 11.

§ 28. Opinion as to merits of civil case.

Challenges for cause, see post § 58.

¶ 76. In determining a juror's qualifications the sources of his information as to the merits of the case are important.—Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371.

¶ 77. A juror in a civil case testified on his voir dire that he had known both parties intimately for a long time; that he had talked with many different persons about the case, but had not discussed its merits; that the persons talked with had expressed an opinion to him, and he had also expressed an opinion based upon what he had heard; that he had formed a sort of an opinion, which it would take some evidence to remove, if what he had heard was true, but that it was not so fixed that he would not be governed by the evidence. On cross-examination he testified that he did not know as he had formed any opinion upon the merits; that he might have formed some impression; that he presumed he could not try the case as impartially between the parties as if he had not heard of it and formed said impression. It did not appear that the juror had conversed with either of the parties or their friends, or with any one having knowledge of the facts. Held, that the juror was not legally disqualified.—Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371.

¶ 78. In an action against a village for injuries sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk, a juror testified, upon his voir dire, that, while plaintiff had told him that she had been injured upon the walk, he knew nothing about the circumstances, had formed no opinion, was not prejudiced in her favor, and could try the case impartially; whereupon he was accepted as a juror. Verdict having passed for plaintiff, defendant's counsel moved for a new trial, and, in support of his motion, submitted affidavits showing that, when advised as to the cause of the injury, such juror had asked plaintiff why she did not sue the village, to which plaintiff replied that she had brought suit, although she had deferred action for some time on the ground that the village had promised to settle. Held, that there was no error in denying the motion.—Will v. Village of Mendon, 108 Mich. 251.

§ 29. Reading or discussion of case or similar cases.

¶ 79. Jurors are not rendered incompetent by reading during a trial for negligent injuries newspaper items giving the amount of the verdict in a former trial of the same cause.—Sherwood v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 88 Mich. 108.

§ 30. Opinion as to subject-matter or issues in cases.

¶ 80. A person who has formed and holds an opinion that mill-dams generally in that part of the country are nuisances, and that all he is acquainted with are such, is not a competent juror for the trial of an indictment for nuisance in keeping up a mill-dam, though he states that he is not much acquainted with the dam in question, and has not formed or expressed any opinion in regard to it.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

§ 31. ——Impressions or views on liquor question or liquor laws.

Examining juror as to views on liquor laws or liquor question, see post § 68.

¶ 81. In an action for selling liquor to a minor a juror who "is not exactly in favor of enforcing the law," though he thinks "they should go according to law if he was a minor," and who confesses a prejudice against the law, though he thinks he can render a verdict according to the law and the evidence, is challengeable for cause.—Theisen v. Johns, 72 Mich. 285.

¶ 82. In an action for selling liquor to a minor a juror who believes that "a minor is as well able to buy a glass of beer or whisky as a man of forty," and who confesses that he is not in favor of enforcing the law, is not a proper juror, although upon inquiry by the court he states that he thinks he can render a verdict in accordance with the law and the evidence.—Theisen v. Johns, 72 Mich. 285.

¶ 83. Where, in a prosecution for keeping open saloon on Sunday, a juror's examination on his voir dire shows that he has a prejudice against liquor selling and therefore to some extent against respondent on account of his business, a challenge for cause should be allowed.—People v. Wheeler, 96 Mich. 1.

¶ 84. Upon a trial for violating the local option law, a juror is not disqualified who, when examined, says that he voted for such law, or that he favors such law and the enforcement of it, or that he is opposed to the saloon business, or that he believes in prohibition, or that he has conscientious scruples against the saloon business.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 85. A juror in a prosecution for violating the local option liquor law is not disqualified who states that he understands the local option law to be in force, or that he knows a local option election was held, and that he knows the result of such election was to supersede the general statute respecting the sale of intoxicants.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 86. In a suit under Comp. Laws 1897, § 5398, to recover damages for the illegal sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband, it is not error for the court to excuse for cause a venireman where it appears upon his voir dire that he has been previously engaged in the saloon business and is opposed to some provisions of the liquor laws.—Pearson v. Schoenburg, 167 Mich. 255.

§ 32. Opinion or belief that crime was committed by someone.

Opinions as to guilt or innocence of accused, see post § 34 et seq.

¶ 87. A juror's belief that the crime with which the prisoner is charged has been committed by someone is not ground for a challenge for cause.—Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63.

§ 33. Opinion as to cause of alleged victim's death.

¶ 89. Upon a prosecution for murder by poisoning it appeared from the examination of a juror that he had talked with a member of the coroner's jury, who had told him the facts as he understood them; that he had talked with many other persons, and had been told that poison had been found in the stomach of the deceased, and had believed what they told him to be true, and that it would require evidence to remove the opinion formed from such statements. Held, that the juror should have been excused for cause though he expressed a belief that he could decide on the evidence alone.—People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652.

¶ 90. The language used in this case to the effect that a juror who believed poison was found in the stomach of a person for whose murder respondent was on trial could not be said to be in a condition to "act fairly," etc., is not a correct statement of the law, although the ruling in the case is correct.—People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556.

¶ 91. Where, in a prosecution for murder by poisoning, a juror testifies on his voir dire that from what he heard it is his impression, which it might take evidence to remove, that deceased died from the effect of poison, that he had no impression as to respondent's guilt or innocence and that he has no such fixed opinion as to the death from poisoning that he cannot give respondent a fair and impartial trial, a challenge for cause is properly overruled.—People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556.

§ 34. Opinions and impressions as to guilt or innocence of accused.

Belief or opinions respecting the corpus delicti, see ante § 32.

Challenges for cause, see post § 58.

Examining talesman to ascertain impressions as to guilt of accused, see post § 69.

¶ 92. The law does not require a juror to be entirely unimpressed with any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, on trial, but simply that he shall not have an opinion of such a fixed and definite character as to leave a bias on his mind which will preclude his giving due weight to the presumption of innocence.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

¶ 93. A juror who is so impressed with the guilt of the accused as to need evidence to overcome his impressions is not impartial; and it is useless to ask him whether he can return a just and impartial verdict. —Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739.

¶ 94. A juror's opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused must not be such as will prevent his giving due weight to the presumption of innocence.—Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739.

¶ 95. The opinion entertained by a juror which disqualifies him is an opinion of that fixed character which repels the presumption of innocence in a criminal case, and by which in the juror's mind the accused stands condemned already.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277.

¶ 96. Where a juror challenged for opinion shows by his answer that he has no definite recollections there is no apparent ground for holding him disqualified.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

¶ 97. A juror who testifies that he has "an opinion favorable to the guilt of the accused" which "requires evidence to remove" is partial and incompetent.—People v. Shufelt, 61 Mich. 237.

¶ 98. A juror has no impressions that will disqualify him if he says he could neither acquit nor convict without knowing more of the case.—People v. Gage, 62 Mich. 271.

¶ 99. The statement of one called as a juror that he has formed a partial opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, from rumors heard in the streets, but not a positive opinion, does not establish his incompetency.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

¶ 100. A juror who has no fixed or positive belief, but who would have an opinion if rumors that he has heard are true, is not incompetent.—People v. Shufelt, 61 Mich. 237.

¶ 101. Where, after a jury is sworn, the case is continued for some weeks, and the jury allowed to separate, and on their reassembling the respondent is permitted to challenge jurors for cause, a challenge to a juror who admits that he has heard some talk about the case upon both sides, which he could not narrate, having heard so many stories, but that he had heard people talking about the public sentiment about the case, in which conversations he took no part, and did not think he had been influenced thereby, should be allowed.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367.

¶ 102. In a prosecution for illegal sale of liquor and keeping a saloon, a juror should be excluded who, upon his examination, says that he knows respondent, that he supposes he is running a saloon, that he understands from what he has heard that he has been running it since May 1, and that he supposes from what he has heard that he sells intoxicating liquors there.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 103. A juror is not disqualified because he has formed an opinion as to the guilt of the accused, where it appears that such opinion is based upon hearsay, and is not fixed or positive, and he swears that he can render a fair and impartial verdict according to the evidence.—People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556.

¶ 104. A juror is not disqualified by reason of the fact that he did not disclose on his examination that on the day following a murder he called on an errand of his own at the house where occurred an assault by the deceased on the respondent preceding the killing, where the fact of the killing was discussed, but not the details, without the juror knowing that the respondent had been accused thereof, and without his expressing an opinion as to the former's guilt or innocence.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

¶ 105. A juror who believes that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence is not disqualified by having read a newspaper item from which he has formed an opinion which, though not of a fixed character, it would take evidence to remove.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

¶ 106. One is not disqualified from serving as a juror in a criminal case simply because he has heard and read about the case, and has formed an impression based upon what he has heard and read, if the impression is not of that fixed character which repels the presumption of innocence. —People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652.

¶ 108. A juror is not disqualified from serving where he testifies that he has an opinion as to the guilt of the accused, formed from the reading of newspapers, but that the impression was not of such a fixed character that he could not give the respondent the benefit of the presumption of innocence and render an impartial verdict based upon the evidence in the case.—People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625.

Examining jurors as to their willingness to follow rules of proof, see post § 67.

¶ 109. A juror who states that if the evidence were about equally balanced he would render a verdict of guilty, is incompetent. —People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556.

§ 38. Previous service as juror.

¶ 110. Where a jury in condemnation proceedings disagree, and are discharged, the members of the panel are disqualified to sit as jurors in new proceedings to condemn the same land for the purposes mentioned in the first petition.—Hester v. Chambers, 84 Mich. 562.

¶ 111. Jurors who have sat in one case for resisting an officer are disqualified from sitting in a case of assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder against another respondent involving the same state of facts.—People v. Troy, 96 Mich. 530.

¶ 112. In a prosecution for perjury alleged to have been committed by accused in testifying in his own behalf in a prosecution for bribery of which charge he was acquitted, jurors are not disqualified to sit because they have acted as jurors in another bribery case connected with the same matter in which a conviction was had, on the ground that they may have a fixed opinion that there was a corrupt plan to commit bribery, since the acquittal was conclusive that accused had no connection with such plan if there was one.—People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678.

¶ 113. The fact that the issue in one case relates to the bribery of E, and in the other to the bribery of M, both based on the same conspiracy and depending upon the same witnesses and the same testimony, does not render jurors who sat in one case competent to sit in the other.—People v. Mol, 137 Mich. 692.

¶ 114. Under Const. art. VI, § 28, giving accused the right to trial by an impartial jury, jurors who have sat in a prior case involving the same conspiracy, charging the same offense and depending upon the same witnesses and the same testimony the only difference being in the person of the accused, are not competent to sit, since they cannot be said to be "impartial" after having rendered a verdict of guilty on the same evidence in the prior case.—People v. Mol, 137 Mich. 692.

¶ 115. It is not error to refuse to sustain a challenge for cause made against jurors who state that they have no fixed opinion, and no bias or prejudice against the accused, in an assault case although they acted in another case where another person was charged with keeping a house of ill fame, and the accused was an inmate of the house. —People v. Williams, 118 Mich. 692.

¶ 116. It is not good ground for a challenge for cause that the juror has already been peremptorily challenged upon the trial of another prisoner charged with the same crime; it cannot be assumed that it will prejudice him in a different case.—Cargen v. People, 39 Mich. 549.

IV. JURY LISTS, SUMMONING, ATTENDANCE, AND DISCHARGE OF VENIREMEN.

Penalty for failure of juror to attend, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 146; Comp. L. 1915, § 12215; Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 12742.

Provisions as to making lists, see Jud. Act, chap. II, §§ 120-125; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12189-12194.
Lists of jurors in cities under commission form, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 125; Comp. L. 1915, § 12194.
Provisions as to preparing jury lists in upper peninsula, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14596-14600.

¶ 117. How. St. § 7554 did not repeal the provision in the charter of East Saginaw (Local Acts 1869, p. 432) requiring the city assessor to prepare the jury list from that city, and, if it did, the repealed provision was re-enacted by Local Laws 1885, p. 365, § 5.—Hewitt v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 71 Mich. 287.

¶ 119. Under the charter of Alpena (Laws 1871, Act No. 249) which constitutes as officers a comptroller, who is ex officio assessor, one supervisor in each ward and two aldermen in each ward, and How. St. § 7554, providing the "supervisor or assessors, as the case may be, and aldermen" shall make the jury list, it should be made up by the Alpena supervisors and aldermen without the comptroller.—People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593.

¶ 120. The officer who makes the jury list must be disinterested, consequently when there is serious doubt of an officer's fairness he should not be employed to choose jurors. —People v. Felker, 61 Mich. 114.

¶ 121. Act No. 58, Pub. Acts 1905, relating to jury commissioners, provides for a board consisting of three persons. A question having arisen as to who were the legally appointed jury commissioners for a certain county, the five men claiming said office met and selected a jury list. Three of these were legally entitled to the office. Defendant was convicted by a jury selected from said list. Held, the list was made up in violation of section 7 of said Act and the conviction must be reversed.—People v. Tonnelier, 167 Mich. 638.

General qualifications, eligibility and exemptions of jurymen, see ante § 13 et seq.
Provisions as to persons to be selected for jury lists, see Jud. Act, chap. II, §§ 121, 122; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12190, 12222.
Listing of persons who served during previous year to be avoided, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 123; Comp. L. 1915, § 1292.

¶ 122. The list of names from which a petit jury was drawn was selected from the assessment rolls of 1892, instead of 1893, as required by the statute, and a challenge to the array was interposed on that ground. It appeared that a majority of the names selected were names of persons admittedly eligible. Held, that that was sufficient and the challenge not sustainable; that if the result was that a sufficient number of qualified jurors did not attend upon the court, How. St. §§ 7575, 7576, 7578 and 7580, point out the procedure in cases where from any cause this happens.—Niles v. Schoolcraft Circuit Judge, 102 Mich. 328.

¶ 123. The fact that jury lists do not show that the names were taken from the proper assessment roll is not ground for challenge to the array, where it does not appear that any of such jurors were persons who were not assessed on the roll.—Smaltz v. Boyce, 109 Mich. 382.

¶ 124. The fact that the names of the jurors were not selected from the assessment rolls for the year in which the jury was drawn is not ground for a challenge to the array where such rolls were not completed at the time of the drawing.—Eberts v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 182 Mich. 449.

§ 42. Validity and sufficiency of lists.

Validity of list improperly certified, see post ¶ 131.

Disqualification of person making jury list, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 120; Comp. L. 1915, § 12189.

¶ 125. An excess of jurors returned does not invalidate the list.—Hewitt v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 71 Mich. 287.

¶ 126. A jury list is not rendered invalid by the fact that the county clerk instructed the returning officers not to return the names of persons over sixty years of age, since by How. St. § 7571, such persons are exempt from jury duty, and since section 7555, forbids the listing of persons so exempt. Whether even an erroneous instruction by the clerk would support a challenge to the array, quære.—Smaltz v. Boyce, 109 Mich. 382.

Effect of excess of jurors on lists, see ante § 42.

Number of jurors to be drawn, see post § 50.

Number of names to be placed on lists, see Jud. Act, chap. II, §§ 122, 153; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12191, 12222.

Number of names to be selected in counties of upper peninsula, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14598.

¶ 127. How. St. § 7556 provides that the jury lists "shall contain not less than one for every 100 inhabitants of such township or ward, computing according to the last preceding census, and having regard to the population of the county, so that the whole number of jurors selected in the county shall amount to at least 100, and not exceeding 400, one-half of whom shall be designated as petit jurors, and one-half as grand jurors." Held, that where the population of a county exceeds 40,000, as shown by such census, the ratio of population to the juror must be increased; that an excess of jurors returned is ground of challenge to the array, but does not wholly invalidate the list, which may be corrected by striking off all names listed below the statutory number first appearing.—Hewitt v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 71 Mich. 287.

¶ 128. Where a challenge to the array is interposed on the ground that an excessive number of jurors has been returned from certain townships, it is not error for the court to order the clerk to reduce the excessive lists by striking therefrom all names below the number appearing thereon to which said townships are respectively entitled.—People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593.

Challenge to array based on insufficiency of affidavit accompanying lists, see post ¶ 137.

Provisions as to filing lists by county clerk, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 127; Comp. L. 1915, § 12196.

Duty of clerk to destroy old names upon receipt of new lists, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 129; Comp L. 1915, § 12198.

Signing and filing jury lists in upper peninsula, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14600.

¶ 129. A challenge to the array cannot be based on the officer's neglect to return jury lists from certain townships in the county.—People v. Coffman, 59 Mich. 1.

¶ 130. Under Act No. 58, Pub. Acts 1905, relating to jury commissioners for Berrien County, it is not necessary that the jury list after it is made up should be kept secret.—People v. Tonnelier, 167 Mich. 638.

¶ 131. A jury list for a given ward is not void merely because it is certified by the supervisor alone.—Smaltz v. Boyce, 109 Mich. 382.

¶ 132. It is not ground for challenge to the array that the jury list from a given ward was returned by the supervisor and one alderman, where it does not appear that they did not constitute a majority of those charged with the duty of making the return.—Smaltz v. Boyce, 109 Mich. 382.

¶ 133. It is no ground of challenge to the array that the jury lists were not returned until after the time designated by law.—Thomas v. People, 39 Mich. 309.

¶ 134. Under Pub. Acts 1893, No. 201, authorizing the circuit judge to direct the return of new jury lists when the current lists are declared illegal for any reason, it is competent for the circuit judge to make such determination on his own motion, and to order the return of new lists.—Smaltz v. Boyce, 109 Mich. 382.

¶ 136. The fact that an order for the return of jury lists directs the lists to be made by the aldermen and "supervisors," instead of aldermen and "assessing officers," of wards in cities, is not ground for challenge to the array, where those words mean the same and it does not appear that any of the supervisors who returned the lists were not assessing officers.—Smaltz v. Boyce, 109 Mich. 382.

Persons authorized to prepare jury lists, see ante § 40.

Drawing jurors to complete panel, see post § 49.

Challenge to array for irregularities in drawing jury, see also post § 57.

Provisions as to drawing jurors, see Jud. Act, chap. II, §§ 130-142; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12199-12211.

Drawing jurors in counties having population of two hundred thousand or more, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 148; Comp. L. 1915, § 12217.

§ 46. ——Officer or person to perform duty.

Officer or person to prepare lists, see ante § 40.

Officer or person to return lists, see ante § 44.

¶ 138. Under How. St. § 7567, it is the duty of the clerk to draw the names of the jurors from the box, and it is cause for challenge to the array that the sheriff drew the names.—People v. Labadie, 66 Mich. 702.

¶ 139. A sheriff is not disqualified from acting upon a commission for drawing talesmen in a criminal case because his name is indorsed on the information as a witness for the people.—People v. Summers, 115 Mich. 537.

¶ 140. A jury drawn in the circuit court of Wayne County by a member of the board of jury commissioners, although in the presence of the county clerk, was illegal and subject to challenge, as not being in compliance with Pub. Acts 1903, No. 31, § 3, which requires the county clerk of such county to impanel the jury for such court.—Fornia v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 140 Mich. 631.

§ 47. ——Method and conduct of drawing.

Method of drawing additional jurors, see post § 51.

By and in whose presence drawing to be made, see Jud. Act, chap. II, §§ 132, 134; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12201, 12203.

Method and conduct of drawing, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 135; Comp. L. 1915, § 12204.

¶ 141. Comp. L. 1871, § 6020, How. St. § 7600, provides that when a jury has been sworn to try an issue the ballots containing their names shall be kept apart from the other ballots until the jury is discharged. Held, that it is not necessary to wait until the jury is discharged and the ballots returned to the slip-box before proceeding to draw another jury from the slip-box for the trial of the next case, whether criminal or civil.—People v. Craig, 48 Mich. 502.

¶ 142. Where two persons have been indicted jointly and have demanded separate trials, and one has been tried and the jury discharged, it seems that the clerk of the court is not bound to return the names of the jurors to the slip-box before drawing a jury for the trial of the other.—People v. Craig, 48 Mich. 502.

¶ 144. A challenge to the array cannot be based on the omission of the county clerk, on drawing a jury, to return the names drawn to the proper packages for each township, until the whole list for all the townships is exhausted (How. St. §§ 7554, 7555, 7567, 7575).—People v. Coffman, 59 Mich. 1.

¶ 145. Notwithstanding the provisions of How. St. §§ 7567, 7575, that a jury shall be obtained from the whole body of the county and that the names of those first placed in the box shall be exhausted before returning to the boxes the names of those previously drawn, it is not good ground for a challenge to the array that the clerk returned the names of those from one township drawn for a previous term which were afterwards drawn for the next term in the following year. Should either party desire, he might challenge the twice-drawn jurors on the ground that they had served as jurors within the previous year.—Wise v. Otter Creek Lumber Co., 86 Mich. 40.

Summoning jurors from bystanders, see post ¶ 166.
Summoning additional jurors, see post § 51.
Effect upon the array of returning incompetent persons or persons not on list, see post §§ 53, 54.
Irregularities in summoning jury as ground for challenge to array, see also post § 57.
Summoning jurors from bystanders, Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 35; Comp. L. 1915, § 12607.
Summoning persons drawn, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 136; Comp. L. 1915, § 12205.
Term of jurors drawn in counties having population of two hundred thousand or more, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 148; Comp. L. 1915, § 12217.

¶ 147. Pub. Acts 1893, Act No. 204, § 12, creating a board of jury commissioners for courts of record in Wayne County and providing that after the drawing of jurors the clerk shall make out a venire facias and deliver it to the sheriff, applies to the Detroit Recorder's Court as well as to the Wayne Circuit Court; and the provisions are mandatory and any earlier laws which may have authorized a venire facias from the Recorder's Court to the superintendent of police, were expressly repealed by section 27.—Dickson v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 136 Mich. 479.

¶ 148. An order made by the county judge, under laws of 1848, p. 237, for summoning a jury to try a cause before the circuit judge, more than three days before the day assigned for the trial, was held sufficient.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451.

¶ 149. A jury may be drawn by a deputy sheriff notwithstanding a statutory declaration that it shall be done by the sheriff.—Sturgis v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 184 Mich. 456.

¶ 150 The provisions of Pub. Acts 1893, Act 204, § 12, creating a board of jury commissioners for courts of record in Wayne County and providing that after the drawing of jurors the clerk shall make out a venire facias and deliver it to the sheriff, apply to the Recorder's Court as well as the Wayne Circuit Court and are mandatory; and therefore no consideration could be given to the argument that it would be more economical to have the jurors summoned by some other official.—Dickson v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 136 Mich. 479.

¶ 151. A conviction by jurors properly drawn and impaneled will not be disturbed because the jurors were not summoned by the proper officer.—People v. Williams, 24 Mich. 156.

¶ 152. That a sheriff or undersheriff has actively assisted the prosecution in preparing a criminal case for trial does not, in the absence of a showing of interest or disqualification other than such official acts, disqualify him from summoning talesmen for the trial of the case.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

¶ 153. Where respondent is informed against for selling intoxicating liquors without having paid the tax required by law, it is proper for the trial court to permit the sheriff to summon talesmen to complete the jury, although the sheriff's name is indorsed on the information as a witness for the People.—People v. Lalonde, 171 Mich. 286.

¶ 154. In the absence of the sheriff the undersheriff is the proper officer to summons talesmen for the trial of a criminal action.—People v. Ponsford, 181 Mich. 659.

Ordering return of new jury lists, see ante § 44.
Drawing panel, see also ante § 45.
Irregularities in drawing and summoning as ground for challenge to array, see also post § 57.
Ordering additional jurors, see Jud. Act, chap. II, §§ 143-146; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12212-12215.

¶ 155. The court has power under Laws 1893, Act No. 204, § 18, in its discretion and on its own motion, in case there shall not be jurors enough present to form a panel in any case, to direct talesmen to be forthwith drawn from the jury box and summoned to attend such court; and the fact that its attention has been called by the prosecuting attorney to such deficiency of jurors, either orally or otherwise, will not nullify the action so taken.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 156. How. St. § 7578, providing for the drawing of jurors and that the court may direct from which townships the jurors shall be drawn, is not limited to cases where a jury has been regularly drawn and not summoned or where jurors have failed to appear, but applies to all cases where, for any cause, a jury is to be drawn during term.—People v. Reigel, 120 Mich. 78.

¶ 157. If some ineligible names are drawn and included in the list of jurors, and a sufficient number of qualified ones do not attend in consequence, the proper objection is to move to make up the deficiency in the manner directed by How. St. § 7575 et seq. —Niles v. Schoolcraft Circuit Judge, 102 Mich. 328.

¶ 158. On the day preceding the trial of a criminal case, the court ordered the summoning of additional jurors under Laws 1893, Act No. 204, § 18, and, after the drawing, further directed that the names so drawn be withheld from the public and from counsel for both parties. Upon the trial counsel for respondent excepted to the orders so entered, but interposed no challenge to the array, nor was the voir dire examination restricted in any way. Held, that the practice pursued was not commendable, but whether ground for reversal was not decided because there were other grounds necessitating it.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149.

¶ 160. Under Jury Act of 1877, Act No. 125, How. St. § 7578, the jurors should be drawn from the vicinity of the place where the court is held; and the order for the drawing should purport to be made for the purpose of getting jurors near the county seat, and upon the judge's motion and for the general purposes of the term, and not for any particular case.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482.

¶ 161. An order of court directing that a jury be "drawn and summoned in pursuance of the statute" for the general purposes of the term means that the jury be drawn from the county at large as authorized by How. St. § 7578, and is legal; it need not specify the townships or supervisor districts, since it was not drawn from the vicinage.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

Number of names to be placed on jury list, see ante § 43.

¶ 162. An order under How. St. § 7578, directing petit jurors to be drawn and summoned for the general purposes of the term, may properly direct more than twenty-four to be drawn.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

¶ 163. Where the court ordered fifty additional jurors (instead of twenty-four, as provided by statute), some of whom sat on defendant's trial with full knowledge, on his part, of all the facts, and without objection from him, it was held that the irregularity was waived.—Bronson v. People, 32 Mich. 34.

¶ 165. Jurors drawn under Comp. L. 1857, § 4374, because a sufficient number did not appear who were summoned, were drawn not merely for a particular case, but for the term, or balance of the term, and it was competent for the court to direct them to be drawn from the jury box or to be selected by the sheriff, and to order them to be summoned to attend forthwith, or at a subsequent or adjourned day of the term.—People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

¶ 166. Under Act No. 194, Pub. Acts of 1911, it is within the discretion of the court to cause names to be drawn from the regular lists to fill the panel, in case one of the litigants objects to completing the panel by summoning talesmen from the room, even though he does not object until he ascertains the identity of a talesman summoned. —Green v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 171 Mich. 18.

¶ 167. The court having ordered a jury to be drawn and summoned from the body of the county for the general purposes of the term, as provided by How. St. § 7578, the respondent in a criminal case challenged the array because two townships, including the vicinage of the crime, were not represented. It not appearing that the officers who drew the jury had arbitrarily left the townships out, or that the lists of those townships had not already been exhausted, the challenge was held bad.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

¶ 168. In a criminal case, the regular panel of jurors was exhausted and the court with the consent of the respondent directed that there be drawn from the petit jurors the required number from townships agreed upon in the regular way for drawing jurors for the term, held that the course was a proper one and a challenge to the array was properly overruled.—People v. Wheeler, 144 Mich. 212.

¶ 169. The provisions of Comp. L. 1897, §§ 340, 341, How. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 12898, 12899, authorizing the circuit judge, whenever, in his opinion, more than 24 jurors will be necessary for an approaching term, to make an order that such number as he deems necessary be summoned and drawn, as provided by law, not exceeding 24, which order must be served and filed with the county clerk at least 20 days before the commencement of the term, confer no authority to designate any portion of the county from which the jurors shall be drawn, or to otherwise restrict the regularly prescribed manner of drawing and summoning.—People v. Gage, 188 Mich. 635.

§ 52. Discharging venireman or excusing him from service.

Eligibility and exemptions from jury service, see ante II.

Error in discharging juror in absence of showing of disqualification, see also ante ¶ 45.

Upon challenge for cause, see post § 58.

Power of court to reject juror on his own motion, see post § 58.

Upon peremptory challenge, see post § 60.

Excluding juror who failed to attend after adjournment, see post ¶ 191.

Provisions as to excusing from jury service, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 139; Comp. L. 1915, § 12208.

¶ 171. A juror may be excused at any time before he has been sworn, for any reason personal to himself which seems sufficient to the judge. So held where the excuse was that he was to be a witness in the next case on call.—People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442.

¶ 172. The court's action in excusing a juror because he is above sixty years of age is not prejudicial to a party where there remains on the regular panel a sufficient number of jurors to try the case, and where it does not appear that the party had any objections to the jurors who actually sat, or that his peremptory challenges were exhausted.—Luebe v. Thorpe, 94 Mich. 268.

¶ 173. For the circuit judge to excuse, in the absence of respondent's counsel, an unsworn juror, on the ground that if he had to serve his business would suffer, is not error.—People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652.

Summoning jury, see ante § 48.

¶ 174. The incompetency of some of the jurors returned by the sheriff does not affect the array if those sworn were competent.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

§ 54. Effect of summoning person not on list.

Summoning jury, see ante § 54.

¶ 175. The name N. J. Gran was on the jury list, and was called in making up the jury, being duly answered to. Gustave Gran was summoned, and he answered and sat on the jury. He was conceded to be eligible, and no injury to plaintiff in error resulted from his presence. Held, a mere irregularity, not ground for a reversal of the judgment.—Hall v. City of Cadillac, 114 Mich. 99.

§ 55. Objections for irregularities in drawing or summoning.

Irregularity in ordering excess number of additional jurors, see ante ¶ 163.

Waiver of jury, see ante §§ 10-12.

¶ 176. In a criminal case it is the defendant's duty to raise objection to any irregularity in the summoning and impaneling of the jury before the trial, and if he omits to do so, or to take exception, if overruled, he will be deemed to have waived the irregularity.—Bronson v. People, 32 Mich. 34.

§ 56. Presumptions as to regularity.

¶ 177. Unless the contrary is shown it will be presumed that officers charged with the drawing and summoning of jurors have correctly performed their duty.—People v. Coughlin, 67 Mich. 466.

Interest of clerk who drew jury as ground for challenge to panel or array, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 12596.

¶ 178. A challenge to the array must be in writing.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451; Ryder v. People, 38 Mich. 269.

¶ 179. It is well settled that a challenge to an array must be in writing.—People v. Tubbs, 147 Mich. 1.

¶ 180. An objection to the validity of the panel will not be considered if not raised in the challenge to the array.—Robinson v. Mulder, 81 Mich. 75.

¶ 181. It seems that a challenge to the array will lie on the action of jury commissioners wherever at common law it would lie to the action of the sheriff or his subordinates in selecting or summoning the jury.—People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 48.

¶ 182. A challenge to the array of jurors will not be sustained where the record shows that the statutory requirements were complied with in drawing them.—Eberts v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 182 Mich. 449.

¶ 183. In a prosecution for murder, that the required number of jurors from one township was short, that those from others was in excess, and that from others the return was not signed, is no ground for a challenge to the array, the jurors being subject to challenge for cause.—People v. MacGregor, 178 Mich. 436.

¶ 184. A challenge to the array of jurors upon the ground that the venire was issued before the signature of the sheriff was obtained to the proceedings selecting said jury, contrary to Pub. Acts 1893, No. 213, as amended by Pub. Acts 1895, No. 46, which statute applies expressly to St. Clair County, is waived where purposely withheld until the jury is sworn, it appearing that the jurors were qualified and regularly summoned.—People v. McArron, 121 Mich. 1.

¶ 185. A party who in a former case at the same term challenged the array is estopped from claiming in another case that the court erred in discharging all the jurors, as the objection went to all of them.—Robinson v. Mulder, 81 Mich. 75.

§ 58. Challenge of veniremen.

Examination of jurors upon challenge, see post §§ 65-70.
Presumptions and burden of proof on challenge, see post § 66.
Rulings upon challenge, see post § 70.
Waiver and cure of objections, see post § 71.

¶ 186. Since, under the statute providing for peremptory challenges of jurors, the distinction between challenges for principal cause and to the favor is practically abolished, all challenges are for cause.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224; Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739; Bliss v. Caille Bros. Co., 149 Mich. 601.

¶ 187. The right of challenge for cause exists in all cases where the jury is a common-law one, and it cannot be taken away by statute, or abrogated by a statute's omission to provide for it.—Kundinger v. City of Saginaw, 59 Mich. 355.

¶ 188. A court may reject a juror in its discretion, on a ground which would not be strictly sufficient to sustain a challenge for cause. Where a jury was finally obtained to which neither party objected, the fact that the court set aside two jurors without any challenge, because from their examinations they did not seem to be entirely impartial, and excused a third because he was deaf and did not sufficiently understand English, was not a ground of error.—Atlas Min. Co. v. Johnston, 23 Mich. 36.

¶ 189. Courts should protect the rights of parties in selecting jurors, and may properly exclude any incompetent or drunken person, even against objection.—Torrent v. Yager, 52 Mich. 506.

¶ 190. The circuit judge is invested with a certain degree of discretion in selecting jurors for a panel. Such discretion is to be exercised in seeing that proper and competent men are selected; and so long as the case of the parties is not prejudiced by the exercise of such discretion, they cannot complain.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277.

¶ 192. After the jury had been completed and sworn, but before any further proceedings, it was discovered that one of the members of the panel was an alien. Held, that it was proper for the court to order him to stand aside and be discharged and another juror to be drawn in his stead, allowing respondent in the meantime to challenge the remaining eleven either for cause or peremptorily if he wished to do so.—People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277.

¶ 193. The fact that a party has exhausted all his peremptory challenges does not make it error for the judge to excuse of his own motion a juror already examined who is not sufficiently acquainted with the English language to qualify him to sit.—O'Neil v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 67 Mich. 560.

¶ 194. The trial judge has no right to reject upon his own motion and against protest a qualified juror with whom the parties are satisfied, unless for sufficient cause, which should be made to appear on the record.—Welch v. Tribune Publishing Co., 83 Mich. 661.

¶¶ 195, 196. A trial judge may exercise his discretion to excuse a juror for cause at any time before the introduction of evidence.—Quay v. Duluth, S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 153 Mich. 567.

§ 59. ——Time to make.

Court's power to excuse juror for cause before evidence introduced, see also ante § 58.

Time to exercise peremptory challenges, see post § 62.

¶ 197. Challenges for cause can be made by either side until the jury is sworn.—Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

§ 60. Peremptory challenges and number allowable.

Failure to exercise peremptory as affecting waiver of objections to juror, see post § 72.

Provisions as to number of peremptory challenges, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 40; Comp. L. 1915, § 12812.

¶ 198. Comp. L. 1857, § 4400, How. St. § 7607, allowing peremptory challenges in "civil cases," does not apply to special proceedings not in the ordinary course of law, and which are regulated entirely by particular statute. Challenges for cause are necessary in all inquiries by jury, but peremptory challenges in other than criminal proceedings are confined to cases where the statutes have directly provided for them.—Convers v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 18 Mich. 459.

General law as to joint trials in criminal cases, see Indictment § 326.

¶ 199. The number of peremptory challenges to which an accused person is entitled depends upon the statute relating to the crime with which he is charged.—People v. Comstock, 55 Mich. 405.

¶ 200. Where counts for different offenses are joined respondent has a right to the full number of challenges to which he is entitled on each count.—People v. Sweeney, 55 Mich. 586.

¶ 201. Each defendant who pleads separately by different counsel is separately entitled to the two peremptory challenges allowed by statute. Comp. L. 1871, § 6027 (see How. St. § 7607).—Stroh v. Hinchman, 37 Mich. 490.

¶ 202. Where persons jointly charged with a misdemeanor are tried together each is entitled to the same number of peremptory challenges he would have had if separately tried (How. St. § 7607).—People v. Welmer, 110 Mich. 248.

¶ 203. Two respondents were jointly tried for larceny under Comp. L. 1897, § 11595, and were entitled each to demand a separate trial. Held, each respondent was entitled to his five separate peremptory challenges, and, in the absence of an express waiver, his right thereto was not lost by the fact that he failed to demand a separate trial. —People v. Caruso, 170 Mich. 137.

¶ 204. Under section 10238, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12944, joint defendants are each entitled to four peremptory challenges in an action in which their interests are several.—Levyn v. Koppin, 183 Mich. 232.

¶ 205. Defendants who separately plead the general issue by different counsel are each entitled to four peremptory challenges, where they may have different and distinct defenses to an action.—Yonkus v. McKay, 186 Mich. 203.

§ 62. ——Time for challenge.

Time to interpose challenge for cause, see ante § 59.

¶ 208. The right to the peremptory challenge of a juror examined on his voir dire is not lost because not exercised until the rest of the panel had been examined. It may be exercised at any time before the juror is sworn.—Hunter v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 96.

¶ 209. The statutory right of challenging peremptorily may be exercised so long as the jury is not sworn, and notwithstanding the previous declaration of the party exercising it that he is satisfied with the jury. —Jhons v. People, 25 Mich. 499; People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442; Hamper's Appeal, 51 Mich. 71.

¶ 210. A peremptory challenge is not allowable in a criminal case after the jury has been sworn.—People v. Dolan, 51 Mich. 610; Thorp v. Deming, 78 Mich. 124.

¶ 211. After the parties have announced themselves satisfied with the jury, and they are sworn, neither party can peremptorily challenge a juror against the objection of the opposite party.—Ayers v. Hubbard, 88 Mich. 155.

§ 63. ——Manner and sufficiency of stating challenge.

Manner of raising objections to the array, see ante § 57.

¶ 212. No reason need be assigned for peremptorily challenging a juror.—People v. Eggleston, 186 Mich. 510.

§ 64. Trial of challenges.

Presumptions as to qualifications of juror, see ante § 20.

Grounds of challenge for cause, see ante § 58.

Necessity of assigning cause of challenge, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 40; Comp. L. 1915, § 12612.

¶ 213. Where a juror is challenged for favor, the usual mode of trying his impartiality is by triers appointed for the purpose, on the demand of the challenging party. If the challenging party, when asked by the court how he will have the challenge tried, refuses to indicate the mode of trial, it may be tried by the court, by administering an oath to the juror, and propounding questions to him.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451.

¶ 214. The distinction between challenges for favor and challenges for cause is practically abolished by Comp. L. 1857, § 4400, How. St. § 7607, all challenges being now for cause, and to be tried in the same manner.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

§ 65. Examination of jurors.

Questioning juror as to sources of information concerning merits of case, see also ante ¶ 76.

Arrest of trial to investigate qualifications of juror, see Indictment § 332, ¶ 1533.

¶ 215. The judge may examine jurors on the part of the prosecution if he chooses, but defendant's counsel are entitled to re-examine them.—Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739.

¶ 216. A refusal to allow the defendant's attorney to examine the jury on his appearance after the plaintiff's case was in and after the trial had been delayed while an effort was made to find him, held not error. —Kincade v. Peck, 193 Mich. 207.

¶ 217. On the impaneling of a jury it is irregular for counsel to put questions to the juror called, without first interposing any challenge.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

¶ 218. Error cannot be assigned upon the action of the court in allowing a juror to be sworn to try the case over the objection of counsel as to the juror's competency, where the objecting party examined the juror without challenging him and without putting him under oath.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

§ 66. Burden and sufficiency of proofs on challenge.

Sufficiency of showing of bias, prejudice or interest, see also ante § 21 et seq.

Disqualifying opinions, see ante §§ 30-36.

¶ 219. A person called as a juror is presumed to be qualified and impartial; and the party challenging assumes the burden of proving the contrary. He does not relieve himself of that burden until he has made out a prima facie case, or, in criminal cases, such a case as leaves the partiality of the juror in reasonable doubt.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

¶ 220. In a criminal case if the examination of a juror upon challenge leaves a reasonable doubt of his impartiality, the prisoner should have the benefit of the doubt, and the juror be excluded.—Holt v. People, 13 Mich. 224.

§ 67. Scope and conduct of examination in general.

¶ 222. The trial judge may limit, reasonably, the extent of the voir dire examination of jurors.—Ford v. Cheever, 113 Mich. 440.

¶ 223. In an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the explosion of adulterated kerosene, it is within the discretion of the trial court to permit counsel for plaintiff to ask jurors on the voir dire whether they would consider it negligent to extinguish a lighted lamp by blowing across and down the chimney, as an aid to counsel in exercising his peremptory challenges.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 224. In a criminal prosecution, a question to a juror on his voir dire whether he would consider the presumption of innocence as evidence in favor of the accused, held properly sustained.—People v. Cutler, 197 Mich. 6.

¶ 225. It is error to exclude a question to a juror on his voir dire as to how he would give his verdict if the evidence was equally balanced between the people and accused.—People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 226. A conviction for a violation of the liquor law will not be reversed because the trial court required respondent's counsel so to modify a question asked of a juror on his voir dire as not to suggest that he would have a desire to give his verdict one way or the other if the evidence should be even, but to ask him merely whether he would have such a desire, or which way he would find under such circumstances.—People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374.

¶ 227. A question asked a juror on voir dire as to which way he would be inclined to lean were the testimony equally balanced, was properly excluded in a criminal case, where counsel refused to add, at the direction of the court, the words, "if either way."—People v. Wheeler, 185 Mich. 164.

Nature and extent of inquiry as to liability or indemnity insurance in proceedings to qualify jurors in actions for personal injury or death, see note, 13 N. C. C. A. 834-875.

§ 68. ——Questions directed towards matter of bias or prejudice.

Bias, prejudice or interest disqualifying juror, see ante § 21.

Applicability of judicial notice to eke out meaning of question directed towards matter of bias, see Evidence ¶ 83.

¶ 228. Prejudice disqualifies a juror, and a party entitled to peremptory challenges should be allowed to ask any reasonable questions that will tend to disclose it; as, e. g., which way the juror would be inclined if the evidence were evenly balanced.—Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 229. In order to ascertain a juror's bias, if any, he may be asked which party he would favor if the testimony were evenly balanced.—Township of Otsego Lake v. Kirsten, 72 Mich. 1; People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

¶ 230. Under a plea of the statute of limitations, defendant's counsel has a right, as a means of determining whether or not to exercise the right of peremptory challenge, to question jurors with reference to their prejudices against such a defense.—Towl v. Bradley, 108 Mich. 409.

¶ 231. In an action for damags for selling liquor to a minor a juror may be asked on his voir dire whether he is in favor of the stringent prohibitory laws, and has any prejudice against the sale of liquor; and if he has such prejudice, may be challenged for cause.—Theisen v. Johns, 72 Mich. 285.

¶ 232. In a prosecution for disorderly conduct, on voir dire after a juror has stated that he did not like men who get drunk and disorderly and fight, it is improper in attempting to summarize to ask him "you do, then, have some prejudice against a man who drinks."—People v. Radley, 127 Mich. 627.

¶ 233. Defendant in examining a juror for the purpose of peremptory challenge asked whether his mind would be affected in the matter if he should learn that a certain person was in the case and whether his sympathy would be aroused by the plaintiff on the stand so as to make him unable to give defendant a fair show. The court excluded the questions after becoming impatient at the many inquiries already made of the jurors by defendant. It did not appear that any question which bore upon the bias or prejudice of the juror had theretofore been excluded. Held, while the question should have perhaps been allowed, the record did not indicate such abuse of the trial court's discretion as to call for a reversal.—Gornetsky v. Gornetsky, 174 Mich. 492.

Questions as to connection with casualty or insurance company in examination of jurors in negligence action, see note, 2 N. C. C. A. 706-720.

¶ 234. An affirmative answer by a talesman to a direct question on his voir dire examination as to whether he believed defendant guilty, held not prejudicial where but one juror heard the answer and he expressly stated that it did not bias his judgment.—People v. MacGregor, 178 Mich. 486.

¶ 235. The complaining witness and some of the jurors were the same in a criminal case immediately preceding that of defendant as in defendant's trial for larceny. The trial court refused to permit one of said jurors on his voir dire examination to state whether he had an opinion as to the credibility of said complaining witness. The record did not show further restrictions upon defendant in examining the jurors. Held, the trial court was not shown to have abused his discretion with respect to such examination.—People v. Wright, 170 Mich. 154.

¶ 236. A juror who on his voir dire denies having said that he believed respondent guilty may be shown by other witnesses to have made such statements, and if the court, after hearing the evidence, entertains any doubt on the subject, a challenge for cause should be sustained.—People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367.

§ 70. Ruling upon challenge.

Discretion of court in ruling upon challenge for cause, see also ante ¶ 64.

Presumption as to harm from exclusion or acceptance of juror, see Appeal § 357.

Showing of error for purposes of appeal, see Appeal § 179.

Necessity of showing error in accepting or rejecting juror and exhaustion of peremptory challenges in criminal cases, see Indictment § 595.

Error in decision as to impartiality as matter reviewable in supreme court, see Indictment ¶ 2801.

¶ 237. There is no practical difference in criminal cases between a challenge for principal cause and a challenge for favor; and a judge in ruling upon a challenge should make his ruling cover both grounds.—Stephens v. People, 38 Mich. 739.

§ 71. Waiver or cure of objections to juror.

Irregularity in ordering excess number of additional jurors to complete panel, see ante ¶ 163.

General qualifications, eligibility and exemptions, see ante II.

Grounds disqualifying jurors, see ante III.

¶ 238. By going to trial without challenge a party waives any objection to the want of proper qualification of jurors, as well as to the sufficiency of the oath administered to the jury.—The Milwaukie v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

¶ 239. Where one of the jurors had sat on a former trial of the same cause, and this fact was known to the counsel of one of the parties before the verdict was rendered, and he omitted to object until afterwards, it was held that he was bound by the verdict.—Bourke v. James, 4 Mich. 336.

¶ 240. Where a party is informed during the progress of the trial that a juror is disqualified, but he omits to object until after verdict, on the ground that evidence of the disqualification is not sooner accessible, he will be held bound by the verdict.—Sleight v. Henning, 12 Mich. 371.

¶ 241. Failure to challenge a venireman who is ineligible to become a juror does not waive the objection, upon the subsequent discovery of the ineligibility, since it was not known and also because the right of challenge presupposes the presence of twelve eligible men in the box.—Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351.

¶ 242. In civil causes the proper time to make the necessary inquiries into the qualifications of jurors is before the trial, and not afterwards, and if not made then the objection will be deemed to have been waived.—Johr v. People, 26 Mich. 427.

¶ 243. Where the record shows that both parties have announced themselves contented with the jury, the previous rejection of a challenged talesman against objection will not be considered. Whether this rule will apply where a juror is admitted against a challenge for cause, quære.—Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 Mich. 308.

¶ 244. A party who aids in striking the panel, and who declares himself satisfied with it, cannot afterwards object that one of the jurors, to whom he made no objection, was not a freeholder as required by the statute.—Clark v. Drain Com'r, 50 Mich. 618.

¶ 245. The impaneling and final acceptance of a jury by a court is a judicial determination that the jurors are competent; and if any objection to the qualifications of a juror is known to a party before such determination, it cannot be raised afterward unless on exception to the overruling of a challenge.—People v. Scott, 56 Mich. 154.

¶ 246. In an action against a mutual insurance company plaintiff challenged a juror for cause because he was a member of the company, which challenge was denied and plaintiff excepted and thereupon exercised a peremptory challenge. One other peremptory challenge was used, but no further challenge for cause was made though four other members of defendant company were on the jury. Held, that plaintiff did not waive the objection to these jurors by his failure to challenge them for cause or to exercise his two remaining peremptory challenges.—Martin v. Farmers' Mut. Fire-Ins. Co. of Calhoun Co., 139 Mich. 148.

¶ 247. If a party or his counsel interposes a challenge for favor, or raises any other preliminary question involving an inquiry into the qualifications of a juror, and then neglects or refuses to move the trial for examination thereof, he thereby waives such challenge or question.—People v. Doe, 1 Mich. 451.

¶ 248. Where a juror on being examined as to his residence stated that he had come to the place to get work and had not got any yet, his answer suggested that he was not qualified; but if no objection was then made, or further examination had, it would be too late after the trial.—People v. Lange, 56 Mich. 550.

¶ 249. Error cannot be predicated on the overruling of a question put to a juror on his voir dire, where he was subsequently excused for physical disability.—People v. Wheeler, 185 Mich. 164.

§ 72. ——Failure to exercise or exhaust peremptory challenges.

Peremptory challenges and exercise thereof, see ante § 60 et seq.

¶ 250. Overruling a challenge for cause and compelling the party to resort to a peremptory challenge does not prejudice him where he still has a right of peremptory challenge which he does not use.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408; People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277; People v. Aplin, 86 Mich. 393; People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449; People v. Wright, 170 Mich. 154.

¶ 251. The error of not excluding a juror properly challenged for cause is not cured by peremptorily challenging him, where it appears that the party so challenging exhausted his peremptory challenges; he may have been obliged to retain a juror whom he would otherwise have excused.—Theisen v. Johns, 72 Mich. 285.

¶ 253. A juror in a criminal case testified on his voir dire that he should hesitate slightly about convicting a person on circumstantial evidence; that he would like, before a respondent should be sent up, to hear positive proof against him, and that he would hate to find a man guilty on circumstantial evidence; that if the evidence was so conclusive and satisfactory to his mind, weighing it as he would any evidence that affected his own interests in doing business, as to preclude any other rational theory, he would convict, but that he was somewhat prejudiced against circumstantial evidence where it deprived a man of his liberty, and so far as it related to criminals. After a challenge for cause interposed by the people had been sustained, other jurors were for various reasons excused by the prosecuting attorney and by respondent's counsel, after which both announced themselves as satisfied with the jury. Held, that respondent was not prejudiced by the action of the court.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

Necessity of interposing challenges prior to swearing of jury, see ante §§ 59, 62.

Waiver of objections based on sufficiency of oath to jury, see ante § 71.

Oaths of jurors in street opening proceedings, see Highways § 81.

Disposition of ballots containing names of jurors sworn, see ante § 47.

¶ 254. Where the record showed that the jury were "duly elected, tried and sworn," instead of that they were "sworn well and truly to try the issue," etc., it was held that the error, if any, must be regarded as clerical, and under R. S. 1838, pp. 461-62, might be amended after error brought.—The Milwaukie v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

¶ 255. A stipulation was made between the plaintiffs on a note and one of the defendants that the cause might be dismissed as to him, but he did not avail himself of it, and no order of discontinuance was entered. Only one of the other defendants pleaded. Held, that the technical irregularity of swearing the jury to try the issue between the plaintiffs and the defendants, when no issue had been joined with two of them, was a harmless blunder, and as no order was entered on the stipulation the party with whom it was made remained a defendant in form.—Buhl v. Trowbridge, 42 Mich. 44.

¶ 256. Where a jury was impaneled for the trial of joint offenders, but a separate trial was ordered, it is immaterial that the jurors were sworn before the order was entered, if sworn for the trial of one only.—People v. Cummins, 47 Mich. 334.

VI. SPECIAL AND STRUCK JURIES.

Provisions as to special or struck juries, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, §§ 43-49; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12615-12621.

¶ 257. When a jury of persons possessing a particular qualification is required, the proper course is for the order of the court to direct the summoning of such persons.—Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Clark, 23 Mich. 519.

VII. COMPENSATION AND SUSTENANCE AND PRIVILEGES.

§ 75. In general; statutory provisions.

Payment or tender of jury fees, see ante § 12.
Jury fee as taxable costs, see Costs § 63.
Fees of jurors as county charge, see Counties §§ 31-33.
Jurors' per diem as taxable costs in criminal cases, see Indictment § 508, ¶ 2408.
Per diem compensation and mileage of jurors, see Jud. Act, chap. II, § 147; Comp. L. 1915, § 12216.
Fees of struck jurors, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 49; Comp. L. 1915, § 12621.
Provisions as to payment of jury fees, see Jud. Act, chap. XVIII, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 12594.

¶ 258. Act No. 236, Pub. Acts 1907, providing that jurors may recover compensation from the county does not repeal Comp. L. 1897, § 3408, which provides that in condemnation proceedings instituted by a city jurors shall be paid by the city.—Rorabacher v. Nichols, 165 Mich. 127.

§ 76. Amount of compensation.

¶ 259. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11229, providing that "each grand and petit juror, and each talesman, shall be entitled to receive two dollars for each day's attendance, and one dollar for each half-day, upon any term of the circuit court, or before any court of record, on the trial of a cause," a juror is entitled to pay for the time actually in attendance upon the court, and not for any period during which he is excused from such attendance.—Emmer v. Bostock, 130 Mich. 341.

§ 77. Privilege from process or arrest.

¶ 260. The privilege of a juror from civil arrest is a personal one, going, not to the validity of the process, but to that of the service, and it may therefore be waived.—Brower v. Tatro, 115 Mich. 368.

¶ 261. One in attendance upon court as a juror impaneled and drawn for the current term is privileged from arrest on a civil warrant issued out of justice's court.—Brower v. Tatro, 115 Mich. 368.

General law of elections, see Elections.

Constitutional provision for justices of the peace, see Const. art. VII, §§ 15, 16.
Justice as constitutional office beyond legislative power to abolish, see Constitutional Law §§ 261, 262.
List of justices to be transmitted by county clerk, and notice by clerk to secretary of state of changes by death or otherwise in offices of justices, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2436.

§ 1. In general; nature of tribunal.

Justice a representative of state in exercise of judicial powers, see post § 16.

Different justices in the same city not members of same court, see post ¶ 15.

Duties, powers, liabilities and immunities, see post II.

Jurisdiction of justices, see post III.

¶ 2. Local Acts 1887, No. 533, chap. 3, § 1 (charter of the city of Sault Ste. Marie) providing that the officers of the city should consist of the mayor and among others three justices of the peace to be elected by the voters of the whole city was amended by Local Acts 1901, No. 468, substituting one for three justices of the peace, and this later statute also contains certain provisions for the holding of court in certain emergencies by the probate judge or circuit court commissioner, on account of which the constitutionality of the amendatory act is attacked. A justice of the peace elected under the latter act is an officer de facto at least, and his right to hold the office is not open to collateral attack.—Thompson v. Couch, 144 Mich. 671.

¶ 2a. One who has been elected to the office of justice of the peace, and has entered upon the duties thereof, is an officer de facto, notwithstanding his failure to file his oath of office and bond within the time prescribed by law.—People v. Payment, 109 Mich. 553.

§ 3. Termination or loss of office.

Constitutional term and changing term, see Constitutional Law § 270.

Power to continue in office after territorial change vacating office, see Constitutional Law § 266.

¶ 3. That a justice placed by change of boundaries beyond his township loses his office, see People ex rel. Berry v. Geddes, 3 Mich. 70.

¶ 3a. Under Battle Creek Charter, Local Acts 1887, No. 428, §§ 4, 6, which provides for the election of justices of the peace, and for their qualification, within five days after receiving notice of their election, by taking the constitutional oath and giving security in the same manner as is required by law of justices of the peace of townships, but which fixes no time for their term of office to begin or end, the terms of office of such justices are controlled by How. St. § 719, which provides that the terms of justices of the peace shall commence on the 4th of July next succeeding their election.—Hulbert v. Henry, 105 Mich. 211.

¶ 3c. A justice of the peace in a city cannot be legislated out of office before his term expires by an act reincorporating the city, and reducing the number of justices therein. —Gratopp v. VanEps, 113 Mich. 590.

§ 4. Fees and compensation.

Taxation of court fees as costs, see post § 161.

Payment of fees as condition to appeal, see post § 200.

Fees in criminal cases as county charge, see Counties § 33.

Claims against county for services, items and proofs, see Counties ¶ 198.

Refusal of auditor general to pay justice's bill against the state, see State of Michigan.

Provisions as to fees of justices, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 14397.

¶ 4. Where the charter of a city provides that a justice of the peace therein shall receive a stated annual salary in full compensation for all services performed, a justice of the peace in such city is not entitled to fees for services in trying criminal cases. —Harrison v. Board Sup'rs Chippewa Co., 151 Mich. 91.

¶ 5. Where a justice of the peace performs an inquest under Comp. L. 1897, § 11828, he is subject to section 11240, prohibiting a justice from taking other or greater fees than those allowed by law.— Edwards v. Auditor General, 161 Mich. 639.

¶ 6. Where a justice of the peace performs an inquest under Comp. L. 1897, § 11828, his fees are those allowed by section 11223, for a coroner's inquest.—Edwards v. Auditor General, 161 Mich. 639.

¶ 7. An item of nine dollars in a bill of a justice of the peace for holding an inquest one day and four half-days is an illegal charge.—Edwards v. Auditor General, 161 Mich. 639.

§ 5. ——Reporting fees to prosecuting attorney.

¶ 8. Comp. L. 1897, § 1062, providing that a justice's statement of fees in his report to the prosecuting attorney shall give "an itemized statement of the officers' and court fees and how the same was disbursed, if paid to such justice" requires itemized statement of fees of officers whether such fees are paid by the party arrested or not, the absence of a comma after "fees" not justifying a construction that such fees must be itemized only where paid to the justice.—Hutchinson v. Board of Ionia Co. Sup'rs, 130 Mich. 62.

¶ 9. Failure of a justice of the peace to comply with Comp. L. 1897, § 1062, requiring itemized statement of fees in his report to the prosecuting attorney results in forfeiture of such fees.—Hutchinson v. Board of Ionia Co. Sup'rs, 130 Mich. 62.

Provisions as to preserving filing and keeping books and papers, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXX, §§ 1-10; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14449-14458.

¶ 10. Suit upon a promissory note cannot be brought before a justice to whom it has been indorsed for collection, as he thereby becomes the plaintiff's agent therefor.—West v. Wheeler, 49 Mich. 505.

¶ 11. A justice to whom a claim has been sent for collection with instructions that it is not to be sued until he has notified defendant that it will be sued if not paid is not, where he has not advised with the plaintiff (Comp. L. 1871, § 5372) disqualified from hearing the case, as an interested party, even though he is to be compensated whether suit is brought or not.—Moon v. Stevens, 53 Mich. 144.

¶ 12. A justice of the peace is not disqualified from trying an action of assumpsit because he had written defendant to the effect that he had the claim for collection, and had been instructed to inform him that suit would be brought if it was not paid.—Taggart v. Waters, 115 Mich. 638.

¶ 13. A prosecuting attorney who makes a complaint for a violation of the local option law in his county before a justice of the peace who is his brother-in-law is not a party to the suit, within the meaning of How. St. §§ 6822, 7245, which prohibit any judge or justice of the peace from hearing any case where he is related to either party in certain degrees by marriage or blood.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622.

¶ 14. A justice of the peace cannot be both magistrate and counsel in a cause.—Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

¶ 15. A justice of the peace in the city of Grand Rapids is not disqualified from acting as attorney in the circuit court in an appeal from the other justice, inasmuch as (Local Acts of 1893, No. 306, as amended) the two justices hold separate courts and have distinct records, and are not members of a single court.—Grady v. Sullivan, 112 Mich. 458.

¶ 17. The provision of the charter of the city of Lansing providing that in case of disability, etc., of a justice of the peace of the city, such justice may call in any justice of the peace of the township of Lansing to act in his stead, is not objectionable as allowing the justice to delegate his authority to another, since the justice of the township already had authority to act as a justice and the provision in effect simply enlarges his jurisdiction.—People v. De Meaux, 194 Mich. 18.

Appearance as waiver of right of substitute to try cause, see post ¶ 218.
Charges imputing misconduct to the justice as constituting libel, see Libel and Slander ¶ 72.

Attachment and imprisonment of justices to compel return to appeal, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 16; Comp. L. 1915, § 14416.

¶ 18. A justice of the peace who, without authority, issued an execution against a surety, was held liable as a trespasser.—Shadbolt v. Bronson, 1 Mich. 85.

¶ 19. A magistrate who issues a warrant for arrest where he has no jurisdiction is liable.—Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

¶ 20. A justice's action in passing upon an attorney's authority to appear where the opposite party is absent is judicial, and he is not personally liable for not requiring a showing under oath.—Morton v. Crane, 39 Mich. 526.

¶ 21. Payment by a garnishee defendant upon a particular demand is in the hands of a justice as payment on that demand only, and on no other; and the justice is not liable for the money received to one who holds a judgment against the same garnishee on another demand.—Dane v. Holmes, 41 Mich. 661.

¶ 22. A justice's docket entry that money paid into court is in satisfaction of a particular judgment cannot make him liable to the judgment creditor for the money, if it was actually meant to be applied upon a different judgment.—McDonald v. Lewis, 42 Mich. 135.

¶ 23. A justice of the peace who holds valid an ordinance that is unconstitutional, and who enforces thereunder the arrest and imprisonment of a violator of such ordinance, is not liable to an action.—Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576.

¶ 24. A justice of the peace who, having jurisdiction, has issued a warrant of arrest, cannot be held liable to the person arrested upon the ground that his action was corrupt or malicious in motive; nor is he rendered civilly liable by his having included in a sentence compensation to the complaining witness, that being at most an error of judgment.—Curnow v. Kessler, 110 Mich. 10.

¶ 25. The inclusion in a sentence imposed by a justice of the peace of compensation to the complaining witness is an error of judgment at most, and does not render the justice liable to the accused in a civil action.—Curnow v. Kessler, 110 Mich. 10.

¶ 26. A justice of the peace acting under authority granted him by the city charter to try and punish offenders for violations of the city ordinances, is not liable to one tried and punished for vagrancy, though the warrant and complaint did not sufficiently state the offense.—Gardner v. Couch, 137 Mich. 358.

¶ 27. A justice of the peace is not responsible as a trespasser, for reaching an erroneous decision as to the sufficiency of a complaint in a matter over which he has jurisdiction, and hence is not liable, though a warrant is issued on an insufficient complaint.—Gardner v. Couch, 137 Mich. 358.

§ 9. ——Remedies and procedure to enforce.

Summary order to compel reception of criminal complaint, see Arrest § 12.

¶ 28. A justice of the peace who receives from a constable and applies upon a judgment depreciated bank bills is liable to the judgment creditor for so much money in an action for money had and received. The creditor is not confined to his remedy upon the bond of the justice.—Welch v. Frost, 1 Mich. 30.

¶ 29. A justice of the peace who receives from a constable and applies upon a judgment depreciated bank bills is liable to the judgment creditor for so much money in an action for money had and received, and he is equally liable though the bills were current when received, and become depreciated in the hands of the justice after he has tendered them to the creditor.—Heald v. Bennett, 1 D. 513.

¶ 31. In an action against a justice of the peace for issuing an execution against a man's property it is not enough for him to show that he was such justice, and then rely upon the execution and the judgment, unless it appears that the necessary proceedings have been taken to give him jurisdiction of the parties and the cause, or rightfully to call his official powers into action.—Clark v. Axford, 5 Mich. 182.

¶ 32. A justice's court, being one of inferior and limited jurisdiction, is confined strictly to the powers conferred upon it, and its proceedings must appear to be within those powers.—Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384; Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Shadbolt v. Bronson, 1 Mich. 85.

¶ 33. Within the limits provided for by the state constitution, justices' courts are ordinary courts of justice, not within the rigid rules applying to courts of special and limited jurisdiction proceeding contrary to the course of the common law; and all courts take judicial notice of the extent of their jurisdiction and powers.—Goodsell v. Leonard, 23 Mich. 374.

¶ 34. Justices of the peace have constitutional jurisdiction in civil cases, and are necessary magistrates in cities, as well as outside of them; their criminal jurisdiction is given them by the general statutes, but is to some extent contemplated by the constitution, and in cities can only be restrained by the special municipal criminal jurisdiction.—Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 48 Mich. 76.

¶ 35. The early cases to the effect that justices' courts are of limited and inferior jurisdiction, are confined strictly to the authority given them by statute, and should be held to the exact limits of jurisdiction prescribed by the statutes were decided when the constitution did not contain such provisions as art. VI, §§ 1 and 18, of the present constitution, and those cases do not now control.—Miller v. Smith, 115 Mich. 427.

Excessive amount as ground for dismissal on appeal, see post § 223.
Judgment of circuit court on appeal limited to justices' jurisdictional amount, see post § 238.

Jurisdictional amount in circuit courts, see Courts §§ 47-49.
Provisions as to jurisdictional amount, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 14166.
Provisions as to amount in actions against school districts, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 14167.

¶ 36. R. S. 1846 gave to justices of the peace original, but not exclusive, jurisdiction in actions wherein the debt or amount demanded did not exceed $100.—Webb v. Mann, 3 Mich. 139.

¶ 37. Justices have no jurisdiction in actions founded on tort, where the damages exceed $100.—Wells v. Scott, 4 Mich. 347.

¶ 38. Justices have exclusive jurisdiction in civil matters where the debt or damages do not exceed $100.—Strong v. Daniels, 3 Mich. 466; Raymond v. Hinkson, 15 Mich. 118.

¶ 39. Assumpsit for breach of promise of marriage must be brought in justice's court if the damages claimed do not exceed $100.—Stortz v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 38 Mich. 243.

¶ 40. The statutory provision increasing to $500 the jurisdiction of Detroit justices of the peace, is authorized by Const. art. VI, § 18, which fixes that limit, and is not a denial of privileges and immunities of citizens because it does not apply to all the justices in the state.—Messenger v. Teagan, 106 Mich. 654.

¶ 41. How. St. § 6814 confers concurrent jurisdiction upon justices of the peace in all civil actions upon contracts where the debt or damages do not exceed $300; wherefore such justice has jurisdiction of an action for a breach of contract to deliver a telegraph message.—Carland v. Western Union Tel. Co., 118 Mich. 369.

§ 12. ——Test or criterion of amount.

In replevin, see also post §§ 17, 77.
General issue in replevin as admission of allegations as to jurisdictional amount, see post ¶¶ 352, 418.

¶ 42. Jurisdiction as to amount depends on the sum or damages claimed in the writ and declaration.—Strong v. Daniels, 3 Mich. 466.

¶ 43. Where the affidavit, writ and declaration in replevin set forth the value of the property as not exceeding $100, and defendant pleads the general issue, the fact that plaintiff's testimony on the trial shows the value to be greater does not oust the justice's jurisdiction.—Henderson v. Desborough, 28 Mich. 170.

¶ 44. The amount claimed in the ad damnum clause is what determines a justice's jurisdiction in assumpsit, and plaintiff may remit part of the amount proved, or abandon and omit to prove part of the amount embraced in his claim which exceeds $300.—Cilley v. Van Patten, 68 Mich. 80.

¶ 45. A justice's jurisdiction in garnishment does not depend on the amount due from the garnishee to the principal debtor, but upon the sum claimed to be due from the latter to the former.—Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 Mich. 555.

§ 13. ——Aggregation or division of claims.

Splitting causes and demands, see post § 93.
Combining claims to make up jurisdictional amount for circuit court, see Courts § 49.
Combining claims to make jurisdictional amount for garnishment in circuit court, see Garnishment § 8.

¶ 46. The debtor in two bills of goods may be sued upon both in one action; but if, by suing on each separately, the creditor may bring his actions in a justice's court he has this alternative in case he prefers to adopt it.—Stickel v. Steel, 41 Mich. 350.

§ 14. ——Actions on penal bonds.

Covenant on bonds, see post ¶ 131.
General laws as to bonds, see Bonds.

¶ 47. Debt lies in justice's court on a bond whereof the penalty is less than $300.—Gray v. Stafford, 52 Mich. 497.

¶ 48. Debt does not lie before a justice upon a bond conditioned otherwise than for the payment of money, and the penalty of which exceeds $300.—Bishop v. Freeman, 42 Mich. 533; Wayne Probate Judge v. Dean, 52 Mich. 387.

¶ 49. How. St., § 6820, permitting an action of covenant to be brought in justice's court where there shall be a bond with a penalty exceeding $150, is confined to bonds conditioned for the payment of a sum of money not exceeding $150, or for the payment of instalments of money not exceeding in the aggregate $150.—Bishop v. Freeman, 42 Mich. 533; Gray v. Stafford, 52 Mich. 497.

¶ 50. Assumpsit will lie in justice's court upon an ordinary money bond for any amount within its jurisdiction that may be necessary to indemnify for the breach thereof, whatever the penalty of the bond may be.—Durfee v. Dean, 52 Mich. 387.

¶ 51. Debt upon a probate bond whereof the penalty exceeds the jurisdictional limit of justices' courts cannot be brought therein.—Durfee v. Dean, 52 Mich. 387.

¶ 52. A bond not conditioned for the payment of any particular sum of money by the obligor, and containing no covenants, cannot be sued in justice's court if the penalty exceeds $300.—Bishop v. Freeman, 42 Mich. 533.

¶ 53. An action of covenant lies in a justice's court on a money bond no matter how large the penalty if given to secure the payment of $150 or less (Comp. L. 1871, § 5255; How. St., § 6820); but if the penalty does not exceed the sum of $300, an action of debt will lie in such court.—Gray v. Stafford, 52 Mich. 497.

¶ 55. How. St., § 6988, which authorizes an action of assumpsit upon a constable's bond in favor of the party entitled to moneys collected by the constable on execution, and which he refuses to pay over, and a recovery in said suit of the amount of the execution, with interest from the time of the rendition of the judgment upon which the execution was issued, is not limited in its operation to bonds in a penalty not exceeding $300, of which a justice has jurisdiction, but confers jurisdiction upon justices of the peace up to the statutory limit, regardless of the amount of the penalty of the bond upon which the action is brought.—Montgomery v. Martin, 104 Mich. 390.

¶ 56. Assumpsit upon the statutory bond given for the protection of laborers and materialmen by one who has contracted to build a public building, is maintainable in justice's court by one whose claim is within the justice's jurisdiction, although the penalty of the bond is in excess of such jurisdiction.—People for use of Holmes v. Cotteral, 115 Mich. 43.

§ 15. ——Effect of proving or recovering more than claimed.

Loss or divestiture of jurisdiction, see post § 26.
Amount of judgment, see post § 132.
Provisions as to remission of excess over justices' jurisdiction, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 14280.

¶ 57. Where the affidavit and declaration in replevin allege the value as less than $100, testimony by plaintiff on appeal that the value is greater does not oust jurisdiction.—Dinnen v. Baxter, 18 Mich. 457.

¶ 58. Where the affidavit, writ and declaration set forth the value of the property as not exceeding $100, and defendant pleads the general issue, the fact that plaintiff's testimony on the trial shows the value to be greater does not oust the justice's jurisdiction.—Henderson v. Desborough, 28 Mich. 170.

¶ 59. Where, in a justice's court, plaintiff obtains a verdict for $100, in a case where double damages are allowed by statute, doubling such verdict does not oust jurisdiction.—Rosevelt v. Hanold, 65 Mich. 414.

§ 16. Territorial jurisdiction and township for suit.

Effect of changing boundaries of township, see ante ¶ 3.
Place for holding court, see post § 32.
Territorial limits of justices' process, see also post § 37.
To issue attachment, see also post § 54.
Nonresidence of parties as ground for collateral attack, see post § 150 et seq.
General law as to venue, see Venue.
Provisions as to place of bringing suit, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, §§ 10, 11; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14175, 14176.

¶ 60. A justice in exercising his judicial powers represents the state rather than his township and accordingly Local Acts 1871, No. 449, authorizing a justice of Hamlin township residing in the village of Eaton Rapids to sit in that portion of the village which lies within Eaton Rapids township, is valid.—Faulks v. People, 39 Mich. 200.

¶ 61. Under How. St., § 6818 and Laws 1885, Act No. 118, giving jurisdiction to a justice in a city formed from "a township or townships next adjoining" that in which plaintiff or defendant resides, or one in a city lying in such a township, a justice of the peace of a city which lies within the limits of a township that corners with the township where defendant resides has jurisdiction of a suit against such defendant, though the city itself neither adjoins nor corners with such township.—Jebb v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 67 Mich. 160.

¶ 62. A justice has no jurisdiction of the person where neither of the parties, though resident in the state, lives in his county; but if any one of the parties on either side lives there, suit will lie in any township of the county where he resides and happens to be (How. St., § 6819).—Hall v. Shank, 57 Mich. 36.

¶ 63. Attachment proceedings to enforce a logger's lien cannot be brought in a township where neither of the parties resides and which does not adjoin a township where either of them resides; How. St., § 6818, which governs in this particular, not being enlarged by Pub. Acts 1887, No. 229, §§ 5 and 9 by giving justices jurisdiction of such proceedings "within their respective counties."—Burlingame v. Marble, 95 Mich. 5.

¶ 64. Under How. St., § 6819, providing that actions in justice's court may, where plaintiffs are all nonresidents of the county, or defendant is a nonresident of the county, "be brought before any justice of the township or city where such plaintiffs or defendants, or either of them, may be," it is not essential that either plaintiff or defendant, at the time of taking out the summons, be personally present in the township.—Weaver v. Rix, 109 Mich. 697.

¶ 65. A nonresident plaintiff need not bring his suit in the justice's court of the township of the defendant's residence or in an adjoining township, but may bring it in any township in the county where he has obtained personal service of summons on the defendant.—American Copying Co. v. Stern, 148 Mich. 281.

¶ 66. Comp. L. 1897, § 707, providing that every action in justice court shall be brought in the county where one of the plaintiffs reside and section 708 providing that if the plaintiffs be all nonresidents of the county or if the defendants be all nonresidents of the county, then action may be commenced in any township where they may be, do not apply where both the plaintiff and the defendant are nonresidents of the state; action may be commenced in any township.—Sleight v. Swanson, 127 Mich. 436.

Determination of jurisdictional amount, see also ante § 12.
Procedure in replevin, see post § 77 et seq.
Pleas and objections to the jurisdiction in replevin, see post § 82.
General issue as admission of justices' jurisdiction in replevin, see post ¶ 418.

¶ 67. Under R. S. 1838 justices had no jurisdiction of action of replevin.—People ex rel. Willing v. Jackson Circuit Judges, 1 D. 302.

¶ 68. A justice has jurisdiction of an action of replevin against an administrator since the action of replevin comes within the exception to the statute. (How. St., §§ 6815, 5902.)—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 Mich. 330.

¶ 69. Justices of the peace have jurisdiction of the statutory action of replevin for beasts distrained, etc.—Pistorius v. Swarthout, 67 Mich. 186.

¶ 70. As replevin is not an action to recover "debt or damages," a statute conferring upon Detroit justices original jurisdiction in all civil actions wherein the debt or damages do not exceed $100, and concurrent jurisdiction in all such actions, except in certain specified cases, wherein the debt or damages do not exceed $500, the jurisdiction of such justices in replevin is left to be governed by the general statute (How. St., § 6856), which fixes the limit at $100.—Bostwick v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 115 Mich. 363.

¶ 71. It seems that the question of a justice's jurisdiction in replevin, as depending on value, is closed by the affidavit for the writ.—Henderson v. Desborough, 28 Mich. 170.

¶ 72. A justice's jurisdiction in replevin is limited to cases where the value of the property does not exceed $100; and the value as stated in the affidavit is presumptively the real value until otherwise shown in subsequent proceedings.—Carew v. Matthews, 41 Mich. 576.

¶ 73. An affidavit for replevin does not give a justice jurisdiction if it does not state that the value of the property sought does not exceed $100.—Sager v. Shutts, 53 Mich. 116.

¶ 74. The jurisdiction of a justice, in replevin, attaches according to the claim in the affidavit; and, having attached, continues to judgment, at least up to five hundred dollars.—Chilson v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 235.

¶ 75. A justice's jurisdiction in replevin does not depend upon the value in fact as it may ultimately appear, but upon the value alleged.—Burt v. Addison, 74 Mich. 730.

§ 18. Jurisdiction to enforce liens.

Attachment to enforce log lien, see also post ¶ 1125.
Judgment in attachment to enforce log lien, see post § 66.
Territorial jurisdiction to issue attachment under log lien law, see post ¶ 232.
Costs in proceedings to enforce log liens, see post ¶¶ 688, 695.
General law as to liens, see Liens.

¶ 76. Though section 10764 of Comp. L. 1897 has no specific words giving justices' courts jurisdiction of such combined log lien actions, it being contained only in section 10762, yet justices' courts have jurisdiction.—Craig v. Brown, 171 Mich. 256.

§ 19. Actions against executors and administrators.

Jurisdiction of replevin against administrator, see ante ¶ 68.
Raising question of jurisdiction for first time on appeal, see post § 206.

¶ 77. Comp. L. 1871, § 5250, How. St., § 6815, prohibiting suit in justice's court against an executor or administrator as such, precludes suit in that tribunal upon the representative's liability for any charge against the estate, whether he is sued in his official or in his individual capacity.—Basom v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 682.

§ 20. Actions affecting or involving title to real property.

Actions for obstructing highways and public easements, see post § 21.
Transfer to circuit court where title involved, see post § 30.
Notice of defense of title, see post § 96.
Issues as to title to land, see post §§ 105, 106.
Pleading title for first time on appeal to circuit court, see post ¶ 989.
Absence of summons and return from court room on return day, see post ¶ 1119.

Power of municipal court where title to land is in dispute, see Municipal Courts § 9.
General law as to real property, see Real Property.
Provisions as to jurisdiction of real actions or actions respecting easements, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 14169.

¶ 78. No jurisdiction rests in a justice of the peace to try title to land.—Brooks v. Delrymple, 1 Mich. 145; Hart v. Hart, 48 Mich. 175; Gay v. Hults, 55 Mich. 327; Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44; Le Blanc v. Kruger, 75 Mich. 561; Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 50 Mich. 315; Orris v. Kempton, 105 Mich. 229; Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44.

¶ 79. A justice has no jurisdiction to try a cause in which the title to land comes in question, unless plaintiff's title be admitted.—Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184; Brooks v. Delrymple, 1 Mich. 145; Gorham v. Withey, 52 Mich. 50.

¶ 80. Where no notice of title or other special defense has been given in an action of trespass quare clausum, the justice has jurisdiction.—Jacklin v. Soutier, 82 Mich. 648.

¶ 81. The title to lands is not open to settlement in a proceeding before a justice of the peace, and it is statutory that questions relating to farm bounds and highways can be dealt with in no way that may leave a doubt as to the meaning of the record.—Le Blanc v. Kruger, 75 Mich. 561.

¶ 82. An action will not lie before a justice for interrupting an easement.—Fowler v. Hyland, 48 Mich. 179.

Actions respecting private ways and easements, see ante § 20.
Obstruction of highways generally, see Highways, XI.
Provisions as to jurisdiction of actions for disturbance of ways or easements, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 14169.

¶ 83. Trespass quare clausum, consisting in allowing logs to accumulate upon the premises of another in consequence of the closing up of a navigable stream upon which they were floating, is not an action for the legal obstruction of a public easement within the meaning of Comp. L. 1871, § 5250 (How. St., § 6815), and is cognizable by a justice.—Williamson v. Haskell, 50 Mich. 364.

¶ 84. The proviso in How. St., § 6815, that justices of the peace may have jurisdiction in actions for damages resulting from obstructions to highways, confers only a concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court.—Knorr v. Macomb Circuit Judge, 78 Mich. 168.

¶ 85. Comp. L. 1897, § 704, providing that no justice of the peace shall have cognisance of real actions, does not apply to an action brought by a commissioner of highways, under Comp. L. 1897, § 4157, for the obstruction of a highway; but jurisdiction in such action is expressly conferred on justices by Comp. L. 1897, § 9799.—La Barre v. Bent, 154 Mich. 520.

§ 22. Actions by and against private corporations or members.

Jurisdiction of actions against public corporations, see post § 25.
Competency of officer of corporation to serve summons where corporation a party, see post ¶ 153.
Jurisdiction to render judgment on confession, see post ¶ 571.
Provisions as to jurisdiction of actions against corporations, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 14170.

¶ 86. Laws 1877, Act No. 118, § 35 (How. St., § 4110), provides that in actions on labor debts the clerk of the court shall indorse directions on the execution. Held to refer to the officer issuing the execution, and not to exclude the justices' courts in which the justice is his own clerk from jurisdiction of such actions.—Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Min. Co., 43 Mich. 281.

Jurisdiction of garnishment of public corporations, see post § 25.
Sufficiency of affidavit for garnishment against a corporation, see post § 68.
Disclosure by garnished corporation, see post § 71.

Form of process to bring in foreign corporation, see post ¶¶ 146, 147.
Service of justice's process upon foreign corporations, see post § 38.
Service in attachment proceedings against foreign corporations, see post § 59.

¶ 89. The statute (How. St., §§ 8145, 8146) authorizing and regulating suits against foreign corporations does not apply to justices' courts.—Reath v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 89 Mich. 22.

¶ 90. Since Laws 1873, Act No. 155 (How. St., §§ 4362-4368) whatever may have been the case before, justices of the peace have no jurisdiction over foreign insurance companies.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 Mich. 441.

§ 25. Actions by and against municipalities and public boards and officers.

Provisions as to jurisdiction of actions against municipal corporations, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 14169.

Provisions as to jurisdiction against school districts, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 14167.

Provisions as to actions by county, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 14171.

¶ 93. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 3700, justices have no jurisdiction of suits against municipal corporations.—Root v. Mayor, 3 Mich. 433; Gurney v. City of St. Clair, 11 Mich. 202.

¶ 94. As How. St., ch. 283, treated a commissioner of highways as a corporation, and as How. St., § 6861, excludes suits against municipal corporations from the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, it follows that prior to the highway act (Laws 1887, Act No. 312) a justice had no jurisdiction of a suit against a highway commissioner.—Commissioner of Highways of Township of Garfield v. Supervisor of Township of Springfield, 77 Mich. 228.

¶ 97. A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of an action against a township by a taxpayer to recover taxes paid under protest, since a township is a municipal corporation, of actions against which a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction.—Haines v. Township of Chase, How. N. P. 130.

¶ 98. Comp. L. 1871, § 6463, How. St., § 8055, does not allow garnishment before justices of municipal corporations, which includes school districts.—Marathon School Dist. No. 4 v. Gage, 39 Mich. 484.

¶ 99. The statute (Comp. L. 1871, § 3681, How. St., § 5107) which in some cases allows school districts to be sued in justices' courts, held not applicable to the Board of Education of Port Huron.—Seeley v. Port Huron Board of Education, 39 Mich. 486.

¶ 100. Whether the recorder of the city of Grand Haven has jurisdiction, under the charter of that city, as an ex officio justice of the peace, to try an action for the tuition of nonresident pupils, brought by a school district, no part of which is within the city, quære.—Thompson v. Crockery School District No. 7, 25 Mich. 483.

§ 26. Loss and divestiture of jurisdiction.

Effect of proving or recovering more than is claimed, see ante §§ 12, 15.

Upon transfer of cause to another justice, see post § 29.

Effect of defective bond in attachment to oust jurisdiction, see post § 64.

Effect of failure to render judgment within statutory period, see post § 134.

Effect of nonresident's failure to file security for costs, see post § 164.

Jurisdiction divested by filing transcript in circuit court, see post § 182.

Upon failure to serve inventory in attachment, see post ¶ 248.

¶ 101. When a defendant in a justice's court does not appear jurisdiction may be lost by the plaintiff failing to appear.—Charles Bakrow & Co. v. Totten, 146 Mich. 57.

¶ 102. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 782, which provides that where the title of land comes in question, the defendant may give notice thereof upon the return day or any adjourned day, and section 784 providing for a bond and for payment of fees, upon which the cause shall be transferred to the circuit court, a justice does not lose jurisdiction by the giving of notice before the return day, and the filing of a bond and deposit of an amount for costs which is insufficient to pay the costs accrued up to that time.—Hinchman v. Spaulding, 137 Mich. 655.

¶ 104. A justice's jurisdiction is ousted where the attachment is dissolved because of a defective affidavit.—Borland v. Kingsbury, 65 Mich. 59; overruling Hills v. Moore, 40 Mich. 210.

§ 27. ——Effect of unauthorized continuance or adjournment.

Operation of appearance to reinstate cause, see post § 48.

Effect of failure of parties to appear after adjournment in replevin, see post ¶ 345.

Operation and effect of continuance or adjournment, see also post § 116.
Jurisdiction not lost by continuing case from day to day, see post ¶ 503.
Waiver of objections to improper adjournment, see post § 115.
Collateral attack for errors as to continuances and adjournments, see post § 153.

¶ 105. A justice of the peace has no authority, except under How. St., § 6903, which only allows an adjournment not exceeding six days, to adjourn a cause against defendant's objection without a showing under oath (How. St., § 6899); and such adjournment discontinues the suit.—Scullen v. George, 65 Mich. 215.

¶ 106. A justice loses jurisdiction of the subject-matter by adjourning the suit on his own motion where all the parties live outside the county and there are joint defendants, only part of whom have been personally served, and none of whom have appeared (How. St., § 6903).—Hall v. Shank, 57 Mich. 36.

¶ 107. An adjournment by a justice, on his own motion, in the absence and without the consent of the defendant, at any other time than on the return day of the writ, is a discontinuance of the cause.—Stadler v. Moors, 9 Mich. 264.

¶ 108. An adjournment of a cause in a justice's court for more than four days after the trial is completed, for the purpose of rendering judgment, deprives the justice of jurisdiction.—Brady v. Taber, 29 Mich. 199.

¶ 109. An unauthorized adjournment ousts a justice of jurisdiction.—Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 344.

¶ 110. Under How. St., § 6903, providing that a justice of the peace may adjourn a cause, under certain circumstances, "at the time of the return" of process therein, an adjournment on the return day, without a return having been made, is unauthorized, and the subsequent proceedings are void.—Harbour v. Eldred, 107 Mich. 95.

¶ 111. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 1017, providing that a garnishee may deliver a fund claimed by a third party to the justice who shall serve notice on the claimant to appear and maintain his claim and that the justice shall adjourn the suit not less than ten nor more than thirty days, a justice loses jurisdiction of the cause by continuing it more than 30 days until the fund is due and not serving notice on the claimant until some days subsequent to that date.—Hagen v. Johnson, 126 Mich. 695.

¶ 112. A second adjournment in a justice's court in the absence of the defendant is ordinarily fatal to the court's jurisdiction, unless upon a motion supported by an oath.—Beam v. Reynolds, 144 Mich. 383.

¶ 113. Where the justice's return shows that a second adjournment was had, with defendant and counsel present and no objection was made thereto until after the plaintiff had gone, this must be considered as an adjournment by consent, and the justice did not lose jurisdiction because there had been no showing on oath under Comp. L. 1897, § 791.—Beam v. Reynolds, 144 Mich. 383.

¶ 115. Where a justice postpones a case without requiring the showing on oath called for by statute, he is ousted of jurisdiction.—Adams & Ford Co. v. Cullen, 159 Mich. 669.

¶ 117. Under § 791, Comp. L. 1897, where a justice of the peace postpones a trial for more than three months without a written stipulation signed by the parties or their attorneys he loses jurisdiction of the case.—Smith v. Kistler, 174 Mich. 367.

¶ 118. Where a justice of the peace has lost jurisdiction by continuing the case more than three months after return day without a written stipulation, a voluntary appearance of the defendants gives jurisdiction to render judgment, but where defendants do not appear and judgment is entered it is void.—Smith v. Kistler, 174 Mich. 367.

¶ 119. Where a justice adjourned a cause until 2 o'clock of a certain day, without stating whether it would be in the morning or afternoon, he did not lose jurisdiction, since no reasonable uncertainty as to the intention could be entertained.—Bernstein v. Thayer, 157 Mich. 625.

Discontinuances in justice's court generally, see post § 118.

¶ 120. By discontinuing, the plaintiff deprives the justice of the peace of all jurisdiction in the case, since judgment of nonsuit must then be entered, and a new suit may thereafter be begun, although there is no formal entry of the nonsuit.—Burkart v. Blaumann, 142 Mich. 41.

§ 29. Transfer or change to other justice.

Matters disqualifying justice to act, see ante § 6.

Transfer to circuit court to try title, see post § 30.
Transfer of cause on appeal, see post § 210.
Raising on certiorari question of jurisdiction after transfer, see post § 263.
Provisions as to transfer of case, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVIII, §§ 6-9; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14211-14214.

¶ 121. The provision in the justice's act (Comp. L. 1857, § 3776, How. St., § 6937) for the removal of a cause from before a justice who is a material witness applies only to suits at law, and has no application to a proceeding for the opening of a village street.—People ex rel. Bingham v. Brighton, 20 Mich. 57.

¶ 122. As to transfer of replevin suit after abatement by justice's removal from the township, see Kidder v. Merryhew, 32 Mich. 470.

¶ 123. Until all the statutory conditions to the removal of a cause to another justice for trial have been complied with, e. g., payment or offer of payment of the fees for making the transcript, as well as the costs of suit, the justice before whom the cause was commenced retains jurisdiction.—Oakley v. Dunn, 63 Mich. 494.

§ 30. Removal or certification to circuit and retransfer by circuit.

Jurisdiction of justice to try title to land, see ante § 20.
Proceedings to remove cause as divesting justice's jurisdiction, see also ante ¶ 102.
Jurisdiction to try title to real property, see ante § 20.
Issues as to title to land, see post §§ 105, 106.
Provisions as to transfer of cause where title in issue, see Jud. Act, chap. LXIX, §§ 18-23; Comp L. 1915, § 14232-14237.

¶ 124. Where, in an action in justice's court for trespass to land, the declaration avoids claim of title, but plaintiff's evidence shows that the locus was in the public highway, plaintiff to sustain his action must show title to the adjoining land, and when he does so, if defendant does not admit it, the title to land is necessarily in issue, and How. St., § 6895 requires the justice to certify the cause to the circuit court.—Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44.

¶ 124a. When the case has been certified to the circuit court because the evidence developed a question of title to land, the case stands in the circuit subject to the same rules as to proof and disproof as though originally begun there; and the failure to give notice below that title would come in issue does not stand as an admission of plaintiff's title excluding evidence on that issue in the circuit.—Rawson v. Finlay, 27 Mich. 268.

¶ 125. Where a declaration in trespass in justice's court seeks treble damages for the cutting down and carrying away, against the leave of plaintiff, the owner and occupant in possession thereof, of certain trees standing upon the plaintiff's land, and where, after the case has been certified to the circuit court for trial on a plea of title, the real point in controversy turns out to be whether plaintiff gave defendant permission to enter and cut, which is found in defendant's favor, the court properly certifies that the title to land does not come in question.—Dolahanty v. Lucey, 101 Mich. 113.

¶ 126. Plaintiff, to prove his cause of action, testified that he was the owner of the land described in the declaration, and had been in actual possession thereof for sixteen years; that said land abutted on a public highway; that the alleged trespass consisted in removing, from the half of said highway adjoining said land, a load of dirt, by direction of the highway commissioner. Held, that plaintiff was not in the actual possession of the land where the trespass was committed, it being part of a public highway, and that he could only recover by showing title to the adjoining land, and, having sought to make such proof of title, and defendant not admitting it, the case should have been certified to the circuit court.—Orris v. Kempton, 105 Mich. 229.

¶ 127. It is immaterial that a justice after receiving an affidavit for a transfer of the cause under How. St., § 6397, gave as a reason for refusing it that the plaintiff by affidavit denied the ground assigned for removal and the defendant offered no further evidence on the subject, where a further and sufficient reason appears by the justice's return on certiorari, to wit, that the costs and transcript fee were not tendered.—Oakley v. Dunn, 63 Mich. 494.

¶ 128. On receiving an affidavit for a transfer of the cause under How. St., § 6937, stating that the justice has advised with the plaintiff in respect to the subject-matter of the case, he has no authority to receive counter-affidavits denying the averred ground.—Oakley v. Dunn, 63 Mich. 494.

¶ 129. Though the defendant before a justice of the peace on presenting a proper affidavit for removal of the case may remain passive until the justice taxes the costs, which under How. St., § 6937, must be paid; yet if the justice omits to tax them request to do so should be made and fees tendered in order to put the justice in default and fix the error.—Oakley v. Dunn, 63 Mich. 494.

¶ 130. In an action begun in a justice's court, the defendant, by pleading the general issue and title to the land and thereupon causing the case to be certified to the circuit court, which has jurisdiction, waives any possible lack of jurisdiction by the justice.—La Barre v. Bent, 154 Mich. 520.

IV. PROCEDURE IN CIVIL CASES.

A. IN GENERAL.

Jurisdiction of justice of the peace, see ante III.
Township in which suit to be brought, see ante § 16.
Loss of jurisdiction by unauthorized continuance or adjournment, see ante § 27.
Proceedings in attachment, see post § 54 et seq.
Proceedings in garnishment, see post § 68 et seq.
Proceedings in replevin, see post § 77 et seq.
Parties and pleadings, see post § 86 et seq.
Process and appearance, see post IV, B.
Trial and judgment, see post IV, F.
Continuances and adjournments, see post §§ 111-117.
Dismissal, discontinuance and nonsuit, see post §§ 118-120.
Dockets and record of judgment, see post §§ 139-147.
Conclusiveness of judgment and collateral attack, see post § 148 et seq.
Payment and discharge of judgment, see post § 157.
Abatement of action by removal from township, see also Abatement ¶ 28.
Distraint proceedings, see Animals §§ 7-9, 11; Replevin.
Proceedings under fish and game laws, see Fish and Game § 9.
Proceedings for arrest of fraudulent debtors, see Civil Arrest, II.
Proceedings for removal of highway obstructions, see Highways § 187 et seq.

§ 31. Manner and form; technicalities.

Nature of jurisdiction exercised and construction of powers of justices, see also ante § 10.
Disregard of technical defects on appeal, see post § 230.
Technical errors as ground for reversal on certiorari, see post § 273.
Availability on certiorari of error as to form of action, see post ¶ 1217.
Provisions as to forms of action, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 14177.

¶ 131. How. St., § 6820, allowing covenant to be brought in justices' courts on the conditions of bonds, is confined to money bonds securing a sum or sums not exceeding $150; but where covenants exist in bonds, actions of covenant, in lieu of actions for the penalty, still lie (How. St., § 7746).—Bishop v. Freeman, 42 Mich. 533; Gray v. Stafford, 52 Mich. 497.

¶ 132. The proceedings of justices should be liberally viewed with respect to regularity and form.—Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384.

¶ 133. Technicality and form are neither expected nor required in the proceedings of justice's courts.—Kinyon v. Fowler, 10 Mich. 16.

Place for holding courts generally, see Courts, II.
Provisions as to place of holding court, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, §§ 1, 9; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14166, 14174.

¶ 134. A justice is not required to hold courts always at one place; he may hold them sometimes in one place and sometimes in another, according to temporary convenience.—Faulks v. People, 39 Mich. 200.

¶ 135. A justice who lives in a village that lies in two townships may be authorized by statute to hold court in that part of the village that lies in the township he does not live in.—Faulks v. People, 39 Mich. 200.

¶ 136. Where a cause was called in a barroom and adjourned to an adjoining room in the same house for trial, the justice having no knowledge that spirituous liquors were sold there, and there being no proof of such sales, judgment was not invalidated by Sess. L. 1842, p. 135, § 4, How St., § 6821, forbidding holding such court in a barroom, etc.—Savier v. Chipman, 1 Mich. 116.

B. PROCESS AND APPEARANCE.

Process issued by special justice, see also ante § 7.
Civil warrants for arrest, see post § 43.
Process to acquire jurisdiction in attachment, see post § 54 et seq.
Writs of replevin, see post § 77 et seq.
Writs of execution, see post IV, H.
Collateral attack for defects in process, see post § 151.
General law as to process, see Process.
Provisions as to process and appearance, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVII, §§ 3-28; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14180-14205.

§ 33. Summons.

Alias summons, see post § 41.
Amendments and alterations of process, see post § 42.
Defects in and objections to process, see post § 50.
Summons in garnishment, see post § 70.
Conformity of declaration to summons, see post § 89.
Appeal from dismissal for defect in summons, see post ¶ 777.
Proof as to time when summons delivered for service, see post ¶ 540.
Process to support judgment on confession, see also post § 137.
Judgment against joint defendant not served, see post ¶ 557.
Docket entries as to process, see post § 140 et seq.
Provisions as to manner of commencing suits, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVII, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 14180.

¶ 137. A justice's summons is not issued if merely delivered to the plaintiff and kept in his hands.—Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472.

¶ 138. A justice's summons in a suit commenced under How. St., § 7317, authorizing its service in an adjoining county where the demand sued on is principally for labor or services, must be directed to an officer of that county.—Antcliff v. June, 81 Mich. 477.

¶ 139. The direction of a writ commonly issued by a justice of the peace to "any constable" suffices when the writ is served by an authorized officer other than a constable having a constable's powers.—Fleugel v. Lards, 108 Mich. 682.

¶ 140. A justice's summons, returnable not less than two days from its date, is defective if made returnable on the second day after it was issued.—Everts v. Fisk, 44 Mich. 515.

¶ 141. A summons issued by a justice of the peace in an action of trespass on the case and claiming more than $100 is void on its face.—Adams v. Butler, How. N. P. 144.

§ 34. ——Long or short summons.

Objections to long or short process, see post § 50.
Special appearance to object to long summons, see post ¶ 196.
Joinder of issue as waiver of objection to long summons, see post ¶ 223.
Validity of judgment in garnishment based on short instead of long summons, see post ¶ 305.
Short summons where long one proper as ground for dismissal, see post ¶ 511.
Entry of default upon long summons where short summons proper, see post ¶ 565.
Presumptions on appeal from issuance of long summons, see post § 233.
Presumptions on certiorari from issuance of long summons, see post ¶ 1184.

¶ 142. Under Comp. L. 1857, §§ 3665, 3668, 3669, a long summons only is authorized if both plaintiff and defendants are residents of the county, but if either is a nonresident, a short summons is proper.—Allen v. Mills, 26 Mich. 123.

¶ 143. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 5264 (How. St. § 6829), if the defendant be a nonresident of the county, the summons "may" be either long or short; but by section 5265 (6830), if the defendant be a nonresident, the summons "shall," that is must, be a short one.—Moore v. Vrooman, 32 Mich. 526.

¶ 144. A short summons issued by a justice of the peace under How. St., § 6829, need not show upon its face that plaintiff is a nonresident of the county.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13; Hawkins v. Castenholz, 171 Mich. 85.

¶ 145. In garnishee proceedings in a justice court where plaintiff and the principal defendant are residents of the same county, a judgment against the principal defendant is void where he is served with a short summons, returnable in five days, since a long summons, returnable in not less than six nor more than twelve days, is necessary.—Katt v. Swartz, 199 Mich. 51.

¶ 146. An action will lie in justice's court against a foreign express company doing business in the county (How. St., § 3723); and if plaintiff is a nonresident, defendant may be brought in by short summons. The statute providing no different process for a corporation than for an individual.—Gallagher v. American Express Co., 56 Mich. 13.

¶ 147. Under section 719, Comp. L. 1897, it is imperative that in a suit in a justice's court against a foreign corporation, a short summons shall be used.—Wells v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., 160 Mich. 213.

§ 35. ——Indorsement of deputed authority to serve.

Mode of service of process, see post § 37.
Service by private person, see post § 36.

¶ 148. The authority of a private person to serve a justice's summons must be indorsed thereon or no jurisdiction is acquired.—Rasch v. Moore, 57 Mich. 54; Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 Mich. 72.

¶ 149. In indorsing upon a summons a deputation of authority to serve it the justice need not certify that the person authorized is of age and not interested in the suit. It is not presumed that he selects an incompetent person.—Buel v. Duke, 38 Mich. 167.

§ 36. Officer or person to make service.

Officer to whom summons directed, see ante § 33.
Indorsement on process of authority to serve, see ante § 35.
Defects in and objections to service, see post § 50.
Service by wrong person as ground for collateral attack, see post § 151.
Fees for serving process taxable as costs, see post § 161.
Person or officer to levy justices' execution, see post § 170.
Testimony of justice on appeal to show service by competent person, see post ¶ 1018.
General powers, functions and duties of sheriffs and constables, see Sheriffs and Constables.

¶ 150. The "competent person" empowered by How. St. § 6827, to serve a justice's summons must appear to have been personally designated by the justice, and must be selected upon sufficient inquiry to determine his competency.—Rasch v. Moore, 57 Mich. 54.

¶ 151. A justice of the peace who would authorize a private person to serve a summons must first assure himself that such person is not interested in the case.—Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 Mich. 72.

¶ 152. Under How. St., § 7074, authorizing a justice of the peace to empower a private person to serve process, the request of a party and the fitness of the person designated must be shown in some responsible way.—Gadsby v. Stimer, 79 Mich. 260.

¶ 153. An officer of a corporation is not a disinterested person competent to serve a summons in a case in which the corporation is plaintiff.—Union Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 Mich. 72.

¶ 154. The next friend of an infant plaintiff has no interest in the case that disqualifies his brother, who is appointed by the justice to serve the summons, from making service.—Kees v. Maxim, 99 Mich. 493.

§ 37. Mode, time and place for service.

Service of writs of attachment, see post § 57 et seq.
Service of summons in garnishment, see post § 70.
Service of writs of replevin, see post § 79.
Territorial limits of justice's jurisdiction, see ante § 16.
Indorsement of authority of private person to serve, see ante § 35.
Sufficiency of efforts to obtain service to warrant second summons, see post § 41.
Voluntary appearance after irregular or void service, see post § 44.
Defects in and objections to service, see post § 50.
Special appeal for want of due service of summons, see post ¶ 795.
Availability on certiorari of objection that process served on wrong person, see post ¶ 1082.
Mode of serving corporations and proper officers and agents to be served as representatives of corporations, see Process, II, B.
Computation of time generally, see Time.
Statutes authorizing service of process against railroad companies upon conductors, etc., see Process II, B.

¶ 155. How. St., § 6827, provides that a justice's summons shall be served "at least six days before the time of appearance mentioned therein"; therefore a summons returnable February 18 is properly served February 12, since the day of service is excluded and the return-day included in computing the time.—People, for use of Chaddock v. Barry, 93 Mich. 542.

¶ 156. Under the ruling in Chaddock v. Barry, 93 Mich. 542, a summons issued from justice court against a nonresident on the 7th day of the month served upon the same day and returnable on the 10th day of the month one intervening day being Sunday confers jurisdiction upon the justice to render a valid judgment.—Lemon v. Hampton, 128 Mich. 182.

¶ 158. Under the justice's act, process of a justice's court in civil cases is not authorized to run into another county, or to be served beyond the bailiwick.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 Mich. 441.

¶ 159. A justice's summons under Comp. L. 1871, § 6463, How. St., § 8055 in garnishment against a corporation cannot be served outside of the county.—Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, 33 Mich. 400.

¶ 160. Service by the sheriff upon the president of a corporation, which is the owner of logs of an attachment issued by a justice of the peace under the log lien law, was sufficient notice to the corporation (Log Lien Law of 1887, § 6; Laws 1887, Act No. 229), though served outside the justice's county.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

¶ 161. Where a city charter authorizes the chief of police to serve any process which by law a constable may serve, and contains no words limiting said authority to the city or to particular cases, civil process out of justice's court may be served by him anywhere within the county.—Fleugel v. Lards, 108 Mich. 682.

Justice's jurisdiction of actions against foreign corporations, see ante § 24.
Proof of service upon foreign corporations, see post § 39.
Amendment of return on appeal to show authority of insurance commissioner to accept service, see post ¶ 859.

¶ 162. The service upon foreign insurance companies provided by Comp. L. 1871, § 1683, How. St., § 4331 is not applicable to justices' courts.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 Mich. 441.

§ 39. Return and proof of service.

Loss of jurisdiction by adjournment on return day without return having been made, see ante ¶ 110.
Directions in summons as to time for return, see ante ¶ 140.
Alias summons upon return "not found," see post § 41.
Effect of alterations of return, see post § 42.
Return and proof of service of attachment, see post § 60.
Return of summons in garnishment, see post § 70.
Return of replevin writ, see post § 79.
Proof of service to support default, see also post § 135.
Return on justices' execution, see post § 172.
Amendment of docket to make it show date of return of service, see post ¶ 634.
Computation of time allowed for returning summons, see also Time.

¶ 163. The return to a summons in these words: "Served the within by reading personally,"—the statute requiring it to be served by reading it to defendant and delivering to him a copy,—is bad, and does not give the justice jurisdiction.—Campau v. Fairbanks, 1 Mich. 151.

¶ 164. Under R. S. 1846, p. 389, § 15, which required that summons should be served "by reading the same to defendant, and (if required by him) delivering a copy thereof," a return in these words, "Personally served true copies of the within by reading," properly dated and signed, was held sufficient.—Shaw v. Moser, 3 Mich. 71.

¶ 165. The following return of service of a justice's summons is prima facie sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction: "I hereby certify that I have personally served the within summons on the within named defendant, by reading the same and by giving a copy, on the 5th day of August, 1874."—Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 Mich. 196.

¶ 167. Where the return of service of a justice's summons is signed by the person making it as "under-sheriff," without specifying the county of which he is under-sheriff, and the return shows that the service was made in the city where the summons was issued, it sufficiently appears that he assumed to act as under-sheriff of the county in which said city is situated, and the official designation is sufficient.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13.

¶ 168. Act No. 321, Pub. Acts 1907, provides that certain foreign corporations admitted to do business in Michigan shall appoint the insurance commissioner to act as their attorney in accepting service. Held, that to give jurisdiction against such corporations, proof of such appointment must be made in a suit before a justice of the peace.—Wells v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., 160 Mich. 213.

Construction and interpretation of judgment recitals, see post § 146.

¶ 169. Strict grammatical rules of construction are not to be applied in determining the fair import and meaning of a constable's return of a summons.—Shaw v. Moser, 3 Mich. 71.

¶ 170. A mistake in an officer's return by which a summons issued March 2, 1888, and returnable March 10, 1888, is shown to have been served March 3, 1886, corrects itself, and an ex parte judgment based thereon is not void.—Evans v. Calman, 92 Mich. 427.

¶ 171. Where, under a city charter, the marshal is ex officio chief of police, to which last-named officer power is given to serve any process which by law a constable may serve, a return of service made by the city marshal, as such, admits of no other conclusion than that the writ was served by the chief of police.—Fleugel v. Lards, 108 Mich. 682.

¶ 172. A defendant in a justice's summons may appear on the return day and by affidavit dispute the officer's return so as to show that the summons was served upon him more than twelve days before the return day.—Lane v. Jones, 94 Mich. 540.

Character and sufficiency of justice's summons, see ante § 33 et seq.

Adjournment of case to issue alias summons, see post ¶ 213.

Alias summons as commencement of another action, see post ¶ 1004.

¶ 173. A justice has no jurisdiction to issue a second summons and follow it with an attachment unless the statutory requirements as to service have been complied with; e. g., in making a diligent effort to obtain personal service and in taking the full time allowed therefor before returning defendant "not found."—Isabelle v. Iron Cliffs Co., 57 Mich. 120.

¶ 174. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 720, which provides that when suit is brought upon a contract or obligation against two or more joint defendants, one of whom shall not be found in the county where suit is brought, the justice may "at any time within four days from the return day of the writ by which such action was commenced, issue one or more alias writs of summons," alias writs may be issued upon the return day of the summons. (Reed v. Parker, 134 Mich. 68 distinguished.)—Brown v. Knop, 137 Mich. 284.

¶ 175. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 720, which provides that when suit is brought upon a contract or obligation against two or more joint defendants, one of whom shall not be found in the county where suit is brought, the justice may at any time within four days from the return day of the writ, issue one or more alias writs of summons, it is not essential to the jurisdiction of the justice that the officer's return should state that he had used due diligence to obtain personal service, and had left a copy of the summons at defendant's last place of abode.—Brown v. Knop, 137 Mich. 284.

¶ 175a. Plaintiffs in a suit on a contract against three joint defendants caused a short summons to be issued. Due and regular service was had on two of them. A return showed that the third contracting defendant could not be found in the county. A request for an alias writ was granted on the day before the return day and after it was too late to make service under the original summons. On the return day of the original writ the justice continued the cause until the return day of the alias writ. Service was had on the third defendant and judgment entered by default of all the defendants upon the return day. The alias writ was made returnable on the fifth day after its issuance including the return day, and was served on the date it issued. Held, on certiorari to review order and judgment of the circuit court dismissing transcript proceedings based on justice court judgment and recalling an execution, that the transcript showed a good and valid judgment, and that the question as to whether or not the alias writ should have been returnable one day later could be raised after judgment only by the third defendant.—Hawkins v. Castenholz, 171 Mich. 85.

§ 42. Alterations or amendments of process.

Sufficiency of justices' summons, see ante § 33 et seq.

¶ 176. Any alteration of the date and return day of a justice's summons, not made by the justice himself, or by another in his presence and under his direction, renders the summons void.—Harring v. Allen, 25 Mich. 509.

¶ 177. The filling up or alteration by a sheriff, under the authority of the justice, of the teste and return day of a justice's summons is forbidden by How. St., § 590, and, being illegal, makes the summons void. —Garrison v. Hoyt, 25 Mich. 509.

¶ 178. One McClennahan brought suit in a justice's court in his own name, as guardian of one Osborne. Held, the justice properly allowed him to amend the summons so as to make Osborne the plaintiff suing by his guardian.—Osborne v. Osborne, 156 Mich. 413.

§ 43. Civil warrants for arrest.

Liability of justice for wrongful issuance of warrant, see ante § 8.

Objections and waiver thereof, see post § 52.

Conclusiveness of entries as to arrest, see post ¶ 640.

Objections for first time on appeal to sufficiency of affidavit for warrant, see post ¶ 865.

Civil arrest and bail in general, see Civil Arrest.

Presumption of jurisdiction to issue warrant of arrest, see also False Imprisonment ¶ 112.

¶ 179. A showing under oath of probable cause is required to justify the issue of a warrant for arrest for trespass.—Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 Mich. 172.

¶ 180. Where suit is begun before a justice of the peace for the wrongful conversion of goods belonging to the plaintiffs, authority to make an affidavit for a civil warrant is presumed if the affidavit is made by one of two plaintiffs who were cotenants of the property converted.—Deitz v. Groesbeck, 32 Mich. 303.

¶ 181. The constitutional prohibition against the issue of any warrant for arrest "without probable cause supported by oath or affirmation" makes it needful to set forth in the affidavit for the warrant the facts which support the belief that probable cause exists.—DeLong v. Briggs, 47 Mich. 624.

¶ 182. The affidavit required by Comp. L. 1857, § 3673, How. St., § 6834, for a justice's warrant of arrest under § 6832 must set forth facts and circumstances within the knowledge of the affiant, and not mere conclusions of law; and the facts must be such as in law tend to make out the cause of complaint.—Brown v. Kelley, 20 Mich. 27.

¶ 183. An affidavit showing that defendant has taken the property of the plaintiffs from the possession of their bailee and converted it to his own use is sufficient to authorize a justice to issue a civil warrant; the affidavit need not negative any possible defense, e. g., the bailee's consent, if that would be a defense.—Dietz v. Groesbeck, 32 Mich. 303.

¶ 184. A justice's warrant for arrest for trespass cannot issue on an affidavit which sets forth merely that affiant "has, as he has good reason to believe, a just cause of action against [defendant, etc.], against whom he applies for process by warrant for trespass committed by said [defendant] upon lands owned by this deponent, said lands being," etc.—DeLong v. Briggs, 47 Mich. 624; Maxwell v. Deens, 46 Mich. 35; Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 Mich. 172.

¶ 185. An affidavit for a civil warrant in a suit to recover penalty for bringing pauper into state is insufficient if it fails to state with positiveness the facts that warrant its issue, and to give the circumstances upon which is based affiant's "good reason" to believe that they exist.—Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 70 Mich. 152.

upon such representations, which were averred to be false, plaintiff agreed to go to work at the price stated, and on arriving at the place designated was informed by a person claiming to be the contractor that defendant had no authority to hire men and teams, and that plaintiff would only be paid $2.25 per day, for which sum he worked for a time and then returned to his home, is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction.—Lamper v. Roberts, 83 Mich. 547.

¶ 187. An affidavit for a civil warrant in behalf of a township for trespass upon land, in which affiant states that he is the agent of the township, and makes the affidavit in its behalf, and that the township has been the owner in fee of the land on which the trespass is claimed to have been committed for more than ten years last past, sufficiently shows affiant's authority to make the affidavit in behalf of the township, and its ownership of the real estate trespassed upon.—Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

Appearance in justices' attachment, see post § 63.
Nonappearance of parties in replevin as ground for dismissal, see post § 80.
Authority of attorney to appear, see post § 46.
Appearance to obtain continuance to which parties have consented, see post ¶ 491.
Loss of jurisdiction by nonappearance of parties, see ante ¶ 101.
Plaintiff's failure to appear as operating a discontinuance, see post § 118.
Nonappearance as ground for dismissal or nonsuit, see § 119.
Defaults upon nonappearance of defendant, see post § 135.
Appearance to confess judgment, see post § 136 et seq.
Operation of appearance to reinstate cause, see post § 48.
Docket recitals as to appearance, see post § 142.
Irregularities as to appearance as ground for collateral attack, see post § 151.
Collateral attack for failure to wait an hour for appearance, see post § 152.
Appearance on appeal to circuit, see post § 211.
General law as to appearance, see Appearance.

¶ 188. The appearance of a stenographer to take the testimony of a party in a justice's court is not an appearance.—Hoben v. Citizens' Tel. Co., 176 Mich. 596.

¶ 189. Written request by plaintiff or his attorney, within an hour after return hour, that case be adjourned or held open, is an appearance, and gives jurisdiction.—Wagner v. Woodhouse, 92 Mich. 616.

¶ 191. A general appearance before a justice cannot be considered a submission to the jurisdiction in attachment when taken in connection with defendant's motion to dismiss the writ for want of proper service.—Michels v. Stork, 44 Mich. 2.

¶ 192. A defendant may confer jurisdiction upon the court by a voluntary appearance after an irregular or void service upon him.—Dailey v. Kennedy, 64 Mich. 208.

§ 45. ——Special appearance.

Special appearance in attachment, see post § 63.
Waiver by appearance, see post § 51.
Pleas in abatement and to the jurisdiction, see post § 95.

¶ 193. Appearing in an attachment suit before a justice and moving to dismiss the writ for want of proper service is not a submission to jurisdiction.—Michels v. Stork, 44 Mich. 2.

¶ 194. A special appearance for the sole purpose of making an objection is not a submission to jurisdiction.—McLean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 129.

¶ 195. Special appearance in a justice's court for the sole purpose of moving to quash a writ gives no right to thereafter serve the attorney with notice of an amendment of the constable's return.—Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181.

¶ 196. Defendant in a suit in a justice's court was served with a long summons. He mailed to the justice by registered letter an affidavit that he was a resident of another county and a motion to dismiss on this ground. Held, the justice erred in giving judgment to plaintiff upon defendant's nonappearance on the return day, since defendant's course amounted to filing a special appearance showing him entitled to a short summons.—Nelson v. Hillen, 164 Mich. 507.

¶ 198. Where the docket shows that defendant appeared for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction, and that the justice proceeded to a trial on the merits, that is equivalent to a decision of the motion.—Wright v. Russell, 19 Mich. 346.

§ 46. Appearance by and authority of attorney.

Liability of justice for not requiring showing under oath of authority to appear, see ante ¶ 20.

Docket showing as to attorney's authority to appear, see post § 142.

Failure to prove authority of attorney as ground for collateral attack, see post § 151.

Authority of attorney to make affidavit for transcript of judgment, see post § 176.

Availability on special appeal of objection that attorney failed to prove authority to appear, see post ¶¶ 794, 1037.

Presumptions on certiorari as to showing of attorney's authority, see post ¶ 1180.

Conflict between affidavits and return on certiorari as to proof of attorney's authority, see post ¶ 1186.

Authority of attorneys generally, see Attorney.

¶ 199. Where the attorney appearing for plaintiff on the return day failed to prove his authority when requested by defendant, the action was defeated. The demand is not mere matter of form, but a right conferred by statute.—Spier v. M'Queen, 1 Mich. 252.

¶ 200. The requirement of Comp. L. 1871, § 5305, How. St., § 6870, that in actions before justices an attorney shall prove his authority in all cases where the opposite party does not appear is peremptory, and failure to make such proof is not a mere "omission or misrecital of an oath" cured by Comp. L. 1871, § 5479, How. St., § 7046.—Scofield v. Cahoon, 31 Mich. 206.

¶ 201. One cannot prove his authority to appear as attorney for a party in a suit before a justice by producing a letter from a third person asking him to appear; nor will the fact that the third person is himself a lawyer be sufficient to give authority if it does not distinctly appear that he is attorney for the party.—Westbrook v. Blood, 50 Mich. 443.

¶ 202. A writing instructing and empowering a specified attorney to appear on behalf of a corporation in all suits which may be brought in any justice's court in a certain city against it is sufficient to authorize him to appear for it in justice's court and to follow the case on appeal.—Norberg v. Heineman, 59 Mich. 210.

¶ 203. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 762, providing that authority to appear as attorney shall be proved when requested or when the opposite party shall not appear, failure to prove such authority will not reverse, where the defendant appeared specially by counsel in the justice court and remained throughout the trial without objection to counsel's authority.—Hirsh v. Fisher, 138 Mich. 95.

¶ 204. Comp. L. 1897, § 762, requiring proof, if demanded, of the authority of an attorney to appear for another, does not apply where a village treasurer, empowered by law thereto, brings assumpsit for the recovery of village taxes on personalty in the name of the village.—Village of Wayne v. Goldsmith, 141 Mich. 528.

¶ 205. A justice's attachment was not personally served, nor did defendant appear; on the return day plaintiff appeared by attorney, and the justice, as required by How. St., § 6846, adjourned the case for thirty days. Held, that it was of no importance how plaintiff appeared on the return day, and as the docket showed that his appearance on the adjourned day was regular, a judgment in his favor cannot be objected to on the ground that his attorney did not prove his authority as required by How. St., § 6870.—Churchill v. Goldsmith, 64 Mich. 250.

¶ 206. The authority of an attorney who appears in justice's court extends no further than the proceedings before the justice.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 207. After judgment in a justice's court there is no implied authority in the attorney to receive service in subsequent proceedings. Clark v. McGregor, 55 Mich. 412.

Loss or divestiture of jurisdiction, see ante § 26.

¶ 208. The general appearance of the defendant in justice court upon many adjournments of the cause after three months have expired will operate to reinstate a cause in which the judge has lost jurisdiction.—Gilmore v. Lichtenberg, 129 Mich. 275.

§ 49. Hour for appearance on return or trial day.

Defaults and judgments thereon, see post § 135.

Necessity that docket show appearance within the hour, see post § 142.

Collateral attack for failure to wait an hour for appearance, see post § 152.

Certiorari as method of reviewing failure to wait an hour, see post ¶ 1083.

Hour for appearance in forcible entry and summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 30.

¶ 209. A justice must wait an hour for defendant to appear in any case where How. St., § 6938, allows plaintiff that time.—Bossence v. Jones, 46 Mich. 492; Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636.

¶ 210. A justice of the peace cannot, upon a service made on the return day of an attachment, proceed at once, upon such return day, to a trial of the cause.—Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636.

¶ 211. A justice's jury was discharged upon failure to agree, and another trial was set for the next day, with notice to defendant; defendant did not appear at the time set, made no motion for a continuance, and did not request or pay for a second jury. Held, that the justice after waiting an hour for defendant could try the case in his absence and render judgment.—Roberts v. Tremayne, 61 Mich. 264.

¶ 213. A justice need not wait an hour upon the return day of a summons for defendant to appear before adjourning the case for the purpose of issuing an alias summons, since Comp. L. 1897, § 836, providing for judgment in case a party fails to appear within an hour, has no application to an adjournment.—Brown v. Knop, 137 Mich. 284.

§ 50. Defects in process or service, objections and waiver of same.

Waiver by causing case to be certified to circuit court to try title, see ante ¶ 130.
Defects in and objections to attachment, see post § 64.
Objections to writ of replevin or service or return thereof, see post § 80.
Failure to object to long summons where short summons proper, see also post ¶ 565.
Collateral attack for defects in process or service thereof, see post § 151.
Special appeal as method of reviewing errors and irregularities in respect to process, see post §§ 188, 282.
Raising objections for first time on appeal, see post §§ 206, 228.
Raising objections for the first time on certiorari, see post §§ 263, 273.
Going to trial on merits in circuit court as waiver of defects in justice's process, see post § 229.

¶ 214. The objection that a short summons was issued where a long one was prescribed by the statute may be raised in the cause itself before the justice, or on appeal or certiorari.—Allen v. Mills, 26 Mich. 123.

¶ 215. A defendant who does not appear in justice's court waives nothing; for plaintiff must in all cases prove his cause of action as upon appearance.—Gilbert v. Hanford, 13 Mich. 40; Barber v. Taylor, 1 Mich. 352.

¶ 216. A party who does not appear in a suit before a justice waives nothing, but may raise the objection upon appeal or certiorari.—Campau v. Fairbanks, 1 Mich. 151.

§ 51. ——Waiver by appearance and joinder of issues.

Waiver by failure to appear, see ante ¶¶ 215, 216.
Of defects in affidavit for attachment, see post §§ 55, 64.
Pleading to the merits, see post § 96.

¶ 217. An appearance for the purpose of objecting to irregularities does not waive them, but if it is for some other purpose, as for obtaining a continuance, it is a waiver, and no objection can afterwards be taken to prior defects even though the motion for which the appearance was made was denied. —Lane v. Leech, 44 Mich. 163.

¶ 218. A justice before whom a suit was begun fell sick and directed it to be tried before another justice who had jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Held, that as the parties appeared on the adjourned day and tried the case on the merits without objection, they waived all questions of regularity and the judgment was binding.—Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 338.

¶ 219. If one who is individually sued before a justice pleads the general issue as administrator, he cannot deny the jurisdiction.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 Mich. 330.

¶ 220. Objections to a defective affidavit in trespass in justice's court are waived by pleading the general issue and proceeding to trial without objection.—Jacklin v. Soutier, 82 Mich. 648.

¶ 221. Jurisdictional defects, in proceedings in justice's court to enforce a lien for labor, are waived by a general appearance, plea of the general issue and trial upon the merits.—Fisher v. Hardwood Mfg. Co., 120 Mich. 490.

¶ 222. The fact that defendant appeared in the justice's court on the return day and indicated his special appearance without specifying his objection to the jurisdiction of the court was not a waiver of the objection to the jurisdiction. Statement of counsel that he appeared specially is a statement that he does not appear generally, and is a sufficient indication of an intention to reserve his right to question the jurisdiction of the court.—Marr v. Cook, 147 Mich. 425.

¶ 223. The objection that plaintiff in an action brought in justice's court had improperly sued by a long summons is one that is waived by joining issue.—Hart v. Blake, 31 Mich. 278.

¶ 224. A defendant appeared and pleaded to the merits. The constable then amended his return so as to show that the service was bad. Defendant did not ask leave to withdraw his plea, but moved to dismiss, and his motion was properly denied, as his pleading to the merits raised an issue and made the question of service of no importance.—Slattery v. Hilliker, 39 Mich. 573.

¶ 225. The presence of the parties to a suit in justice's court, and their consent to an adjournment, without pleading, cures any defects in the service or return of service of the summons by which the suit was commenced.—Waldron v. Palmer, 104 Mich. 556.

¶ 226. A justice's docket which shows that the parties appeared upon the return day of the writ, and that by consent the suit was adjourned "without pleadings or prejudice to either party," does not establish a waiver by defendant of a defect in the service of process.—Tunningly v. Butcher, 106 Mich. 35.

¶ 227. An entry by a justice before whom a garnishment case was tried, reciting that the parties were in court and consented to an adjournment without pleading, conclusively shows that the defendant waived all defects of service.—Priest v. American Ins. Union, 171 Mich. 321.

§ 52. ——Objections to warrant or arrest thereunder and waiver of objections.

Issuance of civil warrants by the justice, see ante § 43.
Raising objection for first time on appeal, see post § 206.

¶ 228. Giving bail on arrest upon warrant, and an adjournment obtained before pleading by the party arrested, do not waive the right of the party to object to the proceedings on which the arrest was founded.—Brown v. Kelley, 20 Mich. 27.

¶ 229. The fact that an affidavit for the arrest of a trespasser on land is defective does not affect the issue on the merits.—Maxwell v. Deens, 46 Mich. 35.

¶ 230. The statement of counsel on a motion to quash in justice's court, that defendant, who was arrested on a civil warrant, was a juror in attendance on the circuit court, is too informal to establish the fact of his privilege from arrest. It must be specially pleaded.—Brower v. Tatro, 115 Mich. 368.

§ 53. ——Objections to appearance by attorney.

¶ 231. The right to object to an appearance as attorney in justice's court for want of authority to do so is not waived by having demanded a plea before the question of adjournment was considered.—Westbrook v. Blood, 50 Mich. 443.

C. ATTACHMENT, GARNISHMENT AND REPLEVIN.

§ 54. Attachment in general.

Jurisdiction of justices of the peace, see ante § 10.
Township in which proceedings to be brought, see ante § 16.
Loss of jurisdiction in attachment by unauthorized adjournment, see ante ¶ 114.
General law of attachment, see Attachment.
Provisions as to attachment in justice's court, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXV; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14337-14360.

¶ 232. Being governed by the general law (How. St., § 6818), a justice of the peace cannot issue an attachment under the log lien law where the parties are residents of his county, but not of the township wherein he resides, or of an adjoining township.—Burlingame v. Marble, 95 Mich. 5.

§ 55. ——Necessity and sufficiency of affidavit or showing.

Dissolution of attachment because of defective affidavit as divesting jurisdiction, see ante ¶ 104.
Objections and amendments, see post § 64.
Pleading in justices' courts, see post § 87 et seq.
Presumptions on certiorari as to filing of affidavit, see post ¶ 1167.
Affidavits for attachment generally, see Attachment, IV.

¶ 233. The affidavit in attachment proceedings under Comp. L. 1897, § 717, is jurisdictional and if the affidavit is void the whole proceedings fail unless the defect is waived by a general appearance.—Dutcher v. Grand Rapids Fire Ins. Co., 131 Mich. 671.

¶ 234. An affidavit for an attachment in justice's court stated that affiant was "one of the plaintiff named in the annexed writ of attachment," but it did not otherwise identify such plaintiffs, and it was not annexed to the writ, nor does the statute (How. St. § 6839) contemplate that it shall be so annexed. The writ issued in favor of two plaintiffs. Held, that the affidavit was void for not identifying plaintiffs.—Burnside v. Davis, 65 Mich. 74.

Effect of defective bond upon justices' jurisdiction, see post § 64.
Presumptions on certiorari as to execution of bond, see post ¶ 1167.
Bonds upon attachment generally, see Attachment, IV, B.
Insufficiency of bond as ground for reversal, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVIII, § 36; Comp. L. 1915, § 14436.

¶ 237. A justice of the peace obtains no jurisdiction in an attachment suit until after a bond has been filed.—Marr v. Cook, 147 Mich. 425.

§ 57. ——Service of writ and inventory.

Service upon president of corporation, see ante ¶ 160.

Return of service, see post § 60 et seq.

Defects in and objections to service, see post § 64.

Adjournment to perfect attachment service, see post § 112.

¶ 238. A constable who has attached property and served copies of the writ and inventory upon the persons in whose possession the property was found is not thereby precluded from afterwards serving the writ upon the defendant if found within the county at any time within six days before the return day.—Nicolls v. Lawrence, 80 Mich. 395.

¶ 239. An attachment issued by a justice of the peace in a "log-lien suit" brought under Laws 1887, Act No. 229, may be served by the sheriff of the county where the attachment is issued upon the log owner in any county in the state.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

¶ 240. Under Comp L. 1897, § 717, permitting an alias summons and a subsequent attachment against the defendant in justice court, the fact that the first summons and the alias were not served after due diligence because the defendant had no last place of abode in the county, will not deprive the court of jurisdiction in the subsequent attachment in the same suit notwithstanding the institution of garnishee proceedings with the first summons.—Adams v. Osborne, 138 Mich. 161.

Time to serve summons, see ante § 37.

¶ 241. Service January 29, of a justice's attachment returnable February 4, is void, being less than six days before the return.—White v. Prior, 88 Mich. 647.

¶ 242. Under How. St., § 6840 providing that a justice's attachment shall be executed at least six days before the return thereof by seizing goods of the defendant, making an inventory thereof, and serving a copy of the attachment and inventory upon the defendant if he can be found within the county, and section 6841, authorizing substituted service if defendant cannot be so found, the service of copy whether personal or substituted, must be made at least six days before the return day of the writ.—Tunningly v. Butcher, 106 Mich. 35.

¶ 243. Service in an attachment suit was made on the person in possession of the goods, the owner having no last place of residence within the county. The service was made on July 3, 1911, and returned on July 8, 1911. Held, the attachment proceedings were void, the service not having been made at least six days before the return day.—Grand Haven Military Club v. Mulholland, 170 Mich. 592.

¶ 244. The fact that substituted service of a justice's writ of attachment was made more than six days before the return day does not invalidate the service, where it appears that the officer retained the writ and made diligent search for all the time required.—Davidson v. Fox, 120 Mich. 385.

Mode and manner of serving justices' summons, see ante § 37.

¶ 245. As the statute makes no provision for a summons clause in a justice's writ of attachment the latter cannot be regarded as a summons, and personal service, unless made after levy and inventory, as provided by How. St., § 6804, gives no jurisdiction.—Langtry v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 68 Mich. 451.

¶ 246. Whether a justice can proceed in attachment where no property has been seized and no service had upon part of the defendants, and upon the other only substituted service by leaving a copy of the writ at his last place of residence, quære.—Manhard v. Schott, 37 Mich. 234.

¶ 247. Substituted service of an attachment by leaving a copy with defendant's wife at his last place of residence will not give a justice jurisdiction over his person.—Rolfe v. Dudley, 58 Mich. 208.

¶ 248. Failure to serve a certified copy of the inventory is fatal to the proceeding, and ousts a justice of jurisdiction.—Davison v. Davison, 99 Mich. 625.

¶ 249. Under How. St., § 6831, as amended, which allows attachment where defendant is a foreign corporation, service as provided by §§ 6840 and 6841, personally or by leaving a copy with the custodian of the property seized is sufficient; since § 8143 providing for service in attachment proceedings against foreign corporations where an officer or agent is found within the county, is permissive and does not provide the exclusive mode of service.—Davidson v. Fox, 120 Mich. 385.

¶ 250. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 731, providing for service of writs of attachment from justice courts on garnishees, where the defendants are not found and no property is seized or attached, it is essential by express terms of the statute to serve the attachment and inventory on the garnishees by copy as required by the act.—Faul v. Beucus, 124 Mich. 25.

¶ 251. Service upon the principal defendants in attachment before justices of the peace by leaving a certified copy of the writ with a party described in the return as having "acted in the capacity of agent for said defendants," and who was not stated to have had any property in his possession, is not valid service under Comp. L. 1897, § 731, providing for service of attachment where the defendants cannot be found within the county by "copy" * * * left "with any person in whose possession such goods and chattels, moneys and effect may be found."—Faul v. Beucus, 124 Mich. 25.

Return and proof of service of summons, see ante § 38.
Amendment of return, see post § 64.
Disregard on certiorari of error in respect to date of return, see post ¶ 1210.

¶ 252. A justice's writ of attachment cannot be returned nor found until the expiration of the last day for serving it personally; the officer must make personal service when he can, and the jurisdiction to take any subsequent proceedings depends upon a proper return of a diligent attempt to get service.—Withington v. Southworth, 26 Mich. 381; Kidd v. Daugherty, 59 Mich. 240.

¶ 253. A justice's attachment returned "not served" as soon as issued, is of no validity.—Kraft v. Raths, 45 Mich. 20.

¶ 254. If a constable's return is silent as to the place of seizure it is presumed to have been within his county, as directed by statute.—Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181.

¶ 255. Failure of the officer's return, in a suit to enforce a log lien, to show that a copy of the inventory of the property seized, was served upon the principal defendant or the owner, prevents the court from acquiring jurisdiction.—Davison v. Davison, 99 Mich. 625.

¶ 256. Under the statute relating to proceedings by attachment in justice's court the officer who seizes and inventories the property must complete the execution of the writ by making personal or substituted service upon the defendant, and a return of such service by another officer, to whom the writ was delivered, confers no jurisdiction upon the justice to proceed to judgment.—Carry v. Everett, 107 Mich. 654.

¶ 257. Return of substituted service will not give a justice jurisdiction to proceed in attachment if it does not appear that diligent search was made for the defendant until the time allowed by law for making personal service had expired.—Town v. Tabor, 34 Mich. 262; Brown v. Williams, 39 Mich. 755.

¶ 258. A return of a justice's attachment not personally served must show that a copy has been left at defendant's last place of residence in the county, or that there was no such last place of residence.—Adams v. Abram, 38 Mich. 302, 304.

¶ 259. A return of service of a justice's attachment upon a member of defendant's family at his place of residence, but failing to show that defendant himself could not be found, is, under Comp. L. 1871, § 5276, insufficient.—Michels v. Stork, 44 Mich. 2.

¶ 261. As How. St., § 6840, requires a justice's attachment to be served at least six days before the return day, upon defendant, if he can be found, a return which shows substituted service seven days before such return day, without effort thereafter to find defendant, confers no jurisdiction.—Hubbell v. Rhinesmith, 85 Mich. 30.

¶ 262. A return that shows only a service on the date of the writ upon persons in whose possession the officer found the property, and contains the bare recital, "the defendant not having any last place of residence," but is silent as to whether the defendant was not or could not be found, and as to any attempt to find him, gives no jurisdiction to a justice of the peace to try the cause or to render judgment if the defendant fails to appear.—Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 Mich. 395.

¶ 263. Substituted service of a justice's writ of attachment, made on the sixth day before the return day of the writ, is valid, under How. St., §§ 6840, 6841, where the officer's return shows that he retained the writ in his hands, and made proper effort to obtain personal service, during the full time within which such service might lawfully be made.—Matthews v. Forslund, 113 Mich. 416.

¶ 264. Substituted service of an attachment under How. St., § 6841, is insufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the justice, where the officer's return fails to show that he retained the writ in his hands, and made diligent search for the defendant, during all of the time within which personal service might lawfully have been made. So held where the return to a writ issued on June 25th, returned July 2d, and served upon garnishee defendants on the teste day, showed that the officer "had the writ in his possession" on June 27th, that he "carried it around with him" for several days after receiving it, and that he "could not have served the writ on the defendant between June 25th and 27th, or on either of said days."—Bargh v. L. R. Ermeling & Co., 110 Mich. 164.

¶ 265. A return in case of substituted service of a justice's writ of attachment, which states that "I am unable to find" the defendant, and further states that the officer has retained the writ in his hands and made diligent search during all the time within which personal service might be made, is sufficient as showing that he could not find the defendant.—Davidson v. Fox, 120 Mich. 385.

¶ 266. A return in case of substituted service of justice's writ of attachment which states that defendant has no last place of residence within the county, is sufficient as the statute does not require that in such case the return also state that the officer made diligent search to find the last place of residence.—Davidson v. Fox, 120 Mich. 385. The foregoing decision as to the validity of a return of service in attachment was followed in Lutz v. Davidson Cycle Co., 121 Mich. 108.

§ 62. ——Return of service upon joint debtors.

¶ 267. A return by an officer to an attachment issued against two joint debtors that he had attached the goods of one of them upon whom he had made personal service, and that after diligent attempts he was unable to find the other defendant in his county, and had left a certified copy of the attachment and inventory with the defendant in whose possession he found the attached goods, the other defendant having no last place of residence in the county, is in accordance with How. St., § 6841, and authorizes the justice to proceed under How. St., § 6845, allowing the justice to proceed as upon a summons personally served where the attachment is returned as personally served upon any one of the defendants.—Buehler v. De Lemos, 84 Mich. 554.

Motion to dismiss the writ as constituting appearance, see ante ¶ 193.

Appearance in justices' cases generally, see ante § 44.

¶ 268. An appearance in an attachment case to object to the jurisdiction is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction to render judgment before thirty days, where there has been no personal service.—Wright v. Russell, 19 Mich. 346.

¶ 269. Where defendant is not personally served in an attachment case, it is error for the justice to render judgment within thirty days from the return day of process, unless the defendant appears and requests a trial. An appearance to object to the jurisdiction is not sufficient.—Wright v. Russell, 19 Mich. 346.

¶ 270. Where a justice's attachment actually contained a provision for a summons, and where upon personal service defendant appeared, there was jurisdiction to render judgment whether there had been a levy or not.—Hunt v. Strew, 33 Mich. 85.

§ 64. Defects, objections and amendments in attachment cases.

Defects in and objections to justice's process generally, see ante §§ 50-53.

Amendments of pleading in justice's courts, see post § 108.

Raising objections for first time on appeal, see post § 206.

Availability on certiorari of objection that no proof of ownership was made, see post ¶ 1125.

¶ 271. A defective bond does not oust a justice's jurisdiction.—Hills v. Moore, 40 Mich. 210. Overruled in Borland v. Kingsbury, 65 Mich. 59, on another point.

¶ 272. Personal service of a justice's writ is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction if the affidavit is defective in matters of substance and the defects are not waived by a general appearance.—Burnside v. Davis, 65 Mich. 74; Borland v. Kingsbury, 65 Mich. 59; overruling Hills v. Moore, 40 Mich. 210.

¶ 273. The date of the constable's return to a writ of attachment may be amended by changing it according to the fact.—Kidd v. Dougherty, 59 Mich. 240.

¶ 274. Quære, whether there need be notice of an amendment of a constable's return to a justice's writ of attachment where the writ was not personally served and the defendant has not appeared.—Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181.

¶ 275. Proceedings in justice's court to amend the return of service of an attachment after judgment were quashed on certiorari where notice thereof had not been duly served, and the amendment consisted in changing the name of the person on whom the writ had been served and against whom judgment was rendered.—Clark v. McGregor, 55 Mich. 412.

¶ 276. The justice cannot cure a defective return which fails to show that a copy of the inventory was served on the principal defendant or the owner, by returning that a certified copy was, of his own knowledge, served, and that the officer was allowed to correct the return to the original writ, where no corrected return in fact appears.—Davison v. Davison, 99 Mich. 625.

¶ 277. Where a constable's return to a justice's writ of attachment shows that some inferior mode of service has been had, though a day remained in which to try a better mode, the justice gets no jurisdiction; and an offer to amend the return by parol evidence that the writ was not in fact returned until return day, and that between the service and the return the constable could not find defendant, does not cure the defect, even if admissible at all, for it does not show that he actually tried to find him.—Town v. Tabor, 34 Mich. 262.

¶ 278. An attachment suit in justice's court is not suspended by proceedings for dissolution had before a circuit court commissioner.—Churchill v. Goldsmith, 64 Mich. 250.

¶ 279. An appeal bond releases the lien of a justice's attachment.—Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181.

¶ 280. Where plaintiff in attachment before a justice has recovered judgment, the attachment is dissolved and the attached property is released by defendant's suing out a certiorari and giving the statutory bond for the payment of any judgment that may be rendered in the circuit court.—Vanderhoof v. Prendergast, 94 Mich. 18.

Sufficiency of process to give jurisdiction in attachment, see ante § 57 et seq.
Sufficiency of appearance to confer jurisdiction in attachment, see ante § 63.
Judgments in justices' courts generally, see post § 131 et seq.
Docket entry of judgment by confession in attachment, see post ¶ 617.
General law of judgments, see Judgments.

¶ 281. A personal judgment in attachment upon insufficient service to give jurisdiction over defendant's person, is void.—Rolfe v. Dudley, 58 Mich. 208.

¶ 282. A justice's judgment on a log lien against the owner of attached logs is invalid where it was rendered the day after the writ was served on the owner, and it does not appear that the officer made any search or inquiry to find him earlier.—Newbauer v. Newbauer, 112 Mich. 562.

¶ 283. A judgment rendered by a justice's court in a proceeding commenced under attachment and wherein a summons was also issued, although the court had no jurisdiction of the attachment suit, but the goods levied on had never been returned, is one in attachment and is not merely a personal judgment.—Marr v. Cook, 147 Mich. 425.

§ 67. Liability and actions on attachment bonds.

Liabilities on justices' appeal bonds, see post § 248.
Liability and actions on attachment bonds generally, see Attachment, XIV.

¶ 284. In suit upon a bond given on an attachment in justice's court, to which bond the principal's name was signed by the attorney who began the attachment, its execution was denied under oath by the principal, and plaintiff testified that before the trial of the attachment suit said principal, the plaintiff in that suit, refused to settle the case, saying that he had put the matter in the hands of the attorney in question and would abide by his action. The files of the attachment suit were offered in evidence to show the agency of defendant's attorney therein. Held, that the jury might infer a ratification of the attorney's action, and that it was error to exclude the files.—Hutchinson v. Smith, 86 Mich. 145.

Jurisdiction of garnishment by and against corporations and members, see ante § 23.
Justices' jurisdiction of garnishment of municipalities, see ante ¶ 98.
Loss of jurisdiction in garnishment by unauthorized adjournment, see ante ¶ 111.

Provisions as to garnishment in justice's courts, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVI; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14361-14396.

¶ 285. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 1014, providing for garnishment of corporations, foreign or domestic, in justice court, an affidavit and writ in garnishment against a corporation without stating whether it is a foreign or a domestic corporation and a return showing service upon a person as "agent of the above named company" are sufficient to confer jurisdiction where the defendant's agent appeared and made disclosure and no claim of want of jurisdiction is made in the trial below.—Grinnell v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 19.

Plea to jurisdiction that defendant holds property under attachment, see post ¶ 351.
Property subject to garnishment generally, see Garnishment, II.

§ 70. ——Summons, service and return.

Service of attachment writs upon garnishees, see ante ¶ 250.

Whether long or short summons required, see ante § 34.

¶ 288. Service of a justice's summons in garnishment, under Comp. L. 1871, § 6463, How. St., § 8055, on a corporation cannot be made beyond the county; and an acceptance of service which shows it was made outside the county thereby shows it was made where the process had no legal force.—Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, 33 Mich. 400.

¶ 289. A justice does not acquire jurisdiction in garnishment over a railway company on return of service upon a specified person, described merely as "agent of the within named defendant," and the appearance of some person of a different name describing himself as "ticket agent of said road."—Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Hunt, 39 Mich. 469.

¶ 290. In an action in justice court begun by short summons and followed by garnishment process personally served, both fall upon the return of an alias summons and a subsequent attachment process not personally served as such garnishment does not come under either Comp. L. 1897, § 731 or section 745 not having been instituted with the attachment proceedings, but under section 990 providing for garnishment in a contract action which in this instance failed for want of service.—Adams v. Osborne, 138 Mich. 161.

Examination of garnishee, see post § 73.

Disclosure as evidence on appeal, see post § 236.

That disclosure was a mistaken one shown under general issue on appeal, see post ¶ 908.

Disclosure in garnishment generally, see Garnishment, V.

Sufficiency of disclosure by common carrier as garnishee, see also Garnishment ¶ 171.

¶ 291. A garnishee in justice's court need not sign his disclosure, nor, unless plaintiff requires, need it be under oath.—Sutherland v. Burrill, 82 Mich. 13.

¶ 292. Under Laws 1885, Act No. 175, a garnished corporation which has its business office in a township other than that in which the justice issuing the summons holds his office, may transmit its sworn disclosure by mail.—Whitworth v. Pelton, 81 Mich. 98.

¶ 293. The disclosure of a railroad company in a garnishment proceeding in justice's court purported to have been made by the assistant treasurer of the company, who testified that he was such officer, and that he made the disclosure in behalf of the company, and that he had knowledge of the facts therein stated. Held, that sufficient authority was shown to make such disclosure.—Whitworth v. Pelton, 81 Mich. 98.

¶ 294. The garnishee's disclosure is the foundation of all further proceedings against him.—Maynards v. Cornwell, 3 Mich. 309.

¶ 297. A garnishee in justice's court is a witness for plaintiff, and the latter is bound by the disclosure.—Sutherland v. Burrill, 82 Mich. 13.

¶ 298. A garnishee's disclosure in justice's court concludes neither him nor the principal defendant, but may be corrected or explained, and is amendable to protect the garnishee.—Barber v. Howd, 85 Mich. 221.

Garnishee as witness for plaintiff upon disclosure, see also ante § 72.

¶ 299. A garnishee in justice's court may acknowledge his indebtedness, and, to protect himself against cost and expense, has a right to waive further or other examination.—Barber v. Howd, 85 Mich. 221.

¶ 300. Whether or not an entry on a justice's docket, instead of on a separate piece of paper to be filed in the cause, of the minutes of an examination of a garnishee defendant, would be a sufficient compliance with Comp. L. 1871, § 6444, How. St., § 8036, requiring the justice to "take minutes of such examination, and file the same with the other papers in the cause," quære. But it would not be admissible against objection to prove the examination, in the absence of any showing that it constituted the original and only minutes of the examination, particularly where it seems probable that other minutes were in fact taken and filed.—Watson v. Kane, 31 Mich. 61.

¶ 301. It is not prejudicial error for a justice to strike written disclosures in garnishment from the files and order the defendant to submit to an oral examination.—Grinnell v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 19.

§ 74. ——Payment by and release or discharge of garnishee.

Liability of justice for money paid by garnishee, see ante ¶ 21.
Application of money paid in garnishment to satisfaction of different judgment, see post ¶ 680.
Payment by and release of garnishee generally, see Garnishment, XII.
General law as to payment, see Payment.

¶ 302. The object of How. St., § 8037, permitting a garnishee to pay to the justice before whom examination is had the amount due and owing from him to the principal defendant is to terminate the controversy, release the garnishee, and to apply the sum paid to the liquidation of the debt.—Barber v. Howd, 85 Mich. 221.

¶ 303. Payment by a garnishee defendant upon a particular demand is in the hands of a justice as payment on that demand only, and is not applicable to a judgment on another demand against the same garnishee.—Dane v. Holmes, 41 Mich. 661.

¶ 304. Judgment was rendered against a garnishee by a justice who had never acquired jurisdiction in the principal case, though he had rendered judgment therein, but the garnishee paid the judgment, and being afterwards sued by the assignee of another claim against the principal debtor, interposed her payment of the judgment in garnishment as a defense. Held, that, as the judgment in the principal case was void, the defense could not be allowed.—Laidlaw v. Morrow, 44 Mich. 547.

¶ 305. Although a judgment against the principal defendant in garnishment proceedings before a justice of the peace is void because he is served with a short summons instead of a long summons, the garnishee is protected from liability to the principal defendant on a claim for personal work and loan where he appears and makes a full disclosure and pays the amount found due into court, and takes the justice's receipt, under the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, chap. LXXVI, § 9, providing that where it appears upon the examination of a garnishee that he owes the principal defendant for personal work and labor and the indebtedness is due and payable, he shall forthwith pay to the justice the money shown to be due, and it shall be the duty of the justice to give the garnishee defendant a receipt for the money so paid.—Katt v. Swartz, 199 Mich. 51.

¶ 307. As a justice of the peace would not be authorized to render judgment in a garnishee suit based solely upon an answer admitting an indebtedness upon a note overdue at time of garnishment and which third parties claim to be bona fide purchasers of, before maturity and for value, payment by the garnishee upon such answer is voluntary.—Button v. Trader, 75 Mich. 295.

¶ 308. Where wages are garnished, and the employer, at the close of his examination as garnishee, which discloses an indebtedness to the principal defendant for personal labor, but is silent as to whether he is a householder, pays the amount admitted to be due to the justice, under How. St., § 8037, which permits such payment except as to the $25 exemption allowed the principal defendant by How. St., § 8032, where he is a householder having a family, such payment is made at the peril of the garnishee defendant, and the principal defendant, unless estopped from asserting such a claim, may recover from the garnishee defendant the indebtedness due him at the time of the service of the writ of garnishment, not exceeding the amount of the exemption.—Crisp v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 98 Mich. 648.

¶ 309. Payment by garnishee, under justice's order, directly to plaintiff, whereupon judgment against principal defendant is discharged on the docket, must be presumed to have been made in the presence and with the consent of the justice and sufficiently complies with the statute.—Barber v. Howd, 85 Mich. 221.

¶ 310. A justice before whom a judgment had been obtained, and to whom the same had been paid pending proceedings in garnishment to reach the avails thereof, correctly applies such payment upon the judgment subsequently rendered by him in garnishment, after the time for appealing therefrom had expired. Accordingly mandamus to compel him to pay over the amount to the first judgment creditor was denied.—People ex rel. Griffin v. Potter, 27 Mich. 166.

Appealability of judgment in garnishment, see post § 185.

Effect of appeal from garnishment judgment, see post § 209.

Certiorari as method of reviewing judgment, see post § 252.

¶ 311. Declaration, second process and proofs are waived where the garnishee appears on the return day of the summons, with the plaintiff, before the justice, after judgment against the principal defendant, and subscribes on the docket a statement that he is indebted in a specified sum to the principal defendant, and authorizes the justice to enter judgment against him; and the garnishee cannot thereafter object to the judgment for the want of such declaration, etc.—Bigelow v. Barre, 30 Mich. 1.

¶ 312. Where, at the close of the examination of a garnishee defendant in justice's court, the time for staying execution upon and of appeal from the judgment theretofore rendered against the principal defendant has expired, plaintiff may file his declaration against the garnishee defendant without issuing a summons to show cause.—Elser v. Rommel, 98 Mich. 74.

¶ 313. Under How. St., § 8038, providing that, at any time within thirty days after the final determination of a suit in justice's court against the principal defendant in garnishment proceedings, the justice shall, at plaintiff's request, issue a summons against the garnishee, commanding him to appear and show cause why judgment should not be rendered against him, the jurisdiction of the justice to issue the summons is limited to thirty days after judgment, not to thirty days after the expiration of the time for appeal.—Kayser v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 115 Mich. 688.

¶ 314. Even though a garnishee in justice's court has appeared and pleaded to the merits, a judgment against him founded upon proceedings instituted before judgment in the principal suit cannot be sustained upon a short summons to show cause issued seventy-four days after the termination of the suit against the principal defendant, no continuance having been had under How. St. § 8053, Heritage v. Armstrong, 101 Mich. 85.

¶ 315. Where, in garnishment proceedings in a justice's court, the garnishee had possession of certain potatoes, and a third person claimed them as his property, a judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the claimant, for the value of such potatoes less warehouse charges, is not open to the objection that it is a personal judgment for money or property, against the claimant.—Toner v. Toner, 151 Mich. 696.

¶ 316. Service of a justice's summons requiring a garnished foreign corporation to show cause why judgment should not be rendered against it must be quashed if not made upon a principal officer of such corporation.—First Nat. Bank v. Burch, 76 Mich. 608.

§ 76. ——Basis for judgment and sufficiency of showing.

¶ 317. A justice cannot give judgment against a garnishee until after he has rendered a valid judgment against the principal defendant in a cause in which he had jurisdiction.—Laidlaw v. Morrow, 44 Mich. 547.

¶ 318. Upon the hearing to show cause, etc., in justice's court the garnishee's disclosure is the evidence and all the evidence that can be introduced against him. And unless that shows him to be liable to the principal defendant, no judgment can be rendered against him whether he appears or not, nor can any judgment be rendered except for such liability as his disclosure clearly shows and admits (see Pub. Acts 1885, No. 175, requiring delivery of the money).—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 103; Thomas v. Sprague, 12 Mich. 120; Wellover v. Soule, 30 Mich. 481; Lorman v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 33 Mich. 65; Hewitt v. Wagar Lumber Co., 38 Mich. 701; Hackley v. Kanitz, 39 Mich. 398; Spears v. Chapman, 43 Mich. 541; Weirich v. Scribner, 44 Mich. 73; Custer v. White, 49 Mich. 262.

¶ 319. The minutes of the examination of a garnishee, taken by a justice of the peace under How. St. § 8036, are not such a record as imports absolute verity, and, on a trial of the issue framed on the issuance of a summons to show cause, the garnishee may show that the justice failed to take down the disclosure actually made.—Sutherland v. Burrill, 82 Mich. 13.

¶ 320. No judgment can be rendered against the garnishee where the disclosure was by an officer of a foreign corporation who could not have personal knowledge of all the facts stated by him.—Lorman v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 33 Mich. 65.

¶ 321. No recovery can be had against a garnishee in justice's court or on appeal upon any evidence contradicting his own statement that nothing is due from him to the principal defendant.—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 103; Thomas v. Sprague, 12 Mich. 120; Wellover v. Soule, 30 Mich. 481.

¶ 322. Judgment cannot be rendered against a garnishee in justice's court unless his disclosure clearly shows a liability to the principal defendant.—Ruhl v. Ruoff Brewing Co., 113 Mich. 291.

¶ 323. A garnishee's disclosure, which does not expressly admit an indebtedness to the principal defendant, but, on the contrary, avers that the latter is indebted to the garnishee, and further states that, prior to the service of the summons, the garnishee had contracted in writing to pay the liquor tax of the defendant, who thereupon paid a part of the amount of such tax to the garnishee, agreeing to pay the balance in monthly instalments, and that the garnishee had not paid the tax at the time the summons was served, fails to make a prima facie case for plaintiff against the garnishee.—Ruhl v. Ruoff Brewing Co., 113 Mich. 291.

¶ 324. Disclosures by a garnishee insurance company in justice court setting out a fire loss by the debtor and no acknowledgment of liability to him by the company, will not defeat judgment against the garnishee on the ground that they failed to show a basis for liability where the company settled with the insured pending the garnishment proceedings and the company adjuster admitted on trial that the company was indebted to the insured.—Grinnell v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 19.

Provisions as to replevin, in justices' courts, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXIV; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14332, 14336.

¶ 325. The office of the affidavit in replevin in justice's court is to confer jurisdiction; and it can only be looked into to ascertain that fact, not made to operate as a defense on the trial upon the merits.—Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 Mich. 532.

¶ 326. An affidavit for a writ of replevin will not give a justice jurisdiction if it does not state that the property sought does not exceed $100 in value; and the defect, unless waived, is fatal if seasonably urged (Comp. L. 1871, § 5291; How. St. § 6856).—Sager v. Shutts, 53 Mich. 116.

¶ 327. In a replevin suit in justice's court it is the affidavit which gives jurisdiction; and if that contains a description of the property, jurisdiction accrues, the sufficiency of the description not having been questioned.—Simmons v. Robinson, 101 Mich. 240.

¶ 328. In an affidavit in a replevin case instituted in a justice's court a description, viz.: "24 Michigan Reports, * * * one lot of books, * * * one lot of papers and envelopes, * * * one lot of written matter" is sufficient.—Burt v. Addison, 74 Mich. 730.

¶ 329. An affidavit in replevin wherein the plaintiff was a partnership is not so fatally defective as to oust a justice of the peace of jurisdiction for failure to give the names of the partners where there is a reference in the mortgage mentioned in the affidavit, and upon which the act on is founded, by which the plaintiffs are sufficiently identified.—E. S. Knowles & Son v. Cavanaugh, 144 Mich. 260.

¶ 330. An affidavit in replevin, describing the plaintiff as affiant, and to which the usual jurat, signed by the justice in his official character, is attached, is not fatally defective because not signed by such affiant.—Bloomingdale v. Chittenden, 75 Mich. 305.

¶ 331. The value stated in an affidavit for a justice's replevin is presumably the real value of the property until shown to be erroneous.—Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258.

¶ 332. A justice of the peace who has omitted to attach his signature to the jurat to an affidavit in replevin signed and sworn to before him may do so when the objection is raised during the subsequent proceedings in the case.—Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258.

¶ 333. A justice's writ of replevin issued in a partnership name is not sustainable where the amendment permitted by Comp. L. 1871, § 5307 (How. St. § 6872), in cases where suit is so brought shows that there was only one plaintiff.—Stirling v. Heintzman, 42 Mich. 449.

¶ 334. A replevin writ in justice court was not void because of the use of initials instead of full Christian names of plaintiffs, and an amendment would have been proper.—Stever v. Brown, 119 Mich. 196.

§ 78. ——Security or bond for replevin.

Dismissal for absence or insufficiency of bond, see post § 80.
Waiver of right to amend replevin bond, see post ¶ 343.
Liability and actions on bonds, see post § 85.
Replevin bonds generally, see Replevin, II.

¶ 335. Under the statutes the filing of a new and adequate bond on the return day cures a defective bond in replevin before a justice of the peace.—Moore v. Lewis, 76 Mich. 300.

¶ 336. A replevin bond insufficient because signed as surety by one of the plaintiffs may be amended under How. St. §§ 6856, 7631.—Hopkins v. Green, 93 Mich. 394.

¶ 337. Where plaintiff in replevin before a justice takes an appeal, his appeal bond gives defendant a cumulative security which does not supersede that furnished by the bond in replevin.—Brabon v. Pierce, 34 Mich. 39.

¶ 339. Where a justice of the peace issued a writ of replevin before any bond had been filed by the plaintiff, and approved it next day under a misapprehension as to a surety's qualifications, it was held that Comp. L. 1871, § 5294 (How. St. § 6857), would not prevent the defendant from excepting to the sureties.—Johnson v. Stilson, 42 Mich. 541.

§ 79. ——Service and return of writ.

Return of justice's summons generally, see ante § 39.
Dismissal or quashal for errors in service or return, see post § 80.
Judgment upon defendant's waiving return, see post § 83.
General law as to service and return of process, see Process.

¶ 340. A city marshal signed his return of service of a writ of replevin, "Almon S. Krapf, city marshal." Preceding the return was the oath of the appraisers, the jurat to which was signed, "Almon S. Krapf, city marshal of the city of Adrian." Held, that the failure to append the words "of the city of Adrian" to the signature to the return was unimportant, and that the justice might take judicial notice that the person so signing was marshal of said city.—Fleugel v. Lards, 108 Mich. 682.

¶ 341. A return of service to a writ of replevin, after showing the seizure of the property, its appraisal by a disinterested person duly sworn for that purpose, and its delivery to plaintiff, concluded: "And I further return that, on the 28th day of June, 1894, the defendant named in the said writ, by delivering to him, the said defendant, personally, a certified copy of said writ." Held, that the omission of the words, usually found in such a return, showing that service of the writ was made on defendant, was clerical, and that it was evident that defendant had been served in the manner required by law.—Fleugel v. Lards, 108 Mich. 682.

Certiorari as method of reviewing judgment of dismissal, see post § 252.
Judgment upon dismissal for value of property, see post ¶ 355.

¶ 342. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10659, requiring delivery of a certified copy of the writ in replevin, service by delivery of a copy omitting the signature of the justice was irregular, and upon failure of plaintiff to remedy the defect the motion to dismiss should have been allowed.—Chapelle v. Webster, 122 Mich. 482.

¶ 343. Although an insufficient replevin bond is amendable, the defendant does not waive his rights by insisting that the bond cannot be amended; and where the court does not direct either an amendment or a new bond the proceedings should be quashed.—Hopkins v. Green, 93 Mich. 394.

¶ 344. Where a writ of replevin was sued out of a justice's court in the name of H. C. Fisher, plaintiff being so designated in all the prior papers, and on the return day defendant moved to quash for that reason, and the party representing plaintiff stated that he could not amend, as he did not know plaintiff's full name, the justice properly dismissed the case.—Fisher v. Northrup, 79 Mich. 287.

¶ 345. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 836 and 10679, a justice is required to enter judgment of nonsuit with the return of property replevied upon failure of either party to appear on the day set unless he has notice that the parties had agreed upon an adjournment; the failure of the parties to appear does not deprive him of jurisdiction.—Barlow v. Riker, 138 Mich. 607.

¶ 346. The failure of both parties in a replevin suit to appear in justice court on a day set entitles defendant to a judgment of nonsuit and return of the property, and the entry of such nonappearance on the justice's docket shows a judicial determination sufficient to entitle defendant to such a judgment upon failure of defendant to appear on a subsequent day set after several intervening agreed continuances.—Barlow v. Riker, 138 Mich. 607.

Affidavit for writ of replevin, see ante § 77.
Pleading in justices' cases generally, see post § 87 et seq.
Pleading in replevin generally, see Replevin, III.

¶ 347. The forms of pleading prescribed by statute for actions of replevin are applicable alike to justices' courts and courts of record.—Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 Mich. 532.

¶ 349. A declaration in replevin to recover exempt property seized under process need not specifically set out the character of the property so as to show the exemption; it need only follow the form of declaring prescribed by How. St. § 8337, which is applicable to all courts.—Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 Mich. 532.

§ 82. ——Pleas and objections to the jurisdiction.

Justices' jurisdiction in replevin, see ante § 17.
Pleas to the jurisdiction in justices' cases generally, see post § 95.
Evidence admissible under general issue in replevin, see also post ¶ 453.
Dismissal of appeal where amount involved in excess of jurisdiction, see post § 223.

¶ 350. In replevin before a justice a plea which prays judgment of the writ for want of jurisdiction, "for that the value of the property described in said writ exceeds in value $100," contains no averment of fact, and is bad, because the jurisdiction depends upon the value alleged.—Burt v. Addison, 74 Mich. 730.

¶ 351. It is not a good plea to the jurisdiction of a justice's court in replevin that defendant holds the property as constable under an attachment issued by another justice.—Dayo v. Provinski, 90 Mich. 351.

¶ 352. By pleading the general issue, where the affidavit, writ and declaration allege value under $100, defendant admits a justice's jurisdiction and cannot afterwards question it on the ground that the value of the property exceeded the jurisdictional limit of $100.—Henderson v. Desborough, 28 Mich. 170.

§ 83. ——Judgment and enforcement of judgment.

Error in taxing costs in replevin as ground for collateral attack, see post ¶ 676.
Mandamus to compel justice to enter judgment in replevin, see Mandamus.
Mandamus to compel justice to assess damages upon discontinuance, see Mandamus.

¶ 353. A defendant who prevails in replevin before a justice may recover the value of the property replevied, not exceeding $500, which is the constitutional limit of the jurisdiction of justices.—Henderson v. Desborough, 28 Mich. 170; Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 Mich. 565; Chilson v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 235.

¶ 354. Under How. St. §§ 8346, 8347, it is not a prerequisite to a judgment for damages in replevin, that the return of the officer show he took the property and delivered it to the plaintiff; as the defendant may waive a return and have his damages assessed.—Frank v. Brown, 119 Mich. 631.

¶ 355. In replevin in justice court, where plaintiff failed to appear at the return hour and there was no return of the writ, the officer having refused to make a return, and where upon the subsequent appearance of plaintiff the court dismissed the proceeding and entered a judgment of nonsuit; it was proper, upon defendant waiving a return of the property, to enter a judgment for its value in favor of defendant, pursuant to proof that the property had been delivered to plaintiff, and of its value.—Frank v. Brown, 119 Mich. 631.

¶ 356. A waiver of return in a justice's court, made in open court and entered by the justice at defendant's request, is sufficient to authorize a judgment for value instead of for a return.—Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 Mich. 565.

¶ 357. Election to take judgment for value in replevin before a justice cannot be exercised, as matter of right, after an adjourned day on which the plaintiff discontinued and defendant did not appear.—Stack v. Smith, 54 Mich. 238.

¶ 358. Where defendants in an action of replevin in justice's court pleaded simply the general issue, and recovered upon the sole ground that their possession was lawful when the writ issued because no demand had been made upon them for the property, and there is nothing in the record to indicate any claim upon their part of ownership or right to continued possession against demand, they are not entitled to a return of the property.—Farrah v. Bursley, 100 Mich. 547.

¶ 359. Imprisonment of the judgment defendant in replevin is allowable on justices' judgments (Comp. L. 1871, § 5393); but not on the circuit judgment on appeal; hence defendant might, by such appeal, avoid the imprisonment.—Tomlin v. Fisher, 27 Mich. 524.

Right of defendants to judgment for return of property, see also ante § 83.

¶ 360. If a replevin suit abates through no fault of plaintiff, as by the justice's removal from his township, defendant's remedy is not upon the bond, but he may bring replevin or trover.—Kidder v. Merryhew, 32 Mich. 470.

¶ 361. Where a replevin suit was abated by the justice's failure to appear at his office on the return day of the writ, suit could not be brought on the bond; but other remedies might be resorted to if plaintiff in replevin should detain the goods.—Scott v. Scott, 50 Mich. 372.

§ 85. ——Liability and actions on bonds.

Necessity and sufficiency of bond, see ante § 78.

¶ 362. A surety in a replevin bond, who acted as plaintiff's agent in the issue of the writ by the justice, and in the seizure of the property, which was delivered to plaintiff, cannot escape liability in a suit on the bond for a failure to return the property pursuant to a judgment for such return by showing that no affidavit was filed with the justice before the writ was issued.—Stimer v. Allen, 88 Mich. 140.

¶ 363. A replevin bond in justice's court covers costs recovered by defendant on appeal; it is not satisfied by a return of the property, with costs, on judgment by the justice.—Brabon v. Pierce, 34 Mich. 39.

¶ 364. A replevin bond covers the costs of all courts, even though the case be removed on certiorari from before a justice, if a final judgment on writ of error awards costs of all the courts.—Monroe v. Heintzman, 46 Mich. 12.

¶ 366. Special pleading is not required in a justice's court; it is sufficient that plaintiff set forth his cause of action, and defendant his defense, to entitle the cause to be heard upon its merits.—Bancroft v. Peters, 4 Mich. 619.

¶ 367. An oral declaration is sustainable in justice's court to recover for grantor's breach of covenant against back taxes.—Lynch v. Craney, 95 Mich. 199.

Sufficiency of allegation of damages for false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment § 25, ¶ 106.

¶ 368. Where a party declares in writing before a justice the declaration must be conformed in substance to the rules of the circuit courts (Comp. L. 1871, § 5310; How. St. § 6875).—Benalleck v. People, 31 Mich. 200.

¶ 369. The declaration if in writing should be signed by someone.—Benalleck v. People, 31 Mich. 200.

¶ 370. Whenever the declaration in a suit in justice's court contains a substantial statement of a cause of action it must be held sufficient. Substance is required, not form. —Barber v. Taylor, 1 Mich. 352.

¶ 371. Where a declaration, though informal, fairly apprises the defendant of the claim made against him, it will be held sufficient if not demurred to.—Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 43 Mich. 584.

¶ 372. Declarations in justices' courts are to be liberally construed, and, though informal, may be held sufficient when they fairly apprise defendant of the claim made against him.—Costello v. Ten Eyck, 86 Mich. 348.

¶ 374. The rule that where an action is brought under a penal statute the declaration should show the fact, and where it does not, the penalty is not recoverable, does not apply to an action in justice court to recover the statutory penalty for selling liquor to a minor, in which an oral declaration was filed which did not refer to the statute, and the general issue was pleaded, a trial was had, and the justice's return showed that the question was not raised.—Carmer v. Hubbard, 123 Mich. 333.

§ 89. ——Conformity to process.

¶ 375. Where a justice's summons based on contract is followed up by a declaration sounding in a different action, the variance is waived by a failure to object or to demur, and by pleading the general issue.—La Barre v. Bent, 154 Mich. 520.

§ 90. ——In actions on contracts; common and special counts.

Joinder and misjoinder of counts, see post § 92.

¶ 377. Where the plaintiff exhibited a promissory note and stated that he declared against the defendant as indorser, without making any averment or statement as to the presentation of the note for payment, and notice of nonpayment to the defendant, the declaration was held bad in substance, and judgment thereon for the plaintiff—the defendant not appearing—was reversed.—Barber v. Taylor, 1 Mich. 352.

¶ 378. A justice's return set forth that "the plaintiff declared verbally against said defendants on common counts in assumpsit, and also on breach of a written contract, now on file in court, in all for $300 or under." Held a sufficient declaration to warrant the admission of the contract in evidence.—Bradshaw v. McLoughlin, 39 Mich. 480.

¶ 379. A declaration in a justice's court for breach of warranty must show the nature of the warranty and state the breach.—Smith v. Hobart, 43 Mich. 465.

¶ 380. Plaintiff in a justice's court declared on the common counts, and filed, as specifying the exact nature of his demand, an instrument which in itself constituted a contract sufficient to sustain an action and on which the transferee could sue. It was in terms payable to bearer, but bore the indorsement "without recourse" signed by the payee. It was understood by both parties as the substance of the declaration, and it fairly imported that the plaintiff was the transferee. There was no demurrer for uncertainty. Held, that under the liberal rules for construing pleadings in a justice's court there was enough to entitle plaintiff to show that he was the lawful transferee and to put the instrument itself in evidence.—Soper v. Mills, 50 Mich. 75.

¶ 381. Plaintiff in justice's court declared orally on "all the common counts" in assumpsit, and filed a bill of particulars claiming the balance of the purchase price of land sold to defendant. Held that, while the common counts as used in our practice do not usually include a count for real property sold and conveyed, yet the bill of particulars sufficiently apprised defendant of plaintiff's claim and rendered the pleading sufficient.—Nugent v. Teachout, 67 Mich. 571.

¶ 382. An oral declaration in justice's court upon the common counts and especially upon a certain contract to rent a house upon certain specified terms, which lease plaintiff is ready and willing to execute, but which defendant refuses to accept, contains no proper statement of the cause of action on the agreement, it not appearing what property the lease was to cover.—Lovette v. Essig, 92 Mich. 461.

¶ 383. A declaration filed in justice court in an action of assumpsit on all the common counts, and specially on a judgment in justice court against a corporation on a labor debt, which clearly apprised the defendant in an action to enforce his personal liability as a stockholder of said corporation, of the claim against him, was sufficient under the liberal rules governing practice in justice court.—Wineman v. Fisher, 135 Mich. 604.

¶ 384. The common counts in assumpsit are not a sufficient declaration in a justice's court to authorize a recovery of the value of goods paid for but not delivered by the seller to the buyer, pursuant to a contract of sale.—Applebaum v. Goldman, 155 Mich. 369.

¶ 385. An instrument in the form of a promissory note, but rendered nonnegotiable by a condition appearing on its face, was indorsed on its back with the name of the payee. In a suit in justice's court on this instrument and on the common counts, the declaration failed to allege an assignment to the plaintiff, but the defendants in their special notice stated that the note had been transferred to the plaintiff. Held, the declaration was sufficient.—Worden Grocer Co. v. Blanding, 161 Mich. 254.

¶ 386. While pleadings in the justice court are treated with great liberality the common counts aided by a bill of particulars will not support an action arising from the violation of a contract regarding the breaking, care and keep of horses whereby the party having charge of them was to be paid by the use of the horses in his work, but the declaration must be one on the case for damages arising from the breach of the contract.—Cook v. Dade, 191 Mich. 561.

§ 91. ——In actions on torts.

Waiver of declaration in trespass, see post ¶ 402.

Construction of declaration in trespass, see also post ¶ 452.

¶ 387. A declaration in case claiming to recover back as damages money which defendant had caused to be extorted from plaintiff by duress of imprisonment on criminal process procured by him for that purpose states a lawful ground of action with sufficient precision, if not demurred to, to be sustained.—Holbrook v. Cooper, 44 Mich. 373.

¶ 388. A general ad damnum clause at the end of a declaration in justice's court will apply to a count for assault and battery, especially if the other counts are invalid; and if there were any defect in making it general it would be within the statute of amendments.—Sheldon v. Sullivan, 45 Mich. 324.

¶ 389. A declaration in justice's court sounding in tort for obtaining money under misrepresentation, fraud and deceit is insufficient where it fails to state what the charges consist of, and does not apprise the defendant of what matters are to be litigated.—Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Widrig, 179 Mich. 230.

¶ 390. A declaration in case before a justice for overflowing defendant's land sufficiently sets forth the cause of action in alleging that defendant damned, or caused to be damned, a ditch which plaintiff had used as a matter of right for more than twenty years, and was situated on a road laid out by the commissioners of highways, and that by the obstruction of the ditch the plaintiff had suffered damage as specified.—Enright v. Hartsig, 46 Mich. 469.

¶ 392. In an action in justice's court a sufficient cause of action is stated by a declaration which alleges that defendant operated through a certain township a road nowhere fenced, and that plaintiff's colt, lawfully in said township, went on the track of said railroad and was killed through defendant's negligence, and because its track was not fenced.—Talbot v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 82 Mich. 66.

¶ 393. A declaration in a justice's court, entered upon his docket, and set out in the record as follows: "Plaintiff declared in trespass to his damage, one hundred dollars for injury to buggy and horse," and to which no objection was taken before the justice, held sufficient.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

¶ 394. Where a justice's court declaration in trespass does not state that plaintiff owns the premises in fee or otherwise, but merely that defendant broke and entered plaintiff's lands and premises, describing them, it fails to aver title in plaintiff.—Orris v. Kempton, 105 Mich. 229.

¶ 395. A declaration in trespass on the case held sufficient for a declaration in justice's court and not questionable on error to the supreme court.—Tyler v. Nelson, 109 Mich. 37.

¶ 397. A declaration in justice's court for false imprisonment, averring that plaintiff was "thereby delayed and injured in his business," to wit, at the venue stated, suffices to admit evidence of damage.—Thompson v. Ellsworth, 39 Mich. 719. [Note. The quoted words in this paragraph are derived from the official syllabus. The opinion does not show them. Editor.]

§ 92. ——Joinder and misjoinder of counts.

Common and special counts, see ante § 90.

¶ 398. There is not such a misjoinder of counts in the declaration as to deprive a justice's court of jurisdiction, where, it is claimed, such declaration adds to the special count on a contract, common counts in trespass, trover, etc., but where the language used in setting out the breaches of the contract is sufficient in form and substance to include the common counts; since pleadings in justice's court are liberally construed.—Thayer v. Gibbs, 140 Mich. 60.

§ 93. ——Splitting causes and demands.

Aggregation or division of claims to determine jurisdictional amount, see ante § 13.

As to demurrer, see also ante ¶ 371.

Assertion of set-off up to justice's jurisdictional limit as a splitting of it barring further right to assert it, see Former Adjudication ¶¶ 247, 248.

¶ 399. Separate actions are maintainable for parts of an amount due upon a continuous account of book entries made in the ordinary course of business, the only penalty fixed by statute (Comp. L. 1897, § 768) for splitting the cause of action being loss of costs in the second suit.—Phelps v. Abbott, 116 Mich. 624.

§ 94. Demurrer and objections for sufficiency.

Demurrer as constituting appearance, see ante § 44.

Waiver of objection that declaration for penalty fails to allege the statute, see ante ¶ 374.

Objections to pleas and notices, see post § 100.

Demurrer to plea in abatement, see post ¶ 415.

Special appeal as method of reviewing rulings on pleading, see post § 188.

Raising objections for first time on appeal, see post § 206.

General law as to demurrers, see Pleading, IV.

¶ 400. In whatever form it be put, any objection by a defendant in justice's court that plaintiff's declaration is insufficient in law is sufficient to constitute a general demurrer.—Stevens v. Harris, 99 Mich. 230.

¶ 401. An admission of plaintiff's title would be a demurrer to a declaration alleging title.—Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

¶ 402. By pleading not guilty to an action of trespass in a justice's court for assault and battery, wherein defendant was arrested and the affidavit read to him as a declaration, and by trying the case without a declaration, one is waived and the justice has jurisdiction.—Simon v. Spiro, 124 Mich. 484.

¶ 403. Defects in a declaration will be waived by defendant if he pleads issuably and goes to trial on the merits.—Hurtford v. Holmes, 3 Mich. 460.

¶ 404. Pleading to the merits and going to trial precludes the defendant from objecting to evidence on the ground that the declaration was not specific enough to warrant it, if it sufficiently states a cause of action and he was not misled.—Chancey v. Skeels, 43 Mich. 347.

¶ 405. Suit on a conditional promise to pay money to the order of a railroad company. The promise was in writing, and was filed with the justice as the sole cause of action. Upon it was indorsed the name of a person who added to his name the word "assignee." The defendant pleaded the general issue and went to trial. It was shown on the trial that the payee in the promise had been put in bankruptcy, and the indorser of the paper was assignee in bankruptcy thereof. Held, that the objection that the plaintiff did not by its declaration aver its right to recover as assignee would not be sustained on the final submission of the case.—Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 43 Mich. 584.

¶ 406. A declaration in trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's close without asserting and describing a title in plaintiff in the lands is not such a claim of title as, under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 5326-5329; How. St. § 6894, is admitted by the plea of the general issue. The land is plaintiff's close if he had peaceable possession, even though he had no title; and it was not plaintiff's close if defendant was in peaceable possession.—Vandoozer v. Dayton, 45 Mich. 247.

¶ 407. Where a declaration in justice's court is good in substance, and defendant is present and pleads to the merits, he waives any objection on the ground of its being too general.—Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25.

¶ 408. Where the defendant demurs to a declaration in the justice court and then pleads issuably, goes to trial and takes a general appeal to the circuit court and there goes to trial on the pleadings as they stood in the justice court, he cannot raise the question of the sufficiency of the declaration.—Sinsabaugh v. Brown, 126 Mich. 538.

¶ 409. The insufficiency of a declaration could not be complained of after defendant pleaded issuably and permitted the evidence to come in without specific objection, where the justice's return stated that the plaintiff declared orally and "especially on an order herewith filed as part of plaintiff's declaration."—Mohr Hardware Co. v. Dubey, 136 Mich. 677.

¶ 410. An objection that a declaration in a justice court did not sufficiently describe a breach of contract is waived by pleading the general issue, by setting out the contract, seeking recoupment, and by trying the case in justice court without objection.—Fowles v. Rupert, 138 Mich. 150.

¶ 411. A defendant in an action commenced in the justice court who fails to question the sufficiency of a declaration admits its sufficiency.—Taylor v. Belton, 188 Mich. 302.

¶ 412. Formal defects in the pleadings in justices' courts will be overlooked if no objection is made to them until evidence is offered.—Holbrook v. Cooper, 44 Mich. 373.

§ 95. Pleas in abatement and to jurisdiction.

Waiver by appearance and joinder of issues, see ante § 51.
Appearance in attachment to object to jurisdiction, see ante § 63.
Pleas to the jurisdiction in replevin, see ante § 82.
Motion to dismiss as in effect a plea in abatement, see post ¶ 509.
Common-law certiorari to review decision on plea to jurisdiction, see post § 254.
Ruling on plea in abatement as ground for reversal on certiorari, see post ¶ 1216.
General law as to abatement, see Abatement.

¶ 413. Whether a plea in abatement to an action of trespass brought before a justice raises a question of title which cannot properly be entertained without the filing of the bond required by Comp. L. 1876, § 5327, How. St. § 6892, is unimportant if the plea is bad in itself.—East v. Cain, 49 Mich. 473.

¶ 414. No plea in abatement is necessary to destroy the jurisdiction of a justice depending on the sum in controversy, if shown on the trial to be excessive.—Chilson v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 235.

¶ 415. A plea in abatement by a defendant proceeded against as a fraudulent debtor, which avers that the justice of the peace before whom the proceedings are pending is an interested party, and that he is the attorney of plaintiffs in a pending replevin suit which involves the title to the property which defendant is charged with having fraudulently concealed, assigned and disposed of, is sufficiently certain on demurrer, and under How. St. § 6822, the justice is disqualified to act and is ousted of jurisdiction.—Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45.

¶ 416. If the justice is an interested party at the time the plea in abatement in fraudulent debtor proceedings is filed, he is disqualified under the statute, and the fact that the plea fails to aver that he was so interested at the time the warrant was issued is immaterial.—Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45.

¶ 417. A plea of not guilty in proceedings before a justice under the fraudulent debtor act, or filing an affidavit denying the fraud charged after the overruling of the plea in abatement on the ground that the justice is an interested party, is not a waiver of such plea, nor can such action be construed as an assent that the justice may proceed to try and determine the case.—Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45.

¶ 418. By pleading the general issue in replevin, where the affidavit, writ and declaration set forth the value of the property as not exceeding $100, defendant admits a justice's jurisdiction, and cannot afterwards question it on the ground that the value of the property exceeded the jurisdictional limit of $100.—Henderson v. Desborough, 28 Mich. 170.

¶ 419. Where the want of jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, because of the nonresidence of the parties, is not apparent on the face of the record, a plea to the jurisdiction, properly verified, or a motion to quash, also properly verified, is the proper manner in which to raise the question, and it cannot be raised by an unsupported motion to dismiss.—Appleman v. Hahn, 149 Mich. 245.

Waiver by appearance and pleading to the merits, see ante § 51.
Pleading to the merits as waiver of defects in declaration, see ante § 94.
Pleading to the merits as waiver of security for costs, see post ¶ 699.
Pleas to the jurisdiction, see ante § 95.
Pleas in abatement, see ante § 95.
General issue in replevin as admission of allegations as to jurisdictional amount, see ante ¶ 352.
Objections to pleas and notices, see post § 100.
Evidence admissible under general issue, see post § 104 et seq.
Pleading title for first time on appeal, see post ¶ 939.
On appeal to circuit court, see post § 214.
Amendments in circuit court on appeal, see post § 218.
Plea and notice generally, see Pleading, III.
Provisions as to notice that title will come in issue, see Jud. Act, chap. LXIX, §§ 18, 19; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14232, 14233.

¶ 420. A plea in a justice's court is sufficient if it fully apprises the plaintiff as to what the defense is.—Eddy v. Manshaun, 42 Mich. 532.

¶ 421. If a notice given under the general issue fairly apprises plaintiff of the defense intended to be made it is sufficient.—Whittle v. Bailes, 65 Mich. 640.

¶ 422. An oral notice unaccompanied by the statutory bond (How. St. § 6890), by defendant in an action of trespass in justice's court, that title to land will come in question, is properly disregarded by the justice.—Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44.

¶ 423. A notice of title in an action of trespass to lands in justice's court, which states that the land on which the injuries complained of were committed was a legal highway, and that defendant in removing the fence of the plaintiff was acting as highway commissioner under the statute, but which does not describe all of the land claimed to have been trespassed upon, is sufficient to apprise the plaintiff of the nature of the defense, and under it all pertinent testimony may be admitted.—Weber v. Stagray, 75 Mich. 32.

¶ 424. While 1897 C. C. Rule 7, subd. c, requiring notice of the defense that a note was obtained by fraud, does not apply to an action begun in justice court in which the general issue is pleaded, and thence appealed, it does apply where the defendant does not appear generally in justice court.—Ward v. Reed, 134 Mich. 392.

¶ 425. The requirement that in cases tried before a justice the plea shall be the general issue in all cases, with notice of any special defense, is mere matter of form, and will not invalidate a special defense pleaded alone.—Eddy v. Manshaun, 42 Mich. 532.

§ 97. ——Denials of execution of instruments.

Affidavits in replevin, see ante § 77.
Failure to deny execution as affecting admissibility of evidence, see also post § 126.
On appeal to circuit court, see post ¶ 909.
General law as to execution of instruments, see Execution of Instruments.

¶ 426. By Sess. L. 1855, p. 439, § 62, and p. 449, § 115, How. St. §§ 6875, 6928, if the written instrument declared on or set off before a justice is filed at the time of declaring or pleading, or giving notice of set-off, its execution must be denied on oath at the time of such filing, and not afterwards.—Fish v. Hale, 4 Mich. 506.

¶ 428. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 826, and C. C. Rule 8, failure of defendant to file an affidavit denying the execution of a written instrument upon which action is brought, amounts to an admission of its execution by the defendant or defendants who fail to file such affidavit, and the admission includes delivery and where the signature is by a partnership, the fact of the copartnership.—Naftzker v. Lantz, 137 Mich. 441.

¶ 429. Whenever in a suit on a promissory note before a justice of the peace it is claimed that a note declared upon and filed is not in substance the instrument executed by the party, under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 767, 826, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 12220, 12273, its execution must be denied under oath.—Ensign v. Fogg, 177 Mich. 317.

¶ 430. In an action in a justice's court on a promissory note begun by a summons, if the declaration was not filed or made until the trial day, such day is the proper time to produce and file the note and the defendant claiming an alteration should then deny its execution under oath.—Ensign v. Fogg, 177 Mich. 317.

§ 98. Pleading set-off and recoupment.

Objections to notice of recoupment, see post ¶ 439.
Recovery on recoupment limited to transactions specified in bill of particulars, see post ¶ 552.
Failure to interpose set-off as affecting costs in subsequent suit on the claim, see post ¶ 685.
Amendment of set-off in circuit court on appeal, see post § 219.
General law as to set-off and recoupment, see Set-off.
Provisions as to set-off and recoupment in justices' court, see Jud. Act, chap. LXIX, §§ 11-17; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14225-14231.

¶ 431. In an action brought by a municipality defendant is entitled to all defenses, including the right of set-off, that he would have if sued by an individual.—City of Eaton Rapids v. Houpt, 63 Mich. 371.

¶ 432. A poundmaster sued by a city before a justice, for fees collected, may set off a claim which he has against the city.—City of Eaton Rapids v. Houpt, 63 Mich. 371.

¶ 433. Where defendant "pleaded the general issue, and gave notice of set-off and recoupment," such notice was held too general to authorize admission of evidence as to the damages sought to be recouped.—Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617; Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357.

¶ 434. An affidavit verifying an account pleaded in set-off and showing the balance due, which states that the "annexed account is just, due and unpaid" is a substantial compliance with How. St. § 7525, which requires such affidavit to show that the account "is justly owing and due."—McGowan v. Lamb, 66 Mich. 615, by divided court.

¶ 435. Service of copy of account and affidavit filed under notice of set-off and required by How. St. § 7525, was waived where plaintiff in justice's court was present, making no objection, when the account and affidavit were filed, and where he moved an adjournment.—McGowan v. Lamb, 66 Mich. 615, affirming lower court by equal division.

¶ 436. Though the rules of pleading in justices' courts are more liberal than at the circuit, yet the nature of the claim of the parties litigant must be stated so as to show a cause of action, and with sufficient certainty to prevent surprise of the other party as to what he will be called upon to meet with his proofs; and the notice of recoupment comes within this rule.—Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357.

¶ 437. Even under the liberal rules of pleading in justices' courts, a mere general notice of recoupment without any particulars is insufficient.—Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357; Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617.

Justices' dockets generally, see post § 139 et seq.

¶ 438. A justice should enter an oral defense on his docket unless it is imperfect in substance, but his failure to do so will not deprive the defendant of his defense. If it is imperfect the defendant should be allowed to amend.—Eddy v. Manshaun, 42 Mich. 532.

§ 100. Objections to pleas and notices.

Objections to declaration, see ante § 94.
Objections to plea in abatement, see also ante § 95.
Saving questions for review on appeal to circuit court, see post § 206.

§ 101. Bill of particulars.

Limiting recovery on recoupment to bill of particulars, see post ¶ 552.
Presumptions on certiorari as to service of bill of particulars, see post ¶ 1175.
General law as to bills of particulars, see Pleading, V.

¶ 440. The cost of refilling lots excavated below grade in taking gravel sold, which refilling was required by the contract, is sufficiently specified by an item in a bill of particulars: "Damage done to lots * * * in lowering same below street and alley grade, and in leaving surface of same irregular and uneven."—Grady v. Sullivan, 112 Mich. 458.

¶ 441. A bill of particulars is not a pleading in the justice court, and while it may restrict, it cannot enlarge the scope of the recovery permissible under the declaration.—Cook v. Dade, 191 Mich. 561.

¶ 442. Where plaintiff refuses to comply with the justice's order to file a properly demandable bill of particulars, the justice may exclude all testimony on his part and dismiss the case, such refusal being a virtual discontinuance of the suit.—Lovette v. Essig, 92 Mich. 461.

¶ 443. Where a motion to dismiss for failure to file bill of particulars is refused, defendant's consenting to an adjournment and his pleading to the declaration and joining in striking a jury will not preclude him from objecting to the reception of any evidence on the trial.—Lovette v. Essig, 92 Mich. 461.

¶ 444. It is an abuse of discretion for a justice, acting solely on his own motion, to exclude a defendant's bill of particulars of his claim of set-off merely because it was not filed within the time allowed for that purpose after being demanded by plaintiff, if it was in fact filed before trial, and if there was nothing to show that its reception would prejudice plaintiff.—Boatz v. Berg, 51 Mich. 8.

Filing of affidavit and account not authorized, see post ¶ 539.

¶ 445. A written instrument upon which suit is brought may be filed previous to declaring, etc., and if it is on file at that time it will be sufficient.—Smoke v. Jones, 35 Mich. 409.

§ 103. Interpretation and construction of pleadings.

See also ante ¶¶ 380, 383, 386; post ¶ 905.
Rule of liberal construction, see also ante ¶¶ 398, 436, 437.
Construction of declaration, see also ante §§ 88, 90.
Construction of pleadings generally, see Pleadings, I.

¶ 446. The pleadings should be viewed with liberality, technicalities discountenanced, and substance instead of form required.—Hurtford v. Holmes, 3 Mich. 460; Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424; Comstock v. Howd, 15 Mich. 287; Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 43 Mich. 584; Snyder v. Winsor, 44 Mich. 140; First National Bank of Port Huron v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432; Whittle v. Bailes, 65 Mich. 640; Nugent v. Teachout, 67 Mich. 571; Costello v. Ten Eyck, 86 Mich. 348.

¶ 447. Declarations in justices' courts are to be liberally construed.—Fletcher v. Bradford, 45 Mich. 349; Copas v. Anglo-American Provision Co., 73 Mich. 541; Canal St. Gravel-Road Co. v. Paas, 95 Mich. 372.

¶ 448. Oral pleadings in justices' courts are governed by liberal rules.—Lynch v. Craney, 95 Mich. 199.

¶ 449. An oral declaration in justice's court is not to be construed very strictly.—Grady v. Sullivan, 112 Mich. 458.

¶ 450. Where the pleadings are oral, only matters of substance are regarded, and judgment should not be reversed for objections not made at the trial.—Smith v. Dodge, 37 Mich. 354.

¶ 451. Pleadings in justice's court are treated with great liberality, and a declaration good in a justice's court is usually held good on appeal.—Applebaum v. Goldman, 155 Mich. 369.

¶ 452. A declaration in justice's court averring that defendant with force and arms plaintiff's "lands and premises" (describing them) "broke and entered, and carted and hauled away from said land a quantity of earth or sand, being the property of" plaintiff, etc., does not allege that the title to the land was in plaintiff; the giving of the description of the land only tends to identify the place where the alleged trespass was committed.—Orris v. Kempton, 105 Mich. 229.

Admission of execution of instrument by failure to deny execution, see ante § 97.
Raising objections for first time on appeal, see post § 206.
Changing issues on appeal to circuit court, see post § 219.

¶ 453. In replevin brought by one claiming a special lien on the property for freight, defendant, under the general issue, without notice, may give evidence to reduce the lien by showing injury to the property while in transit.—Bancroft v. Peters, 4 Mich. 619.

¶ 454. The defense of total failure or want of consideration is admissible in justice court under the general issue without notice.—Hubbard v. Freiberger, 133 Mich. 139.

¶ 455. The defense of settlement with one of two trespassers was not available against the other, under the general issue in an action which originated in justice court and was appealed to the circuit court (Cir. Ct. Rule 7; Comp. L. 1897, § 767).—Sunlin v. Skutt, 133 Mich. 208.

¶ 456. A parol agreement tending to show fraud in the inception of a contract or modification of the written agreement is not admissible under a plea of the general issue although the action was originally commenced in justice court.—R. K. Carter & Co. v. Weber, 138 Mich. 576.

§ 105. ——Involving title to land.

Jurisdiction to pass upon title to land, see ante § 20
Transfer to circuit court to try title, see ante § 30.
Admission of claim of title, see post § 106.
Pleading title for first time on appeal, see post ¶ 939.

¶ 457. Under a declaration against defendant for falsely representing himself to have title to a piece of land, which plaintiff was induced to buy of him, the title to the land must necessarily come in question.—Brooks v. Delrymple, 1 Mich. 145.

¶ 458. For the purpose of identifying and proving his title to personal property a party may show that it was taken off from certain lands, and that he was the owner thereof, but this does not bring the title to lands in question.—Hart v. Hart, 48 Mich. 175.

¶ 459. In an action of trover, brought before a justice for the conversion of a quantity of hoops, it was held proper to show, under the plea of the general issue, that they were cut from lands belonging to a certain estate, and to put in evidence the government patent to the former owner and a power of attorney from his heirs, including plaintiff, empowering the defendant to sell and convey any of the property belonging to them. The introduction of such testimony would not be litigating a claim of title, and the evidence would be admissible for the purpose of identifying the property in suit.—Hart v. Hart, 48 Mich. 175.

¶ 460. Under a declaration in trespass quare clausum fregit containing no allegation of title but where plaintiff relies upon his possession, defendant may disprove it under the general issue.—Vandoozer v. Dayton, 45 Mich. 247.

¶ 461. In trespass if plaintiff claims and describes a title in himself in the declaration, it seems that defendant, under the general issue merely, will not be allowed to dispute it, or claim any right or possession in himself inconsistent therewith.—Vandoozer v. Dayton, 45 Mich. 247.

¶ 462. Tenancy of any sort is a species of title; and where a defendant, in an action brought before a justice and involving title, has not given notice that title will come in question, he cannot rely upon his tenancy as a defense.—Vandoozer v. Dayton, 45 Mich. 247.

¶ 463. Deeds of land may be admissible as evidence in a justice's court for many purposes; and their admission will not sustain a presumption that the judgment in the suit was rendered in a case of which the court had no jurisdiction as determining the title to real property.—Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 50 Mich. 315.

¶ 464. A question of title to land is raised in an action of trespass brought before a justice, if plaintiff offers deeds in evidence of his right of possession, or claims such right under a third person whose ownership he proposes to show, whatever reason may have been given by counsel for introducing such evidence.—Gay v. Hults, 55 Mich. 327.

¶ 465. Where a declaration in trespass avers title in fee and possession of the locus in quo, describing the land, and defendants' plea denies such title, averring that the freehold is in one of the defendants and that both entered upon the premises by lawful right, the question of title to the land is involved.—Labeau v. Labeau, 61 Mich. 81.

¶ 466. A title or claim of title does not come in question unless it is in issue in the case; and it is not in issue unless the title or claim of title is essential to plaintiff's right of recovery or to defeat a recovery in the action.—Ostrom v. Potter, 71 Mich. 44.

¶ 467. In an action to recover damages for cutting and carrying off certain pine trees "standing on his land," the title to land is in question unless title is admitted by defendant.—Maynard v. Reynolds, 137 Mich. 42.

§ 106. ——Admissions of claim of title.

See also ante ¶ 79.

As demurrer to declaration alleging title, see ante ¶ 401.

General issue as admission of title in trespass, see also ante ¶ 406.

¶ 468. A claim in plaintiff's declaration that defendant "did cut down and carry off * * * two pine trees of great value * * * then and there being and standing * * * on the land of plaintiff," is not a claim of title to the land since it could be established by proving plaintiff's possession, and hence title to the land is not admitted by a plea to the general issue without filing a bond and paying costs, under Comp. L. 1897, § 786, which provides that title is admitted by defendant unless he files a bond, etc.—Maynard v. Reynolds, 137 Mich. 42.

Confession of judgment, see post §§ 136-138.

¶ 470. The defendant in assumpsit in justice's court is not obliged to make any objections to the affidavit to an account authorized by How. St. § 7525, until introduced in evidence, and waives nothing by his silence, but if he has appeared and is present when the affidavit is introduced, and is silent, he waives all objections.—Gordon v. Sibley, 59 Mich. 250.

§ 108. Amendments.

Amendment of return of attachment, see ante § 64.

Amendments of affidavit in replevin, see ante § 77.

Amendment of replevin bond, see ante § 78.

Right to amend ad damnum clause, see also ante ¶ 388.

Amendment of plea, see also ante ¶ 438.

Special appeal as method of reviewing rulings as to amendments, see post § 232.

Amendments on appeal, see post § 216.

Amendment of appeal bond, see post § 199.

General law as to amendments, see Pleading, VI.

Amendment upon discontinuance as to some defendants, see Jud. Act, chap. LXX, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 14268.

¶ 471. Amendments to obviate mere technical errors are to be favored.—Snyder v. Winsor, 44 Mich. 140.

¶ 472. It was not the intention of Comp. L. 1897, § 764, to take away from a justice's court the power of granting amendments which it theretofore possessed, but rather to grant to litigants in justice's courts the absolute right to amend pleadings at any time, leaving with the court the discretionary power to permit amendments after the pleadings were closed which power the court had before the statute.—E. S. Knowles & Son v. Cavanaugh, 144 Mich. 260.

¶ 473. Suit was brought on a promissory note which was payable one day after date, and had run eight years. The defendant pleaded nonassumpsit within six years, when he should have pleaded actio non accrevit within six years. The error being pointed out, he asked leave to amend, but the justice refused it. Held, that the plea as it stood fairly apprised the plaintiff of the defense relied upon, namely, the statute of limitations, and the justice should have allowed the defendant the benefit of it, either with or without the amendment.—Snyder v. Winsor, 44 Mich. 140.

¶ 474. An amendment to a written declaration in an action in the justice court which relates to the same transaction to which reference is made in the original declaration is properly allowed.—Thompson v. W. W. Kimball Co., 190 Mich. 579.

¶ 475. Defendants arrested on a warrant issued upon an affidavit fatally defective were required to plead immediately and did so. On the adjourned day they asked leave to amend by giving notice of justification under an execution. The justice refused leave unless they would consent to an adjournment to accommodate the plaintiff, which they declined to do. Held, that under the circumstances they should have been permitted to amend without conditions.—Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 Mich. 172.

¶ 476. Comp. L. 1871, § 5307 (How. St. § 6872), permitting a suit in justice's court to be instituted in the firm name, amendable by inserting the partners' names before the pleadings are closed, does not apply where there is no partnership in fact.—Stirling v. Heintzman, 42 Mich. 449.

¶ 477. Comp. L. 1871, § 5307 (How. St. § 6872), permitting suits to be brought in justices' courts in partnership names, amendable afterwards by inserting the partners' names, does not apply to cases where there is no partnership in fact.—Stirling v. Heintzman, 42 Mich. 449.

¶ 478. Amendments in matters of form or substance in the furtherance of justice can be allowed at any time before the final submission of the cause; and whether allowed or not, if they were not such as would cause surprise, and, after the evidence is introduced, if the amendment is such as would be allowed as matter of course, the declaration should be treated as amended.—Webster v. Williams, 69 Mich. 135.

¶ 479. After submission of the cause the justice has no authority to make or allow any substantial amendments to the declaration.—Webster v. Williams, 69 Mich. 135.

¶ 480. A justice of the peace may in his discretion permit the filing of an amended declaration and bill of particulars on an adjourned day.—Moser v. White, 171 Mich. 105.

¶ 481. A party arrested and brought before a justice on a civil warrant has a right to a reasonable time for pleading. If the justice requires him to plead immediately, and he pleads the general issue and the case is then adjourned, he is entitled of right to amend his pleadings and put in any justification he may have on the adjourned day.—Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 Mich. 172.

E. CONTINUANCES, DISCONTINUANCES AND DISMISSALS.

Res adjudicata effect of dismissal, discontinuance or nonsuit, see Former Adjudication § 17.

§ 111. Continuance or adjournment; grounds, affidavit and showing.

Request for adjournment as appearance, see ante § 44.
Waiting an hour for appearance before adjourning case, see ante ¶ 213.
Adjournment as condition to amendment, see also ante ¶ 475.

Mandamus to compel justice to proceed with the cause on the adjourned day, see Mandamus.
Provisions as to adjournments, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVIII, §§ 1-6; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14206-14211.

¶ 482. It is error for a justice to refuse an adjournment on a return day of summons upon a sworn showing that defendant is too unwell to attend to business or leave his house.—Locke v. Leonard Silk Co., 37 Mich. 479.

¶ 483. The showing for a continuance need not be as complete upon the return day of summons as would be required later in the case.—Locke v. Leonard Silk Co., 37 Mich. 479.

¶ 484. It is not a legal cause for the adjournment of proceedings on the return day that the party asking it wants the assistance of counsel.—Warner v. Comstock, 55 Mich. 615.

¶ 485. A defendant in an attachment suit before a justice asked for its adjournment to a specified day, but the justice refused and adjourned it instead to the hour fixed for the hearing of an application for a dissolution of the attachment before a circuit court commissioner in a remote township; though the defendant showed that the presence of himself and of two witnesses was necessary at both places on the adjourned day, the justice refused a continuance asked for by defendant's attorney; held, that as the justice's refusal to adjourn to the day specified occasioned the necessity for a continuance, it was a valid reason for asking the continuance, and a refusal to continue, knowing why the continuance was asked, was an abuse of whatever discretion might belong to the justice in the matter.—Mercer v. Lowell Nat. Bank, 29 Mich. 243.

¶ 486. Where there is an express understanding between the parties to an action in justice's court that the cause will be heard upon a certain day, to which an adjournment is taken, and the plaintiff procures witnesses then to be present from a distance, the refusal of the justice further to adjourn the cause is not such an abuse of discretion as amounts to legal error, although security for costs demanded on return day is not entered until the adjourned day, if it does not appear that defendant was prevented from preparing his defense on account of such delay; especially where defendant, upon the return day, with knowledge of the facts, procured the adjournment without insisting that security for costs be previously entered.—Wood Mowing & Reaping Machine Co. v. Vanderbilt, 109 Mich. 489.

¶ 487. It is not error to refuse adjournment, although a bill of particulars was not served until two days prior to the adjourned day, where it was contemplated by the parties that plaintiff should have some time for its preparation, and no time was fixed for the service thereof, and where it further appears that defendant knew before the service of the same who were to be his witnesses, and no affidavit of merits is filed.—Wood Mowing & Reaping Machine Co. v. Vanderbilt, 109 Mich. 489.

¶ 489. The filing of an affidavit sworn to on February 18th, showing that defendant was on that day engaged in the circuit court as a juror, that cases were assigned for each day from February 18th to and including the following week, and that, by reason of his duties as a juror, he could not go to trial on February 19th in the case against him, entitled him to a continuance, and it was error to proceed to judgment in his absence.—Brower v. Tatro, 115 Mich. 368.

Service of writ of attachment, see ante § 57.

¶ 490. While service of a justice's attachment in proceedings to enforce a lien upon logs may, under How. St. § 8427f, be made upon the agent of the owner, where the latter is not the defendant named in the writ, and is a nonresident of the state, plaintiff in such case is bound, under How. St. § 8427k, providing the proceedings shall follow the general statute, "except as herein otherwise provided," to cause an adjournment to be taken for thirty days, in accordance with How. St. § 6846.—Brabant v. Lillie, 117 Mich. 167; Kennard v. Lillie, 117 Mich. 169.

As waiver of defects and objections, see ante § 51.

Consenting party's right to object to adjournment, see post § 115.

Adjournment upon stipulation in absence of parties as ground for collateral attack, see post ¶ 671.

Right upon collateral attack to show want of consent to adjournment, see post ¶ 672.

¶ 491. Where defendant in justice court signs a stipulation for continuance of a replevin suit at the instance of the plaintiff, it is the plaintiff's duty to appear and obtain the continuance on the day set for hearing.—Barlow v. Riker, 138 Mich. 607.

¶ 492. Attorneys cannot dispute the authority of a clerk who has represented them without question at an appearance and adjournment, to consent to a further adjournment in a justice's court.—Simon v. Sempliner, 86 Mich. 136.

§ 114. Period for which adjournment allowed.

See also ante ¶ 105.

Divestiture of jurisdiction by adjournment for too long a period, see ante § 27.

Mistake as to date of adjournment as ground for allowing belated appeal, see post ¶ 813.

¶ 493. The three months in all for which, under How. St. § 6899, postponements may be had on cause shown, date from the return day of a writ of replevin.—Hatch v. Christmas, 68 Mich. 84.

§ 115. Waiver of objections to improper adjournment.

Loss of jurisdiction by unauthorized continuance or adjournment, see ante § 27.

Objections available on appeal, see post §§ 206, 228.

Consideration of objections made for first time on certiorari, see post § 263.

¶ 494. A defendant who has requested, or at least consented, to an adjournment of a suit in a justice's court on account of the sickness of the justice, cannot complain that the adjournment was on the justice's own motion, and, being for more than six days, wrought a discontinuance depriving the justice of jurisdiction to proceed further with the cause.—Patterson v. McRea, 29 Mich. 258.

¶ 495. Where, on the return-day of summons both parties ask for an adjournment, plaintiff for eight days and defendant for thirty, and, where, upon their failing to agree upon the time, the justice adjourns the case for seven days, defendant cannot be heard to say that such adjournment was upon the justice's motion and without the consent of the parties.—Shaw v. Fortine, 98 Mich. 254.

¶ 496. The objection that the case had been illegally adjourned in justice's court is unavailable if not taken before the trial. —Erie Preserving Co. v. Witherspoon, 49 Mich. 377.

¶ 497. Where, after a cause had been adjourned on mutual consent to a certain date, the attorneys of the parties agreed upon a later date of which they at different times orally informed the justice, upon which he altered the minutes of the adjournment, held, that the consent individually given waived all irregularity.—Simon v. Sempliner, 86 Mich. 136.

¶ 498. Any irregularity in an adjournment of a cause, made by a justice at plaintiff's requests, without a showing of cause, and against the objection of defendant, before the pleadings were filed, was waived, where defendant selected the date to which adjournment was made, and demanded security for costs after the adjournment was agreed upon.—Bernstein v. Thayer, 157 Mich. 625.

§ 116. Operation and effect of continuance or adjournment.

Effect of unauthorized continuance or adjournment to divest jurisdiction, see ante § 27.
Hour for appearance upon adjourned day, see ante § 49.
Waiver by adjournment in civil arrest proceedings, see ante § 52.

Nonappearance on adjourned day as discontinuance, see post § 118.
Validity of default judgment rendered on adjourned day, see post § 135.
Refusal of justice to proceed on adjourned day tantamount to nonsuit, see post ¶ 776.

¶ 499. Where a suit in justice's court is continued by consent of parties, without pleading, the case is regularly in court on the adjourned day.—Pattridge v. Lott, 15 Mich. 251.

¶ 500. An adjournment on plaintiff's motion, after defendant, under his notice of set-off, had filed an account of said set-off, verified by affidavit as provided by How. St., § 7525, operated as a waiver of the service of the account, affidavit, etc.—McGowan v. Lamb, 66 Mich. 615, affirming lower court by equal division.

¶ 501. Where a case in the justice court is adjourned to a certain date it is improper for the justice to allow plaintiff in the meantime to withdraw his case and pay the costs. —People ex rel. Dota v. McKay, How. N. P. 103.

§ 117. Docketing and entering adjournment.

Justice's dockets generally, see post § 139 et seq.
Sufficiency of the docket entry and facts required to be shown therein, see post § 143.

¶ 502. A justice's judgment, rendered upon defendant's failure to appear on the adjourned day, is void, where the docket entry of an adjournment by consent does not show the place to which the cause was adjourned as required by How. St., § 7053.—Waldron v. Palmer, 104 Mich. 556; Fitzhugh v. Rivard, 109 Mich. 154.

¶ 503. A justice may continue a proceeding before him by holding it over from day to day, in order to perform other official duties, without losing jurisdiction of the case; and such holding over is not technically an adjournment, within the meaning of How. St., §§ 6899-6903, even though it is so called in his docket; and it is not within the provisions of section 7053, requiring the docket to show adjournments, and the place to which they are made.—Woempener v. Ketchum, 110 Mich. 34.

¶ 504. A justice's docket, which shows that a cause was adjourned to a specified date "the same hour and place" and that it was called on that date and defendant appeared specially and moved to dismiss for other stated reasons, which motion was denied, and the trial had and judgment rendered, does not show lack of jurisdiction on its face in that the hour and place of adjournment are not stated.—Prouty v. Brown, 125 Mich. 507.

For refusal to file bill of particulars when ordered, see ante ¶ 442.
Unauthorized adjournment as discontinuance of suit, see ante § 27.
Effect of discontinuance to oust jurisdiction, see ante § 28.

Discontinuance as to some defendants, see Jud. Act, chap. LXX, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 14268.

Provisions as to discontinuance and nonsuit where set-off as recoupment interposed, see Jud. Act, chap. LXIX, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 14231.

¶ 505. Plaintiff in justice court, where no set-off or recoupment is pleaded or offered, may discontinue at any time before verdict, to wit, after he has judgment followed by the grant of a new trial by the justice.—Burkart v. Blaumann, 142 Mich. 41.

¶ 506. Plaintiff's failure to appear on the return day of the summons and within an hour after the time fixed therein works a discontinuance.—Redman v. White, 25 Mich. 523; Mudge v. Yaples, 58 Mich. 307.

¶ 507. The failure of the plaintiff to appear within an hour of the time to which a cause in justice's court has been adjourned for the completion of the trial operates, under the statute as a discontinuance, and deprives the justice of all jurisdiction thereafter to render any judgment against the defendant or any judgment whatever, except that of nonsuit, and for costs.—Brady v. Taber, 29 Mich. 199; Post v. Harper, 61 Mich. 434.

¶ 508. On the adjourned day of a cause, the absence of the justice for a few minutes more than an hour after the time to which the cause had been adjourned, for the purpose of holding a coroner's inquest, will not operate as a discontinuance of the cause.—Stadler v. Moors, 9 Mich. 264.

§ 119. Dismissal or nonsuit.

See also ante ¶ 120.
Duty to enter nonsuit where neither party appears within the hour, see also ante ¶ 103.
Right of plaintiff to withdraw his case after adjournment, see ante ¶ 501.

Appealability of judgments of nonsuit and dismissal, see post § 185.
Dismissals on appeal, see post § 222.
General law as to dismissal and nonsuit, see Discontinuance, Dismissal and Nonsuit.
Provisions as to nonsuit, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 14272.

¶ 509. The effect of a motion to dismiss a case in justice's court, because plaintiff's Christian name is not given in the replevin writ, is in effect a plea in abatement, which is admitted by the statement of the party who appears for plaintiff that he cannot amend because of a want of knowledge of plaintiff's full name; and the case is then properly dismissed.—Fisher v. Northrup, 79 Mich. 287.

¶ 510. Failure of a plaintiff to file security for costs as directed by the court, is as much voluntary as his failing to appear or to declare would be, and leaves no discretion to the justice, but compels a judgment for a voluntary nonsuit, no proper showing for adjournment having been made.—Walmsley v. Bowman, 151 Mich. 553.

¶ 511. Where a short summons is issued when not justified, defendant, on making that fact appear, is entitled to an order dismissing the case.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13.

¶ 512. Where a defendant served by a long summons in a suit in a justice's court, sends by registered letter to the justice an affidavit that he is a nonresident of the county, and entitled to be served by a short summons, together with a motion to dismiss, it is the duty of the justice to dismiss the suit where he finds the facts alleged in the affidavit to be true.—Nelson v. Hillen, 164 Mich. 507.

¶ 513. A motion to dismiss a suit in the justice's court because of the nonresidence of the parties, is properly denied where the facts of nonresidence do not appear on the face of the record, and there is no proof to support the motion.—Appleman v. Hahn, 149 Mich. 245.

¶ 514. Where a case is adjourned to a certain date, but in the meantime plaintiff improperly dismisses it and pays the costs, if plaintiff fails to appear at the date to which the case is adjourned, it seems that the only thing that the justice can do is to render a judgment of nonsuit and for costs.—People ex rel. Dota v. McKay, How. N. P. 103.

¶ 515. A motion to dismiss on the ground that the plaintiff did not appear before a justice of the peace within an hour of the time to which a case had been adjourned is properly denied where the defendant was still in the court room when the plaintiff arrived and had not moved for a dismissal before the belated arrival, there being a waiver on the part of the defendant.—Charles Bakrow & Co. v. Totten, 146 Mich. 57.

¶ 516. A justice's summons was made returnable at one o'clock in the afternoon. It was read to defendant and a copy given him, which, however, specified one o'clock in the forenoon as the time for appearance. Defendant appeared at one in the morning, got the justice out of bed, and in plaintiff's absence took a nonsuit. But before the real time arrived he saw the original summons, which stated it correctly. Held, that the nonsuit was void.—Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 Mich. 196.

¶ 518. While a justice of the peace cannot under How. St., § 6817, set aside his own judgment and grant a new trial, yet it has been held that where he has, through mistake or otherwise, rendered a void judgment of dismissal, he may, the parties being present, treat it as a nullity, and proceed as though it had not been rendered.—Hodges v. Bagg, 81 Mich. 243.

¶ 519. A justice of the peace, under the supposition that plaintiffs had not appeared, announced that the case would be dismissed for that reason; but ascertaining within the statutory hour, and before any record had been made or injury resulted to the defendant, that plaintiffs had appeared by counsel, who was then just outside the court room door, he notified defendant's attorney to appear at a given hour the same day. The attorneys for both parties appeared at the hour named, when defendant's attorney stated that he appeared specially, and orally pleaded such dismissal as an abatement of the suit. The justice assumed jurisdiction of the case, heard the plaintiffs' testimony, and rendered a judgment in their favor, which was sustained.—Hodges v. Bagg, 81 Mich. 243.

F. TRIAL AND JUDGMENT.

Nature and extent of justice's jurisdiction and rules controlling its exercise, see ante § 10.
Waiting an hour for appearance, see ante § 49.
Continuances and adjournments, see ante IV, E.
Appeal or certiorari as appropriate method to review errors on the trial, see post § 251.
Conduct of trials generally, see Trial.
Provisions as to trial in justices' courts, see Jud. Act, chap. LXX; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14241-14271.

§ 121. Calling and notice of trial.

Notice of trial in circuit court on appeal, see post § 227.

¶ 520. If a justice, whether properly or not, has erased his docket entry of the appearance of a defendant, he ought not to proceed in the case without giving notice of his purpose to the defendant, or the attorney who had assumed to appear for him.—King v. McKenzie, 51 Mich. 461.

§ 122. Juries; demand, allowance and waiver.

Right to award a venire de novo, see post ¶ 549.
Waiver of jury trial in justices' cases, see Jury § 10.
Functions and province of jury in forcible entry or summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 42.
General law as to juries, see Jury.

¶ 521. Where a party has failed to demand a jury at the joining of issue and before adjournment, it is nevertheless competent for the justice to order one to be called on his demand on the adjourned day. The failure of the party to demand a jury within the time allowed by law is only a waiver of the right; but the justice possesses the same power to order one afterwards as is possessed by the circuit court.—Van Sickle v. Kellogg, 19 Mich. 49.

¶ 522. If a justice of the peace has any doubt, or is not able to certify in positive terms, that no jury was demanded at the time provided for by the statute, he should entertain the demand and allow a jury.—Pontiac & L. Plank-Road Co. v. Hopkinson, 69 Mich. 10.

¶ 523. Defendant's absence from further proceedings in justice's court after demanding a jury and paying the jury fee does not amount to a waiver of the jury, and the justice cannot proceed to try the case alone.—Boatz v. Berg, 51 Mich. 8.

§ 123. ——Tender or payment of fees.

See also post ¶ 997.
Costs and jury fees in general, see post IV, G.
Payment of jury fees as condition to appeal, see post § 200.

Provisions as to fees of jurors, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 14398.

¶ 524. If a jury is demanded at the time of joining issue and before adjournment, the jury fee may be paid on the day to which the cause stands adjourned at any time before the trial is entered upon by the swearing of witnesses.—Pontiac & L. Plank-Road Co. v. Hopkinson, 69 Mich. 10.

¶ 525. One who demands a jury in justice's court, and pays their fees, has no right, if this jury disagrees, to insist upon trial by another without advancing an additional jury fee.—McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 Mich. 426; Roberts v. Tremayne, 61 Mich. 264.

§ 124. ——Summoning, selection and challenges.

Review on special appeal of court's refusal to summon second jury, see post ¶ 997.
Certiorari as method of reviewing rulings upon challenges, see post ¶ 1091.

Summoning juries generally, see Jury, IV.
Selecting and challenging jury generally, see Jury, V.

¶ 526. A justice's juries may be summoned from the county at large.—Faulks v. People, 39 Mich. 200.

¶ 527. In justice court the trial should proceed before the jury struck by the parties, unless there is challenge for cause, and it was error to allow a peremptory challenge.—Eldridge v. Hubbell, 119 Mich. 61.

¶ 528. How. St., § 6935, in so far as it limits the time for the selection and summoning of a new jury in justice's court to forty-eight hours, unless the parties agree to a shorter time, applies only to cases where such jury has been properly demanded and the statutory fees paid.—Roberts v. Tremayne, 61 Mich. 264.

¶ 529. One of the regular panel of jurors in justice court cannot be excused on a peremptory challenge.—Reed v. Peacock, 123 Mich. 244.

§ 125. ——Deliberations and conduct of jury.

Deliberations and conduct of jury in general, see Trial, VIII.
Provisions as to deliberation and discharge of jury, see Jud. Act. chap. LXX, §§ 29, 31; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14269, 14271.

¶ 531. Where the justice, at the request of the jury and with the consent of the parties, went to the jury room with the latter to answer a question the jury wished to ask him as to their right to find for an amount less than the face of the note sued on, held no error.—Smoke v. Jones, 35 Mich. 409.

¶ 532. If the parties to a suit in justice's court allow the justice to participate with the jury's consultations in the jury room, they constitute a tribunal of their own to determine what verdict shall be rendered, and after the rendition of the same, all having been done by consent, the justice may render judgment upon it, and if the verdict was wrong the parties are remediless by certiorari.—Snyder v. Wilson, 65 Mich. 336.

¶ 533. It is error for a justice of the peace after a jury has retired to deliberate upon a verdict to hold communications with the jury in the jury room in the absence of the parties or their counsel or without their consent.—Donville v. Russell, How. N. P. 8.

Compelling attendance of witnesses, see Witnesses I.
Fees of witnesses, see Witnesses VII.

¶ 534. A cause of action must be as fully proved in a justice's court as in any other.—Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424.

¶ 535. Proof of the execution of the statutory bond given by a contractor for a public building is not dispensed with in an action in assumpsit begun by a materialman in justice's court, though there is no affidavit denying execution as required by 1897 C. C. Rule 8.—People for use of Holmes v. Cotteral, 115 Mich. 43.

¶ 536. Orders for the payment of money are admissible in evidence without proof, when sued upon, and when their execution is not denied under oath, as required by the statutes (How. St., § 6928).—Ryerson v. Tourcotte, 121 Mich. 78.

¶ 537. An affidavit proving the claim and served with a justice's summons is admissible in evidence to make a prima facie case for the plaintiff, although not signed by the affiant as agent, attorney, or bookkeeper of the plaintiff.—Hirsh v. Fisher, 138 Mich. 95.

¶ 538. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 826, providing that a written instrument declared upon may be used in evidence without proving its execution, unless such execution is denied under oath, no other evidence than the note need be introduced in a suit upon a note in a justice's court, and no witnesses need be sworn where the execution of the note is not so denied.—Charles H. Warner & Sons Co. v. Lewis, 155 Mich. 450.

§ 127. Offer and introduction, reception and order of proofs.

Statutory power to call adverse party for cross-examination, see Examination of Witnesses § 81.

¶ 539. The affidavit and account authorized by How. St., § 7525, like any other testimony, must be introduced in evidence to become operative, the statute making no provision for its being filed with the justice.—Gordon v. Sibley, 59 Mich. 250.

¶ 540. It is discretionary with a justice to allow proof to be made after the argument as to the time when the summons was delivered for service, provided such proof does not prejudice the opposite party.—Gray v. Willcox, 56 Mich. 58.

¶ 541. Where defendant's attorney declines to cross-examine plaintiff's witness and says he submits his case, upon which plaintiff rests, and after arguments by both sides a decision is given to plaintiff, the justice acts within his discretion in refusing to open the case.—Chivers v. Lytle, 97 Mich. 477.

¶ 542. A justice cannot take testimony after the case is closed.—Bullock v. Ueberroth, 121 Mich. 293.

§ 128. Verdicts and findings.

Effect upon verdict of justice's presence in jury room, see ante § 125.
Conformity of judgment to verdict, see also post ¶ 555.
Verdict equivalent to judgment for purposes of execution, see post ¶ 703.
General law as to verdicts and findings, see Verdicts.
Provisions as to delivery of verdict, see Jud. Act, chap. LXX, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 14270.

¶ 543. Unless the facts in a replevin suit before a justice require a special finding, a verdict that "this jury finds for the plaintiff" is sufficient, and judgment must be entered on it.—Smith v. Dodge, 37 Mich. 354.

¶ 544. Trespass was brought in justice's court on three counts, two based on the statute against forcible dispossession and one at common law for damage to plaintiff's goods. The jury's verdict was in these words: "Damages on goods twenty-seven dollars and seventy-five cents. Actual exemplary or personal damages twenty dollars, trebled sixty dollars." Held, that this would sustain judgment; the assessment of damages was sufficiently specific and the actual damages sufficiently indicated.—Wilson v. McCrillies, 50 Mich. 347.

Effect upon jurisdiction of doubling verdict, see ante § 15.
Execution upon verdict, see post § 166.
Review on certiorari of sufficiency of evidence, see post § 265.
Presumptions on certiorari as to sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict or findings, see post § 268.

¶ 545. A justice must construe and apply the verdict of a jury reasonably in the light of the proceedings.—Wilson v. McCrillies, 50 Mich. 347.

¶ 546. A jury's verdict in justice's court is conclusive; the justice cannot set it aside nor make it invalid by neglecting to enter judgment on it at once. The law supplies the judgment if not entered, and its subsequent entry in accordance with the verdict is proper.—Alt v. Lalone, 54 Mich. 302.

¶ 547. Where an issue formed upon a plea of not guilty in replevin was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict as follows, "This jury find for the plaintiff," held that, although not a formal verdict in replevin, yet it sufficiently indicated for which party the jury had found the issue, and that it was the duty of the justice to enter the verdict in the proper form, according to the substantial finding, and to render judgment thereon.—People v. Foote, 1 D. 102.

Discontinuance after new trial granted, see ante ¶ 505.
General law as to new trials, see New Trial.

¶ 548. A justice of the peace cannot grant a new trial.—Alt v. Lalone, 54 Mich. 302.

¶ 549. Where the jury have found a verdict the justice cannot award a venire de novo, thus in effect granting a new trial of the cause.—People v. Foote, 1 D. 102.

¶ 550. A justice of the peace, under Act No. 475, Local Acts 1903, granted a motion by plaintiff for a new trial without giving defendant a chance to be heard. Later, defendant moved to vacate the order, and the justice in his return stated that both sides had been heard, and he thought a new trial should have been granted. Held, the defendant's objection that a new trial had been ordered without hearing defendant was without merit.—National Cash Register Co. v. Richards, 159 Mich. 128.

Judgment in attachment, see ante § 66.
Judgment in garnishment, see ante §§ 75, 76.
Judgment in justices' replevin, see ante § 83.
Sufficiency of verdict to sustain judgment, see also ante ¶ 544.
Necessity of entering judgment upon proper verdict, see also ante ¶¶ 543, 546, 547.

Garnishment before one justice of judgment obtained before another, see ante ¶ 287.
Judgment on default, see post § 135.
Judgment on confession, see post § 136.
Entering and recording judgment, see post § 139 et seq.
Power of justice to vacate or modify judgment, see post § 147.
Conclusiveness and effect of judgment, see post § 148.

Payment, satisfaction or discharge of judgment, see post § 157.
Execution upon judgment, see post § 165.
Transcripts of justices' judgments, see post § 175 et seq.
Docketing judgment in circuit court and effect thereof, see post §§ 179-184.
Presumptions on appeal as to propriety of judgment, see post § 233.
Raising objection on appeal that justice rendered judgment outside the county, see post ¶ 906.
Judgment on appeal to circuit court, see post § 238.
Actions to enforce judgments, see Judgments, XII.
Provisions as to judgments in justice's court, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI, §§ 1-16; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14272-14287.
Provisions as to judgment upon set-off or recoupment, see Jud. Act, chap. LXIX, §§ 13-15; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14227-14229.

¶ 551. Where plaintiff declared orally on a note then present on file, and the justice, in entering the substance of the declaration on his docket, described the note as dated in 1874, when in fact it bore date in 1871, there was no material variance; the incorrect date in the docket was substantially corrected by the note itself, and the mistake might have been cured in fact by correcting the entry.—Smoke v. Jones, 35 Mich. 409.

¶ 552. In a case where defendant in justice's court filed a general notice of recoupment without any particulars, the court, without considering the sufficiency of the notice to admit any evidence, held that recoupment thereunder must be limited to the transaction specified in plaintiff's bill of particulars.—McKevitte v. Feige, 57 Mich. 374.

¶ 553. A justice of the peace, or a magistrate, has no right to supply any defect in the proofs by acting upon knowledge that came to him in some other case; and in an action for goods sold and delivered, where there is no evidence that a plaintiff is doing business in the name of a company having the contract to supply the goods, or that such contract was assigned to the plaintiff, such facts cannot be supplied by the justice in the manner first mentioned.—Bullock v. Ueberroth, 121 Mich. 293.

Jurisdiction as affected by amount of recovery, see ante § 15.
As affected by bill of particulars, see ante ¶ 441.
Amount of recovery in replevin, see ante § 84.
Errors in respect to amount or terms as ground for collateral attack, see post § 154.
Amount of costs, see post § 160.
Stating amount of judgment in affidavit for transcript, see post § 176.
Affidavit of amount due as prerequisite to docketing transcript, see post § 180.
Appealable amount of judgment, see post § 186.
Amount of judgment on appeal to circuit, see post § 238.
Judgment in excess of amount claimed as ground for reversal on certiorari, see post § 273.
Remission of excess over justice's jurisdiction, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI. § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 14280.

¶ 554. A defendant who prevails in replevin before a justice may recover the value of the property replevied, not exceeding $500, which is the constitutional limit of the jurisdiction of justices.—Henderson v. Desborough, 28 Mich. 170; Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 Mich. 565; Chilson v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 235.

¶ 555. Under a declaration in justice's court containing three counts, two based on Comp. L. 1871, § 6372 (How. St., § 7959), for forcible dispossession, the third a common-law count for damage to goods, the jury's verdict was: "Damages on goods, $27.75. Actual exemplary or personal damages $20, trebled $60." Held, that this sustained a judgment for $87.75; the preponderating inference being that nothing beyond actual damage was included in the $20.—Wilson v. McCrillies, 50 Mich. 347.

§ 133. ——Upon joint obligations or demands.

Judgments as to joint parties and rights generally, see Judgments, II, C.
Judgment on confession against persons jointly liable, see post § 138.
Appeal by one of several plaintiffs or defendants, see post ¶ 801.
Clerical errors in judgment upon joint debt as ground for collateral attack, see post ¶ 673.
Grounds for allowing one codefendant to appeal after time, see post § 194.
Provisions as to judgments in actions against joint parties, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI, §§ 6, 7; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14277, 14278.

¶ 556. A justice cannot render judgment on a bill or note against part of the defendants.—Berend v. Avery, 39 Mich. 132.

¶ 557. Judgment for a joint conversion cannot be entered against a defendant who had not been served with process.—McLean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 129.

fendant, in assumpsit against husband and wife in justice's court, even though the other defendant was found not liable.—Wilson v. Medler, 140 Mich. 209.

§ 134. ——Time for rendition.

Time to tax costs, see post § 162.
Execution recitals as to year in which judgment rendered, see post ¶ 704.
Statements in affidavit for transcript as to time of rendition of judgment, see post § 176.
Computation of time, see Time.
Provisions as to time for rendition, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 14279.

¶ 559. Where a justice, when a cause is submitted, informs the parties he shall take time to decide the cause, but does not say how much, he is not obliged to wait four days.—Draper v. Tooker, 16 Mich. 74.

¶ 560. When the justice does not fix the time within the four days allowed by the statute upon which to render his judgment, the parties are bound to take notice when the judgment is rendered.—Draper v. Tooker, 16 Mich. 74.

¶ 562. A judgment not rendered within four days after the cause has been submitted to the justice is void.—Harrison v. Sager, 27 Mich. 476; Brady v. Taber, 29 Mich. 199; Hall v. Howard, 39 Mich. 219; Weaver v. Lammon, 62 Mich. 366.

¶ 563. Under Act No. 475, Local Acts 1903, as amended by Act No. 660, Local Acts 1907, a justice has no jurisdiction in a case ten days after the trial to any further extent than to give judgment and a decision cannot be rendered thereafter.—Troy v. Rodgers, 162 Mich. 28.

¶ 564. A justice tried a case on June 20th. He announced that on June 30th he would make his decision. By consent of both parties on June 30th, he postponed his decision to July 3d. Held, that defendant was estopped to set up the lack of jurisdiction of the justice to render judgment beyond the ten-day period provided by statute.—Troy v. Rodgers, 162 Mich. 28.

§ 135. Defaults and judgments thereon.

Necessity of waiting an hour for appearance, see ante § 49.
Recitals as to defaults, see post § 142.
Failure to wait an hour for appearance as ground for collateral attack, see post § 152.
Execution upon judgment, see post § 165.
Ignorance of default as ground for allowing belated appeal therefrom, see post ¶ 813.
General law as to defaults, see Defaults; Judgments § 3.

¶ 565. It is not error for a justice to proceed to judgment upon the nonappearance of defendant served by long summons, as shown by the return, there being nothing on the face of the summons to show that defendant was a nonresident entitled to a short summons and no objection on that ground being made or any showing of nonresidence; since under that state the justice had no alternative.—Courtis v. Garrison, 148 Mich. 226.

¶ 566. Where, on the adjourned day of a cause, a justice was absent half an hour over time in the performance of official duties not pertaining to his judicial office, and on his return, upon defendant's refusal to appear, adjourned the cause in his absence and gave him notice of the adjournment, and on the next adjourned day gave judgment against him in his absence, the judgment was held void.—Ruberts v. Hathaway, 42 Mich. 592.

¶ 567. A judgment rendered in plaintiff's favor before the return hour of the summons, without defendant's consent or appearance, or when plaintiff has failed to appear in one hour thereafter, is void.—Mudge v. Yaples, 58 Mich. 307.

¶ 568. A justice should require distinct lawful evidence that summons has been served personally, before rendering judgment on its return against a defendant who has not appeared.—Smalley v. Lighthall, 37 Mich. 348.

§ 136. Judgment on confession.

Oral admissions before justice as preventing appeal, see post ¶ 787.
Docket showing to sustain, see post § 145.
General law as to confession of judgment, see Confession of Judgment; Judgments, I.

¶ 569. A confession of judgment before a justice is void unless in accordance with the statute authorizing it.—Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. 19; Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mich. 156; Dodge v. Bird, 19 Mich. 518; Austin v. Grant, 1 Mich. 490.

¶ 570. A justice can render judgment on confession of the party only in those actions which he has jurisdiction to try.—Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. 19.

§ 137. ——Cognovit or admission of indebtedness.

¶ 572. A judgment by confession without process is void, unless the confession is in writing signed by the defendant in the presence of the justice.—Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mich. 156.

¶ 573. Under R. S. 1838, p. 389, § 2, a judgment by confession was held void where it did not appear that the confession was "signed by the person making the same, in the presence of the justice and of one or more competent witnesses." The statute was construed to require the witnesses to subscribe their names as such.—Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Austin v. Grant, 1 Mich. 490.

¶ 574. Where parties appeared before a justice, and confessed judgment in favor of another, on a demand arising upon contract, for a sum specified, and authorized judgment to be entered thereupon, it was held a substantial acknowledgment of their indebtedness, and sufficient under this statute.—Kinyon v. Fowler, 10 Mich. 16.

¶ 575. It is only where the parties appear without process that a written confession signed by the defendant is required by the statute. If the defendant appears after due service of process, and orally admits the cause of action for which the plaintiff declares, this is sufficient to authorize judgment to be entered against him.—Crouse v. Derbyshire, 10 Mich. 479.

¶ 576. Where no suit has been commenced by process, judgment can only be taken in justice's court upon confession signed in the justice's presence.—Cox v. Crippen, 13 Mich. 502.

¶ 577. A judgment entered on confession without process is void if the paper treated as a confession is a mere due-bill.—Dodge v. Bird, 19 Mich. 518.

¶ 578. To give an oral admission of indebtedness the effect of a cognovit, in a case where a money demand is in suit, it must not only admit that the plaintiff has a demand, but it must either definitely fix the amount or furnish the means of fixing it by some process of mere calculation. Otherwise no judgment is confessed and the case requires evidence.—Morrison v. Riker, 26 Mich. 385.

§ 138. ——Against persons jointly liable.

Judgment after trial of issues upon joint obligations or demands, see ante § 133.

¶ 579. Judgment against two, on confession of one, after return day of summons, and without continuance, is void.—Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

§ 139. Dockets and entering and recording judgments.

Necessity of taking minutes of garnishee's examination, see also ante § 73.
Recitals as to appearance and defaults, see post § 142.
Recitals as to continuances and adjournments, see post § 143.
Recitals as to costs, see post § 144.
Construction and interpretation of docket entries, see post § 146.
Docket entry merely evidence of the judgment, see post § 148.
Docket entries as to payment or discharge of judgment, see post § 158.
Sufficiency of transcript, see post § 177.
Entering and docketing justice's judgment in circuit court, see post §§ 179-184.
Record on appeal, see post § 201.
Return to certiorari, see post § 259.
General law as to records, see Records.
Record of judgments generally, see Judgments, III.
Record of judgment for contempt, see Contempt § 38.
Provisions as to justice's docket, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXX, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 14451.

¶ 580. The docket of a justice is a public record, at all times open for proper entries.—Cox v. Crippen, 13 Mich. 502.

¶ 581. The record of the court of a justice of the peace consists of the entries required by the statute to be made upon his docket.—Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 Mich. 39.

¶ 582. A justice's judgment which was rendered upon the verdict, and entered by the justice in his minutes, is not void because it was not forthwith transcribed upon his docket.—Saunders v. Tioga Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 520.

¶ 583. The entry of judgment should be officially signed by the justice.—Howard v. People, 3 Mich. 207.

¶ 584. Where the entry of a judgment on a justice's docket is followed immediately by a stay of execution in the same case—each being dated separately, but the dates being the same—and it is inferable from the docket that both entries were made at the same time as one transaction, and the official signature of the justice is appended at the foot of the entry of the stay, the judgment is not void for want of signature, nor the stay for want of attestation.—Hollister v. Giddings, 24 Mich. 501.

§ 140. Requisites and sufficiency of docket entries.

Entry of examination of garnishee, see ante § 73.
Entry upon docket of oral defense, see ante ¶ 438.
Entries as to stay of execution, see also post § 169.

Amendment of docket, see post § 147.
Evidence to contradict docket entries, see post § 149.
Insufficiency of docket entries as ground for collateral attack, see post § 150 et seq.

¶ 585. A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace on failure of defendant to appear on an adjourned day is void if the docket entries fail to show the hour at which the summons was returnable, the hour and place to which the cause was adjourned, the hour on the adjourned day at which plaintiff appeared, and the hour at which the case was called by the justice.—Stolte, Dangel & Foss Co. v. Cochran, 111 Mich. 193.

¶ 586. The justice's docket need not state that the proceedings were before the justice who issued the summons and signed the docket, or that the summons was returnable before him at a proper place; nor need it state where the entry was made.—O'Donnell v. Wade, 151 Mich. 103.

¶ 587. How. St., § 8035, which provides that garnishment suits in justices' courts "may be entered on the docket as suits in other cases," is permissive, not mandatory, and the judgment may be valid although the entry in respect to the title of the proceedings differs from that commonly made and names both the principal parties and the garnishee with the names of the respective attorneys opposite and does not enter the garnishment proceeding as a separate entitled suit.—Fasquelle v. Kennedy, 55 Mich. 305.

¶ 588. Where a defendant waives formal proof of the execution of a written instrument sued on in a justice's court, there is no requirement that such waiver be entered upon the docket.—Stegeman v. Fraser, 161 Mich. 35.

§ 141. ——Jurisdictional recitals in general.

To show waiver by appearance and joinder in issue, see also ante § 51.
Evidence to contradict recitals of jurisdiction, see post § 149.
Necessity that record on appeal show jurisdictional facts, see post § 201.
Conflict between return on certiorari and the justice's docket in respect to jurisdictional recitals, see post § 270.

¶ 589. The justice's docket must show by reasonable intendment that the justice had jurisdiction.—Mudge v. Yaples, 58 Mich. 307.

¶ 590. The jurisdiction of justices of the peace cannot be presumed, but must appear affirmatively in their proceedings.—Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384; Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. 19; Saunders v. Tioga Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 520.

¶ 591. A justice's powers are statutory, and his jurisdiction must affirmatively appear.—Harbour v. Eldred, 107 Mich. 95.

¶ 593. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 957, How. 2nd Ed., § 12403, the jurisdiction of the justice must appear affirmatively upon the face of proceedings entered upon a docket kept by him.—Tacoma v. Nyenhuis, 194 Mich. 420.

¶ 594. To establish a valid judgment, the docket of a justice of the peace, or, instead, the minutes of the proceedings made and filed by him, must affirmatively show that he acquired and retained jurisdiction, and any omission in this regard cannot be supplied by reference to the files in the case. So held where the docket contained merely a memorandum of rendition of judgment, and the minutes of the justice, indorsed upon the file wrapper, mentioned no year, except as given in the date line immediately preceding the justice's signature.—Rasch v. Bissell, 106 Mich. 106.

See also ante ¶ 585; post ¶ 848.
Appearance in justices' courts, see ante § 44.
Effect of erasing docket entry of appearance, see ante ¶ 520.
Conclusiveness of recitals as to appearance, see post § 149.
Failure to wait an hour for appearance as ground for collateral attack, see post § 152.
Collateral attack on ground that docket fails to show attorney's authority to appear, see post § 151.

¶ 596. It is proper that in every case the justice should make his docket show in what manner the parties appear, but he is not expressly required by statute to do so.—Morton v. Crane, 39 Mich. 526.

¶ 597. The justice's docket must show affirmatively the day and hour of the appearance of the parties, and if defendant is absent that plaintiff appeared on the return day of the summons, and within one hour after the time fixed therein.—Mudge v. Yaples, 58 Mich. 307.

¶ 598. Where there has been no appearance on defendant's part the justice's docket must affirmatively show, by way of showing the justice's jurisdiction, that plaintiff appeared within one hour of the time to which the cause was adjourned.—Post v. Harper, 61 Mich. 434.

¶ 599. A justice's docket entry reciting the date and return day of the summons, and containing no other date except to repeat at the end of it the date of the return day, and which does not state on what day the parties were called, and the plaintiff appeared and the defendant failed to appear, is not enough to comply with Comp. L. 1857, § 3890, which was not meant to leave the time of appearance to be referred to the date of the judgment in a case affording room, on the face of the docket, for the two acts on separate days.—Redman v. White, 25 Mich. 523.

¶ 600. A docket entry which does not show whether the plaintiff appeared on any particular day out of several does not show that he appeared within an hour after the return day of process; and as (Comp. L. 1857, § 3777, clause 2) his failure to appear within that time works a discontinuance, such a docket entry fails to show that the justice was authorized to render the judgment, and is, therefore, not admissible to prove the validity of the judgment.—Redman v. White, 25 Mich. 523.

¶ 601. It is not a valid objection to a justice's docket, when offered as evidence of a judgment rendered against a defendant who did not appear, that it fails to show that the justice waited one hour after the return-hour for defendant to appear.—Talbot v. Kuhn, 89 Mich. 30; Chaddock v. Barry, 93 Mich. 542.

¶ 602. How. St., § 7053, subd. 3, which requires a justice of the peace to enter upon his docket the time when the parties to a suit appeared before him, is sufficiently complied with, where the process is returnable forthwith, by stating the day on which the parties appeared.—Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

¶ 603. Justice is not required to enter showing of authority of plaintiff's attorney to appear.—Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

¶ 604. A justice's docket which does not show whether or not plaintiff appeared within one hour after the return hour, or that the justice waited one hour for the defendant to appear before beginning the trial of the case, or that the attorney for plaintiff proved his authority to act, is fatally defective.—Moore v. Frederick, 197 Mich. 573.

¶ 605. An objection that the docket entry of a justice of the peace failed to show that plaintiff appeared within the hour, was frivolous where the entry stated that the cause was called, plaintiff appeared in person, and after waiting one hour, and defendant not appearing, etc., judgment was rendered.—Cole v. Potter, 135 Mich. 328.

§ 143. ——Recitals as to continuances and adjournments.

Continuances and adjournments in justices' courts, see ante IV, E.
Entry of continuance to render judgment, see ante § 134.
Irregularities as to continuances and adjournments as ground for collateral attack, see post § 153.
Discontinuance resulting where record fails to show appearance of plaintiff, see also post ¶ 848.
Omission to state place of adjournment as error on certiorari, see post ¶ 1190.

¶ 606. The objection that the hour to which a case was continued does not appear in a justice's docket is frivolous and properly overruled if it appears that the hour was fixed and that it appeared in the justice's minutes, but had not been transferred to his docket.—Gray v. Willcox, 56 Mich. 58.

¶ 607. A justice's neglect to record in his docket the place to which a case is adjourned is a clerical irregularity for which judgment cannot be reversed if the defendant is not misled and appears and answers.—Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25.

¶ 609. Where a justice of the peace fails to enter on his docket to what place an adjournment is had it is fatal to the judgment.—Smith v. Kistler, 174 Mich. 367.

¶ 610. The docket of a justice of the peace must show the place to which a cause is adjourned in order to make the adjourned hearing valid as against an absent party and this defect is not remedied by a supplemental return by the justice setting out the time and place of adjournment, that it had been noted in his minutes but omitted from his docket by clerical error, and that the adjournment was had upon the application of the party now complaining.—Mitts v. Harvey, 125 Mich. 354.

¶ 611. The date of entry of a judgment on a justice's docket and the date to which the cause is adjourned are shown sufficiently by an entry under a given date and hour that the plaintiff appeared and defendant's motion for a continuance was refused followed by another paragraph stating that the motion was overruled and the cause adjourned to 1 p. m. at a specified place and at 1 p. m. at the place indicated proofs were heard and judgment rendered.—Loder v. Reed, 129 Mich. 180.

§ 144. ——Recitals as to costs.

Right to and amount of costs, see post § 159 et seq.

Provisions as to effect of judgment in assumpsit on bond, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 14172.

¶ 612. The reasons for allowing double costs, under Comp. L. 1897, § 11266, How. 2nd Ed., § 14401, giving a justice of the peace authority to assess same in certain cases, need not be entered upon the docket.—Peterson v. Harrington, 197 Mich. 611.

Judgments on confession in justices' courts, see ante §§ 136-138.

¶ 613. A justice's authority to render judgment on confession is derived solely from the statute, and the docket entries of the proceedings must show that the law has been complied with.—Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. 19; Shadbolt v. Bronson, 1 Mich. 85.

¶ 614. A judgment was rendered by a justice in these words, after the title of the cause: "Judgment by written confession of the above named defendants, in favor of the above named plaintiff, for eighty-eight dollars and eighteen cents damages and costs of suit." Held, that the judgment did not show, and was not prima facie evidence, that the justice had jurisdiction of either the persons of the defendants, or of the subject-matter of the suit, and that it was therefore void.—Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. 19.

¶ 615. Where two persons confessed judgment, and the judgment entry recited that "the parties appeared," it was held that this phrase purports that the creditor, as well as the debtors, was present and participated in the proceedings.—Kinyon v. Fowler, 10 Mich. 16.

¶ 616. A justice's judgment rendered on a confession in writing, signed by the defendant in due form, is valid though the justice's docket does not affirmatively show that no process was issued. A confession that is sufficient without process, and where the defendant appears voluntarily, is certainly good with it.—Hollister v. Giddings, 24 Mich. 501.

¶ 617. Where a judgment by confession in an attachment suit is entered by the justice in a different docket from that in which the attachment suit is entered, and the docket entries are connected in the two dockets as the proceedings in the attachment suit, they are sufficient to establish that the judgment entered was one in the attachment suit.—Hahn v. Seifert, 64 Mich. 647.

§ 146. ——Certainty, construction and interpretation.

Construction and conclusiveness of return of service of process, see ante § 40.

Reference to files in the case to supply jurisdictional recitals, see ante ¶ 594.

Construction of entry that "the parties appeared," see ante ¶ 615.

Justice's signature construed as applying to both the entry of judgment and stay of execution, see post ¶ 711.

Amendment of return on appeal to show against whom judgment was rendered, see post ¶ 856.

Docket entry merely the evidence of the judgment, see post § 148.

Construction of record of justice when removed to supreme court on error to circuit, see Appeal § 339.

¶ 618. The justice's docket is entitled to a fair and reasonable interpretation.—Mudge v. Yaples, 58 Mich. 307.

¶ 619. The records of proceedings before a justice are only required to be certain to a common intent.—Shaw v. Moser, 3 Mich. 71.

¶ 620. A justice's judgment, though not technically a record, has all the effect of a record, and the docket entry thereof should be as explicit and certain as to all matters of substance as a judgment in a court of record.—Howard v. People, 3 Mich. 207.

¶ 621. The docket of a justice stated that a cause was called and judgment rendered "on the return of process." Held to mean on the return day of process, and not the time of its actual return.—Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205.

¶ 622. A statement in the docket that judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff—there being only one defendant—sufficiently shows that judgment was rendered against defendant.—Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205.

¶ 623. The docket entry of a justice showed that, on default of appearance by the defendants in a suit against the maker and indorser of a note, he proceeded to hear the cause on a return of service of summons on the within named defendant, and entered judgment as follows: "And after considering the evidence judgment is this day rendered for $300 damages and $3 costs." Held, that this judgment was indefinite and void on its face.—Sherman v. Palmer, 37 Mich. 509.

¶ 624. Where the entries in a justice's docket show that a case was held open from 9 o'clock a. m. of August 2 until the same hour of the following day, and all of the after-proceedings are continuous, and appear by the docket to have occurred on the same day, and all appear above the date of August 3 at the foot of the docket, the docket speaks for itself, and shows that a marginal entry of August 2, opposite said latter entries, is a clerical error.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13.

¶ 625. Where, in a suit in justice's court, defendant, a corporation, was correctly named in the summons as "The Sands & Maxwell Lumber Company," and plaintiff declared orally "against the defendant, a corporation doing business under the name of the 'Pentwater Lumber Company,'" and, in default of defendant's appearance,—the summons having been personally served,—a judgment was rendered against it in its corporate name, the record will be given such construction as will support the judgment, by construing the language in the declaration as stating that the defendant was doing business under the name of the Pentwater Lumber Company.—Bole v. Sands & Maxwell Lumber Co., 77 Mich. 239.

¶ 626. A justice's docket record must disclose jurisdiction and show everything which the statute requires to be entered upon it; but it must also be construed fairly and reasonably, and in view of the fact that the justice is not presumed to be a legal expert. Reasonable certainty, or perhaps "certainty to a common intent," is all that is necessary.—Vroman v. Thompson, 51 Mich. 452.

¶ 627. A docket entry which states that defendants acknowledged their indebtedness, will support the inference that both defendants were present during the proceedings, although only one is mentioned as present at the time the case was called.—O'Donnell v. Wade, 151 Mich. 103.

¶ 628. An entry on a justice's docket which begins "1899, May 23rd, 10 o'clock A. M.," and goes on to state that the case was called and plaintiff and defendant were present in person, implies their presence at 10 o'clock.—O'Donnell v. Wade, 151 Mich. 103.

§ 147. Modification and amendment of judgment or entry.

See also ante ¶ 551.

Amendment by circuit court on appeal, see post § 203.

Relief by bill in equity against justices' judgments, see Judgments, VI.

¶ 629. A justice cannot amend a judgment by substituting another name for that of the defendant, even by consent of the plaintiff and the person whose name is to be substituted.—Foster v. Alden, 21 Mich. 507.

¶ 630. Where a justice enters judgment as against Peter Mayo in a suit begun by process against Peter Mayhue, it is competent to amend the error by following the summons.—Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 Mich. 196.

¶ 631. Justices' courts are courts of limited jurisdiction, having no stated terms, and when a case has been tried and the record thereof entered upon the justice's docket, his control over it has ended, except to issue execution.—King v. Bates, 80 Mich. 367.

¶ 632. A justice cannot change his docket for the purpose of taking away or conferring jurisdiction.—Toliver v. Brownell, 94 Mich. 577.

¶ 633. A justice cannot amend his docket after he has once made it up and officially signed it. Accordingly it is not possible to sustain a judgment on a material entry made later.—Kluck v. Murphy, 115 Mich. 128.

¶ 634. Whether, after the allowance of a writ of certiorari, a justice of the peace can, on motion, change the entry on his docket so as to make it show the true date of a return of service of an attachment, or permit an officer who has omitted to date his return to affix the correct date, quære.—Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 Mich. 395.

Effect of judgment against joint parties upon service upon one, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 14277.

¶ 636. The statute requiring a justice of the peace to keep a docket and to enter therein the judgments rendered by him is directory only, and the entry when made is not the judgment itself, but only the evidence of it.—Hickey v. Hinsdale, 8 Mich. 267.

¶ 637. A docket which contains the requisite entries is prima facie evidence of a valid judgment.—O'Donnell v. Wade, 151 Mich. 103.

¶ 638. The docket of a justice of the peace, verified by his own oath, is competent evidence of the facts stated therein, but a docket entry in an attachment suit is not sufficient to prove a valid judgment in the absence of any proof of the affidavit upon which the writ issued and which is essential to the jurisdiction to issue the writ at all.—Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 Mich. 39.

¶ 639. A recital in the docket of a justice of the peace on discontinuing an action that the matters in issue have been settled is not evidence of such a settlement, as the statute does not require such an entry to be made.—Shank v. Woodworth, 111 Mich. 642.

¶ 640. In an action against a justice for false arrest his own entries are not conclusive and exclusive in his own favor on the legality of the arrest.—Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 Mich. 144.

§ 149. ——Verity of docket; evidence to contradict, vary or explain.

Evidence to contradict recital as to consent to adjournment, see post ¶ 672.
Evidence to vary, explain or contradict justice's docket, see also Judgments § 117 et seq.
Mode of proving judgments, see Evidence § 546.
Best evidence of judgment, docket or files, see Evidence § 122.
Secondary evidence of record, docket and files, see Evidence, IV, B.

¶ 641. It seems that when a justice's docket shows jurisdiction no proof can be given to contradict its recitals as to the proceedings.—Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

¶ 642. Want of jurisdiction either over the person or the subject-matter may be shown by evidence, even when it tends to contradict the minutes or docket.—Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

¶ 643. Parol evidence is not admissible to prove that the letters P. and D. in the docket entry meant plaintiff and defendant.—Rood v. Bloomfield School Dist. No. 7, 1 D. 502.

¶ 644. The recital on the docket of a justice that parties appeared and pleaded, held conclusive.—Facey v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 527.

¶ 645. Oral evidence is inadmissible to vary or explain a justice's docket so as to give him jurisdiction that does not appear on its face.—Mudge v. Yaples, 58 Mich. 307.

¶ 646. A justice's jurisdiction to proceed as in case of personal service is not established by his docket entry, to the exclusion of proof that service was not personal, when the return does not show that it was.—Smalley v. Lighthall, 37 Mich. 348.

¶ 647. The docket entry as to the date of a judgment cannot be contradicted by the justice's return to a certiorari showing that judgment was really rendered on the day before the date named in the docket.—Weaver v. Lammon, 62 Mich. 366.

¶ 648. A judgment entry in the principal case which is regular upon its face, and recites the necessary facts to give the justice jurisdiction over the persons of the principal defendants and the subject-matter of the suit, cannot be attacked by proof that the principal defendants never appeared, and never consented to an adjournment.—Whitworth v. Pelton, 81 Mich. 98.

¶ 649. Where the docket entries returned by a justice of the peace on a special appeal show jurisdiction to render the judgment, his return to the matter set up in the affidavit for such appeal cannot be taken to impeach the docket itself.—Hodges v. Bagg, 81 Mich. 243.

¶ 650. Where the docket of a justice of the peace showed that a summons was returnable on September 8, and returned personally served on September 1, and that the judgment was rendered October 8, but failed to show any adjournment, and the several dates were entered upon the left-hand margin of the docket, and ditto (") marks appeared under the abbreviation "Sept." over which marks the abbreviation "Oct." had been written as the date of the judgment entry, it was competent for the justice of the peace to explain the appearance of the entries and to testify that the judgment was in fact entered on September 8, and the writing of "Oct." was a mistake.—Damm v. Gow, 88 Mich. 99.

¶ 651. A justice's docket showed that judgment was entered on a day in which, as his return to a certiorari stated, he was out of the state. Held, that the judgment was invalid, it not being competent for the justice to show in his return that the docket entry was erroneous, and that judgment was rendered on another day when he had jurisdiction.—Tolliver v. Brownell, 94 Mich. 577.

¶ 652. A justice's docket entries showing that judgment was rendered before issue of the summons cannot be contradicted, so as to validate the judgment, either by his return to a certiorari, or by parol evidence.—Holmes v. Cole, 95 Mich. 272.

¶ 653. A justice's jurisdiction must appear upon the face of his proceedings, and cannot be made to depend upon his statement, in his return to a certiorari, of knowledge he may have outside of the papers and the evidence; e. g., that an attaching officer served a copy of an inventory.—Davison v. Davison, 99 Mich. 625.

¶ 654. An entry upon the docket of the justice that parties appeared and consented to adjournment without pleading, being facts occurring in his presence, cannot be contradicted in an action upon the judgment rendered in the case.—Waldron v. Palmer, 104 Mich. 556.

§ 150. Collateral attack on judgment.

Conclusiveness of docket entries, see ante §§ 148, 149.

Collateral attack of judgment docketed in circuit court, see post § 183.
Presumptions upon collateral attack, see post § 156.
General law as to collateral attack, see Judgments, VII.

¶ 655. To review the validity of a justice's judgment on certiorari sued out to review the action of a circuit court in denying a motion to vacate a judgment docketed there on a transcript, filed in the circuit, from the justice's judgment, would be to assail the latter collaterally, and it is not allowable.—Mayhew v. Snell, 33 Mich. 182.

¶ 656. Where a justice's execution is relied on by an officer sued in replevin, plaintiff may show that there was no service of process and that the attorney appeared without authority.—Hunt v. Strew, 33 Mich. 85.

¶ 657. Objections to the judgment of a justice's court, that there was an unauthorized adjournment, that no security for costs was given by a foreign corporation plaintiff, and that no notice was given of the issuance of a commission to take a deposition, all relate to irregularities in proceedings after jurisdiction obtained and to the subject-matter of the suit and cannot be raised on a motion in the circuit court to vacate the judgment and set aside a levy made under execution.—American Copying Co. v. Stern, 148 Mich. 281.

¶ 658. It is not ground for collateral attack upon a justice's judgment that the docket does not show that the note, whereon the judgment appears to have been rendered, was negotiable, or to whom it was payable.—Van Kleek v. Eggleston, 7 Mich. 511.

¶ 660. A justice's judgment is not subject to collateral attack by an extraneous showing that the parties did not either of them live in a township adjoining the residence of the justice.—Cole v. Potter, 135 Mich. 326.

§ 151. ——Defects in notice, process or appearance.

Authority of attorney to appear, see ante § 46.
Objections to process and service and waiver thereof, see ante § 50.
Invalidity of personal judgment in attachment where jurisdiction over person not obtained, see ante § 66.

Docket showing as to appearance, see ante § 142.
Defects and irregularities in execution, see also post § 174.

¶ 661. A justice's judgment is not subject to collateral impeachment because the summons was served by a constable, it being in his own favor.—Parmalee v. Loomis, 24 Mich. 242.

¶ 662. Where, in an action before a justice on a joint note, summons was returned as served on only one of the makers, the other not being found, and judgment was rendered against this one only, this fact does not go to the jurisdiction of the justice, and is no ground for collaterally attacking the judgment while it remains unreversed, although the error is one for which it might be reversed on certiorari.—Allen v. Mills, 26 Mich. 123.

¶ 663. A judgment entry that is regular on its face, and that recites the facts necessary to give the justice jurisdiction over parties and subject-matter, cannot in an ancillary suit of garnishment be attacked by proof that the principal defendants never appeared and never consented to an adjournment.—Whitworth v. Pelton, 81 Mich. 98.

fendant did not appear.—Reed v. Gage, 33 Mich. 179; Mayhew v. Snell, 33 Mich. 182.

¶ 665. A justice's judgment is not open to collateral attack upon the ground of failure to make proof of the authority of plaintiff's attorney to appear, as required by How. St., § 6870, where the defendant does not appear. —Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

¶ 666. Showing of authority of plaintiff's attorney to appear will not on collateral attack be presumed not to have been made merely because not entered on docket.—Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

¶ 667. A justice's judgment cannot be attacked collaterally for want of a showing from his docket that the plaintiff's attorney had authority to appear.—Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

§ 152. ——Failure to wait an hour for appearance.

Necessity of waiting an hour for appearance, see ante § 49.

¶ 668. The justice's failure to wait an hour for defendant is at most error, and is not such a jurisdictional defect as is open to collateral attack.—Smith v. Brown, 34 Mich. 455.

¶ 669. A justice's judgment cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the docket entry does not show affirmatively that the justice, on the adjourned day of the cause, waited one hour for defendant to appear; the defect is not jurisdictional.—Talbot v. Kuhn, 89 Mich. 30; Chaddock v. Barry, 93 Mich. 542.

¶ 670. Where due service of attachments in nineteen log-lien suits against the same debtor and logs was made upon the debtor, who appeared at the return-hour,—which was the same in each case,—and joined issue in each suit, and the log-owner did not appear, although duly served with notice of such attachments, the failure of the justice to wait one hour after the return-hour before proceeding in said suits will not invalidate the judgments rendered therein, in a replevin suit by the log-owner against the sheriff who had levied upon the logs under executions issued on said judgments.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

§ 153. ——Objections in respect to continuances and adjournments.

Practice as to continuances and adjournments in justice's courts, see ante IV, E.

Validity of default judgment rendered after improper adjournment, see also ante ¶ 566.

Docket recitals as to continuances and adjournments, see ante § 143.

¶ 671. It is no objection to the judgment of a justice that he had adjourned the cause upon the written stipulation of counsel, without the presence of the parties.—Parmalee v. Loomis, 24 Mich. 242.

¶ 672. Where the transcript of the docket of a justice shows that his postponement of the decision of a case beyond the statutory period of ten days (Act No. 475, Local Acts 1903, as amended by Act No. 660, Local Acts 1907) was made with the consent of both parties, such transcript cannot be collaterally attacked to show that one party did not consent.—Troy v. Rodgers, 162 Mich. 28.

Construction of docket entries as to judgment, see ante § 146.

¶ 673. The judgment to be rendered in justice's court on a joint debt when only one defendant is served is prescribed by statute, and the use of the word "defendant" instead of "defendants" in entering judgment is a mere clerical misprision, and leaves the judgment, if not taken up for review, valid as against the defendant who was served.—Zimmer v. Davis, 35 Mich. 39; Holcomb v. Tift, 54 Mich. 647.

¶ 674. Rendering judgment for the amount of a mechanic's lien and holding the owner personally liable will not destroy a justice's jurisdiction of a suit for wages; nor is the judgment void or open to collateral attack, but it must stand unless reversed.—Smith v. Pearce, 52 Mich. 370.

¶ 675. Where a mechanic, suing for his wages, makes the owner of a building on which he works a joint defendant with the contractor who hired him, and sues them in an appropriate form of action before a justice of the peace, the justice has jurisdiction to try the issue; and though he cannot enforce a mechanic's lien, an error in rendering judgment therefor, or in holding the owner personally liable, will not destroy his jurisdiction or make his judgment void and open to attack in a collateral action; and unless reversed on appeal or certiorari it must stand. —Smith v. Pearce, 52 Mich. 370.

Practice as to costs and taxation thereof, see post § 159 et seq.

Failure to give security for costs, see ante ¶ 657.

¶ 676. The question whether a justice of the peace acted outside his jurisdiction in assessing double costs against a public officer in an action of replevin should be raised, if at all, upon the taxation of costs in that suit and cannot be raised collaterally in an action on the replevin bond.—Peterson v. Harrington, 197 Mich. 611.

Nature of justice's jurisdiction and construction of powers conferred, see ante § 10.
Selection of private person to serve summons, see ante ¶ 149.
Presumptions as to return of service in attachment, see ante § 60.
As to proof of authority of attorney to appear, see also ante ¶ 666.

Presumptions in respect to execution, see also post ¶¶ 727, 731.
Presumptions upon appeal to circuit court, see post § 233.
Presumptions on certiorari, see post § 268.

¶ 677. When a justice's docket entries comply with the statute, the ordinary presumption in favor of the correctness of official action must support the proceedings.—Peck v. Cavell, 16 Mich. 9.

§ 157. Payment, satisfaction or discharge of judgment.

Liability of justice for money received in payment of judgment, see ante §§ 8, 9.
Execution upon judgment, see post IV, H.
General law as to payment, see Payment.
Payment, satisfaction or discharge of judgments in general, see Judgments, XI.

¶ 678. In the absence of special instructions a justice of the peace can receive nothing but current money of the United States in satisfaction of a judgment on his docket.—Heald v. Bennett, 1 D. 513; Welch v. Frost, 1 Mich. 30.

¶ 679. A judgment recovered before one justice can be ascertained and applied by another in satisfaction of a counterclaim recovered before him by the other party.—McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 Mich. 215.

¶¶ 680, 681. Money paid to a justice to be applied upon a judgment in garnishment cannot be used to satisfy a different judgment against the same party, even though the time had expired during which the fund could be bound by the proceedings in garnishment.—McDonald v. Lewis, 42 Mich. 135.

§ 158. ——Entry of payment or discharge.

Requisites and sufficiency of docket entries, see ante § 140 et seq.

¶ 682. A justice entered across a judgment on his docket that it was paid, stating the day, and signed the entry in his official capacity. Held, that such entry was prima facie evidence that the judgment was satisfied, and that this evidence was not rebutted by proof, unaccompanied by any explanatory testimony, of another entry immediately below the former, on the same docket, without date, and signed by the justice in his individual capacity, stating in effect that the judgment had not been paid, according to the import of the former entry.—Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199.

¶ 683. The entry of the words "Judgment discharged," written by a justice across the face of a judgment, is no more conclusive than a receipt; it is only prima facie evidence of payment and can be shown to be incorrect.—Dane v. Holmes, 41 Mich. 661.

¶ 685. If a defendant in justice's court does not use a claim as set-off when he has an opportunity to do so, Comp. L. 1871, § 5324, How. St. § 6889, denies him costs in a subsequent independent suit.—Morehouse v. Baker, 48 Mich. 335.

¶ 686. Where a justice dismisses a cause upon defendant's showing that he was served with summons more than twelve days before the return-day, judgment for costs is properly entered for defendant under How. St., § 6940.—Lane v. Jones, 94 Mich. 540.

§ 160. Amounts and items.

Remitting part of costs, see post § 163.
Appealability of judgment for costs, see post ¶ 784.

¶ 687. The provisions as to taxable costs in justices' courts were meant merely to prevent the accumulation of needless costs, and to limit the party as to such as are within his control.—Overpack v. Ruggles, 27 Mich. 65.

¶ 688. Comp. L. 1897, § 838, providing that the entire costs of suit allowable in justice court shall not exceed ten dollars, had no application to special proceedings under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10756-10770, providing a lien on logs, shingles, etc., and regulating costs in such proceedings.—Lagoo v. Seaman, 136 Mich. 418.

Fees of jurors as costs, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 14398.

¶ 689. Jury fees, court fees and officers' fees for serving process other than subpoenas are taxable as costs.—Overpack v. Ruggles, 27 Mich. 65.

¶ 690. Jury fees are not included in the fixed sum to which the prevailing party's costs are limited by Comp. L. 1871, § 5375, How. St., § 6940.—Overpack v. Ruggles, 27 Mich. 65; McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 Mich. 426.

¶ 691. Under How. St., § 7046, providing that no judgment of a justice of the peace shall be reversed on account of any fees having been improperly allowed by the justice, a justice's judgment in proceedings to enforce a lien upon logs including an attorney's fee is valid.—Backus v. Barber, 107 Mich. 468.

§ 162. Determination of right and taxation of costs.

Errors in taxation of costs as ground for collateral attack, see ante § 155.
Affidavit for appeal from judgment of costs, see post § 196.
Amendment of judgment on appeal from taxation of costs, see post ¶ 857.
Improper allowance of fees and costs as ground for reversal on certiorari, see post ¶ 1220.

¶ 692. A justice of the peace acts judicially in determining the amount of costs to be taxed in favor of the prevailing party in a suit tried before him; but has a reasonable time after judgment to investigate and tax the items.—Saunders v. Tioga Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 520.

¶ 693. Where a justice had entered judgment in his minutes, leaving a blank for the costs, which were not entered for four days afterward, it was held that the judgment was valid as to the damages; and as to costs, that on good cause shown or by consent, and by making due announcement on the day of the trial, the justice might hold the court open even for four days to hear evidence as to the different items of costs, the determination of which would relate back and take effect as of the date of the judgment.—Saunders v. Tioga Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 520.

¶ 694. Costs are not so inseparable from the damages as to invalidate, when excessive, a justice's judgment given therefor; and in such case, where the judgment debtor does not appeal, the party recovering judgment may rectify the error by remitting the costs and suing again upon the judgment for damages.—Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25.

§ 164. Security for costs.

Payment of costs and fees as condition to removal to circuit to try title, see ante § 30 and ¶ 102.
Costs covered by replevin bond, see ante § 85.
Failure to file security for costs as ground for compulsory nonsuit see ante ¶ 510.
Failure to give security for costs as ground for attacking judgment, see ante ¶ 657.
Appealability of judgment of dismissal for failure to file security for costs, see post ¶ 779.

Ruling on motion for security for costs questioned for first time on appeal, see post § 206.
Showing in return to certiorari as to security for costs, see post ¶ 1116.
Presumptions on certiorari, see post ¶ 1182.
Estoppel to rely on cost bond after reversing for insufficiency of it, see also Estoppel ¶ 178.
Provisions as to security for costs, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVII, §§ 1, 2; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14178, 14179.
Bond for costs upon transfer to circuit court to try issue of title, see Jud. Act, chap. LXIX, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 14284.
Power of circuit court to require security for costs, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 14417.

¶ 696. The neglect of a nonresident plaintiff in justice's court to file security for costs before process issues does not exclude the justice's jurisdiction, but such security may be allowed to be given nunc pro tunc at any time before a motion to set aside process for want of it is granted.—Parks v. Goodwin, 1 D. 56.

¶ 697. Where security for costs was filed by a nonresident plaintiff in justice's court upon the return day of the summons, there was no error in overruling a motion to dismiss for failure to file it before process issued.—Gray v. Willcox, 56 Mich. 58.

¶ 698. How. St., § 7717e, which provides that, in any suit to recover for the personal labor of the plaintiff, security for costs "shall not be ordered" if the plaintiff shall make and file an affidavit that he has a meritorious cause of action and is unable to give such security, does not apply to a plaintiff in justice's court who is a nonresident of the county, and as such is required by How. St., § 6824, to give security for costs before the issue of process.—Osowicki v. Ferrick, 106 Mich. 41.

¶ 699. In an action in the justice's court the failure of a nonresident to give security for costs is waived by pleading to the merits and going to trial thereon.—Lacomb v. Godkin, 143 Mich. 198.

¶ 700. A judgment of a justice of the peace will not be reversed because the plaintiffs, who were nonresidents, did not file the security for costs until after the return day when in fact it was then filed.—Charles Bakrow & Co. v. Totten, 146 Mich. 57.

H. EXECUTIONS AND TRANSCRIPT OF JUDGMENT.

Capias ad satisfaciendum on justices' judgments, see Civil Arrest, III.

§ 165. In general; right to and issuance of writ.

Liability of justice for wrongful issuance of execution, see ante §§ 8, 9.
Payment, satisfaction and discharge of judgment, see ante § 157.
Alias writs, see post § 168.
Right to issue and file transcript before time when execution issuable, see post § 181; ¶¶ 744, 745.
Presumption that execution issued at time judgment was rendered, see post ¶ 731.
Issuance and return of execution as prerequisite to suit on appeal bond, see post ¶ 1072.
Provisions as to executions on justices' judgments, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXII, §§ 1-36; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14288-14323.

¶ 701. Upon an application to a justice for issue of immediate execution, R. S. 1846, chap. 93, §§ 112, 113 (How. St., §§ 6961, 6962) he should require proof of facts and circumstances tending to show danger of losing the debt, unless, etc., and this evidence must be such as to satisfy him.—Rash v. Whitney, 4 Mich. 495.

¶ 702. Proof merely that the applicant believes he will be in danger is not sufficient to warrant the issuance of execution.—Rash v. Whitney, 4 Mich. 495.

§ 166. ——Execution upon verdict.

¶ 703. The verdict of a jury in justice's court is equivalent to judgment and will support issue of execution.—Gaines v. Betts, 2 D. 98; Overall v. Pero, 7 Mich. 315.

§ 167. Contents and sufficiency of writ.

¶ 704. The omission in a justice's execution of the year in which the judgment was rendered will not vitiate the execution, it being in all other respects regular.—Perkins v. Spaulding, 2 Mich. 157.

¶ 705. The omission from a justice's execution of the name of the county or of any township or city does not invalidate it, at least where the defendant does not complain of it; and as against a stranger resisting the claims of the execution purchaser the defect may be cured and the judgment identified by parol evidence.—Elliott v. Hart, 45 Mich. 234.

§ 168. Alias or renewed writs.

¶ 706. Under How. St., § 6975, a justice of the peace has no authority to issue a second execution until the first writ has been returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part.—Fryer v. McNaughton, 110 Mich. 22.

¶ 707. R. S. 1838, p. 395, authorized the renewal of a justice's execution returned unsatisfied. The Justices' Act of 1841 did not authorize such renewals, but repealed the former law, with this proviso: "The repeal shall not effect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or established, or any suit or proceeding commenced, in any civil case," etc. Held, that an execution issued before the repeal could not be renewed afterwards.—Jackson v. Sheldon, 2 D. 154.

¶ 708. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 5410, How. St., § 6975, an execution on a justice's judgment may, after being returned unsatisfied, be renewed at any time when a new one could be legally issued, and the renewed writ would have the same force as a new writ for sixty days after the renewal.—Bigalow v. Barre, 30 Mich. 1.

¶ 709. A justice's judgment is barred in six years by Comp. L. 1857, § 5361, How. St., § 8713, and execution cannot thereafter issue on a statutory proceeding to renew an execution.—Jerome v. Williams, 13 Mich. 521.

§ 169. Stay and security for stay.

Stay of execution prevented by filing transcript, see post ¶ 767.
Right to appeal after stay of execution, see post § 187.
Issuance of execution where proceedings for appeal undertaken but return fees not paid, see post ¶ 861.
Operation of appeal as stay, see post § 208.
General law as to stay of proceedings, see Stay of Proceedings.
Liability of client for act of attorney in issuing execution after appeal taken, see also Executions ¶ 322.
Operation of certiorari to effect stay, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 14430.

¶ 710. Stay of execution cannot be entered with justice of the peace after transcript of judgment has been filed in the circuit court under How. St. § 6949.—Hitchcock v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 96 Mich. 297.

¶ 711. Where the entry of a judgment on a justice's docket was followed immediately by entry of a stay of execution in the same case, each separately dated as of the same day, with the justice's signature below the latter, it was held a sufficient signing for both.—Hollister v. Giddings, 24 Mich. 501.

¶ 713. A security to stay a justice's execution need not follow precisely the form given in Comp. L. 1857, § 3804, How. St., § 6965, but is sufficient if in substance the same, and omitting nothing that the statute makes a requisite.—Cox v. Crippen, 13 Mich. 502.

¶ 714. The undertaking of one who becomes surety for stay of execution is in the nature of a confession of judgment; and to render it obligatory upon the surety it must be executed in the presence of the justice and be witnessed by him. The approval of the stay entered by the justice in his docket, but not showing his presence when the stay was entered into, cannot be regarded as an attestation.—Cox v. Crippen, 13 Mich. 502.

¶ 715. A stay of execution having been taken by a justice for six months, where the statute only authorized it to be taken for three, it was held that an execution issued thereon against the surety after the expiration of the six months was void.—Shadbolt v. Bronson, 1 Mich. 85.

¶ 716. One became surety for stay of execution upon a justice's judgment. Executions were issued upon the judgment and returned unsatisfied. Some years afterwards a transcript of the judgment was filed in the office of the county clerk. More than four years after the filing of the transcript, and when more than six years had intervened since the return of the last execution on the stay, the original stay was filed in the office of the county clerk, and the circuit court, on the application of the judgment creditor, ordered a new execution against both the judgment debtor and the surety. Held, that as to the surety the order was erroneous.—Jerome v. Williams, 13 Mich. 521.

§ 170. Levy of execution and release or abandonment of same.

¶ 717. Whether Comp. L. 1871, § 5507, How. St., § 7074, authorizing the justice, on plaintiff's request, to empower a person to serve process can apply to executions, quære.—Harvey v. McAdams, 32 Mich. 472.

¶ 718. A constable levied upon wheat on the ground, on the farm of C., in the township of Dover, which farm was then occupied by the defendant in the execution, and made a correct indorsement of the levy on the execution, except that by mistake the name of the township was stated as Madison. The mistake was held not to vitiate the levy.—Perkins v. Spaulding, 2 Mich. 157.

¶ 719. Where a constable levies a justice's execution upon mortgaged property he must levy on the whole and sell it in one parcel subject to the mortgage; and if he does not find it all together, he must have time after levying on part to find and levy on the remainder, if within his bailiwick.—Baldwin v. Talbot, 46 Mich. 19.

¶ 720 A levy under execution which is within How. St., § 7685, forbidding the sale on execution of a growing crop until it ripens, and extending the life of the execution until such time, is not abandoned by the mere delivery of the writ, indorsed with the levy by the officer, to the justice who issued it, and by the issue of a second execution; especially where the acts attending the issue of the second writ show an intention to retain the benefits of the original levy.—Friyer v. McNaughton, 110 Mich. 22.

¶ 721. Where a constable has levied execution under a justice's judgment, the rights acquired by the levy are not lost by his delay in advertising the sale of the property taken, if requested not to do so by a mortgagee who intends to replevy it, or by some one authorized to represent the mortgagee.—Baldwin v. Talbot, 46 Mich. 19.

¶ 722. A constable's notice of sale need not state whose property it is that is advertised, nor who is the defendant in the execution.—Perkins v. Spaulding, 2 Mich. 157.

¶ 723. Semble, that How. St., § 6980, requiring a constable's notice of an execution sale to contain the names of the parties to the suit, is directory merely, and that an omission to comply with it does not render the sale void.—Ganong v. Green, 64 Mich. 488.

¶ 724. A house erected upon the land by one who holds under a contract of purchase cannot, being part of the realty, be sold at constable's sale under execution from a justice's court.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

§ 172. Return on execution.

Return of justice's process generally, see ante § 89.

Alias writs upon return of original unsatisfied, see ante § 168.

Return of execution unsatisfied as prerequisite to transcript, see post ¶¶ 744, 745.

¶ 725. Where a constable's return on execution shows that property was sold for a certain amount, it must be inferred therefrom that the sale was completed, and that the title of the judgment debtor levied upon was transferred by him to the purchaser.—Munger v. Sanford, 144 Mich. 323.

¶ 726. A constable's return on an execution that the property was sold for a named amount means either that the property was turned over or that the amount bid was paid, in either case the constable is bound to account for the sum.—Munger v. Sanford, 144 Mich. 323.

§ 173. Docket entries as to execution.

Justice's docket entries generally, see ante §§ 139-146.

¶ 727. It is not necessary that a justice's docket should show that an execution was issued at the request of a plaintiff, as that is always to be presumed.—Peck v. Cavell, 16 Mich. 9.

¶ 728. It is not necessary that the evidence required upon application for execution be set out in the docket. A mere statement of the result of the evidence will suffice.—Rash v. Whitney, 4 Mich. 495.

¶ 729. The failure of a justice of the peace to note on his docket the time of issuing an execution, and to whom delivered, or the fact that it was issued, as provided in How. St., § 7053, subds. 12, 13, will not necessarily vitiate an execution actually and properly issued by the justice, and delivered to the sheriff.—Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104.

Liability of justice for wrongful issuance of execution, see ante § 8.

¶ 730. It seems that the justice's error in issuing execution upon insufficient evidence would not render it void, but only voidable; and whether such execution could be collaterally attacked, quære.—Rash v. Whitney, 4 Mich. 495.

¶ 731. Where the docket showed judgment rendered and execution issued on the same day, it was held that it must be presumed that execution was awarded at the same time that judgment was rendered, in which case no notice was required by R. S. 1846, chap. 93, § 113 (How. St., § 6962).—Rash v. Whitney, 4 Mich. 495.

¶ 732. A mortgagee who at the time of an execution sale objects thereto on the ground of his mortgage cannot, in trover against the purchaser, raise the objection that the constable's notice of sale did not contain the names of the parties.—Ganong v. Green, 64 Mich. 488.

§ 175. Transcripts of judgments in general.

Issuance and return of execution as prerequisite to transcript, see post ¶¶ 744, 745.

Right to appeal to circuit court after taking transcript there, see post § 187.

Record of judgment on appeal, see post § 201.

Reviewableness of entry of transcript or refusal to vacate same, see Appeal ¶ 85.

Intervention by creditor in corporate dissolution on justice's judgment without transcript to circuit court, see Corporation ¶ 945.

Provisions as to transcript, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI, §§ 10-16; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14281-14287.

¶ 733. All the proceedings relating to transcripts are statutory, and the statute must be strictly followed.—Jewett v. Bennett, 3 Mich. 198; O'Brien v. O'Brien, 42 Mich. 15; Doty v. Dexter, 61 Mich. 348.

§ 176. ——Affidavit or execution and other prerequisites.

Want of signature to affidavit for transcript as ground for collateral attack, see post ¶ 770.

¶ 734. The affidavit required to be filed with a justice of the peace to obtain a transcript of a judgment may be made by any duly authorized attorney who may swear to his authority in said affidavit.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 735. An affidavit by "the attorney of the plaintiff" for a transcript of a judgment recovered by "Thomas Bortz for James B. Bortz" means that affiant is the attorney of Thomas Bortz, who is the plaintiff of record.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 736. The affidavit required by Comp. L. 1871 § 5383, How. St., § 6947, of insufficiency of goods and chattels need not state the amount due upon the judgment; but it may do so.—Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 338.

¶ 737. The affiant's signature to the affidavit of insufficiency of goods, etc., is not necessary to its validity, if it is actually sworn to.—Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 Mich. 196.

¶ 738. The affidavit for a transcript is jurisdictional, and it cannot be made by the administrator of the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered; nor can it be made by the attorney who obtained the judgment, for his authority was revoked by his client's death.—Doty v. Dexter, 61 Mich. 348.

¶ 739. It is immaterial that the middle initials of parties' names in a transcript of judgment and affidavit therefor vary.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 740. An affidavit for a transcript of a justice's judgment filed under How. St., § 6947, is insufficient where it identifies the judgment set forth in the transcript only by the title of the cause and court in which it was rendered and where it gives a different date of rendition and does not state the amount but merely what is "now due."—Denver v. Connolly, 92 Mich. 549.

¶ 741. A transcript judgment is not void because the attorney making the affidavit stated that the judgment was rendered in favor of "deponent" instead of "plaintiff," where this was clearly a clerical error, the affidavit being properly entitled so as to show who the plaintiff was and in whose favor the judgment must have been rendered.—Frolich v. Mitchell, 132 Mich. 432.

¶ 742. Judgment in justice's court was in favor of plaintiffs, copartners. The affidavit in a transcript of the judgment taken to the circuit court was made by one of the two plaintiffs in whose favor judgment was rendered. Held, that the omission to state that the judgment was in favor of both plaintiffs was not misleading and not a fatal defect.—Hawkins v. Castenholz, 171 Mich. 85.

¶ 744. The issue and return unsatisfied of a justice's execution is not necessary before taking out a transcript.—Udell v. Kahn, 31 Mich. 195.

¶ 745. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 845, a transcript of a judgment in a justice's court may be taken to the circuit court without having an execution issued in the justice's court.—Shepard v. Schrutt, 163 Mich. 485.

¶ 746. If the transcript is a correct copy from the docket entries it will be sufficient.—Udell v. Kahn, 31 Mich. 195.

¶ 747. In making out the transcript the justice corrected the docket entry of the judgment so as to follow the summons, which ran against Peter Mayhue, instead of Peter Mayo, as the judgment entry had it. Held, that the transcript was good, there being no question of identity.—Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 Mich. 196.

§ 178. ——Signing and certifying.

Certification of judgment transcripts for evidence, see Evidence §§ 562, 563.

¶ 749. The transcript must be certified by the justice.—Peck v. Cavell, 16 Mich. 9.

¶ 750. Where a transcript was authenticated by a certificate of the justice in this form, "I hereby certify that the above is a true transcript of the above judgment, and of the subsequent proceedings thereon," the certificate was insufficient to authorize the filing of the transcript and issuing execution thereon.—Jewett v. Bennett, 3 Mich. 198.

See also post ¶ 769.

¶ 751. The omission by the clerk of the circuit court to enter the transcript in a book will not avoid an execution where there are no intervening interests of third persons; and such entry may be rectified by proper steps so as to relate back to the filing.—Udell v. Kahn, 31 Mich. 195.

§ 180. ——Affidavit of amount due.

¶ 752. An affidavit of the amount due at the time of filing the transcript is necessary to authorize the clerk to enter and docket the judgment.—Peck v. Cavell, 16 Mich. 9; Monaghan v. McKimmie, 32 Mich. 40; Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622.

¶ 752a. The affidavit of the amount due is a necessary jurisdictional fact in order to give the clerk any authority to act in the matter.—Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 338.

¶ 753. Where the affidavit required by Comp. L. 1897, § 845, to entitle one to a transcript to the circuit court of a judgment in a justice's court, states the amount due and is promptly filed with the transcript in the clerk's office, it is not necessary to file the separate affidavit provided for in Comp. L. 1897, § 846.—Shepard v. Schrutt, 163 Mich. 485.

¶ 754. Where there was a delay of eight days in filing the transcript after the affidavit of insufficiency of goods, etc., was made, it was held that a statement therein of the amount due would not obviate the necessity of making a separate affidavit.—Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622.

¶ 755. An affidavit of amount due is good if filed without such delay as would give rise to a presumption that payment had been made since it was sworn to, and it is generally good if filed on the day after it was made.—Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 338.

¶ 756. Where eleven days intervene between the making of an affidavit for a transcript of a justice's judgment and the filing of such transcript with the county clerk, another affidavit of the amount due upon said judgment is necessary.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 757. An affidavit which states the amount due and unpaid upon the judgment, "exclusive of costs," to be a certain sum, not stating whether there were any costs, does not authorize the clerk to enter judgment for any costs, the presumption being that they were paid or waived.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 758. Where the affidavits required to be filed on the removal of a justice's judgment by transcript to the circuit court are defective, that court has no power to allow sufficient ones to be filed nunc pro tunc.—Berkery v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 160.

¶ 759. A transcript judgment is not void because the affidavit upon which it was based stated that the amount due was due to "deponent" who was the attorney for plaintiff, since the statute (Comp. L. 1897, § 846) does not require more than that the amount shall be stated and hence the statement that it was due to "deponent" may be disregarded.—Frolich v. Mitchell, 132 Mich. 432.

¶ 760. A transcript cannot be made and filed in the circuit court until the time when execution would be, under Comp. L. 1871, § 5395, issuable by the justice on the judgment; a transcript made before five days after rendition of judgment in a case where execution could not issue earlier is void.—O'Brien v. O'Brien, 42 Mich. 15; Vroman v. Thompson, 42 Mich. 145.

¶ 761. A transcript of a judgment in justice's court was filed in the county clerk's office January 15, 1908. The affidavit of amount due accompanying it was made January 13, 1908. Held, the filing was seasonable.—Shepard v. Schrutt, 163 Mich. 485.

Allowance of appeal after filing transcript, see post § 187.

Limitation of action on transcript judgment, see Limitations, II.

Invalidity of transcript as cloud upon sale at execution on the judgment, see Quieting Title, II.

Provisions as to executions on judgments transcribed and filed in circuit clerk's office, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12817.

Provisions as to effect of judgment entered upon transcript, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXI, §§ 12, 16; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14283, 14287.

¶ 762. A transcript properly certified and docketed renders the judgment a judgment of a court of record from the time of such filing and docketing; thus changing in some degree its nature, and very materially the rights, powers and liabilities of the parties to it.—Jewett v. Bennett, 3 Mich. 198.

¶ 763. A justice's judgment duly docketed in the circuit court has the same effect as a judgment rendered in that court, and is to be enforced, discharged, canceled, or affected by the statute of limitations in the same way.—Arnold v. Thompson, 19 Mich. 333.

¶ 763a. The ten years within which a justice's judgment docketed upon transcript in the circuit court remains in force run from the date when the justice rendered the judgment, not from the time when the transcript was filed.—Wilcox v. Lantz, 107 Mich. 1.

¶ 764. While for certain purposes a transcript of a justice's judgment has the effect of a circuit court judgment, it is not "a judgment rendered in a circuit court" within the meaning of the statute permitting garnishment to be based on a judgment so rendered.—Weimeister v. Singer, 44 Mich. 406.

¶ 765. The transcript of a justice's judgment, when properly filed in the circuit court, is, for certain purposes, given the force and effect of a judgment of that court.—Wedel v. Green, 70 Mich. 642.

¶ 768. Where the transcript of a justice's judgment filed in the circuit court fails to show, in a case where defendant did not appear, that there was any proper service of process, or whether plaintiff appeared and took judgment before or at the time the writ was returnable, it does not disclose that the justice had jurisdiction to render the judgment, and parol proof cannot supply the defect.—Wedel v. Green, 70 Mich. 642.

¶ 770. A judgment of a justice docketed in the circuit court is not collaterally assailable for want of a signature to the affidavit for a transcript of the judgment.—Mayhew v. Snell, 33 Mich. 182.

¶ 771. The question whether a transcript of the judgment of a justice of the peace filed in the circuit court was a true transcript, cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding.—Cole v. Potter, 135 Mich. 326.

¶ 772. The clerk of the circuit court in docketing a transcript of a judgment in a justice's court, followed the transcript instead of the affidavit, in making the entries of the amount due. The amount in the transcript corresponded with the amount due as set forth in the affidavit. Held, execution issued on such transcript was not rendered void by the clerk's action.—Shepard v. Schrutt, 163 Mich. 485.

§ 184. ——Vacating or striking from files.

¶ 773. Where pending a motion for a new trial, a transcript of a judgment in a justice's court has been taken under Comp. L. 1897, § 845, to the circuit court, and later an appeal from the judgment is then taken, an order may be made vacating the transcript.—Pattinson v. Flayer, 158 Mich. 56.

¶ 774. The fact that a notary who administered the oath in an affidavit for a transcript from a judgment in justice court to the circuit court was employed by the attorneys of record and conducted all the proceedings in justice court does not show that he was still interested in the case within the meaning of Comp. L. 1897, § 2640, so as to entitle the defendant to have the transcript stricken from the files.—Thomas E. Lynch Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 110.

V. APPEALS IN CIVIL CASES.

A. JURISDICTION, RIGHT AND GROUNDS OF APPEAL.

§ 185. In general; decisions reviewable.

Appeal or certiorari as appropriate remedy, see post § 251.

Decisions and proceedings reviewable by certiorari, see post § 252 et seq.

General law as to appeal and error, see Appeal.

Power of courts to make rules regulating appeals, see Courts, III.

Appeals in criminal cases, see Indictment § 662 et seq.

Appeal in fraudulent debtor proceedings, see also Civil Arrest § 36.

Provisions as to appeals from justices' courts, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, §§ 1-21; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14401-14421.

¶ 775. A judgment of nonsuit for failure to appear could not be appealed from under the statute of 1841, which authorized an appeal from any final judgment.—Bowne v. Johnson, 1 D. 185.

¶ 776. Where a justice refuses to proceed in a cause on the adjourned day, the refusal may be treated as a judgment of nonsuit, and an appeal will lie therefrom.—Pattridge, v. Lott, 15 Mich. 251.

¶ 777. Where, on motion, a justice dismisses a suit for want of jurisdiction, because of an alleged defect in the summons, it is equivalent to a judgment of nonsuit, and is appealable.—People ex rel. Comstock v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 30 Mich. 98.

¶ 778. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 902, providing that a plaintiff may appeal where a judgment of nonsuit has been rendered, voluntary nonsuits are excluded; and a nonsuit suffered by a plaintiff in justice court by his failure to prosecute is treated as voluntary and no appeal lies.—Schulte v. Kelly, 124 Mich. 330.

¶ 779. A judgment for nonsuit rendered in a justice's court on failure of plaintiff to file security for costs, as directed, is not appealable because voluntary.—Walmsley v. Bowman, 151 Mich. 553.

¶ 780. Appeal lies from the dismissal of a writ of replevin for defects in the affidavit; being in effect a judgment of nonsuit.—Stall v. Diamond, 37 Mich. 429.

¶ 781. Where a writ of replevin in justice's court is dismissed for defects in the affidavit, and defendant, waiving return, has an assessment for the value, he may appeal from the judgment thereon. On an assessment of damages in replevin there is always an issue between the parties, whether expressed in words or not.—Stall v. Diamond, 37 Mich. 429.

¶ 782. A judgment for damages and costs on waiver of a return in replevin is final and appealable.—Stall v. Diamond, 37 Mich. 429.

¶ 783. Garnishee cases being made appealable by the statute, the circuit court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the appeal. Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 103.

See also post ¶¶ 823, 824.

¶ 784. A judgment for costs, of less than $4, against the plaintiff, might be appealed under the statute of 1845.—Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mich. 156.

¶ 785. Under the charter of the city of Port Huron providing that no appeal shall be taken to the circuit court from a justice court except when such justice shall disallow any claim in favor of plaintiff or defendant in whole or part in the amount of $50 or when such justice shall render a judgment to the amount of $50 exclusive of costs, in either of which cases the party agreed may appeal, the jurisdiction of the circuit court to determine the appeal depends upon whether the record discloses either a judgment for $50 or the allowance or disallowance of a claim asserted by either party to the amount of $50, the aggrieved party in the second case having alone the right to appeal.—American Boat Co. v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 194 Mich. 146.

¶ 786. The charter of the city of Port Huron providing that no appeal shall be taken to the circuit court from a justice's court, except when the justice shall disallow any claim in favor of any plaintiff or defendant in whole or part in the amount of $50 or when such justice shall render a judgment to the amount of $50 exclusive of costs, in either of which cases the party agreed may appeal, applies to all cases, whether tried by a justice or by a jury.—American Boat Co. v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 194 Mich 146.

Appeal or certiorari as appropriate remedy, see post § 251.

Waiver of special appeal by going to trial on merits, see post § 229.

¶ 787. Appeal not precluded by oral admission before justice made as evidence merely.—Morrison v. Riker, 26 Mich. 385.

¶ 788. Appeal does not lie after stay of execution.—People ex rel. Reynolds v. Macomb Circuit Judges, 1 Mich. 134.

¶ 789. After a transcript of the judgment has been legally filed in the circuit court under the statute, it is not in the power of that court to allow an appeal to be taken.—Davison v. Elliott, 9 Mich. 252.

§ 188. Propriety and scope of special appeal.

Certiorari or special appeal as appropriate remedy, see post § 251.

Effect of appearance on special appeal, see post § 211.

Waiver of special appeal by going to trial on merits of general appeal, see post § 229.

Matters available on special appeal, see post § 232.

Special appeal not maintainable where record shows jurisdiction in the justice, see also post ¶ 1036.

Judgment on special appeal, see post § 239.

¶ 791. Special appeal lies to review jurisdictional questions.—Deitz v. Groesbeck, 32 Mich. 303; Fowler v. Hyland, 48 Mich. 179; Rosevelt v. Hanold, 65 Mich. 414; Sager v. Shutts, 53 Mich. 116.

¶ 792. Special appeal does not lie to review mere irregularities in the proceedings before the justice.—Deitz v. Groesbeck, 32 Mich. 303.

¶ 793. A special appeal from a justice's judgment does not lie where there is no question of jurisdiction, and the case is in condition to be retried on the merits.—Benjamin v. Dodge, 50 Mich. 41.

¶ 794. The objection that the attorney for plaintiff in a justice's court did not prove his authority is properly raised by special appeal.—Woodbridge v. Robinson, 49 Mich. 228.

¶ 795. A special appeal for want of due service of summons will not be favored where the summons was actually brought to respondent's attention in due season.—Lymburner v. Jenkinson, 50 Mich. 488.

¶ 796. Special appeals will not lie to review a justice's errors in admitting evidence not competent under the declaration.—Dalton v. Laudahn, 30 Mich. 349; Webster v. Williams, 69 Mich. 135.

¶ 797. An objection that the justice erred in holding, against defendant's objection, that plaintiff's declaration was sufficient in law, cannot be raised by special appeal.—Stevens v. Harris, 99 Mich. 230.

¶ 798. It seems that a special appeal is not the proper proceeding for reviewing errors of fact; as where the error assigned was that the constable's return of personal service was false, and the justice, in his return to the special appeal, stated that it was in due form, and he had not known of any untruthfulness in it. But where this error was brought up by special appeal, and the case was submitted on the affidavit for the appeal and the return thereto, it was proper to overrule the special appeal and order the case to stand for hearing on the merits.—Lymburner v. Jenkinson, 50 Mich. 488.

§ 189. Appellate jurisdiction and powers.

Action on appeal same as in justice's court, see post ¶ 884.
Jurisdiction to entertain belated appeal, see post § 191.
Return as prerequisite to circuit court's jurisdiction, see also post § 201 et seq.
Jurisdiction to compel return on appeal, see post § 203.
Appearance and submission to jurisdiction, see post § 211.
Dismissal of appeal for want of jurisdiction, see post § 223.
Hearing and scope of review on appeal, see post § 231.
Jurisdiction to award costs, see post ¶ 1045.
Want of jurisdiction in superior courts to entertain appeals from justices, see Municipal Courts § 11.
Provisions as to powers and jurisdiction of the appellate court, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 14417.

¶ 799. The jurisdiction upon an appeal from a justice is purely appellate.—Cross v. Eaton, 48 Mich. 184.

¶ 800. Appeal does not lie to the Superior Court of Grand Rapids.—Allen v. Kent Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 474.

B. TAKING AND PERFECTING APPEAL.

§ 190. In general; parties to the appeal.

Parties on appeal, see post § 212.
Waiver of objection that appeal taken by one judgment defendant only, see post ¶ 974.
Procedure to obtain appeal generally, see Appeal, VI.
Constitutional power to grant or deny appeal, see Constitutional Law § 191.
Applicability of Stamp Tax Law to appeal papers in justice appeals, see Internal Revenue ¶ 3.

¶ 801. One of several plaintiffs or defendants can carry a case heard before a justice of the peace to the circuit court on appeal, and the refusal of his coparties to unite with him in an appeal cannot preclude him from taking it on his own behalf.—People ex rel. Keal v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 36 Mich. 331.

§ 191. Time to take and perfect.

Right of parties to enlarge the time, see post § 192.
Allowance of appeal after expiration of statutory period, see post §§ 193, 194.
Dismissal of belated appeal, see also post § 223.
Computation of time, see Time.

¶ 802. When a statute fixes absolutely the time within which an appeal must be taken, the appellate court has no power to enlarge it, and its jurisdiction to entertain the appeal depends upon a compliance with the statute.—Climie v. Odell, 20 Mich. 12.

¶ 803. The circuit court obtains no jurisdiction by an appeal from a justice's court if taken after the statutory period of five days allowed for taking it.—Franks v. Smith, 45 Mich. 326.

¶ 804. An appeal from judgments rendered by justices of the peace must be made five days after the rendition of the judgment, unless under Comp. L. 1897, § 909, it is authorized by the circuit court, or by the circuit judge at chambers after the expiration of five days when the party making the appeal has been prevented from taking the same by circumstances not under his control.—Stock v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 389.

§ 192. Stipulations extending time for appeal.

General law as to stipulations, see Stipulations.

¶ 805. The parties may by stipulation enlarge the time for taking an appeal, beyond the period fixed by the statute, in cases where by statute the court upon cause shown might allow an appeal.—Climie v. Odell, 20 Mich. 12.

§ 193. Power of court to allow belated appeal.

Practice on application for special leave to appeal after time, see 1916 C. C. Rule 47.

Power of circuit court to allow belated appeal, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 14408.

¶ 806. Comp. L. 1857, § 3842, How. St. § 7005, does not give a general discretion to the circuit court to allow appeals in cases where it would be merely equitable, but only where by reason of circumstances beyond the party's control he is prevented from appealing within the prescribed time.—Draper v. Tooker, 16 Mich. 74.

¶ 809. The circuit court for the county of Wayne has no authority to make an order more than five days after the rendition of judgment by a justice of the peace of the city of Detroit allowing an appeal where the showing required by Comp. L. 1897, § 909, was not made out, and such an order may be vacated by mandamus.—Stock v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 339.

¶ 811. An unexcused delay of nearly three months after learning that a judgment had been rendered against him will prevent an appellant from taking advantage of Comp. L. 1897, § 909, providing relief to parties who have been prevented from taking appeals by circumstances not under their control.—Pickell v. Coates, 147 Mich. 53.

¶ 812. How. St. § 7005, permits appeals to be authorized after the statutory time for taking them has expired, if the party seeking to appeal was prevented from doing so by "circumstances not under his control." Held, that these include his serious illness or that of a member of his family; and the rule applies where the party is the agent of a corporation.—Braastad v. Dey Iron Min. Co., 54 Mich. 258.

¶ 814. One who applies for leave to appeal from a justice's judgment on the ground that he was prevented from taking his appeal within the five days by circumstances not under his control, does not bring himself within the statute (How. St. §§ 7005, 7006) if, when the only obstacle to his perfecting the appeal by service of affidavit and bond was the justice's absence, he failed to comply with the statutory provision that such affidavit and bond, in case of the justice's absence from his home, may be served upon any member of his family of suitable age.—Combs v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 99 Mich. 234.

¶ 815. The claim that appellant could not have complied fully with How. St. §§ 7005, 7006, allowing appeals on leave given, and permitting the payment of fees to a member of the justice's family, because he had already paid costs and fees to the justice, is not well taken, inasmuch as there is no occasion to pay costs and fees to a member of the justice's family if they have already been paid to the justice.—Combs v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 99 Mich. 234.

¶ 816. Under How. St. § 7005, providing that appeals may be authorized by the circuit court or the judge at chambers after the expiration of five days, where the appealing party has been prevented from appealing by circumstances not under his control, an appeal was properly allowed to one of two defendants by a justice after five days, upon a showing that such defendant was misled by his codefendant into believing that he would pay the costs and perfect the appeal, and took immediate steps towards effecting the appeal upon learning the facts.—Potter v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 522.

¶ 817. A delay of six weeks after obtaining knowledge of the rendition of a judgment in justice court, before making application for an appeal, did not destroy such right of appeal, where it appeared from such application that defendant was a nonresident when she heard of the judgment and that from the time of her learning of the rendition of such judgment she had been endeavoring to obtain exact information as to such judgment.—Jackson v. Jackson, 135 Mich. 549.

¶ 818. One desiring to appeal from the Justice's Court of the city of Detroit must make payment to the clerk of the necessary fees and costs, and present the bond and affidavit to the justice who tried the case, and if he cannot be found leave them at his residence in compliance with the general law (Comp. L. 1897, § 903 et seq.); and where relator on the last day fixed for an appeal tendered the papers and costs to the only deputy who was in the office, it being after office hours, and he refused to receive them as being unauthorized to do so, and relator still had several hours within which to find the clerk and pay the money to him and present his affidavit and bond to the justice, but made no effort to do so, but the next morning made a similar tender to the clerk, who refused to receive them on the ground that the time for appeal had passed, relator was not entitled to leave to take a special appeal under the general law (Comp. L. 1897, § 909).—Graham v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 143 Mich. 360.

¶ 819. An appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace of Detroit more than five days after its rendition was held properly to have been disallowed by the Circuit Court of Wayne County under Local Acts 1905, No. 475, section 22, where it was shown that all of the directors of defendant corporation had notice that an action was pending; that no appearance was entered before the justice on the return day of the summons or upon the day to which the action was adjourned, although the summons was served on defendant's secretary who turned it over to a bookkeeper with instructions to call it to the attention of the president, the bookkeeper having failed to do so.—Huddleston v. Charles Amos & Co., 180 Mich. 253.

¶ 820. Where plaintiff instituted principal and garnishment actions before a justice of the peace of the city of Detroit, upon return day in which the garnishee disclosed an indebtedness to the defendant exceeding the amount of plaintiff's claim, but no service was had upon defendant, a nonresident, and plaintiff's attorneys thereupon notified defendant by letter of such actions and the successful garnishment and that judgment would be taken for the amount of the claim and costs unless they should hear from defendant on or before return day, to which defendant's attorney replied by letter asking for information of date of return day and offering a settlement, but plaintiff's attorneys did not answer defendant's attorney, who wrote them again without reply and also the garnishee, whose attorney informed defendant's attorney that judgment had been regularly taken in the actions, and defendant took no further action until more than five days after the actions had regularly proceeded to judgment, when he applied for, and was allowed leave to perfect, a special appeal, which he perfected accordingly, held, under Local Acts 1903, No. 475, § 22, providing that appeals from such court may be authorized by the Circuit Court of Wayne county when the party appealing has been prevented from making a defense upon the merits of the case by circumstances not under his control, and also when justice requires that such appeal be authorized, but that no appeal shall be allowed or authorized after five days from the rendition of judgment, except as therein otherwise provided, that a special appeal was not authorized by the facts shown.—Anderson v. Wartenberg, 196 Mich. 529.

§ 195. Application for leave and notice thereof.

Method of reviewing refusal of leave to appeal, see Appeal ¶¶ 28, 29.

¶ 821. Notice of motion for leave to appeal cannot be served by mail. C. C. Rule 103, allowing these notices to be the same as on special motions, relates to the time, not to the manner, of service.—McCaslin v. Camp, 26 Mich. 390.

¶ 822. Prior to the amendment of How. St. § 7005, by Laws of 1891, Act No. 73, service of notice of application for leave to appeal from justice's court, made upon the opposite party without this state, conferred no jurisdiction upon the circuit judge to allow the appeal, nor was the requirement waived by an acceptance of service outside of the state.—Danville Stove & Mfg. Co. v. Kent Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 244.

¶ 823. Under Local Acts 1895, No. 460, § 10, limiting the absolute right of appeal from justice's judgments in the city of Detroit to cases where the amount involved is not less than $50, but providing that an appeal may be authorized by the circuit court when justice requires it, and further providing that, in all cases where the party against whom such appeal is sought has appeared in justice's court by an attorney, it shall be sufficient to serve such attorney with notice of subsequent proceedings, it is necessary that the opposite party or his attorney have notice of an application for an appeal, and have an opportunity to be heard before the same is allowed.—Scranton Lumber Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 614.

¶ 824. Since the statute enabling the circuit court to authorize an appeal from a justice in Detroit where the amount involved is less than $50, and also providing for notice in such action where the party has appeared by attorney (Local Acts, 1895, No. 460, § 10) does not specify the length of time of such notice, the notice required will be governed by the circuit court rules relating to special motions.—Scranton Lumber Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 614.

¶ 825. In applications for leave to appeal from a justice's judgment, an order to show cause is the better practice, so that the court can see that the hearing shall be put forward long enough to give the judgment creditor ample time to prepare to show cause against the motion. Where a judgment is to be disturbed, the utmost fairness should be required of the party complaining of it.—McCaslin v. Camp, 26 Mich. 390.

§ 196. Affidavit for appeal.

Inability to serve affidavit because of justice's absence as ground for allowance of belated appeal, see ante ¶¶ 814, 815.
Appearance as waiver of defects in affidavit, see post § 211.
Defects in affidavit as ground for dismissal of appeal, see post § 223.
Affidavit as affecting scope of review, see post § 228.
Presumptions as to matters stated in affidavit, see post § 233.
Affidavit as evidence, see post §§ 235, 236.
Affidavits for certiorari, see post § 256.
Affidavit for appeal in forcible entry or summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 51.
Service of affidavit when justice absent, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 14409.

¶ 826. Where a plaintiff appealed, under the statute of 1845, from a judgment of costs against him, no affidavit was necessary.—Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mich. 156.

¶ 827. Where defendant appealed, under the statute of 1845, and the affidavit was made by his attorney, and stated that the plaintiff recovered $5 more than was justly and honestly due him, as the deponent believed from the facts and evidence in the cause, which were fully communicated to him, it was held sufficient.—Austin v. Strong, 1 Mich. 259.

¶ 828. The affidavit for appeal, being required by the statute on the ground of public policy, cannot be waived or dispensed with by the appellee.—Smart v. Howe, 3 Mich. 590.

¶ 829. The appeal affidavit in replevin proceedings removed from before a justice to the circuit court is jurisdictional, and should appear in the record upon review in the supreme court. But its absence therefrom was not fatal where error was not assigned on the action of the circuit court in reversal.—Sterner v. Hodgson, 63 Mich. 419.

¶ 830. An affidavit for appeal, if properly sworn to, is valid, though not subscribed by the affiant.—People ex rel. Dickinson v. Simondson, 25 Mich. 113.

¶ 831. An affidavit for appeal, sworn to before any other officer than the justice, is of no avail unless the jurat be signed by such officer; but where sworn to before the justice, the latter's neglect to sign the jurat cannot prejudice the rights of an appellant.—People ex rel. Dickinson v. Simondson, 25 Mich. 113.

¶ 832. An affidavit for an appeal from a justice, sworn to before a notary who was an attorney in the cause, was held to be a "defective affidavit" within the meaning of Pub. L., 1877, p. 3 (How. St. § 7020).—Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Mich. 100.

§ 197. ——Supplying and amending affidavits for appeal.

Amendment of bond, see post § 199.
Amendments of pleadings, see post §§ 213-221.
Replevin bond not superseded by appeal bond, see ante ¶ 337.

¶ 833. The defective affidavit which How. St. § 7020, allows a party to supplant is one which is fatally defective; any other would be sufficient.—Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Mich. 100; Hamilton v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 409.

¶ 834. On appeal from a justice's court, where it appeared that the affidavit for appeal had been mislaid or lost, it was held proper under Comp. L. 1897, § 10276 et seq., to allow a new affidavit to be filed on showing that the lost affidavit had actually been filed with the justice.—Hyman v. Kadrovach, 180 Mich. 370.

§ 198. Bond, recognizance or undertaking.

Release of attachment lien by giving appeal bond, see ante § 65.
Persons upon whom bond to be served where justice absent, see also ante ¶¶ 814, 815.
Want of or defects in appeal bond as ground for dismissal of appeal, see post § 223.
Liabilities and actions on bond, see post § 248 et seq.
Bond on certiorari, see post § 257.

Bond on appeal in forcible entry or summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 52.
Provisions as to bond or undertaking on appeal, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, §§ 3-5; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14403-14405.
Service of bond or recognizance when justice absent, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 14409.

¶ 835. Under the statute of 1845 the recognizance could only be entered into before the justice by whom the cause was tried.—Austin v. Strong, 1 Mich. 259.

¶ 836. Under the statute of 1845, which provided that, "if any party shall appeal," "such party, his agent or attorney, shall enter into a recognizance," it was held that the appeal might be taken, and the recognizance entered into by the party for whose use the suit was brought.—Wilson v. Davis, 1 Mich. 156.

¶ 837. On an appeal taken by a corporation a bond executed by two individual obligors is sufficient, if otherwise in regular form, although one of the obligors is named in the bond as principal instead of surety.—People ex rel. Detroit & B. Plank Road Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 303.

¶ 838. Where an affidavit for appeal is made by one of two joint defendants in behalf of both, if the other does not execute the bond and no surety signs for him, the judgment as to him is not affected by the appeal, and he is not entitled to enter his appearance in the circuit or to notice of trial there.—Jopp v. Kegel, 83 Mich. 50.

¶ 839. An appeal bond, executed on an appeal from a justice's court to the circuit court, in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, where the sole controversy is whether the claim is entitled to a preference under Pub. Acts 1887, No. 94 (How. St. § 8749m et seq.), which bond only requires the obligors to pay the judgment if the preference is sustained, does not comply with the general statute (How. St. § 7000), providing for a bond to pay the judgment rendered in the circuit court, and as there is no provision for an appeal in the first cited statute as to preferences, appeals being purely statutory, the appeal with an insufficient bond will be dismissed, unless a valid bond is filed.—Wineman v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 121 Mich. 601.

Power of appellate court to order new bonds, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 14417.

¶ 840. A bond given on appeal from a justice's judgment, though insufficient in amount, operates as a stay of proceedings; and the appellant has the right, under How. St. § 7018, which provides that no appeal shall be dismissed on account of any informality or imperfection in the appeal bond, if the appellant and his sureties consent to amend the same, or if another sufficient bond, to be approved by the court, shall be filed, to amend the bond or file a new one.—Hascall v. Brooks, 105 Mich. 383.

¶ 841. Where on appeal from justice's court objection was made that the surety on the appeal bond had failed to justify his pecuniary responsibility in writing and under oath, it was held that such bond could be amended under Comp. L. 1897, § 922.—Hyman v. Kadrovach, 180 Mich. 370.

§ 200. Payment of fees as condition to appeal.

Costs and fees in general, see ante IV, G.
Jury fees, see ante § 123.
Fees of justices of the peace, see ante § 4.
Justice's fees for making return, see post § 205.
Nonpayment of fees as ground for dismissal, see post § 223.
Reinstatement of appeal after dismissal for nonpayment of entry fee, see post ¶ 970.
Jurisdiction of circuit court to ascertain whether fees and costs have been paid, see post ¶ 850.
Provisions as to fees upon appeal, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 14406.

¶ 842. The statute (How. St. § 7003), which provides that, on appeal from a justice's judgment, the appellant shall pay to the justice the costs of the judgment, together with the sum of one dollar for making his return, and the further sum of three dollars as clerk and entry fee, requires the payment of jury fees as a condition to such appeal.—Swarthout v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 99 Mich. 347.

§ 201. Return or record, contents and sufficiency.

Docket entries and sufficiency thereof, see ante § 139 et seq.
Neglect to make return as precluding suit on appeal bond, see post ¶ 1073.
Statement in lieu of return, see post ¶ 860.
Jurisdiction of circuit court to compel a return, see post § 203.
Requiring further return, see post § 203.
Fees for making return, see post § 205.
Presumptions upon return and record, see post § 233.
Verity, conclusiveness and effect of return, see post § 234.
Return to certiorari, see post § 259.
Record on appeal generally, see Appeal, VI, D.
Provisions as to return of justice to appeal, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, §§ 11-17; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14411-14417.

¶ 843. The return to the appeal, in which the name of the justice only appears in the caption, is sufficiently signed; and the court can as well take notice that the name there is written by the justice himself as if it appeared at the end of the return.—Smart v. Howe, 3 Mich. 590.

¶ 845. On appeal from the overruling by a justice of the peace of a defendant's objection to the jurisdiction, the jurisdictional facts must appear on the justice's record; in order that the presumption in favor of regularity may obtain there must be some showing.—Gadsby v. Stimer, 79 Mich. 260.

¶ 846. The return of a justice, in a cause appealed to the circuit court, that plaintiff declared in a plea of trespass on the case, that defendant pleaded the general issue, and that judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction, though the declaration is missing from the return and in lieu thereof is an affidavit by the justice that the declaration was lost and that a declaration attached to the affidavit was the same as the one filed in the justice's court.—Carver v. Smith, 113 Mich. 207.

¶ 847. Where the return of a justice in an appeal case fails to show any jurisdiction over the defendant or to set out a cause of action, the defendant, who did not plead below, is not bound to plead or make any defense at the circuit, and any judgment rendered against him is fatally defective on error, if not void on its face.—Moore v. Hansen, 75 Mich. 564.

¶ 848. Where the record of a proceeding in justice's court does not show affirmatively that plaintiff appeared on the return day, it works a discontinuance of the case and ousts the court of jurisdiction, since Comp. L. 1879, § 957, requires that the time of appearance of the parties be entered and in the absence of any entry it must be assumed that no one appeared.—Purdy v. Law, 132 Mich. 622.

Objections available on appeal, see post § 228.

¶ 849. A justice's return to a special appeal is assumed to contain all that took place before him; if defective a further return should be required, and if a party goes to hearing upon it without objection he is presumed to have none.—Maxwell v. Deens, 46 Mich. 35.

§ 203. ——Amendment, completion or perfection.

Supplemental return setting forth time and place of adjournment, see ante ¶ 610.
Requiring further return, see also ante ¶ 849.
Appearance in circuit court as waiver of right to further amended returns, see post ¶ 987.
Verity and conclusiveness of return, see also post § 234.
Provisions as to amending return, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 14415.

¶ 850. Until a return is made to an appeal from a justice's court the circuit gets no jurisdiction over the cause itself, and cannot try it; but it has jurisdiction to inquire into the facts to ascertain whether the fees and costs have been paid, and the appeal duly taken, and if so to compel a return.—People ex rel. Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

¶ 851. Where a justice has sent up with his return an affidavit for appeal, without signing the jurat, the proper practice is to allow him to attach his jurat nunc pro tunc, if he voluntarily appears and wishes to do so, or if not to order a further return requiring him officially to certify whether the affidavit has been duly sworn to before him.—People ex rel. Dickinson v. Simondson, 25 Mich. 113.

¶ 852. Where a justice's judgment is rendered within the time that would ordinarily be proper, it cannot on appeal be assumed without proof that he has exceeded his jurisdiction by delaying judgment while the defendant was in custody; and if he in fact did so, an order to compel a further return should be applied for to show it.—Barker v. Wheeler, 44 Mich. 176.

¶ 853. A change of style in appealing a criminal prosecution so that the case on appeal shall appear to be a civil suit introduces a fatal contradiction in the record. The statute of amendments does not apply to such matters.—Webster v. City of Lansing, 47 Mich. 192.

¶ 854. Where on appeal it appears that the declaration was lost from the files of the justice it is proper to allow plaintiff to file a copy thereof to complete the record.—Bauer v. Wasson, 60 Mich. 194.

¶ 855. A defendant when appealing has the right to rely upon the justice's return as made, and a change therein which vitally alters the situation of the parties cannot be made except upon a proper application and showing and an opportunity to be heard on the motion.—Moore v. Hansen, 75 Mich. 564.

¶ 856. Defendants who take a special appeal from a justice's judgment, alleging as error that the docket entry, "judgment against defendant," does not indicate against which of the defendants judgment was rendered, are bound by an amended return, made at their request, whereby it appears that the judgment was against both.—Hinkle v. Collins, 113 Mich. 105.

¶ 857. On appeal from taxation of costs in justice court, the circuit court could neither disregard nor amend the judgment.—Schmidt v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 658.

¶ 858. In appeals from a justice's court, the return of the justice is the record from which the nature of the proceedings is determined when the pleadings are oral, and the practice does not permit the return to be amended after verdict by stipulation of the parties.—Applebaum v. Goldman, 155 Mich. 369.

¶ 859. A judgment in a justice's court was had against a foreign corporation by service of process upon the insurance commissioner, as provided by Act No. 321, Pub. Acts 1907. No proof was offered that the corporation had appointed the commissioner to act as its attorney in accepting legal service. Held, in a special appeal to the circuit court to test the justice's jurisdiction, no amendment of the return could be allowed to prove the said appointment by evidence not put in before the justice.—Wells v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., 160 Mich. 218.

§ 204. ——Statement in lieu of return.

¶ 860. The proper practice, where it is claimed an appeal has been duly taken from a justice's court, and the justice has failed to make his return, is to call on the justice, on cause shown by affidavit, to state the facts; his official statement will be conclusive as to the facts therein stated, although it will be construed in reference to the affidavits in answer to which it is made.—People ex rel. Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

§ 205. ——Fees for making return.

Payment of fees as condition to appeal, see also ante § 200.

¶ 861. While payment to a justice of the fee for making return to an appeal is not necessarily a strictly jurisdictional fact, and when waived and return is made will be conclusively presumed, it is still a condition precedent to the appellant's right to maintain his appeal; unless payment is made or waived the justice need make no return; no court can compel it, and he may proceed to issue execution as if no appeal had been attempted.—People ex rel. Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

¶ 862. One who appeals from a justice's judgment is entitled to the whole of the day on which the return is filed to pay the entry fee, and his right to appeal does not depend on the payment of a fee to the opposing attorney in addition to the entry fee.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Wright, 32 Mich. 491.

¶ 863. A justice's receipt for "ten dollars as fees and costs on appeal of case" so binds him that he must make return to the appeal even though the fee for making it has not in fact been paid. The appellant has a right to rely on the receipt and cannot be deprived of his appeal by a misunderstanding with the justice.—Stevenson v. Kent Circuit Judge, 44 Mich. 162.

§ 206. Objections and exceptions below, and saving same for review.

Objections before justice as to process or service, see ante §§ 50-58.
Objection for first time that short summons issued where long one prescribed, see ante ¶ 214.
Objections to pleading, see ante §§ 94, 100.
Objections in attachment proceedings, see ante § 64.
Objections to jurisdiction in replevin, see ante § 82.
Objections to continuances or adjournments, see ante § 115.
Waiver of security for costs by going to trial on merits, see ante § 164.
Objections available on the hearing, see also post § 228 et seq.
Consideration on special appeal of objections not made before the justice, see post § 232.
Necessity of taking proper objection in circuit court on appeal to save question for review on error in supreme court, see Saving Questions.

¶ 864. A defendant in justice's court moved for a nonsuit on the ground of variance between the declaration and the proofs in the matter of the assignment of the paper sued upon. Held, that an appellate court would not regard other variances to which the justice's attention had not been called.—Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 45 Mich. 280.

¶ 865. A person arrested on justice's warrant for trespass on land made no objection to the sufficiency of the affidavit on which the warrant was issued, nor to the regularity of his arrest, but pleaded the general issue with notice that the land was his own freehold, and went to trial. Held, that he could not, on special appeal, object for the first time to the sufficiency of the affidavit, even though no right of arrest could be founded on it.—Maxwell v. Deens, 46 Mich. 35.

¶ 866. Replevin was brought in justice's court designating defendant by his surname and by the initials of his Christian name. No misnomer was pleaded, and judgment, which was rendered for plaintiff, was appealed by defendant in his full name, after pleading to the merits below. Held, that the informality was no longer material.—Baldwin v. Talbot, 43 Mich. 11.

¶ 867. A justice's jurisdiction of an action against an administrator cannot be questioned where defendant is not named as such and does not plead in abatement, but pleads the general issue and goes to trial on the merits.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 Mich. 330.

¶ 868. Where one sued in justice's court as "John Doe" is served personally, and appears and defends in his own name, thus appealing to the circuit court and thence to the supreme court, failure to amend formally is not fatal on a record showing his true identity.—Moore v. Lewis, 76 Mich. 300.

¶ 869. The failure to object to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace on the ground that he issued an attachment in favor of an infant plaintiff in a log-lien suit without appointing a next friend, as required by How. St. § 6864, or the appointment of such next friend on plaintiff's motion, is a sufficient answer to such objection when made for the first time on special appeal.—Dillon v. Howe, 98 Mich. 168.

¶ 870. The summons in a suit upon a promissory note payable to the order of the "Evangelical Church of Vicksburg, Michigan," described the plaintiffs as "Trustees of the Salem Church of the Evangelical Church of North America, a corporation, at Vicksburg, Michigan." The name specified in the certificate of incorporation was the "Salem Church of the Evangelical Association of North America, in Kalamazoo County, State of Michigan," being the county in which Vicksburg is situated. Plaintiffs declared orally on a certain promissory note made and executed by defendant to the "Evangelical Church of Vicksburg, Michigan," and averred that said note was intended for the "Salem Church of the Evangelical Association of North America, of Vicksburg, Michigan," to which declaration defendant pleaded the general issue. Held, that defendant's objection, made on the trial of an appeal from the justice's judgment, that the suit was not brought in the name of the corporation as expressed in the certificate of incorporation, not having been taken before the justice, was waived.—Stoffiet v. Strome, 101 Mich. 197.

¶ 871. A defense whereby a defendant seeks to set-off or recoup damages for breach of contract, in an action by an assignee of a contract for goods furnished, is admissible where the case begins in a justice's court, where the pleadings are presumably oral, and where the defendant's plea consists of, "the general issue, notice of set-off and recoupment," as the plea though not sufficiently definite, is amendable. On an appeal it cannot be contended that the defense was not admissible under the pleadings, as an amendment would have been allowed if objection had been made.—Bacon v. Reich, 121 Mich. 480.

¶ 872. A general objection in justice's court is not sufficient to raise the question that an oral declaration in an action to recover the statutory penalty for selling liquor to a minor, will not support the judgment for plaintiff because it failed to specify the statute.—Carmer v. Hubbard, 123 Mich. 333.

¶ 873. A notice appended to the plea of the general issue that "defendant will give in evidence and insist on as a defense, fraud, and misrepresentation used in securing the subscription" is sufficient in an action begun in justice's court when no objection was raised until proof was offered in the circuit court.—Chicago Building & Mfg. Co. v. Yell, 129 Mich. 517.

¶ 874. Defendant waived his right to object to the jurisdiction of the justice's court on the ground that the amount sued for exceeded $300 (Comp. L. 1897, § 103), where the declaration in such court claimed $300 on a special count of breach of contract and $300 on the common counts in assumpsit, and such defendant, after trying the matter upon the merits in the justice's court, took a general appeal to the circuit court, and there participated in the selection of a jury and permitted a witness to be examined before raising the jurisdictional question.—Thayer v. Gibbs, 140 Mich. 60.

¶ 876. On an appeal from the justice's court to the circuit court the respondent cannot raise the objection that the court erred in compelling the justice of the peace to render a second and third amended return without his being paid therefor; this objection can only be raised by the justice of the peace and must be raised before making the return.—Marr v. Cook, 147 Mich. 425.

¶ 877. On an appeal from a judgment by a justice on the ground that the service was defective, the alleged defects will not be considered where it appears from the record that the defendant's acts amounted to a general appearance.—Priest v. American Ins. Union, 171 Mich. 321.

¶ 878. In an action on an injunction bond commenced in justice court, defendant cannot on appeal to the circuit court object to the dclaration as being insufficient under Comp. L. 1897, § 10378, How. Ann. St. 2nd Ed., § 13092, since the objection should have been made in the justice court where the declaration could have been amended.—Millspaugh v. Schultz, 180 Mich. 310.

¶ 879. Where, both parties consenting, the justice consults with another justice as to the practice of opening a case after both parties have rested (the question being presented by defendant's request for such opening), defendant cannot afterwards object to such consultation.—Chivers v. Lytle, 97 Mich. 477.

¶ 880. In an action by a nonresident in the justice's court on the return day after the plaintiff had declared orally, the defendant moved for security for costs which was denied, whereupon the defendant pleaded the general issue and proceeded to trial upon the merits, and then took a special appeal on the ground that the justice erred in overruling his motion. In the circuit court the defendant moved to dismiss the case because the justice had no jurisdiction to try the case, and the motion being denied the case went to trial before a jury. Held, the proper practice to raise the question as to security for costs would have been to move therefor in the circuit court.—Lacomb v. Godkin, 143 Mich. 198.

§ 207. Assignments and specifications of errors.

Assignments of errors on appeals generally, see Appeal, XI, C.

¶ 881. On a special appeal from a justice, under Comp. L. 1897, § 903, allegations in general terms that he had no jurisdiction, that he should have issued a short summons, etc., will not be considered as raising any objection.—Courtis v. Garrison, 148 Mich. 226.

¶ 882. Mere general allegations of error in a special appeal that the justice had no jurisdiction of the persons of defendants, and that he erred in deciding he had jurisdiction in the cause, are too indefinite to be reviewed by the upper court.—Osborne v. Osborne, 156 Mich. 413.

¶ 883. In an action for breach of contract brought in a justice's court, judgment for defendant will not be reversed on appeal where plaintiff was not entitled to more than nominal damages, and error is not assigned as to the refusal of the justice to render judgment for nominal damages.—International Textbook Co. v. Schulte, 151 Mich. 149.

§ 208. Effect of appeal, transfer and stay.

Release of attachment lien by giving appeal bond, see ante § 65.

Operation of bond insufficient in amount, see ante ¶ 840.

Appearance and submission to jurisdiction, see post § 211.

Effect to preclude certiorari, see post § 253.

Right to make return to certiorari after appeal perfected, see post ¶ 963.

Provisions as to release of property when appeal taken, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 14410.

¶ 884. The action on appeal is still the same action that was in justice's court.—Brabon v. Pierce, 34 Mich. 39.

§ 209. ——In garnishment cases.

Garnishment in justices' courts, see ante §§ 68-76.

Right to certiorari after appeal taken, see post § 253.

¶ 885. Under How. St. § 8041, which provides that the recovery of judgment by the principal defendant in a suit in justice's court shall be deemed a discontinuance of all proceedings against the garnishee defendant, and in view of other statutes on the subject, the latter is not released from liability where plaintiff appeals from said judgment, until the final determination of said appeal in favor of the appellee.—Erickson v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co., 105 Mich. 415.

¶ 886. The garnishee defendant will not be entitled, under Laws 1891, Act No. 178, § 28 (which provides that, in all cases where defendant prevails or takes an appeal in the principal suit, the court shall make an order releasing the moneys garnished) to said order on the recovery of judgment by the principal defendant, until the final determination of plaintiff's appeal against the appellant.—Erickson v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co., 105 Mich. 415.

¶ 888. The statute contemplates in case of appeal by plaintiff in a garnishment suit against the main defendant that the action in justice's court against the garnishee shall remain in abeyance pending said appeal; and the proper practice is for the justice, after the rendition of final judgment against the principal defendant on the appeal, to issue a summons to show cause against the garnishee defendant, whereupon issue can be joined, and proof of the circuit court judgment furnishes the foundation for a judgment against the garnishee.—Erickson v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co., 105 Mich. 415.

C. PROCEDURE AND REVIEW ON APPEAL.

Appellate procedure in forcible entry and summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 51 et seq.

§ 210. Change of venue and transfer of cause.

Transfer of cause in justice's court, see ante § 29.

¶ 889. Pub. Acts 1905, No. 309, providing for a change of venue applies to any civil action pending in the circuit court, and includes cases appealed from the justice's court which were pending at the time of the passage of the act.—Moreland v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 144 Mich. 329.

¶ 890. Comp. L. 1897, § 638, providing for the removal of causes pending before the circuit court of the county of Kent to the superior court on motion of either party and for the removal of cases subsequently instituted on motion of the defendant, does not apply to appeals from justice's court.—Pruyn v. Kent Circuit Judge, 126 Mich. 244.

§ 211. Appearance and submission to jurisdiction.

See also post §§ 223, 228.
Appearance by codefendant who fails to execute appeal bond, see ante ¶ 838.
Judgment upon nonappearance of plaintiff, see post §§ 222, 238.
Judgment against surety where plaintiff fails to appear on appeal in replevin, see post ¶ 1038.
General appearance on appeal in circuit as admission of jurisdiction, see also Appearance ¶ 46.

¶ 891. Taking an appeal is not such an appearance in the cause as waives an objection to the jurisdiction of the court over the appellant's person.—Shaw v. Moser, 3 Mich. 71.

¶ 892. The appeal, as such, does not give the circuit court jurisdiction where the justice had none.—Wells v. Scott, 4 Mich. 347.

¶ 893. Plaintiff below who appears for the purpose of applying to have proceedings allowing an appeal from a justice set aside for want of jurisdiction waives nothing by such appearance.—McCaslin v. Camp, 26 Mich. 390.

¶ 894. A general entry of appearance by an appellee before motion to dismiss gives the circuit court jurisdiction.—McCombs v. Johnson, 47 Mich. 592.

¶ 895. Where an unsworn affidavit had been filed for an appeal from a justice's court, the defect was waived if the appellee appeared and noticed the case for trial.—Hamilton v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 409.

¶ 896. Entry of appearance in circuit court on special appeal after denial by justice of motion to quash made on special appearance is not a submission to court's jurisdiction.—Freer v. White, 91 Mich. 74.

¶ 897. Where, after the denial of a motion to quash attachment proceedings in justice's court because of a fatal defect in the affidavit, defendant, who had appeared specially for the purposes of the motion, removes the case to the circuit court by special appeal, assigning as error such refusal, the entry by his attorney of his appearance in the circuit court will not be treated as a submission to the jurisdiction of the court.—Freer v. White, 91 Mich. 74.

¶ 898. A general appearance by the apellee gives jurisdiction of the appeal.—Sherwood v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 107 Mich. 136.

¶ 899. An appeal from justice's court should not be dismissed because of appellant's failure to file affidavit and bond within five days as required by statute, where appellee had appeared generally and served notice of trial and note of issue, since such appearance waived the defect and gave the circuit court jurisdiction.—Goodin v. Van Haaften, 130 Mich. 386.

¶ 900. A defendant in the justice's court who has taken a special appeal, by his general appearance in the circuit court does not enlarge the jurisdiction of the court or change his relation to the court or to the cause in any manner.—Marr v. Cook, 147 Mich. 425.

§ 212. Parties.

Parties to appeal, see ante § 190.
General law as to parties, see Parties.

¶ 901. The purpose of Act No. 137, Pub. Acts 1903, was to make the practice in cases appealed from a justice's court conform to the practice in cases commenced in the circuit court, as laid down by C. C. Rule 27c, whereby a plaintiff may sue jointly on several promises made by different parties.—Hillman v. Hulett, 149 Mich. 289.

¶ 902. On appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace in favor of a mother and her infant daughter, the former may properly be appointed next friend of the latter, whose infancy is then for the first time brought to the court's attention.—McDonald v. Weir, 76 Mich. 243.

Pleadings below, see ante § 87 et seq.
Necessity of pleading where justice's return insufficient, see also ante § 201.
Amendments of pleadings on appeal, see post § 216.
General law as to pleading, see Pleading.
Review of grant or denial of leave to plead anew on appeal to circuit, see Appeal § 399.

¶ 903. On appeal from a justice's judgment a statement of the cause of action is sufficient if it would have sustained a recovery before a justice.—Soper v. Mills, 50 Mich. 75.

¶ 904. On special appeal for want of jurisdiction to the circuit from a justice of the peace where the filing of a declaration had been waived by treating an affidavit for arrest as a declaration, the circuit court should permit a declaration to be filed.—Simon v. Spiro, 124 Mich. 484.

§ 214. ——Plea or notice.

Waiver by appearance and pleading to merits, see ante § 211; post §§ 228, 229.

¶ 905. A notice of special defense in an action upon a promissory note, filed with the plea in justice's court where the case was first tried, is sufficient in circuit court, where it contains, in substance, a statement of the facts upon which defendant relied in the circuit court; in view of the liberal construction applied to pleadings in justice's court.—Smith v. Nixon, 145 Mich. 593.

¶ 906. Where in an appeal from a justice, the judgment is attacked on the ground that the justice was out of the county when he gave judgment, such defense must be raised by a special notice and not in a plea puis darrein continuance.—Swantek v. Jarmoszki, 162 Mich. 617.

¶ 907. Where nearly four months had elapsed from the time an appeal was made in an action in the justice court by one broker against another to recover plaintiff's share of a commission for assisting defendant in the sale of a saloon, stock fixtures and business before plaintiff filed the notice for trial of the case in the circuit court, and nearly five months elapsed from the time the appeal was taken to the time of the trial of the case, and during such time defendant took no steps to put himself in condition for trial by the forming of an issue, the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow defendant to file a plea of the general issue, with notice of failure of consideration and illegality of contract in place of a plea of the general issue only.—Dattner v. Weisz, 198 Mich. 367.

¶ 908. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 929, the court may, on appeal from a judgment against a garnishee, permit him to file a plea of the general issue and show that his disclosure was a mistaken one, the debt being owed to another party.—Gerow v. Hyde, 131 Mich. 442.

§ 215. ——Affidavits of nonexecution or special defense.

¶ 909. Where a suit on a contract for a correspondence course is appealed from a justice's to the circuit court and defendant and his attorney file affidavits that they for the first time saw the written contract in question at the time of the trial in justice's court, it is discretionary with the circuit trial judge to permit defendant to file an affidavit denying execution of said contract.—International Text-Book Co. v. Roberts, 168 Mich. 501.

Amendments below, see ante §§ 42, 64, 108.

Amendments of affidavits for appeal, see ante § 197.

¶ 910. Comp. L. 1897, §§ 918, 10268, conferring power of authorizing amendments in circuit courts of cases appealed from the justice's court do not apply to orders relating to questions properly raised by special appeal, but to general appeals only where the case is to be tried upon its merits de novo.—E. S. Knowles & Son v. Cavanaugh, 144 Mich. 260.

Estoppel by pleading to amended declaration, see post ¶ 975.

Principal's consent to amendment as binding upon surety, see post ¶ 1070.

¶ 911. Where the plaintiff declares in justice's court for a cause of action of which the justice has no jurisdiction, no amendment of the declaration in circuit court on appeal can save the case.—Fowler v. Hyland, 48 Mich. 179.

¶ 912. A declaration in assumpsit can be amended, on appeal, so as to show that plaintiff claims as assignee.—Donovan v. Halsey Fire Engine Co., 58 Mich. 38.

¶ 913. Where, on appeal from justice's court, the plaintiff is allowed to amend his declaration by adding thereto a count which tenders no new issue, and which is not then objected to, no error is committed to defendant's prejudice.—Kennedy v. Brown, 50 Mich. 336.

¶ 914. Where, after the death of one of two partners, suit was commenced in names of both, an amendment on appeal so as to allow the remaining plaintiff to declare as surviving partner is proper.—O'Connell v. Schwanabeck, 76 Mich. 517.

¶ 915. The amendment of a declaration in assumpsit that was oral before the justice was properly permitted.—Zeigler v. Henry, 77 Mich. 480.

¶ 916. Upon appeal from a judgment in a justice's court it is proper to allow a declaration orally made before the justice to be amended in a manner that does not change the form or cause of action.—Canal St. Gravel Road Co. v. Paas, 95 Mich. 372.

¶ 917. On appeal from justice court it is within the discretion of the circuit court to permit an amendment of a declaration averring an assignment of the claim to the plaintiff where the summons in justice court read "J. F. assignee of L. F."—Farnam v. Doyle, 128 Mich. 696.

¶ 918. In an appeal of an action in assumpsit begun in justice court the allowance of an amendment to the declaration by the circuit court in the words, "You may amend your declaration in this case by alleging in the declaration, in conformity with the summons, that the claim in this suit was assigned as you claim it was assigned, and as this assignment shows," is sufficient without any formal amendment to show an assignment of an antecedent debt where the plaintiff's oral claim shows the existence of such antecedent debt.—Farnam v. Doyle, 128 Mich. 696.

¶ 919. As the filing of the general issue in the circuit court upon the overruling of a special appeal from justice court, was an admission that there was a declaration, the liberal rules as to amendment applied in the circuit court, and plaintiff was permitted to specify the basis of its action.—Township of Ovid v. Haire, 133 Mich. 353.

¶ 920. Where a justice's return did not state the substance of the declaration in an action by a township for personal property taxes, and only stated that plaintiff declared verbally, but among the papers returned there was a statement by the county treasurer, of uncollected personal property taxes, showing the amount assessed against the defendant, an amendment of the declaration was permitted in the circuit court to show the basis of the claim, the general issue having been filed in the justice court.—Township of Ovid v. Haire, 133 Mich. 353.

¶¶ 921, 922. A declaration combining in one count a declaration in replevin with one in assumpsit for the balance due on a promissory note cannot be amended in the circuit after judgment had been rendered in justice's court and specially appealed because the judgment rendered thereon was void.—E. S. Knowles & Son v. Cavanaugh, 144 Mich. 260.

¶ 923. Where a declaration in a suit on an instrument in a justice's court is defective for failure to allege an assignment to the plaintiff, and the point is raised by defendant for the first time in an appeal to the circuit court, the declaration may be amended in the circuit court.—Worden Grocer Co. v. Blanding, 161 Mich. 254.

§ 218. ——Of plea or notice, set-off or recoupment.

Pleas and notices in justice's court, see ante § 96.

Amendments introducing new defenses or cross demands, see post § 219.

¶ 924. On appeal to the circuit court from the justice's court, defendant's attorney moved for leave to amend his plea, supporting the motion with unsatisfactory affidavits, whereupon the court asked for the production of defendant, but his attorney refused to produce him, and asked for time to procure his affidavit. Held, that a denial of the motion was a reasonable exercise of the court's discretion.—Krohn v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 157 Mich. 185.

¶ 925. A suit in justice's court for goods and labor under a plumbing and heating contract, having been appealed to the circuit court, defendant gave plaintiff notice in writing that he would ask leave to amend his set-off from $150 to $271. At the beginning of the trial in the circuit court, said amendment was allowed. Plaintiff had announced himself as ready for trial on the call of the docket at the first day of the term with full knowledge that said motion had been made, and claimed no surprise and interposed no objection to proceeding to trial after said motion was granted. Held, the ruling was within the discretionary power of the trial court under Comp. L. 1897, § 10268.—Holser v. Skae, 169 Mich. 484.

¶ 926. Where on an appeal to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace in an action on a lease it appears that defendant pleaded the general issue, gave notice of recoupment and presented a bill of particulars which was presented to the justice and used, but it does not appear that the bill of particulars was used, defendant should be permitted to amend his plea, file the particulars of his recoupment nunc pro tunc and to submit evidence thereunder.—Carver v. Bielke, 177 Mich. 406.

§ 219. ——Introducing new cause of action, issues or claims.

Issues in the lower court, see ante § 104.

Issues on appeal, see post § 228.

¶ 927. The issue made before a justice cannot be substantially changed on appeal.—Hatzenbuhler v. Lewis, 51 Mich. 585; Graham v. Langston, 65 Mich. 45.

¶ 929. Though Comp. L. 1871, § 5458, How. St. § 7025, allows amendments to the pleadings on appeal, it does not warrant the introduction of a new cause of action.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

¶ 930. An amendment of the declaration in the circuit court is not authorized if it would enlarge the plaintiff's claim beyond the limit of the justice's jurisdiction.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

¶ 930a. A doctor, suing for professional services before a justice, filed a bill of particulars including a credit which, if true, made the account an open one, and barred by the statute of limitations. On a second appeal in the circuit court he obtained leave to amend his bill by adding another credit of later date than the last debit item. Held, that leave should not have been granted.—Hollywood v. Reed, 57 Mich. 234.

¶ 931. Suit before a justice was begun by a summons which laid the damages at a sum within his jurisdiction. The special count in the declaration did the same, but the common counts stated the damages at $500. No objection was made until, on appeal, the amount in dispute had been shown to be less than $100. Held proper for the circuit court to allow an amendment reducing the ad damnum clause.—Holloway v. Ogden School Dist. No. 9, 62 Mich. 153.

¶ 932. Since How. St., § 1375, requires an appeal in an action for failure to remove an encroachment upon a highway to be tried upon the issue joined in justice's court, an amendment of the declaration so as to make the description of the land correspond with that in the order for removal is not allowable.—Graham v. Langston, 65 Mich. 45.

¶ 933. An amendment on appeal from a justice setting out a liability under How. St., § 9044, for failing to render a particular statement of fees received and a receipt for same does not introduce a new cause of action where the original declaration was, as shown by the return, for money had and received for fees for official services and for refusing and neglecting to make and deliver a particular account of such fees and receipt for same "in accordance with the provisions of the statute," etc.—Vreeland v. Lockner, 99 Mich. 93.

¶ 934. One who in justice's court declared on the common counts for work and labor done for defendant at the latter's request will not be permitted in the circuit court on appeal to amend so as to allege breach of a contract of employment and consequent damages, since such an amendment sets up a different cause of action from that stated below.—Loranger v. Davidson, 110 Mich. 605.

¶ 936. In an action begun in the justice's court by summons "in a plea of trespass on the case upon promises, to plaintiff's damage $100 or under" the bill of particulars was "for the recovery of * * * one bedroom suit * * * $52"; a statement of account filed showed defendant's indebtedness to plaintiff to be $52, attached to which account was an affidavit that defendant was indebted in said amount, and that the consideration therefor was furniture; and the declaration was in trover for the conversion of one bedroom suit, of the value of $52, and claimed $100 damages. After defendant had pleaded the general issue plaintiff discontinued, and brought another action, in trover. Held, that this was not a change from the form of action first elected, since that was in trover, not in assumpsit, though containing language appropriate to assumpsit.—Sligh Furniture Co. v. Shannon, 113 Mich. 473.

¶ 937. A set-off described in the justice court bill of particulars as "W's note, endorsed by plaintiff" may be amended in the circuit court to read "money advanced by defendant at plaintiff's request for use and benefit of plaintiff on account of W's note endorsed," etc., as the claims relate to the same transaction and as thus amended it is a proper set-off.—Anderson Carriage Co. v. Pungs, 127 Mich. 543.

¶ 938. In an appeal from the justice court an amendment averring an assignment to the plaintiff of the claim sued on does not set up a different cause of action.—Farnam v. Doyle, 128 Mich. 696.

¶ 939. Plea of title in trespass q. c. before a justice must be entered when issue is joined, and cannot be introduced on appeal by an amendment changing the issue.—Bureau v. Marshall, 55 Mich. 234.

¶ 940. Action was brought on a note signed by a partnership and the note was filed with the justice. Defendants pleaded the general issue, but did not deny the execution of the note by affidavit, and judgment was given for plaintiff. Defendants appealed and moved for leave to amend accompanying the motion with an affidavit denying the execution of the note. The motion was denied. Held, that this was proper since issue was not taken before the justice upon the execution and delivery of the note and hence the defense offered by the amendment was inconsistent with their pleading.—Naftzker v. Lantz, 137 Mich. 441.

Garnishment proceedings below, see ante § 68 et seq.

¶ 941. An affidavit for garnishment in justice court having stated that it is based upon a judgment obtained in another justice court upon which judgment suit has been commenced, it is error upon appeal to the circuit court to permit the plaintiff to amend his affidavit by basing the garnishment upon the prior judgment without having started the second suit.—Heller v. People's Sav. Bank, 138 Mich. 192.

Procedure below in replevin, see ante § 77 et seq.

amend at the trial in the circuit is properly denied.—E. S. Knowles & Son v. Cavanaugh, 144 Mich. 260.

§ 222. Dismissal, discontinuance or abandonment.

Dismissal, discontinuance and nonsuit below, see ante §§ 118-120.
Special appearance to have proceedings set aside, see ante § 211.

Writ of error as proper remedy to review dismissal of appeal, see Appeal ¶¶ 87, 88.
Dismissals of appeals and judgments on appeal in forcible entry and summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry §§ 56, 57.

¶ 943. C. C. Rule 71, allowing discontinuance against one of defendants, does not apply to cases on appeal from justices' courts.—Anderson v. Robinson, 88 Mich. 407.

¶ 944. Discontinuance may be had in the circuit court in an action brought up on appeal, as well as if begun there.—Taylor v. Dansby, 42 Mich. 82.

¶ 945. Discontinuance as to a party incapable of contracting may be had on appeal from a justice as in an original suit; if in an action on a note defendants show that one of the original promisors is an infant, the plaintiff can accept the infancy as a fact and discontinue as against him.—Taylor v. Dansby, 42 Mich. 82.

¶ 946. Plaintiff may, upon the trial, submit to a nonsuit or voluntarily discontinue before trial, in a suit brought into the circuit court by appeal from a justice, as well as is in one brought there by original writ or declaration.—French v. Weise, 112 Mich. 586.

¶ 947. Permitting an appellant from a justice to dismiss his appeal rests in the discretion of the circuit judge.—Swantek v. Jarmoszki, 162 Mich. 617.

¶ 948. A defendant who has taken a general appeal from a justice's judgment against him has not the right to dismiss his appeal and thus prevent plaintiff from taking judgment larger than before.—Peterson v. Frey, 109 Mich. 689.

§ 223. ——Grounds and occasions and propriety.

Insufficiency of bond as ground, see also ante ¶ 840.
Waiver of grounds by appearance and submission to jurisdiction, see ante § 211.
Nonpayment of costs as ground for dismissal, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 14418.

¶ 949. An appeal may be dismissed by the circuit court, on ex parte motion, for want of payment of the entrance fee; but the better practice is to make an order nisi in the first instance.—Chaffee v. Soldan, 5 Mich. 242.

¶ 951. Comp. L. 1857, §§ 3859, 3860, authorizing the circuit court to dismiss an appeal from a justice if not prosecuted within a given time, do not apply where the appeal record has been essentially varied in the circuit court, as by the filing of a new declaration when the court had held the original deficient.—Fowler v. Pixley, 25 Mich. 513.

¶ 952. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 5455, How. St., § 7022, the circuit court may dismiss an appeal for want of prosecution only where there is a delay to prosecute within such time as shall be prescribed by the general rules of the court, and in the absence of such rules they have no general authority to dismiss at discretion.—Willis v. Gimbert, 27 Mich. 91.

¶ 953. A rule of the circuit (Calhoun Rule 100) which provides that appeals from justices' courts may be dismissed on motion where the cause has not been duly noticed for trial for some term not later than the fourth term after entry in the circuit does not apply to a case which has once been duly noticed within the time prescribed, even though it is not tried nor noticed for trial within four terms thereafter.—Willis v. Gimbert, 27 Mich. 91.

¶ 954. Under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 5451, 5453. How. St., §§ 7018, 7020, an appeal from a justice of the peace cannot be dismissed absolutely for defects and informalities in the affidavit and bond for appeal, where the appellant tenders a new and proper affidavit and bond.—People ex rel. Detroit & B. Plank Road Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 303.

¶ 955. The proper practice on a motion to dismiss an appeal for defects in the affidavit and appeal bond is to make an order nisi that the appeal be dismissed unless within a time specified a new and correct affidavit and bond be filed.—People ex rel. Detroit & B. Plank Road Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 303; Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Mich. 100.

¶ 957. Motion was made in the circuit court to dismiss an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace on the ground that it was not taken in due season, and also that the paper purporting to be a return was not made by the justice for that purpose. On these points there was room for dispute; but as it appeared that the appellees had entered their appearance in the circuit court generally, held, that the appeal ought not to be dismissed.—McCombs v. Johnson, 47 Mich. 592.

¶ 958. An appeal from justice's court will not be peremptorily dismissed on the ground that the affidavit for the appeal was sworn to before a notary who was an attorney in the case, but the defect may be cured by entering a rule nisi instead (Comp. L., 1871, § 5453).—Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Mich. 100.

¶ 959. Laws 1883, Act No. 148, requires one who takes an appeal from a Detroit justice to pay, on taking it, the fee due to the clerk of the circuit court. Held, in a case in which this was not done at that time, but where the fee was paid when the justice's return was made, that the appellate court had discretion to refuse to dismiss the case for noncompliance with the statute.—Preston v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 54 Mich. 242.

¶ 960. The statute (How. St., § 7019), which provides that no appeal shall be dismissed on the ground that the costs of the justice have not been paid, but in all cases the fact of a return having been made by a justice shall be conclusive evidence that such fees have been paid, relates to the fees of the justice, and not to the costs recovered by the appellee.—Swarthout v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 99 Mich. 347.

¶ 962. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 782, providing that where title to land shall come in question in justice's court, the defendant may give notice thereof under the general issue, and section 789, providing that if judgment in the circuit court be for the defendant and the presiding judge shall certify that the title to lands did not come in question, the defendant shall not recover costs but shall pay costs to the plaintiff, it was error to dismiss for want of jurisdiction on the ground that a title was not involved, an appeal from justice court in a trover case in which the defendant had removed his case to the circuit court under this law, as the statute contemplated that a trial upon the merits should be had in that court.—Taylor v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 122 Mich. 692.

¶ 963. Plaintiff recovered a judgment in a justice's court for an amount less than the sum he claimed. He perfected an appeal to the circuit court. Afterwards, the defendants took out a writ of certiorari, and in his return to the writ the justice stated that he had rendered judgment while outside the limits of his jurisdiction and before the day he had set down for giving his decision. Held, the justice had no jurisdiction to make the return after the appeal had been perfected, and the circuit court was in error in dismissing the plaintiff's appeal on the grounds stated in the return (1 Comp. L., 1897, § 918).—Swantek v. Jarmoszka, 159 Mich. 99.

¶ 964. Where defendants perfect an appeal to the circuit court from a judgment in the justice's court and complainant does not enter an appearance for nearly a year and then defendant promptly notices the case for trial, it is error to dismiss the appeal on motion of complainant since under C. C. Rule 13 either party may notice a case for trial and failure of one party to file notice is not sufficient ground to dismiss for want of prosecution.—Heintzen v. Gault, 174 Mich. 56.

¶ 965. C. L. 1897, § 924, providing that no appeal shall be dismissed because of a defective affidavit, has no application where there is no affidavit.—Hyman v. Kadrovach, 180 Mich. 370.

§ 224. ——Effect of dismissal or discontinuance.

See also post ¶ 1030.
Costs upon dismissal or discontinuance, see post § 247.

¶ 966. Discontinuance of a suit after appeal is not a discontinuance of the appeal within the meaning of Comp. L. 1871, § 5456, (How. St., § 7023), which provides that on the discontinuance or dismissal of an appeal a justice shall proceed as if it never had been taken.—Franks v. Fecheimer, 44 Mich. 177.

¶ 967. The discontinuance by a plaintiff in the circuit court of a suit appealed by him from justice's court, wherein defendant had judgment of no cause of action, unlike dismissal of the appeal itself, does not revive said judgment, so as to render it a bar to a suit for the same cause of action subsequently instituted by plaintiff in the circuit court.—French v. Weise, 112 Mich. 586.

Proceedings before justice after dismissal or discontinuance, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 14420.

¶ 968. Where plaintiff in replevin, after appealing from a justice, discontinues on paying costs (How. St., § 7014, Rule 26), defendant may waive return and elect to recover the value, and, without any interlocutory judgment, may notice the cause in the circuit court for an assessment of damages by a jury (How. St., §§ 8346-8348).—Soper v. Hawkins, 56 Mich. 527.

¶ 969. If a justice's judgment is for costs only, and is not upon the merits, and does not give defendant any substantial rights, the plaintiff, after appealing from it, may discontinue his suit, and on paying the costs can begin a new suit in the circuit court if the case involves the jurisdictional sum.—Franks v. Fecheimer, 44 Mich. 177.

¶ 970. An appeal from a justice's judgment, after being dismissed for nonpayment of the entry fee, may be reinstated in the discretion of the circuit judge upon satisfactory excuse for the default, and not withstanding the fact that a transcript of the judgment has been filed meanwhile and execution issued thereon.—Aldrich v. Clinton Circuit Judge, 49 Mich. 609.

§ 227. Calendaring cause and notice of trial.

Notice of trial below, see ante § 121.
Necessity of giving notice to one joint party who fails to execute appeal bond, see ante ¶ 838.
Failure to notice case for trial as ground for dismissal, see ante ¶ 964.
Noticing replevin cause for assessment of damages after discontinuance, see ante ¶ 968.
Calendar of causes and notice of trial in general, see Calendar.

¶ 971. Notice of trial, under R. S. 1846, where the party to be served was not a resident of the county, and appeared in the court below by agent or attorney, should be served on such agent or attorney. And where there was no agent or attorney in the case, notice must be sent to the party himself by mail, if his residence could be ascertained.—Chamberlain v. O'Keefe, 2 Mich. 357.

¶ 972. Under the statutes now in force, either party may notice an appeal for trial, and proceed to judgment in the same manner as in causes originally commenced in the circuit court.—Hoyt v. Mapes, 3 Mich. 522.

¶ 973. A party who undertakes to give notice of trial to an absentee under Circuit Court Rule 10 must show by his affidavit full compliance with every clause and condition of the rule.—People ex rel. Barrett v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247.

§ 228. Objections available and issues on appeal.

Issues below, see ante § 104 et seq.
Waiver of objections to improper adjournment, see ante § 115.
Objections to return or record and waiver thereof, see ante § 202.
Necessity of saving questions in justice's court, see ante § 206.
Sufficiency of assignments to raise objections, see ante § 207.
Amendments introducing new issues on appeal, see ante § 219.
Scope of hearing and review, see also post § 231.
Saving questions for review in courts of record, see Saving Questions.

¶ 974. Where one only of two defendants appealed from a judgment rendered against them by default, and afterwards both pleaded to the merits and went to trial in the appellate court, it was held that the objection that the appeal was taken by one only, if otherwise valid, was thereby waived.—Shaw v. Moser, 3 Mich. 71; Tower v. Lamb, 6 Mich. 362.

¶ 975. When, on an appeal, one pleads to a declaration purporting to be amended in pursuance of his own stipulation, he estops himself from afterward insisting that it was not an amendment in the appeal case, but the institution of a new suit.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

¶ 976. The issue made before a justice cannot be substantially changed in the circuit court on appeal.—Hatzenbuhler v. Lewis, 51 Mich. 585.

¶ 978. On appeal from a justice in an action of replevin the general issue will allow defendant to show that he defends in official character as special administrator (How. St., § 8339).—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 Mich. 330.

¶ 979. Where a cause has been tried in justice's court on an issue of fact, and an appeal is taken on an affidavit which is general, and relates only to the judgment on the merits, such appeal brings up only this issue of fact for trial; and the appellate court can take no notice of errors in the process, or erroneous decisions of the justice, in proceedings preliminary to such issue. If the appellant desire the circuit court to review the decisions of the justice on his objections to process, pleadings or proceedings anterior to the trial, he must set forth such objections specifically in his affidavit for appeal.—Chappee v. Thomas, 5 Mich. 53.

¶ 980. An oral declaration in a justice's court on all matters provable under the common counts in assumpsit, and especially for loss and damage sustained by reason of damaged and unwholesome meats and provisions heretofore sold by the defendant to the plaintiff, amplified by a bill of particulars showing the amount and kinds of such meats, is sufficient to admit evidence in the circuit court in support of such special claim for damages.—Copas v. Anglo-American Provision Co., 73 Mich. 541.

¶ 981. Plaintiff brought assumpsit in justice's court upon a written lease, but did not file with the justice the instrument sued upon. Defendant pleaded the general issue, with notice of set-off, recoupment, and failure of consideration, and, upon his appeal from an adverse judgment, added a notice that he would insist upon the further defense that his signature to the lease, if it was in fact signed by him, was obtained without consideration. Plaintiff upon the trial offered proof of the execution of the lease, and introduced it in evidence. Held, that evidence that defendant was induced to sign by fraudulent representations as to the character of the paper was competent under the pleadings.—Bly v. Brady, 113 Mich. 176.

¶ 982. Pleading to the merits upon appeal from justice court in replevin, waived a defect in the writ consisting of its use of initials instead of the full Christian names of plaintiffs.—Stever v. Brown, 119 Mich. 196.

¶ 983. Where, in an action by a physician to recover for services, begun in a justice's court, a notice of special defense is given of recoupment for the negligent manner in which plaintiff performed his services, such notice, and testimony thereunder, places in issue the negligence of plaintiff, and defendant is entitled to have instructions given applying the evidence of negligence to the right of plaintiff to recover.—Vandenberg v. Slagh, 150 Mich. 225. (Grant and Hooker, JJ., dissenting, upon the ground that there was no evidence from which the damages might be computed with certainty.)

¶ 984. The defense of illegality of contract and want of consideration cannot be proved under a plea of the general issue in a case in the circuit court appealed from the justice court under the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 78, § 17, providing that on filing the return of the justice the circuit court shall become possessed of the cause the same as if it had been originally commenced in the appellate court, and C. C. Rule 23, § 2, providing that any affirmative defense such as payment, release, satisfaction, discharge, license, fraud, duress, estoppel, statute of frauds, illegality, that an instrument is either void or voidable, want of consideration and any defense which by other affirmative matter seeks to avoid the legal effect or defeat plaintiff's action as stated in the declaration, and any ground which, if not raised by the pleadings, would be likely to take the other party by surprise, must be set forth in notice added to defendant's plea.—Dattner v. Weisz, 198 Mich. 367.

Propriety and scope of special appeal, see ante § 188.

¶ 985. Objections to the jurisdiction of a justice's court on the ground of defective service of process, were waived by filing a plea of the general issue in the circuit court, after the overruling of the special appeal.—Township of Ovid v. Haire, 133 Mich. 353.

¶ 986. By going to trial on the merits of a general appeal in the circuit, appellant waives any question brought up on special appeal assigning error in the failure of the justice to state seasonably on his docket the time and place of an adjournment, he having noted a request for adjournment without any ruling thereon and afterwards on the day requested having entered adjournment to a later day on which appellant was defaulted for nonappearance, and the circuit judge having ordered the special appeal dismissed and the case to stand for trial on the general appeal.—McCall v. Van Dusen, 141 Mich. 42.

¶ 987. A defendant in a justice's court who had taken a special appeal did not waive his right to ask for further amended returns by the justice because, before asking therefor, he had appeared generally in the circuit court.—Marr v. Cook, 147 Mich. 425.

§ 230. ——Disregard of formal defects or nonprejudicial errors.

Justices' proceedings viewed with liberality, see ante § 31.

Striking written disclosures in garnishment and compelling oral examination, see ante ¶ 301.

Irregularities in docket entries as to continuances and adjournments, see also ante § 143.

Error in allowing excessive costs, see ante § 163.

Consideration on certiorari of technical errors in proceedings before justice, see post § 273.

¶ 988. The court will overlook matters of form in proceedings before justices, and regard them according to the merits.—People v. Foote, 1 D. 102.

¶ 989. The judicial proceedings of justices should always be reviewed with some degree of liberality, and their judgments should never be set aside, or reversed, for defects in mere matters of form, where it sufficiently appears that the proceedings are substantially correct.—Howard v. People, 3 Mich. 207.

§ 231. Hearing and scope of review.

Appellate jurisdiction and powers, see ante § 189.
Issues to be considered, see also ante § 228.
Hearing and scope of review on certiorari, see post § 262.
Mandamus to compel court to hear and determine the appeal, see Mandamus.
Right to review and mode of review of forcible entry and summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 49.

¶ 990a. On appeal from a judgment on the merits in an attachment case it is error for the circuit court to reverse on questions raised before the justice by a motion to quash the writ without trying the merits.—Manhard v. Schott, 37 Mich. 234.

¶ 991. An appeal of one of two joint defendants in an action of assumpsit from a justice's court to the circuit court brings up the entire case for review; not merely the questions affecting the appellant's liability.—Strohschein v. Kranich, 157 Mich. 335.

¶ 992. A motion to quash a writ of attachment was overruled by a justice, and defendants went to trial on the merits and suffered judgment. On appeal the circuit court reversed this judgment for matters that fell within the motion to quash, and without trying the case on the merits. Held error; the court should have tried the case on the issue of fact.—Manhard v. Schott, 37 Mich. 234.

¶ 993. An appeal to the circuit court from proceedings before a justice under the fraudulent debtor act brings up the whole proceeding for review under How. St. § 8760.—Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45.

§ 232. ——Matters available on special appeal.

Propriety and scope of special appeal, see ante § 188.
Objections available on special appeal, see also post § 239.
Sufficiency of assignments to raise objections, see ante § 207.

¶ 994. On a special appeal questions of the admissibility of evidence are not subject to review.—Albert v. Sutton, 28 Mich. 2.

¶ 995. Questions of evidence cannot be made a ground of special appeal for reversing a justice's judgment without a trial at the circuit.—Manhard v. Schott, 37 Mich. 234.

¶ 996. Special appeal cannot be made to cover rulings during a trial, or concerning the summoning or swearing of witnesses.—McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 Mich. 426.

¶ 997. A justice's action in refusing to summon a second jury—the first having disagreed—and in proceeding ex parte to hear and determine the case without one, because the party demanding such second jury refused to pay the fees therefor, cannot be reviewed on special appeal.—McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 Mich. 426.

¶ 998. Special appeal does not lie to review errors that do not involve some decision, express or implied, in the exercise of jurisdiction. Comp. L. 1871, § 5432, How. St. § 6999.—Maxwell v. Deens, 46 Mich. 35.

¶ 999. Irregular action of the justice not going to his jurisdiction cannot be reviewed on special appeal.—Webster v. Williams, 69 Mich. 135.

¶ 1000. The justice's action allowing an amended declaration to be filed after submission of the cause so as to set out an assignment to plaintiff of the debt sued on cannot be reviewed on special appeal.—Webster v. Williams, 69 Mich. 135.

¶ 1001. On special appeal the appellant is not confined to the objections made before the justice; it is sufficient if his objections are set forth in the affidavit for appeal. If the objection is one which goes to the jurisdiction the party is not obliged to appear before the justice to make it, but may bring it before the circuit court either by special appeal or by certiorari.—Wright v. Russell, 19 Mich. 346.

¶ 1002. A special appeal brings up only questions of law relating to the jurisdiction to proceed before the justice which have been passed upon by him when properly brought to his attention; and, if the objections have in any manner been waived, the circuit court cannot entertain them.—Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258.

¶ 1003. Comp. L. 1897, § 903, permitting the appellant from judgments in justice's courts to raise by special appeal any objection to the process, pleading, or proceedings, and to the "decision of the justice thereon," which would not be allowed to be made on the trial of the appeal, limits the questions to be reviewed to those actually decided by the justice or reasonably involved in his action.—Courtis v. Garrison, 148 Mich. 226.

§ 233. ——Intendments and presumptions on record and return.

Presumptions as to return of service of attachment, see also ante § 60.
As to competency of person selected to serve summons, see ante ¶ 149.
Presumption that execution issued at request of plaintiff, see ante ¶ 727.
Contents and sufficiency of return or record, see ante § 201.

¶ 1004. An alias summons issued in an action in justice's court cannot be treated as the commencement of another action where the record, though stating the time it is returnable, fails to state when it was issued as required by statute, and a transcript judgment based thereon would be void and the defect appearing on the face of the record is available upon appeal.—Purdy v. Law, 132 Mich. 622.

¶ 1005. Upon appeal to the supreme court a presumption arises from the issuance of a long summons that defendant is a resident of the county in which the justice resides (How. St. § 6830).—Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 344.

¶ 1006. When the affidavit for special appeal states the time of making a motion the denial of which is complained of, and the return shows the motion, but does not specify the time when it was made, the motion will be presumed to have been made at the time stated in the affidavit.—Brown v. Kelley, 20 Mich. 27.

¶ 1008. Where, on special appeal, a justice's return shows that he had adjourned the case, but does not show that he had done so without proper application and evidence, it is presumed that the adjournment was proper.—Deitz v. Groesbeck, 32 Mich. 303.

¶ 1010. Where both parties appear in a justice's court, and the docket shows the nature of the action to be such that it could be maintained by introducing a written instrument, and then recites that the proofs and allegations of parties were heard, it will be presumed that those proofs were sufficient to justify the judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff.—Stegeman v. Fraser, 161 Mich. 35.

¶ 1011. Where a justice's return to an appeal to the circuit court fails to show whether the pleadings before him were written or oral, it will be presumed that they were oral, since the statute (How. St. § 7008) requires him to give copies of the pleadings, if in writing.—Kerr v. Bennett, 109 Mich. 546.

§ 234. ——Verity, conclusiveness and effect of return.

Conflict between return and docket entries, see also ante ¶ 649.
Amendment or completion of return, see ante § 203.
Hearing confined to claim as stated in the return, see also ante ¶ 990.

¶ 1012. On special appeal upon all questions properly raised the justice's return must be taken as true.—Kidd v. Dougherty, 59 Mich. 240.

¶ 1013. Where a justice in his return to a special appeal states a ruling made by him without giving the ground on which it was made, it is error for the circuit court to assume that the ruling was made upon any particular and erroneous ground when another and admissible ground is equally consistent with the return.—Albert v. Sutton, 28 Mich. 2.

¶ 1014. Where a justice's return states that "plaintiff declared on * * * one accepted draft (reciting it) on file in this court," etc., it is construed merely as an allegation of the declaration, without any return as to the truth or falsehood of it, and as being no such proof that the note has been filed with the justice as will dispense with the proof of its execution.—Colbath v. Jones, 28 Mich. 280.

¶ 1016. That a plaintiff in justice's court has a Christian name other than the initials by which he sues is not established, on special appeal, by the return of the justice that he has a certain name corresponding to those initials by which he sued, where there is nothing in the proceedings themselves from which the fact could be judicially ascertained to sustain his special return.—Hinkle v. Collins, 113 Mich. 105.

§ 235. ——Evidence in aid of jurisdictional showing.

Nature and construction of justice's jurisdiction and proceedings, see ante § 10.
Facts coming to justice's knowledge after trial, as part of return, see ante ¶ 844.

¶ 1017. On appeal from a justice to impeach the jurisdiction of the justice founded on an attachment against defendant as a nonresident, where a nonresident defendant claims that certain goods shipped by such defendant into this state were ordered by plaintiff for the sole purpose of attaching them and thus obtaining jurisdiction over defendant, evidence that plaintiff, after his cause of action arose, had an opportunity of attaching other goods of defendant shipped to the same point and of more value than those which were attached, is competent as having a tendency in rebuttal.—Copas v. Anglo-American Provision Co., 73 Mich. 541.

¶ 1018. Where in an action appealed to the circuit court upon a justice's judgment it appeared that the justice's summons was not served by an officer, the justice could not be permitted to testify orally that the service was by a competent person as required by How. St. § 6827, or to indorse the summons, or to amend the docket entry of judgment accordingly.—King v. Bates, 80 Mich. 367.

¶ 1019. Where the defendant in a cause appealed by him from justice's court appears in the circuit, and objects to the court's taking jurisdiction because no declaration is returned, plaintiff may be permitted to show by the affidavit of the justice, without formal motion, that the original declaration has been lost, and that a declaration attached to the affidavit is, to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief, the same as that filed in justice's court.—Carver v. Smith, 113 Mich. 207.

Evidence below, see ante §§ 126, 127.
Presumption that justice had sufficient evidence where appeal is from circuit, see Appeal ¶ 1580.
Admissibility on appeal of testimony of witness before justice where witness has since died, see Evidence § 338.
Discretion to control cross-examination on appeal as to matters occurring before justice, see Examination of Witnesses § 38, ¶ 192.

¶ 1020. It is improper to show to a jury trying an appeal case by the testimony of the justice how the trial was conducted in the justice court, especially where his testimony does not tend to prove or disprove any issue on trial.—Salmer v. Hicks, 188 Mich. 391.

¶ 1021. A jury trying an appeal case should not consider or be influenced by the previous trial and its result in the court from which the appeal was taken.—Salmer v. Hicks, 188 Mich. 391.

¶ 1022. The affidavit for a special appeal from a justice's court is to bring the case into the circuit court and indicate the questions for consideration there, and it is not evidence for any other purpose than to secure a return.—Lymburner v. Jenkinson, 50 Mich. 488.

¶ 1023. On the trial of an appeal from justice's court it is not error to refuse to permit the return on appeal to be introduced in evidence; for the judgment below is not evidence of what plaintiff claims.—Ockenfels v. Moeller, 79 Mich. 314.

¶ 1024. An oral admission made in a justice's court after issue joined, and without mistake or misapprehension, is conclusive against the party making it for the purposes of that particular trial, but it does not preclude an appeal, on the trial of which it would be the subject of evidence like an oral confession anywhere else.—Morrison v. Riker, 26 Mich. 385.

¶ 1025. The disclosure in garnishment taken before the justice and reduced to writing is competent evidence on the appeal. Further evidence may be taken in the circuit court in corroboration of the garnishee's statement before the justice, but no contradictory evidence is allowed. The garnishee may be examined on appeal for a fuller disclosure, and may there make corrections in his statements before the justice.—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 10.

¶ 1026. Where the garnishee, on his examination before the justice, admitted that he had in his hands moneys collected for defendant, but stated that he had been informed that these moneys had been assigned before service of the garnishee process, he was entitled, on appeal, to introduce evidence to prove the assignment.—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 10.

¶ 1027. A garnishee's disclosure filed in justice's court, or the justice's written minutes of his disclosure (How. St. § 8036), cannot be contradicted upon appeal by the oral testimony of the justice or of any one else as to what he disclosed; nor can it be so supplemented as to increase the liability admitted thereby.—Isabelle v. Iron Cliffs Co., 57 Mich. 120.

§ 237. Instructions.

See also ante ¶ 983.
General law as to instructions, see Instructions.
Instruction as to right to nominal damages where costs depend thereon, see Damages §§ 415, 417.

¶ 1028. In a suit for work and labor where one defendant admitted liability, and the suit was based upon a joint liability, the court erred in not instructing that if the jury found no joint liability they must render a verdict for defendants; 1897 C. C. Rule 27 (c), to prevent abatement for misjoinder has no application to cases originating in justices' courts.—Wright v. Reinelt, 118 Mich. 638.

§ 238. Decision and judgment.

Reversal of judgment on note where presentment and notice of nonpayment not alleged, see ante ¶ 377.
Excessive costs as ground for reversal, see ante § 163.
Failure to file security for costs as ground for reversal, see ante § 164.
Validity of judgment where return on appeal insufficient, see also ante § 201.
Dismissal or nonsuit on appeal, see ante § 222 et seq.
Inclusion of costs in judgment, see post § 243.
In forcible entry, see Forcible Entry §§ 56, 57.
Appeal from judgment, see Appeal.
Regarding amendments as made on review of circuit judgment in supreme court, see Appeal § 369.
Record proper [judgment roll] on appeal from circuit, see Appeal § 100.
Certiorari to review action of the circuit, see Certiorari § 13.

¶ 1029. Where a case has been tried before a justice and judgment rendered for defendant for the excess of his set-off above plaintiff's demand, and plaintiff, having appealed, fails to appear and bring the cause to trial in the circuit court, defendant cannot have the cause tried in the circuit, and can take in the circuit a judgment only of nonsuit or of discontinuance; he cannot have a judgment for his set-off.—People ex rel. Stange v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 22 Mich. 408.

¶ 1030. An appeal from a justice was dismissed for being taken too late. A special appeal was then allowed on a showing that the judgment had been fraudulently antedated, and as it appeared on this appeal that the judgment itself was void for being entered more than four days after the hearing, a perpetual stay of proceedings was granted; approved.—Hall v. Howard, 39 Mich. 219.

¶ 1033. On appeal from a judgment rendered where balance of set-off exceeds $300, Comp. L. 1871, § 5322 (How. St., § 6887), judgment must be such as the justice could have given.—Cross v. Eaton, 48 Mich. 184.

¶ 1034. Reversal of a justice's judgment for reasons appearing in the affidavit for appeal is not substantially different from reversal for errors in the action of the justice, since the errors must be averred in the affidavit.—Sager v. Shutts, 53 Mich. 116.

¶ 1035. Although the circuit court is limited to the justice's jurisdiction so far as the amount of the original claim is concerned, interest from the date of the judgment below is recoverable, and this without amending the ad damnum clause.—Stanley v. Anderson, 107 Mich. 384.

§ 239. ——Upon special appeal.

Propriety and scope of special appeal, see ante § 188.

¶ 1036. Where the record shows jurisdiction in the justice, the court properly overrules a special appeal.—Rock Island Plow Co. v. Smith, 162 Mich. 180.

¶ 1037. The fact that plaintiff's attorney did not prove his authority is ground for reversing a justice's judgment for plaintiff, if neither party appeared, and the objection may be taken by special appeal.—Woodbridge v. Robinson, 49 Mich. 228.

§ 240. ——On appeal in replevin.

Judgment below in replevin, see ante § 83.
Imprisonment of judgment defendant, see also ante ¶ 359.

¶ 1038. Where a replevin suit appealed from a justice's court is regularly reached on the trial call in the circuit court, and plaintiff does not appear, the statutes, Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10675, 10680, and Act No. 246, Pub. Acts 1899, are not unconstitutional as depriving plaintiff's surety of his property without due process of law by reason of the fact that they permit defendant to recover judgment against the surety for his special lien and interest in the property.—Anderson v. Henderson, 167 Mich. 425.

¶ 1039. Where a replevin suit is appealed from a justice's court, and is regularly noticed for trial and placed on the calendar of the circuit court, and plaintiff does not appear upon the call of said case, the defendant may take judgment against the plaintiff's surety for his special lien and interest in the property without giving a fourteen-day notice to plaintiff of assessment of damages, section 10681, Comp. L. 1897, notwithstanding.—Anderson v. Henderson, 167 Mich. 425.

¶ 1040. Where a replevin suit appealed from a justice court has been regularly noticed for trial in the circuit court, and placed on the calendar, and plaintiff fails to appear when said case is called, the defendant can take judgment against the surety for his special lien and interest in said property under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10675, 10680, and Act 246, Pub. Acts 1899.—Anderson v. Henderson, 167 Mich. 425.

¶ 1041. A surety signed plaintiff's bond in a replevin suit. A writ was issued and returned without service. Thereafter a new affidavit was made and a new writ issued, the old bond being amended by inserting new dates therein. Plaintiff had judgment in the justice's court. Upon appeal by defendant to the circuit court plaintiff did not appear, and judgment was given for defendant for his special lien and interest in the property involved. The trial court was unable to find whether the surety consented to the use of the old bond in the new suit, but did find from the affidavits that the surety knew before the cause was determined in the justice's court and after judgment was rendered there, that the cause was proceeding in reliance upon the bond filed. Held, the surety was estopped to assert his nonliability on the bond.—Anderson v. Henderson, 167 Mich. 425.

¶ 1042. Jurisdiction of appeal in replevin holds, though evidence on appeal shows value above $100, where affidavit for the writ stated value below that sum.—Dinnen v. Baxter, 18 Mich. 457.

¶ 1042a. A defendant in replevin in justice court who obtained judgment for a return of the property and for damages for its detention, had the right upon appeal by plaintiff to the circuit court, to waive a return of the property and obtain a judgment for its value.—McCabe v. Loonsfoot, 119 Mich. 323.

§ 241. ——Judgment against sureties on appeal bond for costs.

Liability and actions on appeal bonds, see post V, D.
Liability on certiorari bonds, see post § 278.
Costs upon appeal, see post § 243 et seq.
Including surety in judgment for costs on certiorari, see post § 272.

¶ 1043. A surety for costs in justice's court may be included in the judgment rendered on appeal against his principal (Comp. L. 1871, § 6133, How. St. § 7663).—Boatz v. Berg, 51 Mich. 8.

Reviewableness of decision of circuit court rendered on appeal or certiorari, see Appeal § 25.
Finality of circuit judgment on appeal or certiorari for purpose of writ of error, see Appeal § 33.

¶ 1044. In trover against two defendants in justice court, a judgment on directed verdict on appeal against one of the defendants did not discharge the other, as in trover judgment may pass against one or more defendants.—Cunningham v. O'Connor, 136 Mich. 293.

§ 243. Costs on appeal and inclusion in judgment.

Costs below, see ante § 159 et seq.
Replevin bond as covering costs recovered on appeal, see ante § 85.
Power of circuit court to require security for costs, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 14417.

¶ 1045. Costs of appeal are to be determined in view of the facts appearing on the trial, and none but the judge who tried the appeal can award them.—Steinhauser v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 463.

¶ 1046. It seems to be error to render distinct judgments for damages and costs on the merits, and for costs on special appeal.—Lymburner v. Jenkinson, 50 Mich. 488.

¶ 1047. On appeal from taxation of costs in justice court, it was not the duty of the clerk to disregard the judgment as to costs, but it was his duty to tax them in accordance with such judgment.—Schmidt v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 136 Mich. 658.

§ 244. ——Parties entitled or liable.

Judgment against surety for costs, see ante § 241.
Liability in circuit for costs dependent on title to land having been involved, see Costs § 16.

¶ 1048. The provisions of Laws 1867, Act No. 58, in regard to costs in appealed cases, to the "prevailing party," do not change the law as to who may have costs.—Dewey v. Johnson, 16 Mich. 490.

¶ 1049. Under the statute costs in appeal cases from justices are not necessarily given to defendant where plaintiff recovers nominal damages.—Wyatt v. Herring, 90 Mich. 581.

¶ 1050. In case of appeal the security for costs in a justice's court is liable for the costs in the appellate court.—Dunn v. Sutliff, 1 Mich. 24.

¶ 1051. On reversal in circuit of justice's judgment against a garnishee the latter has costs.—Lorman v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 33 Mich. 65.

¶ 1052. Where the assignee of the principal debtor, having been called upon to maintain his right to money alleged to be due from the garnishees to the principal defendant, successfully appeals from an adverse decision by the justice, costs cannot be taxed against him in the circuit court.—Winne v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 74 Mich. 329.

§ 245. ——Discretion of judge.

¶ 1053. The question of costs on appeal from justices' courts is largely within the discretion of the circuit court.—Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258; Wyatt v. Herring, 90 Mich. 581.

¶ 1054. Costs on appeals from justices' courts are awarded in the discretion of the circuit court under the statutes, and such discretion is not reviewable.—Mitchell v. Shuert, 16 Mich. 444; Hewitt v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 44 Mich. 153; Pettibone v. Maclem, 45 Mich. 381; Smith v. Hubbard, 46 Mich. 306.

¶ 1056. Costs on special appeal from a justice's judgment are discretionary, though the judgment is set aside for jurisdictional errors averred in the affidavit.—Sager v. Shutts, 53 Mich. 116.

¶ 1057. The costs which are in the discretion of the court under How. St. § 7026, which gives it power in appeal cases to award the costs, in whole or in part, to either party, as it may deem just, have reference to the costs allowed the prevailing party by How. St. § 9004.—Galbraith v. McCollum, 98 Mich. 219.

¶ 1058. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 930, the circuit court has discretion in awarding costs on a trial held before him in a case which had originated in the justice's court but which had been reversed by the supreme court.—Fowles v. Rupert, 143 Mich. 246.

¶ 1059. The award of costs in cases originating in justices' courts being discretionary, costs were not allowed either party upon the affirmance, in favor of a mutual benefit insurance company, of a judgment in a case originally begun against it before a justice, where the company's conduct in relation to showing its by-laws had not been just.—Russell v. North American Ben. Ass'n, 116 Mich. 699.

§ 246. ——Amount and items.

Scope of motion to retax costs allowed on appeal from justice, see Costs § 76.

¶ 1060. The costs that may be awarded on appeal are not governed by Comp. L. 1871, § 7388, limiting, in certain cases, recovery of costs to the damages; but by section 5459.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

¶ 1061. On an appeal in an action for assault and battery, where plaintiff recovers less than $50, the court may award him full costs.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

§ 247. ——Costs upon dismissal or discontinuance.

Dismissal, discontinuance or abandonment of appeal, see ante § 222 et seq.

Right to costs on discontinuance in circuit after appeal taken, see also Costs ¶ 75.

¶ 1064. On granting mandamus to compel dismissal of an appeal from a justice who had no jurisdiction, the circuit court was directed to dismiss without costs to defendant, who did not raise a jurisdictional question until after appeal to the circuit court. Bostwick v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 115 Mich. 363.

¶ 1065. Under How. St. § 7021, providing that upon dismissal or discontinuance of an appeal from justice's court, judgment shall be entered in appellee's favor for costs, an order permitting appellant to discontinue upon payment of part only of the costs is unauthorized; it not appearing that appellee consented to it; but the proper procedure is to move to set it aside, and not in the first instance to move for the full costs allowable by statute.—Swegles v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 110 Mich. 631.

D. LIABILITIES ON APPEAL BONDS.

§ 248. In general.

Liability and actions on attachment bonds, see ante § 67.

Judgment against sureties on appeal bonds, see ante § 241.

Liability on certiorari bonds, see post § 278.

Liability on appeal bonds generally, see Appeal, XVI.

¶ 1066. The surety on an appeal bond is not liable beyond the bond's penalty.—Zeigler v. Henry, 77 Mich. 480.

¶ 1067. A judgment against a surety in a bond given on an appeal from justice's court cannot exceed the penalty of the bond.—Vreeland v. Loeckner, 99 Mich. 98.

¶ 1068. The liability of a surety in a bond on appeal from justice's court cannot be extended by a circuit judge by a stay of execution made for that express purpose and upon his own motion.—Gilderaleeve v. Kent Circuit Judge, 97 Mich. 606.

¶ 1069. Unreasonable delay on the appellee's part to the surety's prejudice would protect the latter from an action on a bond on appeal.—Weiss v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 50 Mich. 158.

¶ 1070. Sureties in an appeal bond are not bound by their principal's consent to an amendment increasing the ad damnum clause in the declaration, and are discharged by such a radical change made in the case without their consent.—Evers v. Sager, 28 Mich. 47.

¶ 1071. The surety on the appeal bond is not released by a discontinuance which the circuit court may allow; it is contemplated by the bond.—Taylor v. Dansby, 42 Mich. 82.

¶ 1072. A levy on real estate in case of a return of nulla bona upon an execution from justice's court is not prerequisite to a suit upon the appeal bond.—Nowlin v. Tibbits, 44 Mich. 77.

¶ 1073. A justice's neglect to make return within ten days after an appeal is perfected does not preclude a remedy on the appeal bond; the default in prosecuting the appeal is that of the appellant and not of the appellee.—Nowlin v. Tibbits, 44 Mich. 77.

¶ 1074. A surety in a joint appeal bond is released by a judgment rendered on the appeal against one only of the joint defendants, unless the other was an infant, or otherwise incapable, so that his undertaking was regarded as a mere nullity.—Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85.

¶ 1075. A justice's judgment against a husband and wife on a joint note was appealed by them jointly, and on the appeal judgment was rendered in the wife's favor for costs, and against the husband alone for damages. The record did not show that the obligation sued on was one the wife could not make. Held, that an action on the appeal bond against the husband and a surety could not be maintained.—Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85.

¶ 1076. On appeal from a justice's judgment, the penalty of the appeal bond was for the same amount as the judgment. On motion of the appellee, an order was made in the circuit court that the appeal be dismissed unless a new and sufficient bond be filed within ten days. The order was not complied with, and the appeal was dismissed. After an execution, issued on the justice's judgment, had been returned unsatisfied, the appellee brought suit on the appeal bond. Held, that the appellee, in moving to dismiss the appeal in default of a new and sufficient bond, did not release his rights under the original bond until the order of the court for the filing of such new bond had been complied with, and that he was not estopped from bringing suit on the original bond.—Hascall v. Brooks, 105 Mich. 383.

§ 249. Enforcement of bond and procedure thereon.

Entry of judgment on appeal bond as part of the judgment, due process of law, see Constitutional Law § 145.

Time to prosecute bond or recognizance after appeal dismissed or discontinued, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 21; Comp. L. 1915, § 14421.

¶ 1077. An action of debt lies upon a bond given on appeal from before a justice, where the effect of the appeal is to release an attachment lien or to delay the levy of execution.—Bushey v. Raths, 45 Mich. 181.

¶ 1078. Until taxation of costs an execution does not become "legally issuable" within the meaning of Comp. L. 1871, § 5462 (How. St. § 7029), which forbids a levy on the property of the surety on the appeal bond unless the execution is issued within thirty days from the time when it shall be "legally issuable."—Weiss v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 50 Mich. 158.

¶ 1079. Evidence in an action in the circuit court upon a purported undertaking given to the plaintiff in an action in the justice court in which he was defendant, held sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court that the judgment of the justice had been reversed by the circuit court upon the sole ground that no legal undertaking or security for costs had been furnished.—Patek v. Ryskewiecz, 189 Mich. 344.

VI. CERTIORARI IN CIVIL CASES.

§ 250. In general; nature and grounds.

Effect upon attachment lien of suing out certiorari, see ante § 65.

Review on certiorari to circuit court as collateral attack of justice's judgment, see ante ¶ 655.

As distinguished from writ of error, see also post ¶ 1161.

Judgments reviewable by certiorari, see post § 252.

Scope of review on certiorari, see post § 262 et seq.

Disregard of technical and harmless errors, see post § 273.

General law as to certiorari, see Certiorari.

Certiorari to review circuit court proceedings on appeal or certiorari from justice's court, see Certiorari.
Direct writ from supreme court, see Certiorari § 24.
Power of commissioners to allow certiorari to issue, see Courts § 86.
Provisions as to certiorari to justices' courts, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, §§ 22-41; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14422-14441.

¶ 1081. One who resorts to certiorari for the review of a justice's judgment, does so at the risk of losing a trial on the merits if he fails to establish error.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13.

¶ 1082. Certiorari is not the appropriate remedy to review a judgment rendered by the justice's court in a case where the judgment was void for want of jurisdiction because process had been served on the wrong person, since the return would not disclose the true facts.—Wilcke v. Duross, 144 Mich. 243.

¶ 1083. Certiorari is the proper and direct way to raise the question of the right of a justice of the peace to hear and give judgment on a cause adjourned to a certain time without waiting one hour for the defendant to appear.—Hoban v. Citizens' Tel. Co., 176 Mich. 596.

§ 251. Appeal or certiorari as appropriate remedy.

Appeals from justices' courts, see ante V.

¶ 1084. Appeal, not certiorari, is the appropriate remedy for reviewing cases that stand upon facts, or where the defects are not substantial.—Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617; Erie Preserving Co. v. Witherspoon, 49 Mich. 377; Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472; Westbrook v. Blood, 50 Mich. 443; Galloway v. Corbitt, 52 Mich. 460; Morrison v. Emsley, 53 Mich. 564; Gray v. Willcox, 56 Mich. 58; Mann v. Tyler, 56 Mich. 564; Garvin v. Gorman, 63 Mich. 221.

¶ 1085. Where a case before a justice is to be determined on disputed facts, the party dissatisfied with the judgment should appeal it to the circuit court for trial on the facts, instead of seeking a reversal upon certiorari on technical grounds without investigating the merits. The writ should not issue unless the defects are substantial.—Erie Preserving Co. v. Witherspoon, 49 Mich. 377; Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617; Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472; Westbrook v. Blood, 50 Mich. 443; Galloway v. Corbitt, 52 Mich. 460; Morrison v. Emsley, 53 Mich. 564; Gray v. Willcox, 56 Mich. 58; Mann v. Tyler, 56 Mich. 564; Garvin v. Gorman, 63 Mich. 221.

¶ 1086. Certiorari and not special appeal is the proper method for reviewing mere irregularities in a justice's proceedings.—Deitz v. Groesbeck, 32 Mich. 308.

¶ 1087. If a defendant's case requires a new trial and an amendment of the pleadings, appeal, not certiorari, is the proper remedy.—Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617.

¶ 1088. The erroneous admission of a deposition in a trial before a justice is ground for appeal rather than remedy by certiorari.—Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472.

¶ 1089. An appeal, and not a writ of certiorari, is the proper procedure for reviewing the judgment of a justice in a case in which he has excluded testimony.—Morrison v. Emsley, 53 Mich. 564.

¶ 1090. Appeal rather than certiorari is the appropriate remedy to review errors committed on the trial of the case.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13; Forbes Lithograph Mfg. Co. v. Winter, 107 Mich. 116; Computing Scale Co. v. Tripp, 138 Mich. 602.

¶ 1091. The ruling of a justice of the peace in allowing a peremptory challenge may be reviewed by certiorari, although the remedy by appeal is ample and better in all cases where jurisdiction of the cause was obtained by the justice.—Eldridge v. Hubbell, 119 Mich. 61.

§ 252. Judgments and proceedings reviewable.

Decisions reviewable by appeal, see ante § 185.
Certiorari in criminal cases, see Indictment §§ 668, 669.

¶ 1092. The statutory writ lies only to review judgments rendered by justices in the exercise of original jurisdiction.—Warner v. Porter, 2 D. 358.

¶ 1093. Certiorari is a proper proceeding for getting rid of a justice's void judgment in garnishment.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Hunt, 39 Mich. 469.

¶ 1094. Garnishment proceedings may be brought up from before a justice on a writ of certiorari sued out by the defendant in the principal case, if the latter's rights are cut off without his having an opportunity for a hearing.—Wilson v. Bartholomew, 45 Mich. 41.

¶ 1095. Under How. St., § 7031, certiorari lies to review a justice's judgment dismissing a writ of replevin for want of a sufficient description of the property, and ordering a return, the description being sufficient in law and the error therefore substantial.—Proper v. Conkling, 67 Mich. 244.

§ 253. ——Effect of pendency of appeal.

Effect of appeal from justice's court generally, see ante § 208.

Jurisdiction to make return to certiorari after appeal perfected, see also ante ¶ 963.

¶ 1096. After a garnishee in justice's court has appealed from a judgment against him, certiorari will not lie at the suit of the principal defendant to review the garnishment proceedings.—Lichtenberg v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 106 Mich. 38.

¶ 1097. Where an appeal is taken from a justice to the circuit court, and the justice has filed his return, the judgment of the justice no longer exists and cannot be reviewed by certiorari.—Swantek v. Jarmoszki, 162 Mich. 617.

§ 254. Propriety of common-law certiorari.

¶ 1098. The common-law writ of certiorari will not lie to review the decision of a justice of the peace on a plea to the jurisdiction where no appeal is taken and no notice of an intention to apply for a writ of certiorari is given within five days after the rendition of the judgment as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 936, though the party had notice of the judgment in season to transfer the case by the statutory method.—Jacobs v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 132 Mich. 55.

§ 255. Procedure for writ.

¶ 1099. The statutory writ of certiorari is special, and the proceedings to obtain a review thereby must be strictly complied with.—Sherwood v. Arnold, 80 Mich. 270.

§ 256. Notice and affidavits and showing and allowance of writ.

Affidavits for appeal, see ante § 196.

Return on certiorari limited to matters specified in affidavit, see post § 259.

Review restricted to matters assigned in affidavit, see post § 264.

Conflict between return and affidavits of error, see post § 269.

Provisions as to notice and affidavits, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, §§ 23, 24; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14423, 14424.

Service and filing of affidavit, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 14428.

¶ 1100. Certiorari is not a writ of right, and can only issue on satisfying the circuit court commissioner or circuit judge that an error has been committed (Comp. L. 1871, § 5466, How. St. § 7033).—Young v. Kelsey, 46 Mich. 414.

¶ 1102. The party moving for certiorari must make out a clear case.—Marquette & Pacific Rolling Mill Co. v. Morgan, 41 Mich. 296; Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 617.

¶ 1103. The only question raised by a general assignment that the justice erred in rendering judgment as he did is whether there is any evidence from which the conclusion of the justice may be drawn.—Parsons v. Dickinson, 23 Mich. 56.

¶ 1104. An affidavit complaining only of the insufficiency of evidence to support the verdict, though sufficient for a general appeal, furnishes no proper basis for the writ of certiorari. Such proceedings gave the circuit court no jurisdiction to review the cause upon either facts or law, and therefore no authority to alter the justice's judgment, which should have been affirmed, or the proceedings dismissed with costs.—McGraw v. Schwab, 23 Mich. 13.

¶ 1105. Where neither the affidavit for a writ of certiorari, nor the return of the justice, the latter purporting to give all the evidence in the case, shows that any objection was taken to either evidence or proceedings on the trial, or that any question of law was raised, and the only error complained of in the affidavit is that the testimony demanded a different verdict from that rendered, though in fact it did warrant the jury in finding the verdict which they actually gave, it was held that no question of law was presented by the proceedings for the circuit court to pass upon.—McGraw v. Schwab, 23 Mich. 13.

¶ 1106. Where affidavit recites the evidence introduced, and alleges for error simply "that the justice of the peace erred in rendering judgment in said cause on the evidence introduced therein," the allegation is too indefinite as to the sufficiency of the evidence to raise any question for review.—Lake Superior Building Co. v. Thompson, 32 Mich. 298.

¶ 1107. Before the writ issues the affidavit to procure the allowance thereof, and the allowance of the same indorsed thereon, must be filed with the clerk of the circuit court (Sess. L. 1841, pp. 112, 113, How. St. § 7037); and if the writ is issued before such affidavit and allowance are filed the cause will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—People ex rel. Markham v. Cass Circuit Judges, 2 D. 116.

¶ 1108. In an affidavit for a certiorari errors were alleged: 1st. That the justice erred in refusing to dismiss the cause for defective service of process. 2d. That the court erred in rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff against defendant. 3d. That the judgment should have been rendered in favor of defendant. Held, that the second and third allegations of error were not sufficiently specific to raise any question on the merits, and must be understood as referring only to the decision of the justice on the motion to dismiss.—Fowler v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 7 Mich. 79.

¶ 1109. Where plaintiff in certiorari relies upon the fact that the township clerk's certificate to the copy of a chattel mortgage offered in evidence was defective, and that for that reason the mortgage was erroneously received, he should set out the form of the certificate in his affidavit and obtain a return thereon.—Rodman v. Clark, 81 Mich. 466.

¶ 1110. Certiorari will not issue to set aside a judgment in justice's court upon which a transcript has been taken to the circuit court, on the ground that defendant's attorney had promised to appeal the case, but had failed to do so, and on the claim that the judgment is void because defendant's wife was permitted to testify, contrary to Comp. L. 1897, § 10213, where the affidavit of merits does not show that the facts constituting his defense were fully and fairly stated to counsel, nor does it appear what testimony was given by the wife.—West v. Parkinson, 130 Mich. 401.

¶ 1111. Where an affidavit indorsed with allowance of certiorari has been filed and the writ issued, it cannot serve as a basis for a second writ.—Sherwood v. Arnold, 80 Mich. 270.

Release of attachment lien by giving bond on certiorari, see ante § 65.
Bond on appeal, see ante § 198.
Bond as part of the return, see post ¶ 1122.
Liability on certiorari bonds, see post § 278.
Provisions as to bond, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVIII, §§ 25-27; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14425-14427.

¶ 1112. A justice of the peace is justified in refusing to make return to certiorari under How. St., § 7038, where plaintiff fails to serve his bond on the justice within ten days after the issue of the writ as required by How. St., § 7038.—Sherwood v. Arnold, 80 Mich. 270.

§ 258. Form, sufficiency and service of writ.

Amendment of docket after allowance of writ, see ante ¶ 634.
Writ as part of the return, see post ¶ 1122.
Service of writ on Sunday, see Sunday.
Provisions as to service of writ, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 14429.

¶ 1113. The fact that a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace was made in duplicate, one copy being served on the justice and one being filed in the clerk's office, does not make the proceeding invalid.—Monroe v. Reynells, 131 Mich. 259.

¶ 1114. A writ of certiorari that is to be served within ten days is ineffective if ten days pass between the day of its issue and the date of its service (How. St., § 7038).—Morrison v. Emsley, 53 Mich. 564.

§ 259. Return and contents thereof.

Return or record on appeal, see ante § 201.
Bond as prerequisite to return, see ante § 257.
Right to make return to certiorari after appeal perfected, see ante ¶ 963.
Only such errors available as are shown by the return, see post § 264.
Construction and effect of return, see post § 266 et seq.
Return not a bill of exceptions, see post ¶ 1153.
Evidence to contradict, vary or explain return, see post § 267.
Conflict between affidavits of error and return, see post § 269.
Conflict between return and docket, see post § 270.
Provisions as to return, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, §§ 31, 32; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14431, 14432.
Fees for making return to certiorari, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 14429.

¶ 1115. A justice of the peace, in answer to a writ of certiorari, is required to make return only to the matters specified in the affidavit.—Lake Superior Building Co. v. Thompson, 32 Mich. 293.

¶ 1116. The return to a certiorari to a justice may properly show whether security for costs was filed in actions by nonresidents.—McClean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 129.

¶ 1117. A justice's return that "the foregoing contains about all the testimony" will not justify a review of the evidence by the supreme court to see whether it sustained the judgment.—Rawson v. McElvaine, 49 Mich. 194.

¶ 1118. Plaintiff in certiorari cannot prevail upon a doubtful record.—Beam v. Reynolds, 144 Mich. 383.

¶ 1119. The absence of the summons and return from the court room on the return day does not cause a justice of the peace to lose jurisdiction, where the return to certiorari shows that both were in his possession.—Beam v. Reynolds, 144 Mich. 383.

§ 260. ——Further or amended return.

Affidavit upon which writ issued as basis for second writ, see ante ¶ 1111.
Review of ruling on motion for further return to certiorari, see Appeal § 402.
Power to require further return when case has gone up on error from circuit, see Certiorari ¶ 122.

¶ 1120. If a justice's return to a writ of certiorari is defective, the party moving for it should call the justice's attention to it by an order for further return.—Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co. v. Morgan, 41 Mich. 296.

¶ 1121. The circuit court has power on its own motion to order a further return by the justice when it deems the original return insufficient upon any error assigned.—Gordon v. Sibley, 59 Mich. 250.

¶ 1122. The fact that a justice, in making return to a writ of certiorari, failed to send to the county clerk the writ and bond served upon him does not invalidate the proceeding where the omission was subsequently cured and there was a full return before the motion to dismiss was made.—Monroe v. Renells, 131 Mich. 259.

¶ 1123. On certiorari the attachment of an exhibit in the circuit court without a further return by the justice is inefficient to present to the supreme court on the ensuing writ of error papers which constituted a material part of the evidence below.—Village of Wayne v. Goldsmith, 141 Mich. 528.

¶ 1124. A justice of the peace made return to the circuit court to a writ of certiorari. After the case was presented to and taken under advisement by the circuit court, the justice, at the request of the defendant and without an order from the circuit court, sent in an amended return, Held, the amended return could not be considered.—Nelson v. Hillen, 164 Mich. 507.

§ 261. Waiver or cure of errors.

¶ 1125. Where, in attachment before a justice to enforce a log lien, a person appears in court as the owner of the logs seized, and without plaintiff's objecting that he is not the owner, moves to quash for lack of jurisdiction, plaintiff cannot be permitted to urge, upon certiorari, that no proof of ownership was made.—Davison v. Davison, 99 Mich. 625.

§ 262. Hearing and scope of review in general.

Hearing and scope of review on appeal, see ante § 231 et seq.
Nature and office of certiorari, see also ante § 250.
Rehearings, see post § 277.
Mandamus to compel proper action by circuit court or to review its action in certiorari cases, see Mandamus § 61.
Provisions as to bringing on cause for argument, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, § 38; Comp. L. 1915, § 14433.

¶ 1126. The office of the writ of certiorari is to bring up the record for review on questions of law, and unless it shows an error of law the judgment must be affirmed.—Appleman v. Hahn, 149 Mich. 245.

¶ 1127. On certiorari to review a judgment of a justice of the peace the plaintiff cannot retry the question of fact on new affidavits or proof in the circuit court.—Appleman v. Hahn, 149 Mich. 245.

§ 263. ——Restriction to matters considered below.

See also ante ¶ 1125.
Objections below as to process, see ante § 50 et seq.
Objections to pleadings, see ante §§ 94, 100.
Objections as to continuances or adjournments, see ante § 115.
Objections in replevin cases, see ante § 82.
Objections below in attachment cases, see ante § 64.
Objection for first time that short summons issued where long one prescribed, see ante ¶ 214.
Waiver of objections to improper adjournment, see ante § 115.
Waiver of security for costs by going to trial on the merits, see ante § 164.

¶ 1129. Only such objections as are ruled upon by the justice can be taken on certiorari.—Hinman v. Eakins, 26 Mich. 80.

¶ 1130. After a disagreement of the jury in a justice's court the parties submitted the case to the justice himself on the same testimony. Held, that they could not afterwards, on certiorari, complain of his previous rulings on the trial before the jury.—Hollenburg v. Shuffert, 47 Mich. 126.

¶ 1131. On authority of Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 45 Mich. 280, holding that mere irregularities will not be reviewed which were not called to the attention of the justice below, an objection to a justice's jurisdiction will not be considered on certiorari where it was not raised in justice's court.—Hopkins v. Green, 98 Mich. 394.

¶ 1132. On certiorari to review a justice's judgment, errors alleged in the affidavit for the writ, going to the jurisdiction, may be considered, although the points made were not raised before the justice.—Harbour v. Eldred, 107 Mich. 95.

¶ 1133. An objection that a justice of the peace erred in permitting a plaintiff to introduce in evidence an affidavit of account, for the reason that no preliminary service entitling him to make use of it had been made, cannot be raised for the first time on certiorari, although defendant did not appear in the suit before the justice.—Forbes Lithograph Mfg. Co. v. Winter, 107 Mich. 116.

¶ 1134. Where the parties to an action in justice's court, after the disagreement and discharge of the jury, submit the case to the justice upon the proofs taken at the trial, stipulating that all questions raised upon the trial shall be saved to the parties, an objection to the exclusion of testimony is available on certiorari.—Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Blue, 110 Mich. 81.

¶ 1135. The dictum in Lock v. Farley, 41 Mich. 405, that a defendant who did not appear in justice's court could on certiorari raise objection to evidence offered at the trial below that did not go to the court's jurisdiction, corrected.—Forbes Lithograph Mfg. Co. v. Winter, 107 Mich. 116.

¶ 1136. Where an action of replevin pending before a justice of the peace was by stipulation of the parties transferred to a justice of the peace of another township, before whom the parties appeared and went to trial without objection, held that the question was one affecting only the jurisdiction of the parties, and, had there been no consent and objection had been timely made, the justice to whom such transfer was made would have had no jurisdiction, but objection not having been made in that proceeding, and the record showing consent of the parties, the question was waived.—Peterson v. Harrington, 197 Mich. 611.

Grounds for reversal, see also post § 273.

¶ 1137. On certiorari to a justice the court cannot take notice of errors that were not assigned in the affidavit for the writ, or presume errors that were not affirmatively shown by the return.—Witherspoon v. Clegg, 42 Mich. 484; Westbrook v. Blood, 50 Mich. 443.

¶ 1138. On certiorari to a justice, only those allegations of error will be considered that are affirmatively supported by the return.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13; Forbes Lithograph Mfg. Co. v. Winter, 107 Mich. 116.

¶ 1139. One who resorts to certiorari to obtain a review of a justice's judgment must make his allegations of error specific, and is confined to the precise points raised.—Matthews v. Forslund, 113 Mich. 416.

¶ 1140. Errors assigned in the affidavit for writ of certiorari to review the judgment of a justice of the peace, are the only errors for which the circuit court can reverse the judgment of the justice.—Drake v. International Harvester Co. of America, 150 Mich. 561.

¶ 1141. On certiorari to the judgment of a justice in assumpsit for village taxes an assignment that there was no evidence to support a judgment for the village cannot be considered where the return and the record neither contain the tax roll, the return roll of delinquent taxes, nor the extension of the treasurer's warrant, although the return states that it comprises "all the testimony given on the said trial."—Village of Wayne v. Goldsmith, 141 Mich. 528.

Sufficiency of evidence as a matter of law, see also post § 271.
Disregard of errors relating to admission of evidence, see also post § 273.

¶ 1142. The writ of certiorari is not favored as a remedy for errors occurring in the rejection or admission of testimony by the justice.—O'Hara v. Mernan, 79 Mich. 222.

¶ 1143. Where a charge was proved, without objection, by showing entries in business books, but without swearing the person who made the original entry, it was proper on certiorari to refuse to consider objections to the character of evidence.—Garvin v. Gorman, 63 Mich. 221.

¶ 1144. The erroneous rejection by a justice of the peace of evidence offered by defendant, which, if received and believed, ought to have changed the result before him, authorizes a reversal on certiorari.—Whittle v. Bailes, 65 Mich. 640.

¶ 1145. The action of a justice of the peace in excluding testimony not of a conclusive character, cannot be reviewed by certiorari.—Foster v. Watson, 153 Mich. 400. (Montgomery, Hooker and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1146. Where, in an action upon a written instrument, a justice of the peace decided that the instrument was negotiable, and therefore excluded evidence offered by defendant tending to prove a failure of consideration, his ruling as to such evidence is not reviewable by certiorari.—Foster v. Watson, 153 Mich. 400. (Montgomery, Hooker and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 1147. In determining upon rulings excluding evidence of defendant, which are reviewable by certiorari, a distinction must be drawn between cases where plaintiff has entirely failed to prove his cause of action and cases where testimony not of a conclusive character is excluded.—Foster v. Watson, 153 Mich. 400.

¶ 1148. The dictum in Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 Mich. 532, based on Herring v. Hock, 1 Mich. 501, to the effect that the circuit court on certiorari has power to inquire into the evidence exhibited in the justice's court, and should give judgment as the right of the matter may appear, is erroneous. It can only inquire whether there is any evidence to sustain the judgment.—Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

¶ 1149. The office of the writ of certiorari is to try questions of law; and the circuit court, therefore, has no authority, on certiorari to a justice of the peace, to reverse a judgment which is supported by competent testimony, merely because it arrives at a different conclusion upon the facts.—Crawford v. Byrnes, 112 Mich. 599.

¶ 1150. An affidavit to an account upon which suit was brought stated that affiant, between two days named, "worked for O. O., C. F. B., and J. G., in their mill at * * *, under an agreement with them through their foreman." Held, that this was some evidence of the partnership of defendants, so as to prevent reversal of a finding on certiorari of the existence of a partnership.—Mero v. Button, 116 Mich. 680.

¶ 1151. Where the testimony conflicted it was held error to reduce a justice's judgment on the ground of a recoupment of which the justice had not refused to receive evidence, and which he had not allowed on the facts.—Overpack v. Ruggles, 27 Mich. 65.

¶ 1152. A justice's finding of fact, in a case tried without a jury, cannot be disputed on certiorari, where there was testimony on both sides.—Garvin v. Gorman, 63 Mich. 221.

§ 266. Construction and effect of return.

Necessity and sufficiency of the return, see ante § 259.

Review limited to matters presented in return, see ante § 264.

¶ 1153. The justice's return to a certiorari is not to be treated as a bill of exceptions, but as more in the nature of a case to set aside a verdict or a report of referees; and the court will examine the whole case, and if they can see that substantial justice has been done, notwithstanding the alleged error, they will not interfere.—Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205.

¶ 1154. A justice's return to certiorari cannot sustain his judgment, based on evidence lacking in a material particular, by reciting that the fact was well known to him personally because shown in other cases tried before him.—Bullock v. Ueberroth, 121 Mich. 293.

¶ 1155. In certiorari to review a judgment for the plaintiff in an action in justice court for damages, the claim of the defendant that there was no evidence in support of the plaintiff's assertion that his horse stepped in a hole in the road is negatived by the defendant's affidavit for certiorari in which he sets out the plaintiff's testimony asserting that fact.—Carver v. Detroit & Saline Plank Road Co., 126 Mich. 458.

¶ 1156. A return to certiorari by the justice of the peace stating that a second adjournment was had against objection implies the presence of the defendant.—Beam v. Reynolds, 144 Mich. 383.

¶ 1158. The failure of a justice's return to a petition in certiorari to review his judgment to specifically deny the allegation in the affidavit that it contained all material evidence does not necessitate that the affidavit be taken as true, where the return shows that other evidence was introduced before the justice which was not set out in the affidavit and which could not be returned because not taken down.—Computing Scale Co. v. Tripp, 138 Mich. 602.

§ 267. ——Conclusiveness of return; evidence to contradict, vary or explain.

¶ 1159. The return is conclusive as to facts.—Young v. Kelsey, 46 Mich. 414; People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27; Rawson v. McElvaine, 49 Mich. 194; Galloway v. Corbitt, 52 Mich. 460; Mann v. Tyler, 56 Mich. 564; People v. Hux, 68 Mich. 477; Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 70 Mich. 382.

¶ 1160. Where there is appended to a justice's return to a writ of certiorari a statement of what purports to be further testimony in the case, signed by the justice, but not dated, and not purporting to be part of the return, but inconsistent with and contradicting it, and not appearing, either, to have been made in obedience to any order for a further return, and there being nothing to show how it came to be made, such a statement will not be considered as part of the record.—Powers v. Russell, 26 Mich. 179.

¶ 1161. Certiorari to a justice does not have the force of a writ of error; and it only brings up such matters as appear by the return to have been known to the justice officially. And nothing can be added to the return by testimony.—Alt v. Lalone, 54 Mich. 302.

¶ 1162. Affidavits of third parties in answer to facts set up in a petition for certiorari cannot be received as part of the return.—North v. Joslin, 59 Mich. 624.

¶ 1163. On certiorari to a justice of the peace, an amplification of the return, duly signed, accompanying the return proper and in no way inconsistent therewith, purporting to contain a minute of proofs offered and excluded, is entitled to the same consideration as if incorporated in the return.—McDougall v. Lamb, 113 Mich. 69.

¶ 1164. A justice's return to a writ of certiorari is conclusive if it is responsive to and covers the points in the affidavit.—Hinchman v. Spaulding, 137 Mich. 655.

¶ 1165. The return of a justice of the peace to a writ of certiorari must be regarded as conclusive.—Wetmore v. Dean, 139 Mich. 627.

¶ 1166. The affidavits of jurors cannot be used to contradict, alter or vary the return of a justice to a writ of certiorari.—Ringelberg v. Peterson, 76 Mich. 107.

§ 268. ——Presumptions and burden of proof.

Presumptions and burden of proof below, see ante § 126.

Presumptions as to return of service of attachment, see also ante § 60.

Conclusiveness of justice's return, see ante § 267.

¶ 1167. The return of a justice of the peace to a certiorari showed that the suit was commenced by writ of attachment, but it did not appear therefrom that any affidavit was filed, or any bond executed, as required by the statute, before the writ was issued. Held, that these facts could not be presumed, as they were necessary to give the justice jurisdiction in the case, and that the judgment of the justice for the plaintiff must, therefore, be reversed.—Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384.

¶ 1168. It will be presumed that there was evidence to sustain the finding though none appears, unless the return expressly shows that the whole of the testimony in the case is returned.—Gaines v. Betts, 2 D. 98.

¶ 1169. Where the return did not show that the whole of the testimony was returned it was held that it was to be presumed that there was evidence in the court below to sustain the finding.—Snow v. Perkins, 2 Mich. 238.

¶ 1170. Where the justice certified as follows: "I do certify the following to have been the evidence before me in the above-entitled cause," and the objection taken before him was that certain necessary facts had not been proved, it was held that it must be presumed that the whole evidence was returned.—Cicotte v. Morse, 8 Mich. 424.

¶ 1171. On certiorari a magistrate having acquired jurisdiction is thereafter presumed to have acted in accordance with official duty.—Saunders v. Tioga Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 520.

¶ 1172. When the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is once shown, and the question is whether he has lost jurisdiction to determine the amount of costs, it must be presumed, in support of the judgment, that the justice acted regularly and that his proceedings were valid, unless the record shows the contrary.—Saunders v. Tioga Mfg. Co., 27 Mich. 520.

¶ 1173. On certiorari to a justice it cannot be presumed that he did not have evidence on all essential points, unless the evidence is all returned, or unless the return affirmatively shows that on some essential points it was lacking.—Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co. v. Morgan, 41 Mich. 296.

¶ 1174. Where some of the testimony in a suit before a justice has not been reduced to writing, and no request has been made that it should be, and the justice returns that he cannot produce it, the presumption is that there was enough to support the judgment.—Gray v. Willcox, 56 Mich. 58.

¶ 1175. On certiorari to a justice's judgment adverse to a plea of set-off made by notice with an affidavit verifying an account filed as a bill of particulars, it cannot be presumed that the service of a copy of the account and affidavit, required by How. St., § 7525, was made, if the record is silent thereon; it must appear or be presumed not to have been served.—McGowan v. Lamb, 66 Mich. 615, affirming judgment below by equal division on other points.

¶ 1176. Where there is no specific allegation that no showing on oath was made as a basis of an application for adjournment of a cause in justice's court, and where the return shows that the adjournment was duly applied for, the presumption is that the showing was legally made, and upon sufficient grounds.—Hatch v. Christmas, 68 Mich. 84.

¶ 1177. On certiorari with a record not containing any testimony, the value stated in an affidavit for a writ of replevin in justice's court is presumptively the real value of the property until shown to be erroneous in subsequent proceedings.—Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258.

¶ 1178. In certiorari nothing will be taken by intendment in favor of errors assigned upon the rejection or admission of testimony.—O'Hara v. Mernan, 79 Mich. 222.

¶ 1179. Where a justice's return to a certiorari in a log-lien case does not contain the evidence taken before him, which was not reduced to writing, but states that plaintiff was sworn in his own behalf, and that after listening to the testimony and after due deliberation he gave judgment for plaintiff, it cannot be presumed that there was no evidence to support the judgment.—Sullivan v. Hall, 86 Mich. 7.

¶ 1180. In the absence of a return by a justice of the peace to a writ of certiorari whether the authority of plaintiff's attorney to appear was shown, the circuit judge is not justified in assuming that such showing was not made, such fact not being required to be entered on the justice's docket.—Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

¶ 1181. Where the return of a justice of the peace to a writ of certiorari shows that the case was held open from 9 o'clock a. m. of the return-day until the following day at the same hour, and that counsel for plaintiff in certiorari was present, and made no objection, although objecting to the jurisdiction of the justice on other grounds, and that no suggestion of a want of power to hold the case open was made until the next morning, when it was suggested that the justice had lost jurisdiction, it will be presumed that sufficient and valid reasons existed for holding the case open.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13.

¶ 1182. On certiorari to review the judgment of a justice of the peace, a reversal will not be granted because the justice failed to require security for costs from a nonresident plaintiff upon motion therefor made after plaintiff's evidence was all in, there being no showing to excuse the delay in making the motion, since in such case it must be presumed that the justice found the motion unseasonable.—Harris v. Doyle, 130 Mich. 470.

¶ 1183. Upon certiorari where it is alleged that an agent appearing for plaintiff was without authority, it is incumbent upon defendant to show that no evidence of authority was produced and to require a return of the justice thereon, and hence in the absence of such showing and return, it will be presumed that his authority was proved.—Brown v. Knop, 137 Mich. 234.

¶ 1184. On return to certiorari containing a long summons a presumption arises from the issuance of a long summons that the defendant is a resident of the county.—Henika v. Brown, 155 Mich. 559.

¶ 1185. It cannot be said that a justice trying a case without a jury clearly erred in striking out evidence as immaterial where he returns the facts truly for review, since he may have regarded it as unimportant.—Mann v. Tyler, 56 Mich. 564.

§ 269. ——Conflict between return and affidavits of error.

See also ante ¶¶ 1157, 1158.

¶ 1186. An allegation that plaintiff's attorney did not sufficiently prove his authority to appear, and that it appeared upon his examination that his authority was in writing, and that no writing was produced before the justice, is not sustained by a return that the attorney, on the return-day, proved his authority to appear, and that he not only made such proof orally, but, when sworn as a witness in the case, produced other documentary proof.—Stoll v. Padley, 98 Mich. 13.

§ 270. ——Conflict between return and docket entries.

See also ante § 149.

Conclusiveness and effect of docket, see ante § 148.

As to day of return of writ of attachment, see also post ¶ 1210.

¶ 1187. A justice's return to a certiorari cannot contradict his docket so as to give him jurisdiction that does not appear on the docket's face.—Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636; Toliver v. Brownell, 94 Mich. 577; Holmes v. Cole, 95 Mich. 272.

¶ 1188. A justice's return to certiorari cannot aid his docket or remove the presumption from the language of its entries.—Noyes v. Hillier, 65 Mich. 636.

¶ 1189. Where a justice's return varies from his docket entries it is conclusive only as to such matters as are not required to be entered on the docket; but as to required entries the docket controls.—Weaver v. Lammon, 62 Mich. 366.

Provisions as to judgment on certiorari, see Jud. Act, chap. LXXVIII, §§ 34-36; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14434-14436.

¶ 1190. Comp. L. 1897, § 948, providing that on certiorari, the court may give judgment as right may appear without regarding technicalities in proceedings before a justice of the peace, does not prevent the circuit court rendering judgment for the defendant where the justice's docket omitted to state the place to which a cause of action was adjourned.—Mitts v. Harvey, 125 Mich. 354.

¶ 1191. On certiorari to a justice's court, where the error alleged is that there is absolutely no evidence of negligence of the defendant, the circuit court may review the evidence to see whether such contention is correct, and, if correct, it may reverse the judgment; otherwise it must affirm the judgment.—Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. v. Park, 197 Mich. 142.

¶ 1192. Comp. L. 1897, § 948, providing for judgments in certiorari cases apparently contemplates that the circuit court will enter a new judgment on which execution may issue, upon the original cause of action, unless it be where the writ does not confer jurisdiction to review, when perhaps a judgment of dismissal may be proper.—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

¶ 1193. On certiorari to the justice's court, where the circuit judge heard the case and took it under advisement, prepared and signed an opinion concluding with the statement that he thought "this covered all objections made, and * * * none being well taken the writ may be dismissed," this while not a formal judgment on which execution might issue was equivalent to determining the cause against the plaintiff in certiorari and directing a judgment in favor of the defendant in certiorari, and was a valid compliance with the statutes providing for the rendition of judgments, and filing findings (Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10260, 10261, 10264).—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

¶ 1194. Where in a case originating in the justice's court the circuit court on a writ of certiorari heard and decided all points raised and concluded with a direction dismissing the writ (a judgment not authorized by the statute) and the clerk did not enter the judgment according to Comp. L. 1897, § 10260, the defendant in certiorari could apply to the circuit court to obtain the entry of such a judgment as the decision warranted, and such application may be made to his successor in office where he has since ceased to be a judge.—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

¶ 1195. Where, in affirming on certiorari a justice's judgment for damages and costs, the circuit court, instead of a simple judgment of affirmance, ordered a judgment for the aggregate of such damages and costs, with costs of the court above, the error is merely formal, and is not ground for reversal.—Rodman v. Clark, 81 Mich. 466.

¶ 1196. Where, on a common-law certiorari issued by the circuit court, it appears that the inferior tribunal had no jurisdiction, or that there was no cause of action, the judgment for plaintiff should be reversed with costs to plaintiff in error.—Thompson v. Crockery School District No. 7, 25 Mich. 488.

¶ 1197. A circuit court judge who has heard a certiorari proceeding on a case originating in the justice's court, and who has dismissed the writ, but entered a judgment not authorized by the statute, may on application enter the proper judgment, which may include all that was awarded by the justice of the peace, and should take the form of a judgment for the aggregate of the damages, costs, and interest.—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

¶ 1198. Where defendants sued in their firm name in justice's court pleaded and were allowed to recover upon a set-off in such name, a judgment in their favor on certiorari was affirmed by a divided court.—McGowan v. Lamb, 66 Mich. 615.

¶ 1199. Where the result in the circuit court on certiorari is the same as below, the judgment should be a simple affirmance, with or without costs; it is formal error to render a new judgment for damages and costs, enforceable by execution from the circuit court.—Dooley v. Eilbert, 47 Mich. 615.

¶ 1200. Replevin in justice's court. The court found a part of the property to be in the plaintiff, and gave him judgment therefor, with costs, and awarded a return of the remainder. On certiorari the circuit court reversed the judgment as to a part of the articles awarded to the plaintiff, and gave judgment therefor to the defendant, and also rendered judgment in favor of the defendant (plaintiff in error) for his costs before the justice. Held, that this judgment for costs, not being an affirmance or reversal of the justice's judgment, or any part thereof, was beyond the power of the circuit court.—Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

Judgment against sureties on appeal bond for costs, see ante § 241.

¶ 1201. Certiorari to a justice is in the nature of an appeal so far as to allow the circuit judge to include the surety in the judgment for costs against his principal.—McLean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 129; Boatz v. Berg, 51 Mich. 8.

¶ 1202. Where a case is removed from a justice's court by certiorari, and the circuit court approves the justice's judgment, the sureties of the plaintiff in certiorari are included in it by entering judgment against all, adding interest to the date thereof, and giving judgment anew for the gross sum.—McDermid v. Redpath, 39 Mich. 372.

¶ 1203. Comp. L. 1871, § 6133 (How. St. § 7663), providing that final judgment for costs may be rendered against the surety for costs as well as against his principal, applies to a case where a justice's judgment for plaintiff is reversed in the circuit on certiorari.—McLean v. Isbell, 44 Mich. 129.

¶ 1204. Where, after a judgment for plaintiff in justice's court had been reversed on a certiorari the bond for which was conditioned simply to pay any judgment recovered against defendant in the circuit court, such justice's judgment was affirmed in the supreme court with costs of both courts, the liability of the surety on said bond could not be extended by construction so as to permit judgment to be entered against him on motion.—Stoll v. Padley, 100 Mich. 404.

¶¶ 1205, 1206. The Justice's Act of 1855, How. St. § 7029, providing for entering judgment against both principal and surety, is valid.—Chappee v. Thomas, 5 Mich. 53.

¶ 1207. Objections that are merely technical should not be given any weight on certiorari unless there is reason to believe they tended to a wrong result.—Cheney v. Russell, 44 Mich. 620; Hart v. Township of Port Huron, 46 Mich. 428.

¶ 1208. Whether a circuit court should reverse the judgment of a justice of the peace on certiorari because the judgment rendered exceeds the amount claimed in the ad damnum clause of the declaration, quære.—Pew v. Yoare, 12 Mich. 16.

¶ 1209. A justice acquires jurisdiction when proper service is made or defendant appears. But the fact of actual notice without any appearance will not give it, and is no reason for refusing or dismissing a certiorari to bring up the proceedings.—Vliet v. Westenhaver, 42 Mich. 593.

¶ 1210. Where a justice of the peace in his return to a writ of certiorari to bring up for review his proceedings in an attachment suit states that the officer's return of service of the attachment was not in fact made until the return day, the fact that such return of service was not dated, or that the justice had erroneously entered in his docket a minute that the writ was returned on a different day, will be disregarded.—Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 Mich. 395.

¶ 1211. A justice's judgment is not to be reversed on certiorari except for matters of substance affecting the justice of the cause.—Burt v. Addison, 74 Mich. 730.

¶ 1212. Trivial questions relating to the admission of evidence before a justice should not have weight on certiorari.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Russ, 47 Mich. 500.

¶ 1213. On certiorari all technical omissions or defects in the proceedings below will be disregarded, and judgment will be entered on the merits (How. St. § 7044).—Gray v. Willcox, 56 Mich. 58.

¶ 1214. A judgment will not be reversed on certiorari on the ground of the admission of improper evidence to establish a fact that is clearly proved by other testimony of a competent character.—Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205.

¶ 1215. A justice's judgment on the merits should not be reversed on certiorari for the admission or rejection of evidence, unless it clearly appears that the party against whom judgment was given was injured by such ruling.—Whaley v. Gale, 48 Mich. 193.

¶ 1216. Under statutory certiorari on a justice's judgment there can be no reversal, unless for errors affecting the merits as the case finally stands; and when, in an action on contract, the error complained of was the overruling of a plea in abatement for nonjoinder, whereas the only contract shown was sole, such ruling was immaterial.—Hinman v. Eakins, 26 Mich. 80.

¶ 1217. Comp. L. 1897, § 948, providing that a court on certiorari to a justice of the peace may render judgment in accordance with the right of the matter cannot be applied to a case where one erroneously sued in assumpsit when he should have declared in tort.—Plefka v. Detroit United Ry., 147 Mich. 641.

¶ 1218. Comp. L. 1897, § 948, How. 2nd Ed., § 12394, directing the court in certiorari cases to give judgment "as the right of the matter may appear, without regarding technical omissions, imperfections, or defects in the proceedings before the justice which did not affect the merits," does not apply where there has been no trial on the merits.—Moore v. Frederick, 197 Mich. 573.

¶ 1219. On certiorari from a justice's judgment in plaintiff's favor without naming him, in a suit brought in the interest of an infant, as the record shows, but in which defendant was commanded in the summons "to answer to A. K., as next friend to E. F.," the circuit court should render judgment for the amount found by the justice to be due in favor of the infant plaintiff, under How. St. § 7044, which provides that the court shall proceed to give judgment as the right of the matter may appear, without regarding technical omissions, imperfections, or defects in the proceedings before the justice, which did not affect the merits.—Kees v. Maxim, 99 Mich. 493.

¶ 1220. Comp. L. 1871, § 5479 (How. St. § 7046), forbidding reversal of a justice's judgment for an improper allowance of fees, does not cover a case expressly governed by a statute regulating costs generally, and where the question is not as to particular allowances, which the justice has failed to consider.—Wilcox v. Laflin & Rand Powder Co., 44 Mich. 35.

Propriety of certiorari to review action of circuit, see Certiorari § 13.
Effect on justice's judgment of dismissal of certiorari, see Certiorari ¶ 234.

¶ 1221. A judgment of a justice of the peace, after affirmance by the circuit court on certiorari, is not open to the objection that it leaves the justice's judgment in full force and effect, thus creating two judgments; the justice's judgment being simply affirmed and merged.—Ringelberg v. Peterson, 76 Mich. 107.

¶ 1222. Where, during pendency before a justice of a suit in replevin, possession has been awarded to one of the parties, he is entitled to it as against the other while the suit is pending, subject only to interruption by service of a precept to return the property; and if the suit is decided against him and he gives due notice of his intention to remove the cause, as by certiorari, he has still the right to retain possession after completing the remaining steps required by law for such removal. The completion of such steps suspends the further operation of the justice's judgment and leaves the writ by which the suit was begun in legal force. And where one had surrendered the property upon a precept issued after he had declared his intention to remove the cause, it was held that he was thereafter at liberty to regain possession by his own act, if he could do so peaceably and without personal interference. And held, also, that, for his protection, the proceedings for removal and the judgment for reversal in the higher court related back to the time of giving notice, and that in a suit in cross-replevin no plea puis darrein continuance was needed to support evidence of such judgment of reversal, though granted after the last continuance.—Clark v. West, 23 Mich. 242.

§ 275. Rights and remedies of parties upon reversal.

¶ 1223. Where plaintiff recovered judgment before a justice, which was reversed by the circuit court on certiorari, and plaintiff in error afterwards moved for an order that a jury be impaneled to assess his damages, it was held that the circuit court, under the statutes of 1838, had no such power; but that under §§ 135, 170 of the Justice's Act of 1841, it had power to award a restitution of the property.—People ex rel. Willing v. Jackson Circuit Judges, 1 D. 302.

¶ 1224. The circuit court has no power on certiorari to render judgment in favor of the defendant in certiorari for costs before the justice.—Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

¶ 1225. In cases before justices of the peace, when tender is pleaded, costs accruing after the tender must go to defendant under Comp. L. 1871, §§ 6180, 6181 (How. St., §§ 7764, 7765).—Wilcox v. Laflin & Rand Powder Co., 44 Mich. 35.

§ 277. Rehearings.

¶ 1226. The power of a court to grant new trials, etc., as provided in C. C. Rule 21 includes a rehearing upon certiorari to a justice of the peace.—Hirsh v. Fisher, 138 Mich. 95.

Necessity of bond, see ante § 257.

¶ 1227. Comp. L. 1897, § 933, providing for entry of judgment on appeal bond against the appellant and sureties, being applicable in certiorari as well as in appeals, it is the duty of the court on affirming the judgment to enter judgment on the bond unless on the face of the record there is something that precludes liability, or unless on application there is a showing made which requires an investigation of the surety's liability.—Knack v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 485.

¶ 1. A tenancy exists where one has let real estate to another to hold of him as tenant.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 2. The usual incidents of a tenancy are possession with right of enjoyment, and rent.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 3. The privilege granted by deed, and for an annual compensation, to flow lands for an indefinite period creates a tenancy in them.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 4. An agreement whereby one party lets certain land, for a year, to the other, for a certain sum, and authorizes him to enter and harvest a crop which the former agrees to put in, is a lease and not a mortgage, and gives the lessee title to the crops, so that it cannot be attached in a proceeding against the lessor.—Stadden v. Hazzard, 34 Mich. 76.

¶ 5. The relation of landlord and tenant or an implied agreement to pay rent does not exist between a county and a deputy register of deeds who, by virtue of his appointment, occupies the office furnished by the county for the register of deeds, even though he attends to private business of his own, such as furnishing abstracts of title from a set of abstract books kept in such office at the register's request.—Cass County Sup'rs v. Cowgill, 97 Mich. 448.

¶ 6. A contract to pay rent is not necessary to create the relation of landlord and tenant.—Alpine County School Dist. No. 11 v. Batsche, 106 Mich. 330.

¶ 7. Complainant made a contractual purchase of land from defendant and agreed not to sublet. He put one Doyle in possession of the premises, gave him entire control of the crops and of the division and separation of a share of the same to the complainants. Doyle was acknowledged by complainant as paying for the use of the house by looking after the place. Held, the relation of the landlord and tenant existed between complainants and Doyle, and the former had violated the contract.—Welling v. Strickland, 161 Mich. 235.

¶ 8. Where a trustee in bankruptcy did not recognize a lease from the record title holder to the bankrupt, but considered that the deed by the bankrupt to such record title holder was fraudulent and void as to creditors, and he continued in adverse possession of the property, the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the record title holder and the trustee.—Smith v. Haight, 188 Mich. 512.

¶ 9. A writing consisting of letters, giving use of a right of way for a logging railroad, not qualified in any way, and not purporting to give exclusive possession of any part of the premises and not reserving rent was not a lease; particularly where no consideration was paid or promised for the alleged right, which the letters called a "privilege." Nowlin Lumber Co. v. Wilson, 119 Mich. 406.

¶ 10. Where the owner joined in a request to a trustee in a mortgage for the benefit of creditors, that a third party be allowed to occupy the premises, and such party went into possession pursuant to such request, the trustee became the landlord.—Candler v. Mitchell, 119 Mich. 464.

§ 2. Implied tenancy.

Occupancy incident to employment, see post § 3.
Occupancy under farming contract, see post § 4.

Occupancy under contract of purchase, see post § 5.
Occupancy by grantor after conveyance, see post § 6.
Agreements for lease, see post § 7.
Contracts for room, board or desk space, see post § 8.
Liability for use and occupation, see post § 143.

¶ 11. The contract relation of landlord and tenant cannot impliedly exist unless the person charged as tenant has either accepted possession from the landlord, or done some other act in plain recognition of the relationship whereby he is equitably estopped from denying it.—Lockwood v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 42 Mich. 536.

¶ 12. The purchaser of lumber becomes presumptively the tenant of the owner of the premises on which it is piled if he does not remove it within a reasonable time and on being notified that he must take it away; and if such notice is accompanied by a statement that a specified rent will be charged for their occupancy, he is presumed to assent to the terms if he does not remove it. —Ducey Lumber Co. v. Lane, 58 Mich. 520.

¶ 13. Where a lessee of a water-front which he had used for the storage of logs ended his lease by proper notice, and removed all his logs, no subsequent acts would operate as a renewal or continuance of the tenure, which were not equivalent to a reentry, or to the exclusion of any other possession. Merely leaving a boom there, which could be removed by the owner as well as by himself, would not operate as an assertion of continued possession.—Thomas v. Frost, 29 Mich. 336.

¶ 14. Passing rafts across the front to premises below, and closing the boom during their passage to prevent their floating into it, would not be an act of possession or tenancy unless accompanied by an assertion or design to that effect.—Thomas v. Frost, 29 Mich. 336.

¶ 15. The payment to a county by a deputy register of deeds, of rent for the use for abstract purposes of the office furnished by the county for the register of deeds during the time he was not deputy, raises no implication that the tenancy continued after his reappointment as such deputy.—Cass County Sup'rs v. Cowgill, 97 Mich. 448.

¶ 16. There can be no implied grant of possession by one who could not have put the tenant out of possession if he had refused to make an arrangement.—Fuller v. Sweet, 30 Mich. 237.

§ 3. ——Occupancy incident to employment.

Termination of tenancy incidental to employment by termination of employment, see post § 37.
Evidence of custom as bearing on right of employee to have dwelling rent free, see Customs ¶ 47.

¶ 17. The relation of landlord and tenant does not exist where an employee, by virtue of his employment and as an incident to his hiring, is permitted to occupy a dwelling house of his employer.—Lane v. Au Sable Elec. Co., 181 Mich. 26.

¶ 18. Where a janitor of an apartment building is supplied with rooms in the same as a part of his salary, he is not a tenant, and has no right to invite another to live with him without his employer's consent.—Tucker v. Burt, 152 Mich. 68.

¶ 19. The occupancy of premises by an employee for the purpose of enabling him the better to perform the service of his employer, there being no letting in terms and no rent reserved, does not create the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, but the possession will be deemed to be that of the employer. The employee may, however, become a tenant at sufferance by holding over after the termination of his employment. So held where a teacher occupied a part of a school building as a residence by virtue of his contract with the district board to teach the school.—Alpine County School Dist. No. 11 v. Batsche, 106 Mich. 330.

§ 4. ——Occupancy under farming contract.

Lease reserving part of produce of land, see post § 142.
Right to emblements, issues and profits, see post §§ 111-114.
Right to re-enter and seize farm crops for breach of farm lease, see post § 172.
Estoppel by cropping contract to deny lien of crop mortgage, see also Estoppel ¶ 205.

¶ 20. A contract whereby one in possession of a farm agreed to pay to the owner two-thirds of the income of the farm at the time the product thereof should be sold is a lease creating relation of landlord and tenant and not merely contract making the parties tenants in common of the crops of the farm.—Cockerline v. Fisher, 140 Mich. 95.

§ 5. ——Occupancy under contract of purchase.

Actions for use and occupation, see post V, A.
Liability for use and occupation in general, see post § 143.
Rights of vendor and purchaser in general, see Vendor and Purchaser.
Rescission of contract of purchase by vendee's taking lease and occupying premises under such lease, see Vendor and Purchaser.

¶ 21. Defendant took possession of premises by permission, after having made an oral agreement to purchase the same, which the owner failed to carry into effect. It was held that defendant was not liable for use and occupation while the negotiations were pending.—Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566.

¶ 22. A vendee who took possession of premises by permission under an oral contract of sale which failed through fault of the vendor would be liable in an action of use and occupation if he remained in possession after all negotiations had ceased, and after being notified that he must pay rent if he did so.—Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566.

¶ 23. Where a house was sold under a contract and the vendee waived the contract right to its completion by a certain date and was allowed to take possession in advance, it was held that the contract had been varied and that the vendee did not hold under its conditions but under the subsequent provisions and was therefore a tenant at will. —Williams v. Hodges, 41 Mich. 695.

¶ 24. One who holds land under a contract of purchase is not liable for rent while the contract remains open, and no notice to quit or pay rent, or of an intention to forfeit, has been given.—Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 25. The relation of landlord and tenant will be held to exist where the evidence shows the purchase of land on a contract, possession by the purchaser, a small payment of money, followed by eviction some five years later, whereupon an arrangement is entered into whereby the purchaser is to pay a certain amount monthly, claimed by the seller to be rental. The conduct of the parties under such circumstances is consistent with the theory that the purchaser had become a tenant, and a new contract of sale was not entered into.—Smith v. Detroit Loan & Building Ass'n, 121 Mich. 104.

¶ 25a. Where an agreement under which certain premises were occupied was either a lease or a contract for purchase, it will be held to have been the latter where the occupant expended $15,000 in putting a mill and machinery thereon, paid the taxes but paid no rent, and stated in the pleadings in another action that the mill was placed there "in pursuance of a valid agreement" and also referred to negotiations for taking title, since such circumstances and statements are inconsistent with occupancy under lease.— Morley v. Quimby, 132 Mich. 140.

§ 6. ——Occupancy by grantor after conveyance.

¶ 26. A contract to pay rent is not to be inferred from the mere continued occupancy by a grantor after he has conveyed the premises.—Stevens v. Hulin, 53 Mich. 93.

¶ 27. The right of possession transferred to the grantee by a deed absolute on its face is not defeated by a subsequent contract to reconvey in the future upon certain conditions, which is silent upon the subject of possession; and the grantor, holding over, becomes tenant, either by sufferance or at will, of his grantee.—Bennett v. Robinson, 27 Mich. 26.

¶ 28. A. sold a house to B., reserving the possession and use thereof four months as part of the consideration of the sale, but continued to occupy it twenty days after that time without any special arrangement. Held, that B.'s consent to such occupation was implied, and that A. became a tenant at will.—Hoffman v. Clark, 63 Mich. 175.

§ 7. ——Agreements for lease.

Leases as distinguished from contracts for leases, see post § 11.

¶ 29. While a mere agreement for a lease does not create a tenancy or give the other party a right of possession, yet if the latter has possession for the purpose of putting up a building and is to continue in possession as tenant until his rent pays for the construction, his tenancy begins immediately on the completion of the building.—Billings v. Canney, 57 Mich. 425.

§ 8. ——Contracts for room, board or desk space.

¶ 30. One who rents from a tenant of an office room space therein for a desk, is not technically a tenant; but he is more to be likened to a boarder who has no interest in the real estate.—Swart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 142 Mich. 21.

§ 9. Nature, requisites and validity of leases.

Sufficiency of form and execution, see post § 10.
Leases as distinguished from contracts for leases, see post § 11.
Unrecorded leases, see post § 12.
Change or modification of lease, see post § 13.
Requisites and sufficiency of writing under statute of frauds, see Frauds, Statute of § 101.
Sufficiency under statute of frauds of part performance of agreement for lease, see Frauds, Statute of § 106.
Necessity that leases be in writing under the statute of frauds, see Frauds, Statute of § 67.
Distinction between license and lease, see Licenses to Enter § 4.
Necessity that contract for commissions for lease of real estate be in writing, see Frauds, Statute of § 33.
Reformation of leases to express intent of parties, see Reformation.

Necessity of mutuality in right to support contract, see Contracts § 2.
Completeness of assent to terms of lease, see also Contracts ¶¶ 136, 137.

¶ 31. A lease is a contract for the possession and profits of land and tenements on the one side and a recompense of rent or other income on the other.—Miles v. Shreve, 179 Mich. 671.

¶ 32. A lease is a conveyance by the owner of an estate to another of a portion of his interest therein for a term less than his own and for a valuable consideration, granting thereby to the lessee the possession, use and enjoyment of the portion conveyed during the period stipulated.—Minnis v. Newbro-Gallogly Co., 174 Mich. 685.

¶ 33. An instrument designated as a lease in the body thereof, and in the present tense demising and leasing with full and familiar conditions couched in legal phraseology, the premises therein described for a definite period at a stated rental with the usual covenants of quiet enjoyment, possible surrender, etc., held to constitute a lease.—Miles v. Shreve, 179 Mich. 671.

¶ 34. A lease may be made to take effect in the future, and the estate does not begin with the contract, but with the future period. —Whiting v. Ohlert, 52 Mich. 462.

¶ 35. A verbal agreement to rent premises to a tenant "for a long term of years at a rental to be afterwards agreed upon" is too vague and indefinite to be valid.—Kezeli v. River Rouge Lodge, No. 410, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, 195 Mich. 181.

¶ 36. The fact that a written agreement to make a lease for ninety-nine years does not fix a time for the payment of the annual rental mentioned, does not render the agreement incomplete or uncertain, since the rental is payable at the end of each year. —Bushman v. Faltis, 184 Mich. 172.

¶ 37. That the land at the time the lease is executed is in a third person's possession, does not of itself invalidate an oral lease for less than a year; the lease is good by way of estoppel as against the lessor.—Lewis v. Brandle, 107 Mich. 7.

§ 10. ——Sufficiency of form and execution.

Sufficiency of description of premises covered, see post § 19.
Alteration of lease and effect thereof, see Alteration of Instruments.
Power of corporate vice president to make lease incident to his official charges, see Corporations ¶ 454.

¶ 38. An agreement by a lessee, in a memorandum signed by him at the foot of the lease, constitutes a part of the lease.—Norris v. Showerman, W. 206; Norris v. Showerman, 2 D. 16.

¶ 39. A letter written by the owner of premises to the tenant as follows, "Herewith please find receipt for advance rent on room, No. 686—3rd Avenue, beginning May 1, 1900, rent $25 per month, first six months," answered by the tenant, "I received your letter. All is right. I am loading 2 cars with hay and produce and will be at Detroit as quick as I can" is held to constitute a written lease for the term of 6 months.—Baer v. Minock, 128 Mich. 676.

¶ 40. It seems that usage permits a lease to be executed by exchanging duplicates, each of which is signed only by the other party.—Campau v. Lafferty, 43 Mich. 429.

§ 11. ——Leases as distinguished from contracts for leases.

Agreements for leases as implied tenancies, see ante § 7.

¶ 41. An agreement for a lease and the lease itself are different things.—Tillman v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 113; Whiting v. Ohlert, 52 Mich. 462.

¶ 42. A contract providing for a lease of property, and specifying all the terms thereof, under which the lessee went into possession and estimated the value of merchandise in the premises, which was provided to be sold to the lessee by the contract, constitutes a lease, and not an agreement for a lease, where there was no intention of executing any further papers.—Mailhot v. Turner, 157 Mich. 167.

¶ 43. Any uncertainty in the terms of an agreement to make a lease cannot be corrected by conditions in an unexecuted lease on which the minds of the parties never met.—Bushman v. Faltis, 184 Mich. 172.

§ 12. ——Unrecorded leases.

Necessity for recordation in general, see Notice and Record of Title, II.

¶ 44. Under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 8988, 8994, making unrecorded leases for more than three years void as against subsequent purchasers in good faith, a plaintiff purchaser of the lot upon which a building stands is not a good faith purchaser within the meaning of the statute where he knows that the building is claimed by defendant under a lease, and that defendant is in possession of it.—Baldwin v. Baldwin, 166 Mich. 157.

§ 13. ——Change or modification of lease.

Change in lease agreement amounting to novation, see Novation § 1, ¶ 6.

¶ 45. Previous oral agreements cannot be allowed to modify the terms of a written lease.—Campau v. National Film Co., 159 Mich. 169.

¶ 46. On a bill for specific performance of an oral agreement for a lease, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that it was orally agreed that if complainant made certain improvements and rented additional buildings the lease would be extended for a certain period.—Charlet v. Teakle, 197 Mich. 426.

¶ 47. A written agreement to make a lease for ninety-nine years for an annual rental which does not designate a time for payment, being payable yearly, is not rendered uncertain by subsequent negotiations of the parties altering the time of payment.—Bushman v. Faltis, 184 Mich. 172.

¶ 48. An owner of land agreed to advance a specified sum, to be used in erecting an hotel on the land, which the party to whom the advances were to be made was to lease for a term of years at a fixed rental, payable quarterly in advance. After the completion of the buildings a lease was executed between the parties, by which the rent was made payable at the end of each quarter. The landlord brought suit on the original agreement to recover rent, and defendants sought to show that the change in the time of payment of rent was agreed upon between plaintiff and the tenant, and the tenant testified in support of said claim. Held, that it is apparent that the witness based his claim of a change in the agreement upon the fact that the lease contained the clause as to payment at the end of each quarter, or else that he depended upon an alleged oral agreement, made prior to the making of the original contract, contradicting said contract; that this testimony cannot be construed as tending to show that a change was agreed upon, particularly when the testimony of the attorney who prepared said original agreement and said lease, that there was no agreement for a change in the time of payment of the rent, and the testimony of plaintiff, that he never authorized any such change, are taken into account.—Stevens v. Pendleton, 105 Mich. 519.

§ 14. Construction and operation of leases.

Construction against perpetuity, see post § 15.
Covenants, conditions and restrictions, see post § 16.
Covenants or conditions for forfeiture, see post § 17.
Implied covenants, see post § 18.
Construction of clause embodying description of premises covered, see post § 19.
Construction of lease and contract for assignment executed at same time, see post ¶ 274.
Construction of lease as to time for payment of rental from method of stipulating instalments payable, see post ¶ 435.
Lease and instrument therewith as single contract, see also Contracts § 150.
Rule of practical or agreed construction by parties, see Contracts §§ 161, 162.

¶ 49. The language of the habendum clause in a lease cannot enlarge the demise in the granting clause.—Lovett v. Bermingham-Seaman-Patrick Co., 192 Mich. 372.

¶ 50. The intent of a written lease must be gathered from an examination thereof as a whole, and such a construction must be put on it, if possible, as will render all its clauses harmonious and consistent; it is against well settled rules to give it a narrow and technical interpretation based on some particular word or clause.—Harlow v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 36 Mich. 105.

¶ 51. A lease of land to a tenant, "to have and to hold, to use and control as he thinks proper, for his benefit during his natural life," is a lease without impeachment for waste.—Stevens v. Rose, 69 Mich. 259.

¶ 51a. Where a lease is unambiguous in its terms what the parties intended by the language employed is a question of law for the court.—Brown v. Schiappacasse, 115 Mich. 47.

§ 15. ——Construction against perpetuity.

Perpetuities in general, see Perpetuities.

¶ 52. A lease will not be construed as creating a perpetuity by covenant for renewal at the option of one of the parties, unless such appears from clear and unequivocal language to have been the intent.—Brush v. Beecher, 110 Mich. 597.

¶ 53. A lease for years does not contravene the statute against perpetuities.—Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552.

¶ 54. A lease to the lessor's son and the son's wife for their lives, with remainder to their son living when the lease was executed, does not restrain absolute power of alienation, as forbidden by How. St. §§ 5530, 5531, since, under the terms of the conveyance, there could be no time when there were not persons in being by whom an absolute fee in possession could be conveyed.—Case v. Green, 78 Mich. 540.

§ 16. ——Covenants, conditions and restrictions.

Covenants and conditions as to use and enjoyment, see post §§ 68-70.
Covenants against subletting, assignment or transfer, see post § 78.
Covenants of landlord to repair, see post §§ 85, 86.
Covenants of tenant to repair, see post §§ 89-91.
Covenants to rebuild, see post § 98.
Covenants as to insurance, see post § 99.
Covenants as to payment of taxes, see post § 100.
Covenants to pay rent, see post §§ 123, 124.
Breach of covenant or condition as ground for termination, see post § 45.
Re-entry for breach of covenant, see post §§ 170-172.
Right of action on covenant to pay rent, see post § 150.

¶ 55. No particular form of words is necessary, in a lease from month to month, to constitute a condition precedent to the vesting of the tenant's estate, but unless the mutual intention that it shall be a condition appears from the language or circumstances, it will be treated only as a covenant.—Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 Mich. 468.

¶ 56. A restriction in a lease for a term of years should receive much more favorable consideration than a restriction in a deed.—Hammond v. Hibbler, 168 Mich. 66.

¶ 57. Where the lease of a mill for the purpose of sawing certain logs provides that on completion of the work the premises shall be restored in as good a condition as when received, it is not error, in an action by the lessor for a breach of the contract consisting as alleged in the negligent destruction of the mill by fire, for the court to instruct the jury that "even if the mill were turned over to the plaintiff, yet if, by reason of the carelessness and mismanagement of the defendants, fire had been taken from the mill and put into the saw-dust adjoining, it would constitute a breach of contract; and if the fire remained there without the knowledge of the plaintiff, and afterwards broke out and destroyed the mill, and it is traceable to the carelessness of the defendants, then they are liable"; such charge did not submit negligence as a tort to the jury.—Stevens v. Pantlind, 95 Mich. 145.

§ 17. ——Covenants or conditions for forfeiture.

Penalties and forfeitures in general, see Penalties.

¶ 58. Provisions concerning forfeiture are strictly construed.—Wakefield v. Sunday Lake Mining Co., 85 Mich. 605.

¶ 59. Covenants in leases creating forfeitures should be construed most strongly against the lessor, and most favorably to the lessee.—Hilsendegen v. Hartz Clothing Co., 165 Mich. 255.

¶ 60. Interpretations which create a forfeiture are not favored, and it is the policy of the law to limit so far as is reasonable the effect of a covenant in a lease by which a forfeiture is created.—Hilsendegen v. Hartz Clothing Co., 165 Mich. 255.

¶ 61. Forfeiture clauses in a lease are not favored by the courts, and their effect will be restricted as far as possible; but when the lease explicitly provides that the landlord may treat it as void upon breach of condition by the tenant, his election to do so dissolves the relation between him and his tenant.—Miller v. Havens, 51 Mich. 482.

¶ 62. A lessor cannot forfeit a lease for the breach of an implied covenant.—DeGrasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 63. The remedy of a lessor for the breach of an implied covenant is an action for the breach.—DeGrasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 64. In the absence of fraud, there is no implied covenant that premises are fit for the purpose for which they are leased.—Morton v. Hanes, 162 Mich. 366.

¶ 67. A provision in a lease that should the tenant "fail in any of the foregoing promises"—which were to pay a certain rent, pay the road-tax, keep buildings and fences in good repair, not to sublet, and at the expiration of the term to surrender possession to the lessor,—the lease should become null and void, and the lessor might re-enter, does not apply to an implied covenant that the tenant should properly farm the leased premises.—Hough v. Brown, 104 Mich. 109.

§ 19. Description of premises covered.

Extent of demise and property included, see post § 73.

¶ 68. Where a lease described the leased premises as a certain part of certain premises situated at a certain street number and the corner of a certain other street, and contained a right of purchase of "said premises," held that the premises at such number and corner to which the right of purchase related were sufficiently described.—Nowicki v. Kapelczak, 195 Mich. 678.

¶ 69. Where the description of property in a lease opens with the words, "Beginning at the southwesterly corner of" a named block of a city, and this block has, in fact, a shape diagonal to the points of the compass, the starting point to be chosen is the one that a tracing of the description therefrom will satisfy the lines given, rather than lead to their embracing nothing.—Hamilton v. Ames, 74 Mich. 298.

¶ 70. Where a mining company executed leases of the east half and of the west half respectively of a fractional forty acres of land fronting on a meandered lake, describing said forty acres as a lot according to the government description, the word "half" must be interpreted to mean half in quantity, there being nothing in the context to show that the word was used in other than a literal sense.—Hartford Iron Mining Co. v. Cambria Mining Co., 80 Mich. 491.

Attornment of tenant to third person, see post § 65.

Creation of relation of landlord and tenant between landlord and assignee of lease by acceptance of rent, see post ¶¶ 304, 305.

¶ 71. If, after a lease executed by one not in possession of the premises, the occupant attorns to the lessee, a new tenancy is created.—Lewis v. Brandle, 107 Mich. 7.

§ 21. Presumptions and burden of proof arising from occupancy.

Possession of tenant as notice of title of landlord, see Notice and Record of Title § 19.

¶ 72. Where an occupant of land was in possession as tenant merely, it is presumable that he was in as tenant under the party claiming title.—Rayner v. Lee, 20 Mich. 384.

¶ 73. The fact of A.'s occupancy of B.'s land is prima facie evidence that A. is B.'s tenant, which can only be rebutted by showing some fact or circumstance tending to rebut this inference.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

§ 22. Evidence and proof of relation.

Use of written lease to prove terms of oral one agreed to be on same terms, see Evidence § 208.

Best and secondary evidence of leaseholds and tenancies, see Evidence § 132.

Admissibility of evidence that occupant paid taxes and made expensive improvements on issue of existence of a tenancy, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 618a.

¶ 74. Tender of a sum of money as rent, by a party affirming the existence of an agreement for a lease to a party denying it, has no tendency to prove the agreement.—Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 117.

¶ 75. Testimony that at a school-district meeting a motion was made calling upon plaintiff to give the district a deed of certain land, which motion was not put to a vote, is incompetent to disprove a previous lease of the land to the district or the contents thereof.—Tisman v. St. Clair Township School District, No. 10, 90 Mich. 510.

¶ 76. Where, after a written lease for a term of years had been taken of parts of a house, a parol lease of an additional part was entered into for the rest of such term, the lessee, when summary proceedings are brought against him for the premises orally leased may put the written lease in evidence for the purpose of showing the terms of the parol one.—Brant v. Vincent, 100 Mich. 426.

§ 23. Kinds of tenancies in general.

Terms for years, see post § 24.

Tenancies from year to year, see post §§ 25, 26.

Tenants by sufferance and at will, see post §§ 27-30.

¶ 77. After the making of a lease for a term of years a subsequent agreement of lease at will for less rent is a binding contract and supersedes the former executory agreement.—Andre v. Graebner, 126 Mich. 116.

§ 24. Terms for years.

Term and duration in general, see post II.

Parol leases for more than one year, see Frauds, Statute of, I, A, and §§ 67, 101.

¶ 78. The plaintiff's husband made a lease for twenty years of his farm, to the defendant, and put it in escrow, to be delivered to defendant upon his death. At the time of the husband's death, more than twelve years remained before the expiration of the lease. Held, that the lease was void, as contravening, art. 18, § 12 of the Constitution, which forbids an agricultural lease of over twelve years.—Waldo v. Jacobs, 152 Mich. 425.

¶ 79. A lessor gave a written lease to a tenant for one year. He then wrote a letter to the tenant, giving him the right to the farm for three years, with the provision that if the lessor should sell any part of the farm tne tenant should surrender all claim to the part sold at the end of the year of the sale. Held, the lessee had a written lease to the entire farm for three years, terminable at the end of the current year as to any part sold by the lessor.—Harwood v. Williams, 161 Mich. 368.

¶ 80. Plaintiff agreed to lease premises to defendant for a term of three years, the agreement to be embodied in a written lease. Defendant went into possession, but the lease was never executed. Defendant during the first year got in arrears for rent. Plaintiff served notice to quit, but thereafter agreed to let defendant stay the year out if he would keep up the rent. Held, this agreement and the conduct of the parties gave the defendant no right to stay longer than a year.—Gault v. Gault, 162 Mich. 85.

Possession under oral agreement, see post § 26.

¶ 81. A tenancy from year to year, terminable at the expiration of one year from service of notice to quit is created by a two-year lease from executors under their statutory power.—Grady v. Warrell, 105 Mich. 310.

¶ 82. Acquiescence by the owner of premises in another's possession under an agreement to support such owner constitutes him a tenant from year to year.—Ganson v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 217.

§ 26. ——Possession under oral agreement.

¶ 83. A tenant under an oral lease for an indefinite period, but whose rent is to be paid annually, is a tenant from year to year.—Judd v. Fairs, 53 Mich. 518.

¶ 84. A verbal agreement to rent a store for three years at a fixed annual rental payable monthly in advance, followed by occupancy, constitutes a tenancy from year to year or at least for one year, and not merely a tenancy at will.—Steketee v. Pratt, 122 Mich. 80.

¶ 85. One who enters into possession of premises under an oral agreement for a written lease for a year with the privilege of an additional term, and the payment of a yearly rental in monthly instalments, is, when the conditions are accepted and rent is paid, a tenant at will from year to year though the lease is never executed; and such a tenant cannot, without cause, abandon the premises and treat it as a surrender without giving his landlord the statutory notice of a year.—Huntington v. Parkhurst, 87 Mich. 38.

¶ 86. The owner of an undivided half of certain premises accepted a parol proposal from one who claimed as owner of a half-interest in the remainder, to rent the latter's undivided fourth at a specific rental per annum, payable quarterly in advance, without stating any period of time; held, that if this arrangement could be governed by the analogies of an ordinary lease, it was at most only a lease at will in its origin, and became after the lapse of a year no more than a lease from year to year, subject to be ended by the will of either party on notice to the other. A refusal to pay further rent under such an arrangement, and a disclaimer of tenancy, serve the purpose of a notice to terminate the tenancy.—Fuller v. Sweet, 30 Mich. 237.

¶ 87. Where land has been occupied on shares, an oral agreement that the tenant should have it three years more on shares, although within the statute of frauds, will support a holding from year to year until ended by notice.—Coan v. Mole, 39 Mich. 454.

¶ 88. An oral lease was made for two years at so much a month the first year and a higher rate the second. After the first year had expired and the rent therefore had been fully paid, a new arrangement was made and rent was received for a few months. Held, that the tenancy was from year to year, not withstanding the monthly payments.—Schneider v. Lord, 62 Mich. 141.

¶ 89. As the statute of frauds permits leases for a year to be created by parol, and as a parol lease for more than a year, and under which the lessee has been put in possession, is good as a lease from year to year, until terminated by notice, no action, except for the agreed compensation, can be maintained against one in possession under a parol agreement, without notice to quit.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 90. When the parties agreed orally to make a written lease for twenty-one months, and, after going into possession, the lessees refused to accept a written lease, and no other contract was made, held, an indefinite holding, not a tenancy from year to year.—Huyser v. Chase, 13 Mich. 98.

¶ 91. Where one who has a written lease for five years of a hotel and of parts of the basement thereof, agrees orally with the lessor to fit up a previously unrented room in the basement in consideration of being allowed to use it during the rest of his written lease, and does fit it up and occupy it for nearly two years without objection, he is a tenant from year to year of the room, and his possession until the end of the second year is lawful.—Brant v. Vincent, 100 Mich. 426.

§ 27. Tenants at will and by sufferance.

Tenancies from month to month, see post § 28.

Tenancy at sufferance and tenants holding over, see post § 29.

Possession under void lease, see post § 30.

¶ 92. The common-law definition of a tenancy at will prevails in Michigan in the absence of a statutory definition.—Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 Mich. 468.

¶ 93. Tenancy at will rests on the actual or presumed consent of the owner of the premises.—Gault v. Stormont, 51 Mich. 636.

¶ 94. One who is let into the possession and use of premises under an agreement to keep off trespassers is a tenant at will; for rent may be reserved in services as well as in money.—Shaw v. Hill, 79 Mich. 86.

¶ 95. One who enters into premises under a void lease for twenty-one months, providing for a rental of $2,475 for the entire term, payable in monthly instalments of $75 for the first nine months, and of $150 for the last twelve months, does not, at the common law, become a tenant from year to year by holding over and paying rent after the expiration of the first year, but is a mere tenant at will.—McIntosh v. Hodges, 110 Mich. 319.

¶ 96. A tenant whose possession is based upon a parol lease for an indefinite term is, in the absence of a reservation of rent due at stated intervals, or of other circumstances from which an intention to create a tenancy from year to year may fairly be inferred, a tenant at will. So held where a life tenant orally leased the premises for the full term of his life, in consideration of an agreement for his support.—Barrett v. Cox, 112 Mich. 220.

¶ 97. An entry and occupation under a parol agreement creates only a tenancy at will terminable on one month's notice, where the oral agreement left some provisions of the proposed lease open and not agreed on, so that the minds of the parties never met on all the terms of a complete lease.—Swart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 142 Mich. 21.

¶ 98. Where premises are let at a fixed monthly rent, with the understanding that the tenant shall give up possession whenever the landlord may require them for his own use, the letting creates a tenancy at will.—Woodrow v. Michael, 13 Mich. 187.

¶ 99. Where a lease is invalid by the statute of frauds, the lessee having taken possession is a tenant at will.—Huyser v. Chase, 13 Mich. 98.

¶ 100. A simple permission to occupy creates a tenancy at will, unless there are circumstances which show an intention to create a tenancy from year to year.—Barrett v. Cox, 112 Mich. 220. (The language in Ganson v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 217, that "the agreement testified to by complainant was good for a year and while acquiesced in by her, the defendant must be considered as holding from year to year," held to be dictum and not in accord with the authorities.)

¶ 101. A tenant who is allowed to hold from year to year so long as no other tenant is found before the expiration of his term is a tenant at will (How. St., § 5774).—Le Tourneau v. Smith, 53 Mich. 473.

¶ 102. Where a house was sold under a contract and the vendee waived the contract right to its completion by a certain date, and was allowed to take possession in advance, it was held that the contract had been varied, and that the vendee did not hold under its conditions, but under the subsequent provisions, and was therefore a tenant at will.—Williams v. Hodges, 41 Mich. 695.

¶ 103. One who has moved upon another's land with his consent is a tenant at will, and entitled to notice before he can be dispossessed by a grantee of the premises.—Appleton v. Buskirk, 67 Mich. 407.

¶ 104. A divorced wife, who with her husband's consent has kept possession of lands to which he holds the legal title, is at least a tenant at will, and entitled to notice before she can be disturbed.—Wilson v. Merrill, 38 Mich. 707.

§ 28. ——Tenancies from month to month.

¶ 105. A tenancy from month to month without other limitation, and determinable at the choice of either party to the lease, is a tenancy at will, and so is a holding over pending negotiations for a renewal of the lease.—Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 Mich. 408.

¶ 106. A verbal agreement of lease for five years with the rent payable monthly, when fully performed is a tenancy from month to month rather than from year to year.—Barlum v. Berger, 125 Mich. 504.

¶ 107. A letting for an indefinite period by the month creates a tenancy at will.—Haines v. Beach, 90 Mich. 563.

¶ 108. In a suit to recover rent it was admitted that a fixed rental was agreed upon, payable monthly, but the parties differed as to the term of the lease, the lessor testifying that it was for one year, and the lessee that no definite time was agreed upon. The lessee further testified that he told the lessor that he could not tell how long he would keep the house, as he did not know himself, but, if it suited him, and nothing occurred, he would probably stay in that locality three or four years, as he wished his children to attend a school near by. Held, that the lessee was, upon his own showing, a tenant at will from month to month, paying rent monthly.—Holes v. Wood, 88 Mich. 435.

§ 29. ——Tenancy at sufferance and tenants holding over.

Renewal by holding over, see post § 50.
Holding over as adverse possession, see Adverse Possession § 26.
Evidence of assent to holding over as bearing on conversion by refusal to surrender, see also Conversion ¶ 172.

¶ 109. A grantor who remains in possession without any contract becomes a tenant at sufferance, and as such is not liable for rent.—Stevens v. Hulin, 53 Mich. 93.

¶ 110. One who enters under lawful title and holds over without right and by reason of his landlord's laches after the termination of his interest is a tenant by sufferance.—Kunzie v. Wixom, 39 Mich. 384; Abeel v. Hubbell, 52 Mich. 37.

¶ 111. The rule that one who comes into possession of land lawfully, and holds after the expiration of his right, becomes a tenant at sufferance, does not apply to one whose original right of occupancy is vested in him by operation of law.—Pattinson v. Dryer, 98 Mich. 564.

¶ 112. A person lawfully in possession of land, who holds over without right, becomes a tenant at sufferance, if the owner permits him to remain a sufficient length of time to imply an intentional acquiescence in the occupancy, although his previous holding was not that of a tenant.—Alpine County School Dist. No. 11 v. Batsche, 106 Mich. 330.

¶ 113. A tenant by sufferance who is allowed to continue in possession under a new arrangement becomes a tenant at will.—Ramsdell v. Maxwell, 32 Mich. 285.

¶ 114. A tenant holding over is not a tenant at will unless he holds over by the express or implied consent of his landlord.—Benfey v. Congdon, 40 Mich. 283.

¶ 115. A tenant who wrongfully holds over his lease does not acquire equities as a tenant at will by any brief delay in proceeding against him, and is not entitled to such notice to quit as a tenant at will could claim.—Benfey v. Congdon, 40 Mich. 283.

¶ 116. A tenancy of office space terminable at will and terminated by notice to operate from the end of a given month is not continued beyond the month by reason of the occupancy of desk room within the office by one to whom the tenant had rented desk room, where no rent beyond the month was taken for such desk room by the tenant and where the renter of the desk room tendered rent to the landlord, who refused it but allowed him to remain, the tenant not being bound to evict him on surrendering the premises.—Swart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 142 Mich. 21.

¶ 117. When one who has been in possession of land under a valid lease continues under a void lease, he is a tenant at will, liable to be ousted by a three months' notice to quit.—Carney v. Mosher, 97 Mich. 554.

¶ 118. Where a tenant whose term had expired agreed orally with his lessor's grantee to clear during the ensuing spring seven acres of the land in consideration of his being allowed to occupy it two years more, and where, having cleared during the time specified only a part of the seven acres, he was sued in summary proceedings instituted on seven days' notice for such default, it was held, that he could not claim, on the ground that the oral contract was void under the statute of frauds, that he was a tenant at will and entitled to three months' notice; for it does not lie with him to say that he is not bound to pay the consideration agreed upon as a condition to his continued occupancy, even though such payment included compensation for a term which he might be compelled to resort to a court of equity to obtain, as long as the grantee was ready to perform the agreement on his part.—Smelling v. Valley, 103 Mich. 580.

§ 31. Leases as security for other undertakings.

Assignment of lease as security, see post § 84.

¶ 119. Leases to secure the payment of bonds can have no greater force than the bonds.—McKee v. Grand Rapids & R. L. St. R. Co., 41 Mich. 274.

II. THE TERM, TERMINATION, RENEWAL AND HOLDING OVER.

§ 32. Term and duration in general.

Estoppel of lessor to question lessee's right to hold, see post § 33.
Legal restrictions, agricultural leases, see post § 34.
Termination of lease or of right of occupancy, see post §§ 35-37.

Terms for years, see ante § 24.
Tenancies from year to year, see ante §§ 25, 26.
Tenants at will or by sufferance, see ante §§ 27-30.

¶ 120. An oral stipulation for rent at a specified annual rate, but without stating for how long, amounts to a lease for a year only.—Benfey v. Congdon, 40 Mich. 283.

¶ 121. Leases by the special guardian of an incompetent person do not continue of their own force beyond the ward's life-time.—Campau v. Shaw, 15 Mich. 226.

¶ 122. D. agreed by written lease dated August 12 to let M. "have possession of the building in which this business is kept till the brick store on the corner is in a proper shape for business, for the sum of fifty dollars, payable on the 1st day of January." Held, that D. could not show that the original understanding was for $100 a year, while the proposition to pay fifty dollars was conditional on the speedy completion of the corner store; also that M. was not liable for more than fifty dollars, and his tenancy continued until that store was "in proper shape for business," however distant that event might be.—D'Arcy v. Martyn, 63 Mich. 602.

¶ 123. A stipulation in a two years' lease that if the lessor sells within the first year the sale shall be subject to the lease for that year, and if afterwards, that it shall be subject to the lease for the second year or to such compromise as the parties may enter into, requires the lessee to give up possession at the end of the first year if sale is made within that period.—Jochen v. Tibbells, 50 Mich. 33.

Estoppel of tenant to question title or make adverse claim, see post §§ 61-64.
Estoppel to question that life lease passed by warranty deed, see Estoppel ¶ 19.
General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 124. A lessor who has received the full consideration for his lease cannot question the right of his lessee to hold; so held where it was sought to show that a lease to a school district was executed before the legal organization thereof.—Tisman v. St. Clair Township School District No. 10, 90 Mich. 510.

§ 34. ——Legal restrictions; agricultural leases.

Provision as to term of agricultural leases, see Const. art. XVI, § 10.

¶ 125. A lease of agricultural land for a term of fifty years for mining and removing ore, is not within the prohibition of sec. 12 of art. XVIII of the Constitution of 1850.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 125a. A life-lease of farming land taken back by a grantor at the time of the execution of his deed to the premises is not within the prohibition of the constitution, article XVIII, § 12, which provides that no lease of agricultural land for longer period than twelve years shall be valid; but the deed and lease must be construed as one instrument and the estate conveyed must be taken as subject to the reservation contained in the lease.—Nichols v. Nichols, 94 Mich. 569.

¶ 125b. A lease of farm lands for a period of twenty years from the date of its execution, placed in escrow for delivery upon the death of the lessor, takes effect upon the delivery in accordance with the escrow instructions and where such delivery occurs more than twelve years prior to the expiration of the lease, it is void under article XVIII, § 12, of the constitution.—Waldo v. Jacobs, 152 Mich. 425.

§ 35. Termination of lease or of right of occupancy.

Illegality of purpose causing termination, see post § 36.
Tenancy by occupant incidental to employment, see post § 37.
Necessity and sufficiency of notice to quit to terminate lease, or right of occupancy, see post §§ 39-44.
Necessity for notice on expiration of term, see post § 41.
Ouster or eviction by landlord, see post § 72.
Right of lessor to terminate lease for breach of implied covenant, see ante ¶ 62.
Ouster or eviction by landlord, see post § 72.
Right to quit and terminate lease or occupancy, see post IV, I.

¶ 126. Where the continuance of a lease depends on the result of an arbitration then pending, an adjournment by the arbitrators will not deprive the tenants of their rights or terminate the tenancy.—Abeel v. Hubbell, 52 Mich. 37.

¶ 127. Where a tenant holds a portion of a lot under a lease stipulating that he shall give up the lease if his lessor concludes to build on the premises, his tenancy is not terminated by the landlord's taking possession of another portion of the lot, not leased, for the purpose of building on that; such taking possession is not even notice of the lessor's intention to build on the leased portion.—Shaw v. Hoffman, 25 Mich. 162.

§ 36. ——Illegality of purpose causing termination.

Release from covenant to rebuild where subsequent ordinance makes such rebuilding unlawful by forbidding erection of building of class provided in covenant, see post ¶ 350.
Right of lessor to terminate and declare lease void on conviction of lessee for keeping house for gambling or prostitution, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15472.

¶ 128. Plaintiff rented premises to defendant to be used for saloon purposes, and agreed to furnish sureties for defendant's saloon bond. During the term of the lease a local option law was passed, and adopted in the town. Held, the passage of the law and its adoption put an end to the lease, and plaintiff could not recover for rent.—Hooper v. Mueller, 158 Mich. 595.

¶ 129. A lease of a building "to be occupied in conducting a retail liquor business and saloon" is not terminated by the adoption of local option in the county so as to relieve the lessee from the obligation to pay rent.—Hyatt v. Grand Rapids Brewing Co., 168 Mich. 360.

§ 37. ——Tenancy by occupant incidental to employment.

Implied tenancy from occupancy incident to employment, see ante § 3.

¶ 130. An employee, by going on a strike, ends his right to occupy a dwelling house of his employer, held by virtue of his employment, and as an incident to his contract of hiring.—Lane v. Au Sable Elec. Co., 181 Mich. 26.

¶ 131. In the absence of the use of excessive force or a forcible entry, an employer is not answerable for the eviction of an employee from a house owned by the former and occupied by the employee and his family by virtue of and as an incident to his contract of employment.—Lane v. Au Sable Elec. Co., 181 Mich. 26.

§ 38. Cancellation or agreements for termination.

Rescission of lease for misrepresentations, see Rescission.
Agreements amounting to novations, see Novation.

¶ 132. Where a lessor leaves his brother temporarily in charge of his hotel business, it cannot be presumed from this fact that the brother is authorized to terminate a lease held by a telegraph company taking space in the hotel lobby.—Chittenden v. Western U. Tel. Co., 154 Mich. 1.

§ 39. Necessity, sufficiency and effect of notice to quit.

Notice to quit for nonpayment of rent, see post § 40.
Necessity for notice on expiration of term, see post § 41.
To terminate tenancy at will or at sufferance, see post § 42.

Sufficiency and effect of notice to terminate tenancy from year to year, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11812.
Notice requisite for termination of estates at will or by sufferance, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11812.

¶ 133. A notice specifying fourteen days is a good notice to quit at the end of three months, if no proceeding is instituted upon it within that time.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 134. Notice to quit and demand of possession operate as an assertion of the intention to forfeit as well as a notice to quit. —Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 135. A notice to quit within one month from date unless the tenant wished to remain by paying a stated sum per month in advance, left the tenant no option which he had the privilege of exercising at the time when he was to leave by the terms of the notice, but required immediate determination as to the terms, and such notice was a proper basis for summary proceedings for possession.—Candler v. Mitchell, 119 Mich. 464.

¶ 136. A lease gave the lessee a privilege of renewal unless the lessor, in case she should wish to rebuild, should give the lessee sixty days' notice of such intention, and of the termination of the lease. The lessor served a notice in due time, simply stating that she intended to terminate the lease, but saying nothing about her intention to rebuild. She did, however, state in the notice that she gave it in pursuance of the clause in the lease relating thereto. Held, that, by reference, the notice served should be interpreted as embodying the clause governing notice in the lease, and that it sufficiently stated the lessor's intention to rebuild.—Stender v. Kerreos, 156 Mich. 499. (Ostrander, Grant and Brooke, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 137. Where the lessee in a written lease of land having three years to run orally sublets part of the leased premises at a specified monthly rental, an oral notice given April 5, requiring the sublessee to quit on or before May 6, the day after the expiration of one year from the subletting is sufficient, even if the sublease was for the unexpired term of the original lease.—Fratcher v. Smith, 104 Mich. 537.

¶ 138. Where a lessee assents to the termination of a year's lease, and continues to hold from day to day under a new arrangement, he is not entitled to a month's notice to quit.—Lane v. Ruhl, 94 Mich. 474.

¶ 139. Where the holding under a lease is from half month to half month, the terms expiring in the middle and at the end of the month, a notice to quit which fixes the expiration of the lease on the first day of a month is not materially erroneous, though it should not extend into the half month.—Detroit Sav. Bank v. Bellamy, 49 Mich. 317.

¶ 140. Under what circumstances a person holding over after foreclosure of a mortgage on the premises will be entitled to notice to quit, quære.—Allen v. Carpenter, 15 Mich. 25.

¶ 141. Where a sufficient notice to quit has been given, and the tenant has promised to leave at a fixed date, a repetition of the demand does not impair the effect of the original notice.—Moody v. Seaman, 46 Mich. 74.

¶ 142. A five years' lease containing a clause by which the lessee agrees to give up the lease if his lessor concludes to build on the premises does not create a tenancy at will strictly, but rather a tenancy upon condition; the lessee is entitled to reasonable notice of the lessor's determination to build, and of his desire that the lease should be given up under said clause; the analogy of statutory notices to terminate a tenancy at will governs in determining what is reasonable notice. Where the lessor actually seized and held possession of the premises, and began building on them, it was held, though a trespass and wholly wrongful, to be a clear notice of the lessor's wish to terminate the tenancy and have possession of the premises, and to have the same effect as notice that a formal notice given at the time would have.—Shaw v. Hoffman, 25 Mich. 162.

¶ 143. A full month's notice to quit by a tenant in possession after the expiration of his term under an arrangement for holding over until he could remove his fixtures, is sufficient.—Landsberg v. Tivoli Brewing Co., 132 Mich. 651.

¶ 144. An oral notice of the termination of the tenancy of one holding over after the expiration of his lease, is sufficient.—Landsberg v. Tivoli Brewing Co., 132 Mich. 651.

§ 40. ——Notice to quit for nonpayment of rent.

Statutory seven days' notice to quit for nonpayment of rent, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11812.

¶ 145. The tenancy, and with it the term under a lease, terminated at the expiration of the time limit given in a notice to quit for nonpayment of the rent.—Wray-Austin Machinery Co. v. Flower, 140 Mich. 452.

§ 41. ——Necessity for notice on expiration of term.

Sufficiency and effect of notice to quit in case of tenancy for years, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11812; Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 13240.

¶ 146. No notice is required to entitle a lessor to the possession of demised premises on the expiration of a lease.—Delano v. Malcolmson-Houghten Co., 183 Mich. 62.

¶ 147. Where under an oral lease for two years the tenant holds over the second year, notice to quit is not necessary at the end of the second year to terminate the tenancy. —Teft v. Hinchman, 76 Mich. 672.

¶ 148. A lessee who enters upon a term for two years after the expiration of a prior lease is not entitled to one year's notice to quit at the expiration of the second term.—Ryan v. Mills, 129 Mich. 170.

§ 42. ——To terminate tenancy at will or at sufferance.

See also ante ¶ 89.

Necessity for notice to quit to mature cause of action for use and occupation, see post ¶ 540.

Waiver of notice to quit, see post ¶¶ 159, 161, 163.

Notice requisite to person holding over after foreclosure of mortgage on premises, see also ante ¶ 140.

Requisite notice to quit to terminate tenancy at will, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11812; Jud. Act, chap. XXX, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, §13240.

¶ 149. Possession under oral agreement for monthly rental creates a tenancy at will which can only be terminated by a full month's notice to quit at the end of one of the regular monthly periods.—Huyser v. Chase, 13 Mich. 98; Woodrow v. Michael, 13 Mich. 187; Le Tourneau v. Smith, 53 Mich. 473; Haines v. Beach, 90 Mich. 563.

¶ 150. A tenant at will paying rent monthly cannot vacate the premises without a month's notice as provided by How. St. § 5774.—Holmes v. Wood, 88 Mich. 435.

¶ 151. A tenant holding over pending negotiations for a renewal of a lease is entitled to notice to quit even if he holds without paying any rental (How. St. § 5774). —Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 Mich. 468.

¶ 152. In proceedings to obtain possession of lands, three months' notice is required whether tenancy is at will or by sufferance, so that it is immaterial, after notice given, whether the tenancy change from one form to the other.—Bennett v. Robinson, 27 Mich. 26.

¶ 153. Notice to quit, where premises are held from month to month, must be given a full month before the day on which a new holding would begin. Where such holding begins on the first of the month a notice given May 6th would not be operative until July 1st.—Hart v. Lindley, 50 Mich. 20.

¶ 154. A vendee, who waived the contract right to completion and was allowed to take possession in advance thereof so as to become a tenant at will, was entitled under (How. St. § 5774) Comp. L. 1871, § 4304, to three months' notice to quit.—Williams v. Hodges, 41 Mich. 695.

¶ 155. A grantor reserved the possession and use of the property sold four months as part of the consideration of the sale but continued to occupy it for twenty days after that time without any special arrangement. Held, that the grantor by so holding over became a tenant at will and as such was entitled to three months' notice to quit in order to have the tenancy terminated.—Hoffman v. Clark, 63 Mich. 175.

§ 43. ——Sufficiency of service.

Sufficiency of oral notice to quit where tenant holds over, see ante ¶ 144.

Effect of repetition of service of notice to quit after giving sufficient notice to quit, see also ante ¶ 141.

¶ 156. If a purchaser by contract has leased the premises and left the country, notice to quit may be served on his lessee. —Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 157. Service of notice dated May 13th, to quit within one month from date, was sufficient in a summary proceeding for possession, where the proof showed that the service was actually received on May 14th. —Candler v. Mitchell, 119 Mich. 464.

¶ 158. A tenancy from month to month growing out of a verbal lease for five years from June 1, 1894 may be terminated by notice given July 10, 1899 and proceedings brought August 10th thereafter (Comp. L. 1897, § 9257).—Barlum v. Berger, 125 Mich. 504.

§ 44. ——Waiver or loss of right to notice.

¶ 159. A tenant at will can waive notice to quit.—Moody v. Seaman, 46 Mich. 74.

¶ 160. A tenant in possession who has attorned to a stranger to the title is not entitled to notice to quit.—Steinhauser v. Kuhn, 50 Mich. 367.

¶ 161. The notice to quit to which a tenant at sufferance is entitled cannot be claimed by one who has asserted any title that directly or impliedly negatives the right to put an end to his interest.—Kunzle v. Wixom, 39 Mich. 384.

¶ 162. A notice to quit waives a previous notice.—D'Arcy v. Martyn, 63 Mich. 602.

¶ 163. A tenant whose claim to a five-year lease is denied by the landlord is not by reason of making such claim estopped to contend that he was not given the notice to quit required to be given to tenants at will under Comp. L. 1897, § 9257, since upon the theory of the landlord he was a tenant at will and entitled to receive such notice to terminate the tenancy.—Simons v. Detroit Twist Drill Co., 136 Mich. 592.

§ 45. Breach of covenant or condition as ground for termination.

Estoppel to claim termination for breach, see post § 46.
Forfeiture for assignment or subletting, see post § 79.
Forfeiture of lease for tenant's breach of covenant to repair, see post § 90.
Breach of covenant or condition as to use and enjoyment of premises, see post § 69.
Acceptance of rental as waiver of breach of conditions, see post § 139.

¶ 164. Neglect to cultivate does not authorize cancelling a lease on the ground that the lessee obtained it by the fraudulent representation that he was a skilful farmer.—Arnold v. Bright, 41 Mich. 207.

§ 46. ——Estoppel to claim termination for breach.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 165. In an action by a lessee against the lessor and the purchaser of the premises in question, for damages for ejectment from the premises, the defendants were estopped from claiming breach of a covenant against vacancy and a forfeiture of the lease, where it appeared that the vacancy in question was merely pursuant to the lessee's custom of fastening the doors and windows, leaving his furniture and permitting the summer hotel in question to be unoccupied after the close of the summer season, and where the rent for the vacancy in question had been paid, and where it was apparent that the purchaser who had assumed the risk and expense of getting possession, made the claim of vacancy as a pretext to avoid the consequence of her illegal acts.—Stoddard v. Gallagher, 133 Mich. 374.

§ 47. Transfer or termination of landlord's estate as affecting lease.

Effect of stranger entering under paramount title, see post ¶ 476.

¶ 166. A sale of the premises to a third party does not of itself determine the tenancy at will existing between the vendor and vendee in an executory contract of purchase of land; under How. St. § 5774 notice is required.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 167. Premises were leased for one year, the lease to be renewed "if both parties are suited (for a term of eight years, reserving the right to sell part or all)" and after six years' occupation the lessors sold the premises to their nephews and nieces for $3, and a promise to give their sympathy and good-will to the grantors. Held, that the sale terminated the lease under the reservation clause.—Wallace v. Bahlhorn, 68 Mich. 87.

§ 48. Injury to or destruction of premises as termination.

Injury to or destruction of premises as affecting right to rental, see post § 127.

¶ 168. A tenancy at will is determined by the destruction of the building tenanted, and the ouster of the tenant.—O'Brien v. Cavanaugh, 61 Mich. 368.

§ 49. Renewal of lease or tenancy.

By holding over, see post § 50.
By acceptance of rental, see post § 51.
By laches or delay after notice to quit, see post § 52.
Necessity and sufficiency of notice of renewal, see post § 119.
Terms, rights and privileges of new lease, see post § 120.
Options to renew, see post §§ 118-121.
Waiver or estoppel to exercise right of option for renewal, see post § 121.
Renewal by giving notice specified in lease, see post ¶ 414.
Officer taking lease to himself on expiration of corporate leasehold, as trustee for corporation, see Corporations § 171.

¶ 169. After a tenant has refused to pay rent until repairs are made and has been accordingly notified to quit, if the landlord subsequently agrees to make the repairs provided the tenant will stay, the tenant's acceptance of the offer makes a new agreement in lieu of the original lease.—Conkling v. Tuttle, 52 Mich. 630.

§ 50. ——By holding over.

Tenancy by holding over, see ante § 29.

¶ 170. A tenant must be presumed to intend to continue a yearly tenancy where he holds over after expiration of the term, so that the landlord may elect to treat him either as a trespasser or as a tenant.—Hoffman v. Willits, 194 Mich. 276.

¶ 171. Where a tenant remains in possession after the expiration of a term of three years, under a lease providing for "the term of three years, with privilege of five years," he is not a tenant at will, but his holding is under the lease.—Gensler v. Nicholas, 151 Mich. 529.

¶ 172. Where a lease provides for notice by the lessee of his intention to claim the benefit of an option given him in the lease for an additional term, such notice must be given, or such intention on his part must be otherwise manifested; and a naked holding over is insufficient to warrant a finding that the lease has been extended.—Cooper v. Joy, 105 Mich. 374.

¶ 173. The right of a lessor to treat a lessee who holds over after the expiration of his term as a tenant, and not a trespasser, is not affected by the fact that the lessee had no intention of renewing his lease.—Mason v. Wierengo's Estate, 113 Mich. 151.

¶ 174. The fact that a tenant for a term of years becomes seriously ill shortly before the expiration of his term, and after removal operations have actually begun, does not deprive the landlord of his right to treat the tenant's failure to complete the removal before the lease expires as a renewal of the lease for another year.—Mason v. Wierengo's Estate, 113 Mich. 151.

¶ 175. The lessee for a term of years of two stores sublet one of the stores, and, about a month before the expiration of the lease, notified the subtenant that he did not desire to take a new lease, and, if the subtenant desired to retain possession, he had better see the lessor. The lease expired on Sunday. Prior to that time, the subtenant had commenced packing his goods preparatory to vacating the store. On the following Monday the lessor's agent came to the store, took down a sign "To Rent," which had been placed there by the lessee, and informed the subtenant that the store had been rented to the lessee. The subtenant, relying upon such statement, and thinking that the lessee did not wish immediate possession, delayed the removal of his goods for a short time. The lessee, on learning of such delay by being called upon for the payment of a month's rent, notified the subtenant, who moved out, and the keys were surrendered to the lessor on the ninth day after the termination of the lease. Held, that this was not such a holding over as would constitute a new lease by the lessee for another year.—Campau v. Michell, 103 Mich. 617.

¶ 176. A renter of desk room from a tenant of a room has no relation of tenancy to the landlord, and hence his remaining when the tenant surrenders the room does not prolong the tenancy; it is not the duty of the tenant to evict him in order to terminate the tenancy.—Swart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 142 Mich. 21.

¶ 177. The presumption that a tenant for a year intends to continue his tenancy for a like period because of his holding over has no application where the parties anticipate a holding over by the tenant beyond the term, and provide for it by agreement.—Hoffman v. Willits, 194 Mich. 276.

¶ 178. The presumptions as to a tenant holding over do not apply where a new agreement is made whereby the store building occupied by the tenant is to be moved to a new location before the expiration of the term and occupied at a reduced rental until the erection of a new building on the old location, and the landlord agrees to promptly repair the building, upon its removal.—Kezeli v. River Rouge Lodge, No. 410, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, 195 Mich. 181.

¶ 179. A tenant holding over after the expiration of the term of his written lease does not become a tenant for another year, where shortly before the expiration of the lease the lessor informed him that he could remain at an increased rental to which he replied, by telephone, that he would not stay at the increased rate but would take his fixtures out as soon as he could and the lessor answered "all right," and the premises were vacated in part within one week and in whole within six weeks.—Landsberg v. Tivoli Brewing Co., 132 Mich. 651.

§ 51. ——By acceptance of rental.

¶ 180. The inadvertent acceptance by the servant of a lessor of an advance payment of a quarter's rent after the expiration of a lease which the lessor had refused to renew, does not confer on the lessee any right to further possession.—Delano v. Malcolmson-Houghten Co., 183 Mich. 62.

¶ 181. The acceptance of a payment of money to apply on account of rent does not operate as a waiver of the tenant's default and prevent such default from terminating the lease, where the payment is properly applied to the payment of the first rent accruing leaving balance of rent in default.—Chiera v. McDonald, 121 Mich. 54.

§ 52. ——By laches or delay after notice to quit.

¶ 182. Lapse of time after a notice to quit may create a new tenancy.—D'Arcy v. Martyn, 63 Mich. 602.

§ 53. Rights and liabilities under tenancy by holding over.

¶ 183. The parties to a lease do not, as matter of law, continue subject to its terms, where the tenant, against the landlord's will, holds over and continues in possession, and seeks to bind the landlord by provisions of the lease which have become inapplicable in consequence of changes in the premises.—Ives v. Williams, 50 Mich. 100.

¶ 184. Where a tenant holds over after the expiration of his year, and the landlord elects to treat him as a tenant, rather than as a trespasser, by demanding rent, the tenant cannot thereafter, in the course of the payment of his rent, create a different tenancy by accompanying such payment with conditions, to wit, that the holding over shall be terminable within the year.—Scott v. Beecher, 91 Mich. 590.

¶ 185. A tenant who holds over after the expiration of his lease under an agreement that his continuance in possession shall be conditional upon his landlord's making necessary repairs, is at liberty to leave without notice if the landlord fails to carry out his agreement.—Fisher v. Nergararian, 112 Mich. 327.

¶ 186. Where the lessee of a stall in a city market continues in possession after notice from the city that the lease is terminated and after the adoption of an ordinance discontinuing the market, he is not a tenant at will, and is liable thereafter only for the reasonable worth of the premises without regard to the rent provided for in the lease. —City of Detroit v. Gleason, 116 Mich. 564.

¶ 187. Plaintiff agreed to lease premises to defendant for a term of three years, the agreement to be embodied in a written lease. Defendant went into possession, but the lease was never executed. During the first and second years plaintiff several times served notice to quit or pay rent, but defendant continued in possession. Plaintiff permitted him to stay for thirty days after the beginning of the third year. Held, the agreement and conduct of the parties did not give defendant a right to stay the entire third year, and the holding over was neither a tenancy at will nor one from year to year.—Gault v. Gault, 162 Mich. 85.

¶ 188. A lease for a term of years stipulated that after the term had elapsed either party might notify the other of the selection of an appraiser to make a valuation of the property, and if the other did not select another appraiser within thirty days he might do it himself, and the appraiser so chosen might make a valuation of the property which the lessor must pay on surrender of the premises and buildings, within thirty days after such surrender, the amount of the valuation to be a lien on the premises until paid. Held, that the lessee is not entitled to remain in possession while the appraisal is in progress.—Bressler v. Darmstaetter, 57 Mich. 311.

III. LANDLORD'S TITLE AND REVERSIONARY RIGHTS.

§ 54. In general.

Rights and powers of landlord, see post § 55.
Conveyance of reversion, see post § 56.
Mortgage of reversionary interest, see post § 57.
Assignment by lessor of rent or of leasehold, see post §§ 58-60.

Tacking possession under tenant to title taken from landlord, see Adverse Possession ¶ 188.
Outstanding lease as incumbrance on lessor's title, see Covenants for Title ¶ 22.
Rights of lessees from life tenants, see Life Estates, III.

¶ 189. Where a tenant rents premises from a firm, paying rent to it as landlord and owner, the question of legal title is unimportant in determining the firm's responsibility to the tenant for what it has assumed to do as lessor in the firm name.—Williams v. Shelden, 61 Mich. 311.

§ 55. Rights and powers of landlord.

See also ante ¶ 16.
Landlord's reservations of rights as to use and enjoyment of premises, see post § 67.
Statutory provisions for protection of reversionary rights, against defaults of or recoveries against tenant for years or for life, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXIII, §§ 1-5, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13358-13361.

¶ 190. A lessor is estopped as against a lessee from asserting ownership of a smaller interest, but not from asserting title to a larger interest than is expressed in the lease. —Houlihan v. Fogarty, 162 Mich. 492.

¶ 191. A provision in a lease providing that the lessor shall have a right of way across the demised premises, will be construed independently from an option in the lease to purchase, and it will not be necessary to determine the effect of such provision upon the bill for specific performance of the contract.—Wright v. Kaynor, 150 Mich. 7.

§ 56. Conveyance of reversion.

¶ 192. A lessor may convey the reversion with the rent, or, retaining the reversion, may assign the rent; and in either case the grantee or assignee may sue for the rent, irrespective of any formal attornment by the tenant.—Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 292.

¶ 193. A deed of land under lease conveys the landlord's rights, as against the lessee, without further ceremony.—Hansen v. Prince, 45 Mich. 519.

¶ 194. A conveyance of leased lands with the reversion, remainder, "rents, issues and profits thereof," transfers to the grantee the right to collect and sue for the rent thereafter accruing, and the tenant cannot defeat his action by refusing to attorn to him.—Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 292.

¶ 195. Past-due rents cannot be recovered by the grantee of a lessor unless his deed confers the right to them.—Pendill v. Eells, 67 Mich. 657.

¶ 196. An assignment by a wife to her husband of "all the use" of certain premises leased to other persons but held in her name, "for his use and benefit," is not specific enough to give him the right to rents under existing leases.—Spicer v. Bonker, 45 Mich. 630.

¶ 197. A vendor of land, which is turned back to him by the vendee after the latter has accepted a lease of the premises from another party is estopped to deny the title of the lessor if the absolute title passed from him upon the first conveyance, unless facts are shown to defeat the apparent estoppel.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Bullard, 120 Mich. 416.

§ 57. Mortgage of reversionary interest.

¶ 198. A deed intended as a mortgage will not sustain a claim by the grantee for the rent of the premises if the grantor remains in possession.—Stevens v. Hulin, 53 Mich. 93.

¶ 199. Though a mortgagee's lessee cannot dispute the right of his landlord to make the lease to him, he can attorn to, and take a lease from, the mortgagee after foreclosure; or he may show that the landlord's title has ceased and has become vested in himself through the mortgage.—Niles v. Ransford, 1 Mich. 338.

¶ 200. The mortgagee cannot recover rent of one who has gone into possession of the land since the mortgage was given, as tenant of the mortgagor, without an attornment by the tenant to him.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 201. A notice by a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale to a tenant of the mortgagor, of such purchase, coupled with a claim of title and statement that rent is due and payable to him, the purchaser, and that he desires to hear from the tenant, must be personally served to make it a legal foundation for any proceeding to put the tenant in responsibility.—Williams v. Shelden, 61 Mich. 311.

¶ 202. If there is a deficiency the mortgagees have a right to apply the amount of rent due from them and unpaid in satisfaction of the foreclosure decree, and an assignment by the mortgagor to a third person of his claim for rent cannot prevent this.—Storey v. Dutton, 46 Mich. 539.

¶ 203. The tenant of a mortgagee, put into possession of a part of the mortgaged land under a parol agreement with the mortgagor's grantee, cannot attorn to the latter, and a share of a crop raised by him and delivered as rent to his landlord cannot be seized by the grantee because the mortgagee begins a foreclosure.—Byers v. Byers, 65 Mich. 598.

§ 58. Assignment by lessor of rent or of leasehold.

Attornment to assignee, see post § 59.

Right of grantees or assignees of landlord to rent, see post § 136.
Sale by lessor to third person who exacts additional rent as conversion of tenant's fixtures, see Conversion § 3, ¶ 11.

¶ 204. An assignment of a lease does not discharge the lessees' obligation to the lessor where no new leasing is made, where there is no understanding that the lessees shall be released, and where no acts are done whereby an intention to release can be inferred.—Wineman v. Phillips, 93 Mich. 223.

¶ 205. A lessor conveyed his interest in the leased premises, and gave an order on the lessee for the payment to the grantee of all rents and moneys in his hands due the lessor. At the time of making the lease it was agreed that the lessee should pay the lessor a certain sum of money, and should pay certain of his debts, and that the payments so made should apply on the rent account. Held, that the grantee received the deed and order subject to this agreement, whether aware of its existence or not, and that payments made thereunder by the lessee were properly chargeable against the rent account.—Hovey v. Walker, 90 Mich. 527.

¶ 206. Rents of mortgaged property may be assigned to the mortgagee to be applied upon the mortgage.—Kelly v. Bowerman, 113 Mich. 446.

§ 59. ——Attornment to assignee.

Attornment by tenant to third person, see post § 65.
Attornment to mortgagee of tenant of mortgagor, see also ante ¶ 200.
Refusal of tenant to allow landlord's vendee to remove crops as a conversion, see Conversion ¶ 18.

¶ 207. No formal attornment is necessary where the lessor assigns the lease; the lessee is then under legal obligation to pay the rent to the assignee.—Kelly v. Bowerman, 113 Mich. 446.

§ 60. ——Conveyance or assignment to tenant or sublessee.

¶ 208. Even though the lessee of a sublessee by the purchase of the original lease becomes the sublessee's landlord he is not in position to declare a forfeiture of the sublessee's lease for nonpayment of rent without first tendering possession on payment, where he is himself in possession and has been refusing possession on other grounds to the lessee.—Murphy v. Sayles, 201 Mich. 78.

¶ 209. A tenant is estopped from disputing his landlord's title.—Byrne v. Beeson, 1 D. 179; Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117; Lee v. Payne, 4 Mich. 106; Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 Mich. 339; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351; Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12; Fuller v. Sweet, 30 Mich. 237; Bertram v. Cook, 32 Mich. 518; Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45; Campau v. Lafferty, 43 Mich. 429; Bertram v. Cook, 44 Mich. 396; Jochen v. Tibbells, 50 Mich. 33; Whitford v. Crooks, 50 Mich. 40; Henderson v. Miller, 53 Mich. 590; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

¶ 210. A tenant who has not been disturbed in his use of the demised premises cannot question his landlord's-right to make the lease.—Cunning v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 88 Mich. 237.

¶ 211. Where one abandons his right to occupy under contract, and continues to occupy, his possession is that of a tenant estopped to deny his landlord's title.—Henderson v. Miller, 53 Mich. 590.

¶ 212. In the absence of indenture, estoppel against a tenant from asserting a title adverse to his landlord arises only from possession given, whereby an advantage is derived by the tenant from the landlord's act.—Fuller v. Sweet, 30 Mich. 237.

¶ 213. Where the lessor dies during the term of a lease, and the lessee's assignee before the expiration of the term takes a new lease from the lessor's executors, the tenant thereby precludes himself from claiming, after the old lease has expired, that he holds over under it, and his rights depend upon his tenure under the executor's lease.—Grady v. Warrell, 105 Mich. 310.

¶ 214. A tenant who obtained possession under an agreement with a person in possession by the consent of the owner of the premises cannot turn his holding into one of an adverse character.—Butler v. Bertrand, 97 Mich. 59.

¶ 215. A tenant at will cannot surrender his possession to strangers so as to give them any greater rights than he possesses, nor do anything to impair his landlord's right to the possession of the premises.—Shaw v. Hill, 79 Mich. 86.

¶ 216. A lessee, who has not been disturbed in the enjoyment of the rights granted under his lease, cannot, in an action by the lessor to recover the rent reserved, question the right of the lessor to make the grant.—Cunning v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 88 Mich. 237.

¶ 217. Where a defendant in ejectment obtained possession from the executor of an estate, he is estopped, as against the estate or persons claiming thereunder, from denying their possessory right.—Whitford v. Crooks, 50 Mich. 40.

¶ 218. Where a trespasser, in whom title by adverse possession has not been perfected, accepts a lease and agrees to give up possession when it expires, he is estopped from repudiating his recognition of his landlord's title and from claiming adversely to such title.—Campau v. Lafferty, 43 Mich. 429.

¶ 219. A defendant in ejectment who has obtained possession by collusion with plaintiff's tenant is estopped for purposes of recovering possession from disputing the plaintiff's title; but the estoppel is not equivalent to an admission of his title in fee.—Bertram v. Cook, 44 Mich. 396.

¶ 220. An adverse use or holding by the party sought to be charged as tenant is incompatible with the relationship of landlord and tenant.—Ward v. Warner, 8 Mich. 508; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351; Wilmarth v. Palmer, 34 Mich. 347.

¶ 221. One who goes into possession, admitting the title of the owner, cannot, after remaining quietly in possession for a long period, render his holding adverse by a mere silent determination of his own mind, so as to avoid a liability for the use of the premises.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 222. A tenant who has accepted his lease from several lessors jointly cannot inquire into their individual interests so long as he remains in possession undisturbed.—Hecht v. Ferris, 45 Mich. 376.

¶ 223. In ejectment against a tenant or in proceedings to recover possession from him, he cannot deny the landlord's possessory right, nor can those claiming under him. Defendants cannot, therefore, put in evidence deeds to themselves. But if plaintiff claims the premises in fee, the tenant is not estopped from denying that he has no greater right than that of possession.—Jochen v. Tibbells, 50 Mich. 33.

¶ 224. A lease made between the defendant and the complainant, pending litigation to set aside a deed from the complainant to the defendant, by which the complainant is permitted to remain in possession for the time being, does not estop the complainant from denying the defendant's title.—Sartwell v. Young, 126 Mich. 304.

¶ 225. One in possession of land who accepts a lease thereof, not under seal, may show that the lease was made under a mistake of fact and without consideration, because the title to the premises was in fact in himself.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Bullard, 120 Mich. 416.

¶ 226. Complainant leased to defendant certain premises and included in the lease the frame building in question. Complainant brings a bill to restrain defendant from removing the building from the premises. Defendant answered, denying complainant's title to the building and introducing evidence to show that defendant secured the same from another party. Complainant introduced no further proof of ownership. Held, defendant was not estopped to deny complainant's title from the fact that the building was mentioned in the lease, and complainant's bill was properly dismissed for lack of evidence of ownership of the building.—Hoffman v. Nelson, 158 Mich. 573.

¶ 227. Where the lessee of premises from a sublessee enters into possession by permission solely from the lessee the relation of landlord and tenant is created, precluding the tenant from disputing the landlord's title without first surrendering possession of the premises.—Murphy v. Sayles, 201 Mich. 78.

§ 62. ——Acquiring or buying in adverse title or tax title.

Law of tax sales in general, see Taxes, XI.

¶ 228. A tenant may dispute his landlord's title by showing that it has been extinguished subsequently to the date of the lease.—Sherman v. Fisher, 138 Mich. 391.

¶ 229. A tenant cannot, by buying in a title adverse to his landlord's, relieve himself of the obligations of his tenancy; and if he does so and repudiates the tenancy the landlord can dispossess him.—Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

¶ 230. A lessee of a mortgagor is not estopped in an action of ejectment brought against him by the mortgagor from showing, to protect his possession, that he has become assignee of the mortgagee.—Niles v. Ransford, 1 Mich. 338.

¶ 231. One who holds under a lease cannot buy in an outstanding title, or do anything inconsistent with the relation of tenant to landlord, without first yielding possession to the latter.—Bertram v. Cook, 32 Mich. 518.

¶ 231a. A tenant cannot buy tax-titles and set them up against his landlord's title, especially if they were upon improvements added by the tenant.—Williams v. Towl, 65 Mich. 204.

¶ 231b. A tenant who has covenanted to pay taxes is estopped from acquiring a tax-title to cut off his landlord's title.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113.

§ 63. ——Showing adverse title in third person.

¶ 232. A tenant holding over after expiration of his term cannot set up title to the premises in a third person in defense of an action by his landlord to recover the possession.—Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117.

¶ 233. One who has rented a dock under an express contract, and has not been disturbed in his possession, cannot, when sued for rent, question the owner's right to recover, by showing that part of the dock is in a city street.—Cunning v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 88 Mich. 237.

¶ 234. Where a lease is made without any stipulation as to the taxes, the tenant may show that the title of the landlord has become extinguished by sale for taxes so as to defeat an action for rent.—Sherman v. Spalding, 126 Mich. 561.

¶ 235. A house is an entirety so long as it is occupied as such by a tenant, and the possession, by an adverse party, of a single room cannot be held a possession of the building to the exclusion of the tenant.—Soule v. Hough, 45 Mich. 418.

Effect where tenants collude with purchaser of tax-title by surrender and return to possession, see also post ¶ 245.

¶ 236. A tenant in fact cannot dispute the title under which he obtained possession, even though he has since acquired a better title; but when he has surrendered the possession obtained by tenancy he may then try titles. These principles do not apply to cases where the party in possession did not enter under the other and has never made himself the other's tenant in fact.—Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45.

237. A tenant is estopped from disputing his landlord's title so long only as the lease continues or he holds over. After he surrenders possession he is as free to set up an independent claim to the property as any other person; and any one who comes into possession by the tenant's consent is no further estopped than he is.—Bertram v. Cook, 44 Mich. 396.

¶ 238. One who is in possession of land as tenant of another cannot buy in an adverse title which existed at the time he received his lease, and make such purchase the basis of a suit in equity to quiet his title as against his landlord. The possession acquired by means of the lease must be surrendered before the tenant is in position to dispute the title under which he entered.—Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12.

¶ 239. A son, being one of a family in the occupancy of a farm, to the fee of an undivided part of which he is equitably entitled by inheritance, who takes a lease of the farm from his mother, who had acquired the legal title—the family still living together on it—will not, after the expiration of the time and the surrender of the possession, be estopped by such lease to set up his claim to his part of the farm.—Campbell v. Campbell, 21 Mich. 438.

¶ 240. Where, on the execution of a writ of possession, a defendant in the ejectment suit takes a lease from the plaintiff in order to avoid being put off the land, the act will not permanently estop him from contesting plaintiff's title in another action of ejectment brought after the expiration of the lease and notice to quit.—Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 Mich. 549.

¶ 241. The fact that defendant's predecessors in title while in possession of land, executed an unsealed instrument to plaintiff, acknowledging themselves to be his tenants, does not estop defendant from setting up title to the land by adverse possession.—Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 157 Mich. 115.

§ 65. Attornment by tenant to third person.

Creation of new tenancy by attornment, see ante § 20.

Attornment to assignee of lessor, see ante § 59.

Necessity for notice to quit to tenant who has attorned to stranger, see ante ¶ 160.

Public policy as to agreement to accept stranger as landlord, see also Contracts § 70.

¶ 242. A tenant cannot, by his own act merely, change the tenure, so as to enable himself to hold against his landlord. He cannot, during the continuance of the lease or tenancy, make a valid attornment to a third person without his landlord's consent.—Byrne v. Beeson, 1 D. 179; Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117; Lee v. Payne, 4 Mich. 106; Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 Mich. 339; Fuller v. Sweet, 30 Mich. 237; Bertram v. Cook, 32 Mich. 518; Hoffman v. Clark, 63 Mich. 175.

¶ 243. Beyond its application to prevent a tenant from denying his landlord's title the doctrine of attornment serves but little, if any, useful purpose here; and it is inconsistent with our laws, customs and institutions.—Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 292.

¶ 244. A tenant cannot dispute his landlord's right to recover demised premises on the expiration of a lease, by showing an attornment to a third person who held a tax-title at the creation of the tenancy.—Balch v. Radford, 182 Mich. 292.

¶ 245. Where the purchaser of a tax deed colluded with the tenants of the owner of the land, asked them to leave, and then return to possession as his tenants, he is estopped to deny the possessory right of the owner.—Williams v. Fox, 152 Mich. 215.

¶ 246. An attornment by a tenant to a third party, who has recovered the premises from him by an action of ejectment and writ of possession, is not voluntary in any such sense as to make it a wrong against the tenant's original landlord.—Foss v. Van Driele, 47 Mich. 201.

¶ 247. A contract by which a tenant is induced to desert his landlord is corrupt and void, and no action can be maintained upon it. If he accepts a lease from a third person, either he or his landlord may defend his possession against proceedings by such third person, by showing the prior existence of the tenancy.—Byrne v. Beeson, 1 D. 179.

¶ 247a. A contract by which a tenant agrees to accept another as landlord is contrary to public policy; and constitutes no obstacle to pleading the original tenancy against an action by the other party for possession.—Byrne v. Beeson, 1 D. 179, cited in Fuller v. Sweet, 30 Mich. 237, dictum on page 241 to the same point. [Note. In both these cases the real point was that the tenant could not attorn to a third person and thus defeat the paramount title of his landlord, and what is said about public policy seems to be obitor.—Editor.]

IV. MUTUAL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

A. USE AND ENJOYMENT OF PREMISES; PROPERTY INCLUDED.

§ 66. Rights of use and enjoyment in general.

Landlord's reservation of rights, see post § 67.
Covenants and conditions as to use and enjoyment, see post §§ 68-70.
Invasion or interference with tenant's possessory rights, see post § 71.
Ouster or eviction by landlord, see post § 72.
Extent of demise and property included, see post § 73.
Right of enjoyment as incident of tenancy, see ante ¶ 2.
Action for fraud or concealment of matters affecting enjoyment of premises demised in procuring tenant, see post § 164.
Rights and liabilities toward third persons, see post VII.
Use of property as incident to contract, see Contracts, VI, F; and see also Licenses to Enter.
Rights of married woman under joint lease running to her and her husband, see Husband and Wife § 127.
Evidence of right as bearing on justification for assault in defense of claim, see Assault § 28.
Liability for waste, see Waste.
Assaults in defense of rightful possession of premises, see Assault § 18.
Rights of lessee of lots of summer resort association as member thereof, see Associations § 9.
Harvesting crop sowed without right as a conversion of it, see Conversion ¶ 27.
Forbearance of right to take possession as consideration for tenant's promise, see Contracts ¶ 479.
Right of lessee for years to work opened mines, see Mines ¶ 3.

¶ 248. The lease of a building, or of one floor or story thereof, conveys to the lessee the absolute dominion over the premises leased, including the outer as well as the inner walls; and such lessee obtains the right, in the absence of restrictions, to use such premises, including the walls, for all purposes not inconsistent with the lease.—Forbes v. Gorman, 159 Mich. 291.

¶ 249. A tenant leased the first floor of a building for mercantile purposes with a privilege of putting an electric sign on the roof. Held, this privilege gave him only a right to put up a sign connected with his own business, and the lessee's assignee had no right to rent the roof space to an advertising firm to put up a whisky sign.—Forbes v. Gorman, 159 Mich. 291.

§ 67. ——Landlord's reservations of rights.

¶ 250. A tenancy does not necessarily imply a right to complete and exclusive possession; it may be created with implied or express reservation of a right to possession on the landlord's part for all purposes not inconsistent with the privileges granted to the tenant.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 251. A lease of an equal undivided half of specified premises for all the purposes of mining, including the erection of necessary buildings, also provided that the lessor should not dispose of the interest leased without giving the lessee the refusal of it, and that until sold the lessor should retain, for agricultural purposes, the use of so much of the land as was not needed for mining. Held, that this did not give an ordinary leasehold interest, but a specific mining privilege; the lessee's right, until he took actual possession, was a mere incorporeal right, floating and indefinite, and not enforceable by an action of ejectment.—Harlow v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 36 Mich. 105.

¶ 252. A lease of land for a term, subject to the lessor's right to explore the same for minerals and to mine them, gives the lessee a valuable use of the land entitling him to make any use he chooses subject to the reserved right; and the fact that lessor objects is not material.—Ray v. Johnson, 98 Mich. 34.

§ 68. Covenants and conditions as to use and enjoyment.

Breach of covenants and conditions, see post § 69.
Waiver and acquiescence in breach, see post § 70.
Implied covenant as to premises being fit for purpose for which leased, see ante ¶ 64.
Contract of lessor to indemnify lessee against loss or damage, see Indemnity § 4.

¶ 253. Covenants affecting the mode of occupation and enjoyment of leased premises run with the land, and the assignee though not named may be restrained by injunction from violating them.—Wertheimer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 56.

§ 69. ——Breach of covenants and conditions.

Breach of covenant or condition as ground for termination, see ante § 45.

¶ 254. The breach of a condition that the tenant shall not cease to use the house as a dwelling, he having moved out and left his goods stored there, is a reasonable ground of forfeiture.—Marsh v. Bristol, 65 Mich. 378.

¶ 255. Accidental injuries to the premises from natural causes, which interfere with the lessee's enjoyment of the premises, are not considered a breach of the lessor's covenant for quiet enjoyment.—Bowen v. Clemens, 161 Mich. 493.

¶ 256. Where the lease restricted the use of the building to the sale of teas, coffee and similar goods, and the lessors consented to its use for the sale of small musical instruments and sheet music by a sublessee who sublet it to be used for a "misfit" clothing house, such use may be enjoined at the suit of the original lessors.—Wertheimer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 56.

¶ 257. A lease of wine and billiard rooms provided for re-entry in case of nonperformance of any of the covenants at any of the times mentioned for the performance thereof. There were conditions against incumbering furniture or violating the law and ordinances relating to the business. Held, that as these conditions were continuous in their nature, any breach of them would be a breach of the time mentioned for their performance; and would be a cause of forfeiture.—Alexander v. Hodges, 41 Mich. 691.

¶ 258. The condition of a bond securing the right to the occupancy of a certain room in a building is broken where, by the obligor's procurement, the only mode of access to the room is denied to the obligee, in consequence whereof the occupation is abandoned.—Grove v. Youell, 110 Mich. 285.

¶ 259. Where the lessee of a hotel sublets the cigar and newsroom, with the appurtenances thereto, including the right of entrance to and from the hotel rooms, for the business of cigar-selling and news-dealing, the lease containing a grant of the entire cigar privilege of the hotel, and a covenant for the peaceable and quiet enjoyment of the leased premises, there is an express covenant to maintain the hotel, and the closing thereof is such an interference with plaintiff's use of the premises as amounts to an eviction.—Coulter v. Norton, 100 Mich. 389.

§ 70. ——Waiver and acquiescence in breach.

¶ 260. Lessor's consent to occupancy of leased premises by sublessee for a specified business is a constructive waiver of condition not to sublet or to carry on any other business than that specified in the lease; but it applies only to such sublessee and business.—Wertheimer v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 56.

¶ 261. The use of leased premises for purposes other than those named in the lease will not work a forfeiture thereof where such use is acquiesced in by the lessor with full knowledge thereof.—Poli v. Jacobs, 177 Mich. 238.

§ 71. Invasion or interference with tenant's possessory rights.

Measure of damages for eviction or disturbance of enjoyment, see Damages §§ 73, 74, 100.

Liability for treble damages for forcible entry and eviction, see Damages § 208.

¶ 262. Putting a lock on the door of a building in the possession of a tenant does not place the landlord in possession thereof, it constituting merely an invasion of the tenant's possessory rights.—Hayward v. Hope Township School Dist. No. 9, 139 Mich. 539.

¶ 263. In order to eject plaintiff tenant from a room after the lease had expired, defendant at 11:30 p. m. bored a hole through the partition and injected formaldehyde. He admitted that he knew the plaintiff might be sleeping in there, and that he took the step for the purpose of fumigating the room with the idea that the plaintiff might get out if he wanted to. Held, defendant was liable for damages resulting from his wrongful act.—Saros v. Avenue Theatre Co., 172 Mich. 238.

§ 72. Ouster or eviction by landlord.

Rerenting by lessor after surrender of key as eviction, see post ¶ 598.

Instructions as to what constitutes eviction, see post ¶ 644.

Action for damages for eviction or wrongful dispossession, see post § 163.

Right to quit or terminate in general, see post IV, I.

Measure of damages for eviction or disturbance of enjoyment, see Damages §§ 73, 74, 100.

Loss of profits and expenses as elements of damages for eviction, see Damages § 42.

Measure of recovery by tenant as limited by his limited interest, see Damages, IV.

Liability for treble damages for forcible entry and eviction, see Damages § 208.

Measure of recovery on agreement to indemnify tenant against costs of appeal from judgment of eviction, see Indemnity § 10.

Quarrelsomeness and reputation of evictor as evidence of force, see Evidence ¶ 1942.

¶ 264. An act of a landlord depriving a tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of demised premises amounts to an eviction even though there is not any actual physical expulsion.—Bamlet Realty Co. v. Doff, 183 Mich. 694.

¶ 265. A lessor conveyed by warranty deed to a bona fide purchaser without notice premises held under an unrecorded lease but not at the time in the tenant's actual possession, and then notified the tenant that the land had been sold and the lease terminated, forbidding him to enter the premises. The purchaser also threatened the tenant with prosecution if he entered. Held that, when sued for damages, the lessor was estopped from relying upon the absence of a technical ouster.—Cornelissens v. Driscoll, 89 Mich. 34.

¶ 266. A tenant is evicted from a room in a building, so as to constitute a breach of a bond securing the right to its occupancy, where the only mode of access to the room is denied to him by the procurement of the obligor, in consequence of which the occupation is abandoned.—Grove v. Youell, 110 Mich. 285.

§ 73. Extent of demise and property included.

Disability to enlarge demise by language of habendum clause, see ante ¶ 49.

Inaction making estoppel to claim accounting from tenant for lease of sign spaces beyond right, see also Estoppel ¶ 158.

Description in lease of premises covered, see ante § 19.

Right of lessee of building to use roof space for advertising sign, see also ante ¶ 249.

Right of lessee of building or of floor of building to use outer walls, see also ante ¶ 248.

¶ 267. Where the exclusive possession of land occupied by leased buildings is necessary to the enjoyment of the demise, the land passes as an incident to the demise.—Chesebrough v. Pingree, 72 Mich. 438.

¶ 268. Where a building covers the whole of the lot upon which it stands, a lease of such building "together with all and singular the benefits, liberties and privileges to the same premises belonging" covers the entire premises and not merely the building.—Chesebrough v. Pingree, 72 Mich. 438.

¶ 269. Where, after describing leased premises as "one-half of cellar in front of stairway leading down from G. Murray's saloon in store 110 Woodward avenue, corner of Congress street," the lease says: "I consent to his (lessee's) occupying the side of said store on Congress street, from rear of show window at corner of Congress street to entrance to cellar, as a fruit and nut stand, on the sidewalk next to the building," the cellar alone is rented, and a mere license is given to occupy the sidewalk space; and to such license the covenant for quiet possession does not apply.—Brown v. Schiappacasse, 115 Mich. 47.

¶ 270. A lease described property as the "dwelling house, 471, located on the west side of Lincoln Ave." The lot had a frontage of thirty feet, and the back yard was thirty by forty feet. The barn, located on the rear of the lot and on the rear of the adjoining lot occupied by the landlord, had no opening ino the tenant's back yard. Held, the lease carried with it all of the lot let to the tenant except that portion occupied by the barn.—Kuschinsky v. Flanigan, 170 Mich. 245.

¶ 271. Plaintiff's barn stood on the back of two adjoining lots, one of which he leased to defendant together with the house thereon and the ground floor of a barn standing on the rear of both lots. In remodeling the second story, plaintiff constructed an outside stairway and permitted the tenants of said second story to pass over defendant's lot to and from the street, and in the course of the remodeling filled the back yard of defendant's lot with building materials and rubbish. Held, plaintiff invaded defendant's right under the lease by depriving him of the beneficial use of the adjoining portion of the premises.—Kuschinsky v. Flanigan, 170 Mich. 245.

B. ASSIGNMENT AND SUBLETTING.

§ 74. Assignments in general.

Executory contracts to assign, see post § 75.

Subletting as distinguished from assignment, see post § 76.

Necessity for lessor's consent, see post § 77.

Covenants against assignment, subletting or transfer, see post § 78.

Forfeiture for assignment or subletting, see post § 79.

Waiver of breach of covenant, see post §§ 80, 81.

Rights and liabilities of assignees, see post § 82.

Subtenancy and rights and liabilities incident thereto, see post § 83.

Assignment of lease as security, see post § 84.

Rights and liabilities towards third persons, see post VII.

Conveyance or assignment to tenant or sublessee, see ante § 60.

Assignments by lessor of rent or of leasehold, see ante §§ 58-60.

Nonassignability of contract where consideration running to lessor involves personal skill or services, see Assignments § 7.

Assignment of lease as change of possession of chattels covered by it, see Chattel Mortgages ¶ 172.

Contingent nature of rents to accrue as affecting assignability, see also Assignments ¶ 18.

Assignment of rents due or to accrue, see post IV, G.

Agreements amounting to novations, see Novation.

¶ 272. One of two lessors, even if the other be his wife, cannot assign the lease.—Hecht v. Ferris, 45 Mich. 376.

¶ 273. A., by deed, leased premises to B., who afterwards assigned the lease to C. A. assented to the assignment, and agreed, by parol, to accept C. as his tenant, and to look to him for the rent. Held, that there had been a sufficient surrender of the lease by operation of law to satisfy the statute—Code of 1833, p. 342, § 9 (see How. St., § 6179)—which declared that "no lease, etc., shall at any time hereafter be assigned, granted or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed," etc., "or by operation of law"; and that A. could not afterwards maintain covenant against B. for the rent.—Logan v. Anderson, 2 D. 101.

¶ 274. A sublease and a contract for assignment of the lease which are executed at the same time must be construed together. —Great Lakes Realty & Building Co. v. Turner, 190 Mich. 582.

¶ 275. Rights under a contract to repair, held by a lessee under an agreement separate from the lease, do not pass under an assignment of the lease, but may be transferred by separate agreement; and an instruction that the lease and the contract were parts of one transaction, and must be construed together, and that all rights in both passed under the assignment of the lease, is erroneous.—Keeley Institute Co. of West Michigan v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 519.

§ 75. Executory contracts to assign.

¶ 276. An executory contract to assign a lease for a term of years does not constitute an assignment although the prospective assignee is let into possession.—Great Lakes Realty & Building Co. v. Turner, 190 Mich. 582.

¶ 277. Where a lease for a term of years provided that the lease might be assigned only when a specified building was erected upon the premises and the lessee sublet the premises and at the same time contracted to assign the lease upon the erection of such building by the sublessee, there was no assignment of the lease but simply an executory contract to assign when the conditions were such that the lessee had a right to assign.—Great Lakes Realty & Building Co. v. Turner, 190 Mich. 582.

§ 76. Subletting as distinguished from assignment.

¶ 278. A sublease for part of a term does not constitute an assignment of the lease for the entire term.—Great Lakes Realty & Building Co. v. Turner, 190 Mich. 582.

¶ 279. Where the lessee assigns his interest in the whole or a part of the demised premises for the residue of the unexpired term, the assignee is substituted in place of the original lessee as tenant, and stands in that relation to the original lessor. But where the demised premises are let for a part only of the unexpired term, the assignee is only a sublessee, and the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between him and the original landlord.—Lee v. Payne, 4 Mich. 106.

¶ 280. A lease by the lessee of the three lower stories and the cellar of a four-story store, which the lessee held under a lease in which he had covenanted "not to transfer this lease," was held no breach of this covenant.—Copland v. Parker, 4 Mich. 660.

¶ 281. The lease of a building excepted all the upper story but the front room, and stipulated that if the tenant re-leased, or assigned the lease, without the landlord's written consent, the latter might re-enter. Held, that a license from the tenant to a third person to use a single apartment on the ground floor for thirty days, or even a sublease of the apartment for such a period, was not a breach of the condition.—Leduke v. Barnett, 47 Mich. 158.

¶ 282. A lease of a hall provided that the hall should be occupied for holding lodge meetings and socials, and that the lessee should not re-lease or assign the lease, or sublet the leased premises, except for society purposes, without written consent, and contained the usual clause providing for reentry in case of default in payment of rent or in any of the covenants of the lease. The hall was rented to various societies, which occupied it five evenings in the week for lodge meetings, socials, concerts, and dances, and, in addition, a dance was once held in the hall by four members of the club holding the lease. Held, in summary proceedings by the lessor against the lessee to recover possession of the hall, that a forfeiture under the covenants can only be claimed when the hall is sublet (not used) for other than society purposes; that the only use to which it is shown to have been put, that can be said not to fall within that term, was that of the dance held by the four members of the club, and that, if that should be technically so held, there is nothing to indicate a subletting for that purpose, but a mere user by those having charge and control of the premises, and who were part owners of the term. —Sommers v. Reynolds, 103 Mich. 307.

Covenants against assignment, subletting or transfer, see post § 78.
Forfeiture for assignment or subletting, see post § 79.

¶ 283. A lease upon shares is not assignable without the lessor's consent.—Lewis v. Sheldon, 103 Mich. 102.

¶ 284. A lease upon shares is a personal contract and not assignable without the consent of the lessor where the amount of rent received must depend on the character and skill of the lessee, or where it gives the lessee the use of the lessor's tools on condition that they may be properly kept.—Randall v. Chubb, 46 Mich. 311.

§ 78. Covenants against assignment, subletting or transfer.

¶ 285. A covenant in a lease not to assign or underlet the leased premises without the written consent of the lessor is a fair and reasonable covenant.—White v. Huber Drug Co., 190 Mich. 212.

¶ 286. Where it is clearly stipulated in a lease that the lessee shall not assign or underlet the leased premises, the lessor may insist upon his rights regardless of the qualifications of the proposed assignee.—White v. Huber Drug Co., 190 Mich. 212.

¶ 287. The scope of the term "assignment" in a lease containing a covenant not to assign or unlet the premises without the written consent of the lessor will not be enlarged by the courts, and the covenant will not be considered as violated by any technical transfer that is not fairly and substantially an assignment.—White v. Huber Drug Co. 190 Mich. 212.

¶ 288. The lessor lodge, Grangers, leased to the Masonic lodge certain premises, reserving to the Grangers "the use of the second story equally with" the Masons. It was stipulated that the upper hall should be used for lodge purposes only, "and cannot be leased or rented to any lodge without a two-thirds majority of both lodges." By mutual consent the Masonic lodge permitted the Order of the Eastern Star to use the lodge room, they being affiliated, and the Grangers permitted an affiliated order, the Pomona Grange, to use them. Held, not to show a waiver of the stipulation against leasing to other lodges, so as to disable the Masonic lodge to insist on it.—Portage Grange No. 16, P. of H. v. Portage Lodge, No. 340, F. & A. M., 141 Mich. 402.

¶ 289. A covenant by a lessee not to transfer the lease without the consent of the lessor does not inhibit a subletting by the lessee.—Copland v. Parker, 4 Mich. 660.

¶ 290. There was an actual and substantial assignment of a lease held by a corporation in violation of a covenant therein prohibiting an assignment without the written consent of the lessor where the lessee corporation sold all its assets, including the lease, to a new corporation, which was organized by a small minority of the stockholders of the lessee corporation for the purpose of excluding the majority of the stockholders, although the new corporation assumed the name of the old corporation and took control of the leased premises and of the business of the old corporation.—White v. Huber Drug Co., 190 Mich. 212.

§ 79. Forfeiture for assignment or subletting.

Waiver of breach of covenant, see post §§ 80, 81.

Breach of covenant or condition as ground for termination, see ante § 45.

¶ 291. The assignment of a lease which contained a covenant not to assign worked a forfeiture of the term.—Wray-Austin Machinery Co. v. Flower, 140 Mich. 452.

¶ 292. A personal lease is forfeited by an assignment and attempt to give the assignee possession, and the lessor may take immediate steps to recover the premises.—Randall v. Chubb, 46 Mich. 311.

¶ 293. An attempted assignment by the lessee in a lease on shares and delivery of possession to the assignee work a forfeiture, and the lessor may proceed at once to regain possession.—Lewis v. Sheldon, 103 Mich. 102.

¶ 294. One who has leased a farm on shares does not forfeit his lease by orally giving to a third person permission to work part of the farm on the same terms, where the oral arrangement is abandoned without anything being done under it.—Grovenburg v. McKeough, 117 Mich. 555.

¶ 295. A forfeiture of a lease to a club for violation of a provision that the premises should not be sublet "except for society purposes" is not worked by allowing the premises to be used for a dance once a week by four members of the club.—Sommers v. Reynolds, 103 Mich. 307.

¶ 296. A covenant against subletting in a farm lease is not broken by giving possession of a house on the premises to one employed to assist in the farm work.—Vincent v. Crane, 134 Mich. 700.

¶ 297. Where a lease containing a covenant against assignment without the written consent of the lessor is assigned without his consent by the lessee to another, recorded, and then a quitclaim deed given back without any change in possession, and for the sole purpose of making record title of the lessee's rights, the lease not having been executed with the proper formalities to permit its recording, there is no forfeiture.—McDonald v. Andrews, 199 Mich. 160.

¶ 298. A lease contained a printed clause forbidding subletting without the consent of the owner, but contained a written clause permitting the lessee to sublet portions of the premises for the same line of business. The lessee, an individual, organized a corporation to carry on his business, and subleased to it all of the premises except a small floor space which he retained. Held, such subletting was not to be treated as a mere subterfuge so as to work a forfeiture of the lease.—Hilsendegen v. Hartz Clothing Co., 165 Mich. 255.

¶ 299. A lease provided for forfeiture in case of assignment by S., the lessee. It was to expire in 1884. In 1881 it was indorsed by the lessor, "For a valuable consideration I hereby give S. the privilege of occupying the store mentioned in this lease for ten years from 1884," the indorsement providing further that the rent should be the same, and all improvements were to be the lessor's property "as part of the consideration for extending lease." Held, that the indorsement constituted a new letting, canceling the old lease, and could not be forfeited by an assignment.—Walsh v. Martin, 69 Mich. 29.

§ 80. Waiver of breach of covenant.

By acceptance of rent from assignee or sublessee, see post § 81.

¶ 300. If, after notice of breach of a covenant against subletting, the lessor allows the assignee of the lease to repair the premises, he waives the breach of the covenant.—Patterson v. Carrel, 171 Mich. 296.

¶ 301. A covenant in a lease against assignment of the leased premises without the written consent of the lessor is not waived by the execution by the lessor of an agreement for the renewal of the lease by the lessee, "its successors and assigns," at their option.—White v. Huber Drug Co., 190 Mich. 212.

§ 81. ——By acceptance of rent from assignee or sublessee.

¶ 302. Breach of a covenant against subletting without the landlord's consent is waived by acceptance, with knowledge of the breach, of rent subsequently accruing from the sublessee.—Patterson v. Carrel, 171 Mich. 296.

¶ 303. When breach of a covenant against subletting has been waived by acceptance of rent by the landlord from the subtenant, a subsequent vendee cannot sue for breach of the covenant though he accepts further rent only conditionally.—Patterson v. Carrel, 171 Mich. 296.

¶ 304. The relation of landlord and tenant arises where an assignee of a lease who entered thereunder and occupied demised premises, was recognized by the lessor as his tenant by the acceptance of rent, although an assignment of the lease was prohibited by its terms.—Weber v. Van Blerck Motor Co., 186 Mich. 449.

¶ 305. Whether by accepting rent from an assignee a lessor waived a provision of the lease forbidding an assignment or subletting, held under the evidence, a question for the jury.—Weber v. Van Blerck Motor Co., 186 Mich. 449.

§ 82. Rights and liabilities of assignees.

Rights and liabilities incident to subtenancy, see post § 83.

¶ 306. Under an absolute assignment of a lease for an entire term the assignee succeeds to all the rights and liabilities of the original lessee.—Weber v. Van Blerck Motor Co., 186 Mich. 449.

¶ 307. Whether the assignee of a lease was answerable to the lessor for rent, held a question for the jury, where the alleged assignment was made in violation of the terms of the lease to a company of which the original lessee was a member, and subsequent payments of rent were accepted from the assignee by the lessor.—Weber v. Van Blerck Motor Co., 186 Mich. 449.

¶ 308. An assignee of a lease who has accepted such assignment thereby becomes liable for the rent of the premises according to the terms of the lease.—Darmstaetter v. Hoffman, 120 Mich. 48.

¶ 309. An assignee under an unauthorized assignment of a lease containing a covenant against assignment without the consent of the lessor, is liable to his assignor for the rent, though the latter has not paid the rent to the original lessor.—Darmstaetter v. Hoffman, 120 Mich. 48.

¶ 310. One who has taken a tenant's interest without the landlord's knowledge or consent takes subject to the obligations assumed by the tenant, and cannot be allowed, through their nonperformance, to gain any advantage as against the landlord.—Bertram v. Cook, 32 Mich. 518.

¶ 311. Rights held by a lessee under a contract to repair which is separate from the lease, may pass by parol to an assignee of the leased premises if such was the intention of the parties, the question of intention being one for the jury.—Keeley Institute Co. of West Michigan v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 519.

¶ 312. Where the lessor has consented to an assignment of the lease, evidence may be introduced of the contract between the lessee and the assignee, although the lessor was not present, in order to show whether a right to repairs under a collateral contract passed, since the lessor's consent is not necessary to the transfer of such rights.—Keeley Institute Co. of West Michigan v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 519.

§ 83. Subtenancy and rights and liabilities incident thereto.

Rights and liabilities of assignees, see ante § 82.

Liability of lessee's assignee for waste, see Waste.

Agreement with subtenant amounting to novation, see Novation.

Agreement by purchaser from lessee to indemnify lessor against loss for money advanced to lessee, see Indemnity § 1.

Admissibility of sublease without proof of consent to subleasing, see Evidence ¶ 2588.

¶ 313. In summary proceedings under Comp. L. 1897, § 11164, How. 2nd Ed., § 13684, to recover possession of land in possession of a sublessee who was holding over after the expiration of a term, evidence held insufficient to show consent by the landlord to the tenancy of the sublessee.—Tuller v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 194 Mich. 312.

¶ 314. The claim of a subtenant that under its lease rent was payable on the 15th of each month, and the practice of paying rent in accordance with such claim, negatived its allegation in a bill for subrogation, that by its sublease it assumed the position of the original lessee under a lease requiring the rent to be paid on the first of each month.—Wray-Austin Machinery Co. v. Flower, 140 Mich. 452.

¶ 315. In a suit to restrain summary proceedings in which complainant claimed to be an assignee of defendant rather than defendant's sublessee evidence held sufficient to show that complainant recognized and admitted in a former suit between the parties in which defendant sought by summary proceedings to recover the land that he was a tenant of and held the premises in subordination to defendant.—Murphy v. Sayles, 201 Mich. 78.

¶ 316. Where a mother takes a life lease from her son and sublets the property to him and the son recognizes her rights under the lease and agrees to retain possession of the premises as her subtenant, paying her rent therefor, his possession therafter emanates from her and is subordinate to her rights to the same intent and extent as though they had gone through the idle ceremony of some physical delivery and redelivery of possession, he not living on the property, and being up to the time of the father's death but a gratuitous tenant at will.—Heinze v. Heinze, 195 Mich. 365.

¶ 317. Neither an agreement in a lease that upon re-entry the subleases should belong to the lessors, nor the promise of the tenant not to disturb the subtenants, created such a relation between the landlord and the subtenant as to entitle the latter to hold the premises during the term, or to make such subtenant liable to the landlord as his tenant.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 133 Mich. 448.

¶ 318. An assignee of a lessee to whom a subtenant has attorned is liable to such subtenant for so closing the premises as to interfere with the use and enjoyment of the premises to an extent amounting to an eviction.—Coulter v. Norton, 100 Mich. 389.

§ 84. Assignment of lease as security.

Leases as security for other undertakings, see ante § 31.

¶ 319. An assignment of a lease as security, made in good faith, is not a violation of a covenant therein against assignment without the consent of the lessor.—Crouse v. Michell, 130 Mich. 347.

¶ 320. As between unrecorded assignments of a lease for more than three years, as security, the one first made has priority.—Crouse v. Michell, 130 Mich. 347.

C. REPAIRS AND IMPROVEMENTS, INSURANCE, TAXES AND CHARGES.

§ 85. Duty and covenants of landlord to repair.

Liability for injuries suffered from disrepair or defective condition of premises, see post IV, D; VII.

Duty to sweep chimneys, see also post ¶ 356.

Liability of landlord towards third persons on covenant to repair, see post § 179.

Rights and liabilities towards third persons, see post VII.

Measure of damages for breach of covenant to repair, see Damages § 75.

Consideration for agreement to make repairs after lease is in force, see Contracts ¶ 533.

¶ 321. A landlord who has not agreed to make repairs is under no obligation to make them.—Rhoades v. Seidel, 139 Mich. 608.

¶ 322. In the absence of covenants on his part a landlord is not obliged to make repairs even when the premises become defective by deterioration or decay.—Petz v. Voight Brewery Co., 116 Mich. 418.

¶ 323. A lessor is under no general obligation to put premises in repair, and his covenants to do so are not to be enlarged beyond their fair intent, and he is not responsible for any damages not contemplated by the lease as chargeable to him, as the result of a failure.—Clark v. Babcock, 23 Mich. 164.

¶ 324. A promise of the landlord to repair leased premises made subsequent to the making of the lease is without consideration.—Brown v. Gray, 199 Mich. 359.

¶ 325. A contract by a lessor to repair and improve the premises does not merge in the lease, where the lease does not contain its substance nor refer to it in any way.—Keeley Institute Co. of West Michigan v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 519.

¶ 326. Where a contract of the landlord to repair is made along with a lease of the premises, although the two agreements were separate, they may be construed together as one transaction, for the purpose of settling the question as to the transfer of the right to repairs.—Keeley Institute Co. of West Michigan v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 519.

¶ 327. The owner of a building owes a subtenant, who is in possession without his knowledge or consent, no duty to keep the premises in repair.—Donaldson v. Wilson, 60 Mich. 86.

§ 86. ——Waiver, release or excuse for breach of duty.

Waiver of tenant's covenant to repair, see post § 91.

¶ 328. Occupancy by a tenant from month to month, for a period longer than a month after the refusal or neglect of the landlord to make repairs, does not make a new contract so as to relieve the landlord from liability for damages arising from the failure to repair.—Mason v. Howes, 122 Mich. 329.

¶ 329. Where a plaintiff lessor agreed to put the premises leased for theatrical purposes in a condition conformable with the city's fire requirements, he is not excused from doing so by the fact that the city stationed firemen in the building to protect the public.—Norris v. McFadden, 159 Mich. 424.

¶ 330. If a lessor has performed her obligation to repair and improve the leased premises, and the lessee has accepted her performance as a full performance of the whole or the particulars in which it has been performed, a right to further claim is thereby lost, and cannot be acquired.—Keeley Institute Co. of West Michigan v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 519.

§ 87. Remedies of tenants against landlord for failure to repair.

Vacation or abandonment of premises by tenant, see post § 88.

Injuries from dangerous conditions caused by failure of landlord to repair, see post § 104.

Remedy of tenant against landlord for injury caused by dangerous condition arising from failure to repair, see post, IV, D.

¶ 331. Where there is no express covenant in a lease on the part of the landlord to repair the premises, sec. 8959, Comp. L. 1897, and subd. 9 of sec. 50, Comp. L. 1897, preclude any relief in damages for breach or by specific performance.—Minnis v. Newbro-Gallogly Co., 174 Mich. 635.

¶ 332. Where the lessor of salt-works was made liable to a deduction of rent for delays caused by breakage, etc., and was required to have the works in order by a given time before the opening of the business season, in default of which the lessee was authorized to complete the work at his expense and deduct the same from the first payments, it was held that the lease contemplated that the lessee, having the same time allowed him as was given to the lessor, would be able, after the lessor's default, to finish the work before the business season, and that it did not authorize any claim for damages for delay from the lessor's failure to do the work in time, the remedy in the lease being evidently deemed sufficient to prevent any probable loss to the lessee from such delay.—Clark v. Babcock, 23 Mich. 164.

§ 88. ——Vacation or abandonment of premises by tenant.

See also ante ¶ 185 and see also post ¶ 531.

¶ 333. Where, in consequence of the lessor's failure to repair, as he has covenanted, the flume of a sawmill, the mill becomes useless, the lessee is not obliged to make the repairs himself, deducting the expense thereof from the rent, but may abandon the premises.—Bostwick v. Losey, 67 Mich. 554.

§ 89. Obligation and covenants of tenant to repair.

Forfeiture of lease for breach of covenant, see post § 90.

Waiver of covenant to repair, see post § 91.

¶ 334. "Damages by the elements," which are ordinarily excepted from a lessee's covenant to keep in repair, cover destruction by fire occurring without fault or negligence in the lessee.—Van Wormer v. Crane, 51 Mich. 363.

¶ 335. The exception in a covenant by a lessee to repair contained in the expression "damage by the elements excepted," includes all injury by wind, rain, snow, frost and heat, as well as all ordinary decay from natural causes.—Sweezy v. Collins Northern Ice Co., 171 Mich. 75.

¶ 336. Where a tenant occupies the three upper stories of a six-story building and has sole charge of a freight elevator operated by his own employee, but the other tenants have the right to use it for carrying freight, and the elevator is in good condition at the time it is turned over to the tenant, the obligation to repair it thereafter devolves upon the tenant.—Sikora v. Fellowcraft Club, 189 Mich. 235.

§ 90. ——Forfeiture of lease for breach of covenant.

Breach of covenant or condition as ground for termination, see ante §§ 45, 46.

¶ 337. In an action to terminate a lease and for partition, the evidence failed to show that there had been such a breach of the covenant to repair as would operate as a forfeiture of the lessee's rights thereunder.—Eberts v. Fisher, 54 Mich. 294.

¶ 338. In an action by a landlord against his tenant on his covenant to repair, there is a contradiction in terms where the court charges as follows: "Defendant was not to be responsible for any decay arising from the reasonable use of the building for such purposes. If the buildings were damaged from this cause defendant would not have to make them good (although against such it would be required to maintain, in a salable condition and safe during its tenancy)."—Sweezy v. Collins Northern Ice Co., 171 Mich. 75.

Waiver of landlord's covenant to repair, see ante § 86.

¶ 339. The fact that a landlord during a period of three years accepts rent, less deductions for repairs made by the tenant, does not constitute a waiver as to subsequent repairs of a covenant by the tenant to keep the premises in repair.—Drouillard v. Huiet, 192 Mich. 54.

§ 92. Credit to tenant for repairs.

¶ 340. A tenant who holds under a lease which makes it his duty to keep the premises in good repair, and, at the end of the term, deliver the same in like condition as when received, "reasonable use and wear thereof and damage by the elements excepted," in order to be entitled to credit for repairs, must show that the repairs were made necessary by the reasonable use and wear of the premises, or by damage from the elements.—Hovey v. Walker, 90 Mich. 527.

§ 93. Right of lessee to make improvements or alterations.

Liability for injury arising from negligence in making alteration, see post ¶ 370.

¶ 341. Proposed changes in a demised building by cutting openings in a side wall, which will increase the fire risk, are within a condition of the lease prohibiting changes in the exterior of the building without the approval of the lessor.—B. Siegel Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 145. (McAlvay, C. J., Brooke and Kuhn, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 342. A side wall of a building although abutting against and covered by the wall of an adjoining building, is an "exterior" wall within a condition of a lease prohibiting changes in the exterior of a demised building without the consent of the lessor.—B. Siegel Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 145. (McAlvay, C. J., Brooke and Kuhn, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 94. Tenant's rights and interest in improvements.

Right to remove improvements or buildings, see post § 95.

Right to compensation for improvements, see post § 96.

Duties and obligation under public regulations, see post § 97.

¶ 343. A tenant's erections are not brought within a subsequent mortgage on the premises by the tenant's neglect to remove them on a renewal of his lease by a new landlord.—Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 Mich. 150.

§ 95. ——Right to remove improvements or buildings.

Right of tenant to remove fixtures, see post § 109.

Landlord's lien on improvements where provided for in lease, see post ¶¶ 528, 529.

Leasing building as realty as estoppel to treat it as chattel, see Fixtures ¶ 12.

¶ 344. Under a covenant to surrender premises in as good condition as when taken, reasonable use and wear and injury by the elements excepted, a tenant cannot tear out improvements which he has himself put in, if their removal injures the freehold.—Murray v. Moross, 27 Mich. 203.

¶ 345. Where a lease reserves to the lessee the right, at the end of his term, to remove all buildings placed upon the leased premises, he is entitled to ingress and egress, rent free, for a reasonable time after the expiration of the lease, for the purposes of such removal.—Davidson v. Crump Mfg. Co., 99 Mich. 501.

¶ 346. A tenant erecting buildings on the leased premises, in furtherance of the purpose for which the premises were leased, may remove them at any time during the tenancy and if it terminates upon a contingency he may remove them within a reasonable time after termination.—Hayward v. Hope Township School Dist. No. 9, 139 Mich. 539.

¶ 347. Where a lease under which a school district had placed a school house on defendant's land was terminated because the school was discontinued, and the district asserted its right to remove the school building within 5 days after such termination, it had a reasonable time therafter to remove the building.—Hayward v. Hope Township School Dist. No. 9, 139 Mich. 539.

§ 96. ——Right to compensation for improvements.

¶ 348. To entitle a tenant to be paid for improvements he has made, there must be between him and his landlord as definite an agreement as any other contract of employment.—Leslie v. Smith, 32 Mich. 64.

§ 97. Duties and penalties under public regulations.

General law of building regulations, see Buildings.

Michigan Housing Act, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 167.

¶ 349. A subtenant under an oral lease, who is in control of the premises, is a "lessee" under the terms of sec. 12 of Act 285, Public Acts of 1909, requiring automatic gates on elevators.—Noack v. Williams, Davis, Brooks and Hinchman Sons, 175 Mich. 15.

¶ 349a. Under Act No. 285, Pub. Acts 1909, § 12, making it the duty of the owner, agent or lessee of a manufacturing establishment to provide automatic gates for the elevator shafts, the duty to provide such gates is imposed on the owner of the building although a tenant is in possession of the same.—Barfoot v. White Star Line, 170 Mich. 349.

§ 98. Covenants to rebuild.

Construction and operation of covenants in general, see ante § 16.

¶ 350. A covenant in the lease of a wooden building, binding the landlord to rebuild in case it burns, is released by the passage of a valid municipal ordinance forbidding the erection of wooden buildings.—Cordes v. Miller, 39 Mich. 581.

§ 99. Covenants as to insurance.

Construction and operation of covenants in general, see ante § 16.

¶ 351. A lessee's covenant to insure the property and to assign the insurance policy to the lessor was held not to have been broken where the insurance was in fact effected, but where, apparently by tacit consent of all parties, the practice of assigning was discontinued after a year or two. A court of equity would treat the stipulated insurance as held in trust for the lessor.—Eberts v. Fisher, 54 Mich. 294.

§ 100. Covenants to pay taxes.

Construction and operation of covenants in general, see ante § 16.

¶ 352. Where a lease is made without any stipulation as to the taxes, the landlord and not his tenant is bound to pay the taxes.—Sherman v. Spalding, 126 Mich. 561.

¶ 353. Where a tenant had covenanted in the lease to pay certain taxes, it is no breach if, under a warrant for the collection of the assessment, the tax was paid by a sale of his leasehold interest and of buildings erected by him upon the premises. It was satisfied out of the tenant's and not the landlord's property.—Goode v. Ruehle, 23 Mich. 30.

¶ 354. A lessee's omission to pay a paving assessment could not properly be treated as a breach of his contract, if it arose from a question as to the validity of the assessment, and if he paid it when its validity was settled.—Eberts v. Fisher, 54 Mich. 294.

¶ 355. Where one of the conditions of a lease is the payment of taxes by the lessee, and a clause provides for re-entry upon breach of condition, it cannot be held that this clause does not apply to a failure to pay taxes, on the ground that another clause makes a building on the premises security for their payment; a lessor may have double security if his lessee consents to give it.—Brand v. Frumveller, 32 Mich. 215.

D. INJURIES FROM DEFECTIVE OR DANGEROUS CONDITIONS.

§ 101. In general.

Injuries to tenant or occupants, see post §§ 102-106.

Presumptions and evidence as to liability, see post § 107.

Injury to or destruction of premises as termination of lease or tenancy, see ante § 48.

Injury to or destruction of premises as defense to payment of rental, see post § 127.

Remedies of tenants against landlord for failure to repair, see ante § 87.

Liability of landlord toward third persons for injuries from defective or dangerous conditions, see post VII.

§ 102. Injuries to tenants or occupants.

Landlord's knowledge of defects, see post § 103.

Dangerous condition caused by failure to repair, see post § 104.

Premises used in common by several tenants, see post § 105.

Injury to or loss of tenant's property, see post § 106.

What constitutes contributory negligence of tenant, see Negligence, IV.

Effect of contributory negligence of tenant, see Negligence, IV.

Defects or conditions amounting to nuisances, see Nuisances.

Constructing or maintaining structures to tenant's injury as nuisance, see Nuisances.

¶ 356. A city ordinance requiring "every owner, agent, or occupant of any building" to have the chimneys swept at least once a year, does not fix the duty as between an owner and a tenant.—Cooper v. Lawson, 139 Mich. 628.

¶ 357. A landlord is not liable for injury to his tenant caused by failure to sweep the chimney belonging to his apartment, where the tenant had the right to use the hallways and stairways and might have used them to reach the roof to sweep the chimney flue belonging to his apartment without interfering with, or trespassing upon the rights of the other tenants in the building.—Cooper v. Lawson, 139 Mich. 628.

Liability of owner of dwelling apartment or tenement for injuries from defects therein to tenant or one employed on premises. See note, 5 N. C. C. A. 291-323.

§ 103. ——Landlord's knowledge of defects.

¶ 358. The liability of a landlord to a tenant for injuries resulting from defects existing at the time premises are leased extends only to defects which he knows or he should know, and which are not open to the observation of the tenant.—Rhoades v. Seidel, 139 Mich. 608.

¶ 359. Plaintiff leased of defendant certain premises with an open sewer connection which was known to both parties. Later this sewer began to emit gas and plaintiff became ill as a result. In an action against the landlord, held that he was not liable since he did not know and was not chargeable with knowledge that the sewer would emit gas.—Rhoades v. Seidel, 139 Mich. 608.

¶ 360. In an action by a sublessee living on the second floor of a flat building against the landlord to recover for injuries due to the giving way of a porch railing at the rear of the building, held that an instruction that it was the duty of defendant to make such an inspection "as would naturally disclose the defect, if it existed," was erroneous.—Burtis v. Davison, 199 Mich. 14.

§ 104. ——Dangerous condition caused by failure to repair.

Remedies of tenants against landlord for failure to repair, see ante § 87.

Mutual rights and duties of landlord and tenant relating to repairs in general, see ante IV, C.

¶ 361. Where premises had been leased and after having been occupied for some time, a sewer connection began to emit sewer gas, and the landlord promised to repair it but failed in an attempt to do so, he is not liable for injury to the tenant who became sick because of the gas, since the promise to repair was without consideration and the landlord could not be held as for negligence in making the repairs since he did not carry out the undertaking.—Rhoades v. Seidel, 139 Mich. 608.

¶ 362. A landlord who has violated his promise to repair defective plastering is liable for damages resulting from falling plaster, just as any other person who was a party to a contract would be.—Mason v. Howes, 122 Mich. 329.

¶ 363. A woman tenant who remained in premises with knowledge that plastering was defective, but without knowledge of danger and who relied upon the promise of the landlord to repair, was not guilty of contributory negligence preventing recovery for damages resulting from falling plaster.—Mason v. Howes, 122 Mich. 329.

¶ 364. The owner of premises in possession of a tenant will not be liable for an injury occasioned by the premises becoming, subsequent to the leasing, out of repair, in a case where the obligation to repair is on the tenant, and the owner has no legal control of the premises.—Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 Mich. 1.

¶ 365. A tenant who, with full knowledge of the dangerous condition of a stairway, which she had not used for over a year, voluntarily attempts to use it for a trivial purpose, cannot recover damages for the injuries sustained, nor will the landlord's failure to keep his promise to repair it warrant such recovery.—Town v. Armstrong, 75 Mich. 580.

¶ 366. In an action for damages against a landlord for failure to repair premises, an opening statement sets out a cause of action where it alleges that defendant negligently and wilfully permitted stagnant water to accumulate and remain for several days after notice given to him, in the cellar of the premises, causing unwholesome smells, disease and sickness to plaintiff and his household, compelling him to move, and putting him to expense, and which alleges a lack of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.—Haynes v. Maybury, 166 Mich. 498.

§ 105. ——Premises used in common by several tenants.

¶ 367. A landlord who leases separate portions of the same building to different tenants, and reserves control of those parts of the building or premises used in common by all the tenants, is under an implied obligation to keep in a safe condition the parts over which he reserves control.—Cooper v. Lawson, 139 Mich. 628.

¶ 368. Where a three-story building, the second and third stories of which are occupied by numerous tenants for living purposes, has a common stairway, and a porch on each floor level in the rear used by the tenants as a rear entrance, for hanging out clothes, and for pleasure purposes during warm weather, the railings of which are toenailed in the upright timbers, and such stairway and porches have been in use for about 15 years, it is a question for the jury, in an action by a sublessee on the second floor against the landlord for personal injuries received as the result of a railing giving way while she was leaning over it to call her husband, whether defendant made such inspection from time to time, as an ordinarily prudent man would have made under like circumstances.—Burtis v. Davison, 199 Mich. 14.

¶ 369. A landlord who rents rooms in a tenement building to various tenants, giving to all the right to all conveniences, including a platform extending from the second floor and a clothes reel on a post attached to the platform, although not agreeing to make repairs, is liable for injuries sustained by a tenant due to the rail giving way, while she is using it with care, and precipitating her to the ground.—Cates v. Parker, How. N. P. 2.

§ 106. ——Injury to or loss of tenant's property.

¶ 370. A landlord is liable for damages to his tenant where the latter's property is destroyed because of the collapse of the building, due to the negligent making of alterations by another tenant under the landlord's permission.—Blickley v. Luce's Estate, 148 Mich. 233.

¶ 371. Defendant rented the lower floor of his building to plaintiff, who had a drygoods store there. Upon the second floor, which was rented to other tenants, was a water-closet, under their control, but to which plaintiff had access, defendant having no control over it, though he kept it in repair. Through improper use by some unknown person, and not for lack of repairs, the closet became obstructed, the water overflowed, and plaintiff's store was damaged. Held, that defendant was not liable.—Kenney v. Barns, 67 Mich. 336.

§ 107. Presumptions and evidence as to liability.

¶ 372. The fact that a landlord suffered alterations to be made in the course of repairing a fire-damaged building without procuring a permit as required by a city ordinance, while not of itself negligence, is evidence to be considered with other facts as tending to show negligence.—Blickley v. Luce's Estate, 148 Mich. 233.

¶ 373. The collapse of a building while alterations are being made to it is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the landlord so far as his responsibility to a tenant is concerned.—Blickley v. Luce's Estate, 148 Mich. 233.

E. FIXTURES AND EMBLEMENTS, ISSUES AND PROFITS.

§ 108. Title and right to fixtures in general.

Right of tenant to remove or dispose of, see post § 109.
Right of tenant to compensation for fixtures, see post § 110.
Right to emblements, issues and profits, see post §§ 111-114.
Invalidity of landlord's lien on fixtures as against execution levy, see post ¶ 529.
Rights and liabilities towards third persons, see post VII.
General law of fixtures, see Fixtures.
Things regarded as fixtures or movables, see Fixtures.
Rights of persons buying or selling under lease in fixtures, see Fixtures § 26.
Effect of physical severance by lessor of machine left by lessee to make it a chattel, see also Fixtures ¶ 62.
Agreement between lessor and lessee preserving personal character of chattels affixed to land, see Fixtures § 24.
Right to purchase trade fixtures from preceding lessee, see also Fixtures § 26.
Merger of lessee's rights in fixtures by their purchase of the fee, see also Fixtures ¶ 102.
Leasing building as realty as estoppel to treat it as chattel, see Fixtures ¶ 12.
Manure as fixture of the farm, see also Fixtures § 11.

¶ 374. A tenant's sale as personalty of permanent fixtures and the taking back of a chattel mortgage upon them does not affect the landlord's rights.—O'Brien v. Kusterer, 27 Mich. 289.

¶ 375. A tenant need not remove his trade fixtures so long as he has a right to occupy the premises with the same, and if he puts up trade fixtures under his first lease and then obtains the right to continue in possession under subsequent leases, making his occupancy continuous, he need not take his fixtures away until his tenancy ends.—Waverly Park Amusement Co. v. Michigan United Traction Co., 197 Mich. 92.

¶ 376. A provision in the lease of a building to be used as a saloon and hotel, to the effect that "all improvements, betterments, and changes or alterations," should remain in the building and become the property of the lessor, applies to an alteration of the front of the building but not to the saloon furniture such as bar, refrigerator, beer pump, ice box, tables, chairs, signs, etc.—Wright v. La May, 155 Mich. 119.

¶ 377. Where the purchaser of a leasehold and of certain fixtures placed by the original tenants in the leased building, demands the return of such fixtures after she has delivered possession of them to the landlord, a reply within twenty-four hours, Sunday excepted, is made in a reasonable time.—Felcher v. McMillan, 103 Mich. 494.

§ 109. ——Right of tenant to remove or dispose of.

Right of tenant to remove improvements or buildings, see ante § 95.
Landlord's lien on fixtures or machinery where provided for in lease, see post ¶¶ 528, 529.

¶ 378. Tenants are not entitled as of right to remove fixtures such as pillars, partitions, sewers and floors installed in place of original ones, and so built into the leased building as to become a part thereof.—Felcher v. McMillan, 103 Mich. 494.

¶ 379. A tenant has a right to remove trade fixtures, but he must do so while still in possession under his lease, unless the time for doing so has been extended.—Waverly Park Amusement Co. v. Michigan United Traction Co., 197 Mich. 92.

¶ 380. Where a tenant places trade fixtures or places of amusement on the premises during the term of his lease and continues in possession thereof as sublessee under a lease from the successor to the lessor he does not lose his right to his fixtures and may sell them during such second term.—Waverly Park Amusement Co. v. Michigan United Traction Co., 197 Mich. 92.

¶ 381. As a general rule, a tenant must remove erections which he has placed upon the leased premises within his term or within a reasonable time thereafter, and, not doing so, it will be presumed that he has abandoned them.—Higginbotham v. Phillips, 192 Mich. 49.

¶ 382. Where a lease empowers a tenant to put in machinery and remove it at the expiration of his lease, the tenant cannot be held liable for such necessary damage to the freehold as is occasioned by removing the machinery with due care; especially if the particular damage is not specially counted on and proved.—Hunt v. Potter, 47 Mich. 197.

¶ 383. In an action to restrain the removal of certain brewery fixtures, the plaintiff being the owner of the brewery, and having bought at foreclosure sale certain storage tanks, fermenting tubs, chip casks, kettles, and pipes for cooling beer, left by a tenant who had surrendered his lease, on the question of ownership the trial court had a right to assume that the property belonged to the landlord.—Dehring v. Beck, 146 Mich. 706.

§ 110. ——Right of tenant to compensation for fixtures.

¶ 384. A tenant who has remained in possession for five months after the expiration of his term, cannot then elect to terminate the lease and recover from the lessor for fixtures placed on the premises, under a lease providing that such tenant may, at the expiration of the term, renew the lease for four years or terminate it and receive from the lessor 75 per cent of the cost of fixtures placed on the premises by the tenant.—Hangsterfer v. Shafer, 130 Mich. 223.

§ 111. Right to emblements, issues and profits.

Right of tenant against grantee of lessor, see post § 112.
Right of purchasers from tenant before default, see post § 113.
Vacation and abandonment of premises and crops, see post § 114.
Lease reserving share of produce as basis of rental, see post § 142.

¶ 385. A tenant for an uncertain term has a right to harvest such crops, in the nature of emblements, as are growing but unripe at the time of the termination of his tenancy by the act of his landlord.—Harwood v. Williams, 161 Mich. 368.

¶ 386. A tenant for an uncertain term who has a right to harvest crops growing but unripe at the time of the termination of his tenancy by the act of his landlord, is entitled to the straw as well as to the grain.—Harwood v. Williams, 161 Mich. 368.

¶ 387. Under an arrangement for raising a single crop on shares, the possession of the premises is held by the owner of the land, either alone or in common with the party who sowed the seed.—Wells v. Hollenbeck, 37 Mich. 504.

¶ 388. A lease of a farm, granting to the tenant "the privilege to keep and harvest all the crops (in case the land is sold) which he may have put in, and have either pay for what he may do in preparing to put in other crops, or the privilege of putting them in and harvesting the same, for the term of one year, with the privilege of three years, if not sooner sold, from and after the 1st day of April, A. D. 1866," the lease containing an agreement on the tenant's part to "hire the said premises for the term of one or more years, as above mentioned," and that he would "not put in more than twenty acres of wheat in any one year," was held to confer upon the tenant the right to harvest a field of wheat of not more than twenty acres, after the expiration of the lease.—Brown v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 24.

¶ 389. Where the evidence tended to show possession of a farm belonging to defendant under a lease which had been later cancelled, and that defendant told plaintiff to go and put in fall wheat and that when harvested he should have his just and lawful share, and acting thereon plaintiff furnished manure, seed and all labor, there is established a valid agreement between the parties under which they became and were tenants in common of the wheat, and an action in assumpsit may be maintained and a recovery under the common counts.—McLaughlin v. Salley, 46 Mich. 219.

¶ 390. Assurance by the landlord's heir to the tenant that if he would sow a crop there would be no trouble about reaping it when mature after the end of the year does not estop the heir to assert that by the original lease, renewed from year to year, the tenant on taking possession agreed with his landlord to leave on the ground as many acres of wheat as were then growing.—Ladd v. Brown, 94 Mich. 136.

¶ 391. A lessee whose lease gave him the option of renewing it at the same rate if the premises were not sold wrote to the lessor in the July preceding the expiration of the lease, while the two were negotiating for a surrender at the end of the term, a letter stating the terms upon which he would surrender, and adding "I shall want to know soon, as I shall want to commence plowing next week," Held that, in the absence of any response from the lessor, the lessee was authorized to proceed and put in his wheat crop in the full belief that he was to hold the farm for another year; that the fact that the lessee was notified in the spring immediately preceding the expiration of his lease that the farm had been sold, and he could stay no longer, whereupon he left the premises, is immaterial.—Starkey v. Horton, 65 Mich. 96.

¶ 392. A landlord who, in ignorance of his rights, stood by and permitted a tenant to cut and stack wheat on a farm, after the expiration of a lease, and then commenced attachment by levying upon the wheat as the tenant's property, and then upon learning that he was the owner of the wheat dismissed the attachment and converted the property to his own use, was not estopped by such actions to set up title to the wheat in trover by one to whom the tenant had sold it.—Smith v. Sprague, 119 Mich. 148.

¶ 393. Where the assignee of an invalid lease has abandoned his family and a new lease is given to his wife, running in his name but signed by her by attaching her mark to his name without authority from him, he is not a party to the lease, and if she and her minor children farm the land she is entitled to the crops.—Cody v. Phelps, 47 Mich. 431.

¶ 394. A tenant for an uncertain term who has the right to harvest growing crops at the time of the conveyance of the premises by his lessor has a right to harvest such crops as against the grantee of the lessor.—Harwood v. Williams, 161 Mich. 368.

¶ 395. The grantee of the lessor has no right to any part of the wheat harvested by a lessee of the grantor where the lessee was authorized to plant the wheat in the full belief that he was to continue his tenancy for another year.—Starkey v. Horton, 65 Mich. 96.

¶ 396. Defendant had for several years occupied and worked certain land as a tenant, yielding to the owner a certain part of the products as rent. By an arrangement between the parties, defendant was to surrender the premises when they should be sold. Plaintiff purchased the land after defendant had sowed it to wheat. Held, that defendant was entitled to possession until he had harvested and threshed the wheat, and that, not having previously surrendered such possession, he was not liable to the plaintiff in trespass q. c. f. for acts committed during such period which were incident to his occupancy of the premises.—Toles v. Meddaugh, 106 Mich. 398.

¶ 397. The defendant and his tenant made a contract in March terminating their relations, and providing for a division of the live stock and various other articles on the farm. A crop of rye had been sown, of which no mention was made in the contract. The tenant gave to plaintiff a mortgage on his half thereof. In July the rye was cut, and defendant appropriated all of it. In a suit in trover for conversion of the tenant's half, held, that the contract did not operate to release the tenant's interest in the crop, despite its language indicating a general settlement of all claims betwen the parties, and that plaintiff should recover.—Lamb v. Lamb, 161 Mich. 80.

§ 113. ——Right of purchasers from tenant before default.

¶ 398. The rights of one who has bought a crop from a tenant will be protected as against a subsequent forfeiture of the lease and the landlord's re-entry.—Miller v. Havens, 51 Mich. 482.

¶ 399. One who buys a growing crop of wheat from a tenant who owes no rent and whose lease is good is not divested of title by the latter's subsequent default and abandonment of the premises to his landlord.—Nye v. Patterson, 35 Mich. 413.

¶ 400. Where a tenant, holding land under a lease which entitles him to reap as well as sow a crop of wheat, sells the crop before default or forfeiture, his vendee's title is not defeated by a subsequent default.—Carney v. Mosher, 97 Mich. 554.

§ 114. ——Vacation and abandonment of premises and crops.

¶ 401. One who, without fault on the landlord's part, rescinds his contract to farm another's land, and abandons the premises, yields his right to the crop sown.—Kiplinger v. Green, 61 Mich. 340.

¶ 402. A tenant's right to sell growing crops on abandoning the land during the life of his lease is not shown to be lost by failure to perform the conditions of the lease, unless it also appears that there was a clause of forfeiture for nonperformance.—Dayton v. Vandoozer, 39 Mich. 749.

¶ 403. Under the rule that a lease not in writing expires one year from the date it was made, a tenant who moved off the farm in question and thereby presumably surrendered it to the landlord, had thereafter no right to the wheat thereon, and the party to whom he sold the wheat had no greater right.—Smith v. Sprague, 119 Mich. 148.

F. OPTIONS TO BUY, RENEW OR FOR OTHER PRIVILEGES.

§ 115. Option to purchase premises.

Deductions, additions and adjustments on purchase price, see post § 116.
Liability for taxes upon exercising option to buy, see post § 117.
Options for renewal, see post §§ 118-121.
Rights and liabilities towards third persons, see post VII.
Options to buy and sell lands generally, see Vendor and Purchaser, I, B.

¶ 404. An option in a lease permitting the the lessee within a designated time to purchase the demised premises at a designated sum, is enforceable.—Bushman v. Faltis, 184 Mich. 172.

¶ 405. A stipulation in a lease giving the lessee an option to buy the land at a price to be agreed upon by the lessors and lessee, "price not to exceed seventy-five dollars an acre" is not void for uncertainty, for the lessors have bound themselves to sell at a certain and fixed price if the lessee chooses to pay that price.—Wright v. Kaynor, 150 Mich. 7.

¶ 406. An option in a lease executed by husband and wife to purchase demised premises owned by them is valid and enforceable notwithstanding that her name does not appear in the body of the instrument, which from its face appears to be the individual act of the husband only.—Agar v. Streeter, 183 Mich. 600.

¶ 407. A tenant may exercise an option to purchase contained in a lease, by tendering the amount specified at any time within the life of the option.—Bushman v. Faltis, 184 Mich. 172.

§ 116. ——Deductions, additions and adjustments on purchase price.

¶ 408. On granting specific performance of an agreement to sell in a lease, it is improper to allow defendant, the lessor, the amount spent on repairs to render the premises tenantable.—Mentlikowski v. Wisniewski, 173 Mich. 642.

¶ 409. On granting specific performance of an agreement to sell in a lease, defendant, the lessor, will be allowed payment for permanent improvements made during the leasehold period.—Mentlikowski v. Wisniewski, 173 Mich. 642.

¶ 410. On granting specific performance of an agreement to sell in a lease, complainant, the lessee, may be allowed as a deduction from the purchase price the amount necessary to release the mortgage upon the premises.—Mentlikowski v. Wisniewski, 173 Mich. 642.

¶ 411. In granting specific performance of an agreement to sell in a lease, all rent paid after commencement of the suit is deducted from the purchase price.—Mentlikowski v. Wisniewski, 173 Mich. 642.

§ 117. Liability for taxes upon exercising option to buy.

¶ 412. In a suit for specific performance of a provision in a lease giving the lessee a right of purchase of the leased premises, and where tender of the price was rejected, held, in decreeing specific performance, that the lessee, purchaser, would be liable for and should pay all taxes and special assessments becoming due since the filing of the bill.—Nowicki v. Kapelczak, 195 Mich. 678.

§ 118. Options for renewal.

Necessity and sufficiency of notice of election to renew, see post § 119.

Terms, rights and privileges of new lease, see post § 120.

Waiver and estoppel, see post § 121.

¶ 413. Whether or not a covenant for a renewal of a lease implies a renewal on the same terms, or binds the lessor to any covenants whatever, quære.—Brand v. Frumveller, 32 Mich. 215.

¶ 414. Where a lease provides that it may be renewed from year to year by the lessee giving notice of thirty days, the lessor cannot refuse to renew, and the giving of the notice required constitutes a renewal of the lease.—Chittenden v. Western U. Tel. Co., 154 Mich. 1.

¶ 415. A provision in a lease for an option on the part of lessee to renew the lease or purchase the land, forms part of the inducement for the execution of the lease, and is therefore founded upon a sufficient consideration, although the provision for the option to renew or purchase is unilateral in the sense that the lessee was under no obligation to renew the lease or purchase the land.—Wright v. Kaynor, 150 Mich. 7.

¶ 416. The fact that a renewal lease is acknowledged at a date subsequent to that of its date, and to the date at which the renewal should have been executed, does not justify the inference that the renewal was not timely.—Wright v. Kaynor, 150 Mich. 7. (Grant, J., dissenting.)

¶ 417. Where a lease is executed for "the term of three years, with privilege of five years," it cannot be construed as a lease for three years with the privilege of five additional years.—Gensler v. Nicholas, 151 Mich. 529.

lessee of the sale.—Starkey v. Horton, 65 Mich. 96.

¶ 420. A lease for term of years, providing that the lessors, their "executors, administrators, or assigns," may at their election, at the end of the term, purchase buildings erected by the lessee at a valuation not to exceed a specified amount, and that, if they elect not to make such purchase, the lease shall continue for a similar term at a rental value to be determined by a reference, at the expiration of which, and of each succeeding term of like length, the same right shall exist, and the same result follow its nonexercise, and that if the lessee, his "executors, administrators, or assigns," do not keep all the conditions of the lease, it shall immediately cease and be utterly void,—does not provide for any renewals beyond the lives of the parties thereto.—Brush v. Beecher, 110 Mich. 597.

§ 119. ——Necessity and sufficiency of notice of election to renew.

See also ante ¶ 414.

¶ 421. Notice of a landlord's election to renew a lease need not be in writing, unless the lease so stipulates, so long as the lease itself contains all the terms and conditions of renewal and the tenant is in possession.—Darling v. Hoban, 53 Mich. 599.

¶ 422. Where the lessee is given an option to renew the lease, he must either give actual notice of election to renew or else maintain actual, visible, and exclusive possession of the land, in order to make a valid renewal.—Wright v. Kaynor, 150 Mich. 7.

¶ 423. Where a lease gives the lessor the right to elect, at the end of the term, whether or not to renew the lease, such election may be made on or before the last day of the term.—Darling v. Hoban, 53 Mich. 599.

¶ 424. Lease "for the term of one year with the privilege of having the same three years at the same rate," at lessee's option, and containing a covenant that the lessee would, at the end of said term, deliver up quiet possession of the premises. Held, that the lessee by continuing in possession after the end of the first year elected to hold the premises for the full term of three years.—Delashman v. Berry, 20 Mich. 292.

¶ 425. A year's lease gave the privilege of an extension for three years if written notice of the intention to continue should be given thirty days before the expiration of the year. Held, that the estate created by the lease terminated at the end of the year if the notice was not given as stipulated; and that an additional estate for three years could not, under Comp. L. 1871, § 4694 (How. St. § 6181), be created by any oral agreements or any waiver of the stipulation, actual or constructive, even though the tenant held over (distinguishing Delashman v. Berry, 20 Mich. 292, in that the option allowed in that case did not have to be expressed in writing).—Beller v. Robinson, 50 Mich. 264.

¶ 426. Where a man and woman, believing themselves to be tenants by the entirety, but, as a matter of fact, being tenants in common, execute a lease giving the lessee an option to renew, the lessee may bind the heirs of the woman, who has since died, by giving notice of election to renew to the man, for in such a case there also exists between the man and woman a relationship of joint contractors, and the woman by entering into the contract as a joint contractor with the man, impliedly stipulated that the other party to the contract might bind her interest by serving notice on the other joint contractor, the man.—Wright v. Kaynor, 150 Mich. 7.

¶ 427. Where a lease provides that it may be renewed from year to year by the lessee giving thirty days' notice, and the lessee continues to pay the rent, and the lessor to accept the same, the lease is thereby renewed despite some talk by the lessor in the nature of a refusal to renew the lease.—Chittenden v. Western U. Tel. Co., 154 Mich. 1.

¶ 427a. Where a landlord elects to renew a lease, tender of a new lease is unnecessary if the tenant has declared that he will not accept a renewal.—Darling v. Hoban, 53 Mich. 599.

§ 120. ——Terms, rights and privileges of new lease.

¶ 428. It is always a presumption that a lease for one year with the privilege of several is to be continued on the same terms and with the same rights and privileges to the tenant as during the first year, unless some other intention is expressed.—Brown v. Parsons, 22 Mich. 24.

¶ 429. Where a lease provides for its own renewal upon terms to be decided by referees, and they vary its terms and their award is accepted, the party accepting it must be held bound by the terms of the original lease as varied by the referees.—Brand v. Frumveller, 32 Mich. 215.

§ 121. ——Waiver and estoppel.

General law of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 430. A new lease need not be tendered where the tenant has declared that he will not accept a renewal.—Darling v. Hoban, 53 Mich. 599.

¶ 431. A lessee having an option of renewal cannot, after notifying his lessor that he does not desire to renew, and after the lessor has made expenditures relying upon the election as first made change his mind and within the stipulated time elect to renew.—Grenier v. Cota, 92 Mich. 23.

¶ 432. Assent to the continued occupancy of farming lands upon the same terms as before may fairly be presumed if, at the beginning of the planting season, the owner silently permits the occupant to continue in possession for some weeks longer, and does not enforce a contingent arrangement for the surrender of the premises at that time. And in subsequent proceedings to recover possession as from a tenant holding over, he is estopped from showing that any such arrangement existed.—Pickard v. Kleis, 56 Mich. 604.

Future rent as garnishable debt, see Garnishment ¶ 74.
Right of owner to recover on implied contract money paid by tenant to one purporting to be owner's lessee, see Implied Contracts ¶ 100.

¶ 433. Rent is a sum stipulated to be paid for the actual use and enjoyment of another's land, and is supposed to come out of the profits of the estate.—Marsh v. Butterworth, 4 Mich. 575.

¶ 434. Rent, strictly so-called, always grows out of express contract and is fixed and definite in amount.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

§ 123. Covenants and agreements to pay rent.

Construction and operation of covenants in general, see ante § 16.
Payment in advance, see post § 124.

¶ 435. Under a lease for a term of years, stipulating for annual rental without fixing the time of payment, the rent is payable at the end of each year.—Bushman v. Faltis, 184 Mich. 172.

¶ 436. A three years' lease of farm lands began in March, 1877, and the rent was to be paid annually, October 15. September 2, 1878, the parties terminated the lease, but it was agreed that the tenant might keep possession until he could harvest his crops; that he was to pay no rent from that date, and that this stipulation was not to affect the rent to become due in October. Held, that this did not bind him to pay the rent for the whole year, but only until September 2, the date of the stipulation.—Bates v. Phinney, 45 Mich. 388.

¶ 437. Where a lease provides for monthly payments, but does not fix the time for payment, rent is not due till the end of the month; but it is competent to agree that it shall be paid in advance and to make such payment a condition to the vesting of any estate in the tenant.—Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 Mich. 468.

§ 124. ——Payment in advance.

¶ 438. A mere agreement by a tenant from month to month to pay rent in advance is a personal covenant, and not a condition precedent to the right of possession.—Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 Mich. 468.

¶ 439. The fact that rent is payable in advance does not make the actual use of the leased premises any the less the consideration for such payment.—Barber v. Stone, 104 Mich. 90.

§ 125. Particular defenses or conditions affecting rights.

Failure of consideration, see post § 126.
Injury to or destruction of premises, see post § 127.
Premises untenantable or unsuitable for purpose of tenancy, see post §§ 128, 129.
Re-entry or eviction precluding recovery of rent, see post §§ 130, 131.
Disturbance or dispossession of tenant by third person, see post § 132.
Refusal of tenant to attorn to lessor's grantee as defense to action for rent, see ante ¶ 194.
Non-joinder of cotenant as defense, see post ¶ 543.
Actions to enforce collection of rent, see post V, A.

¶ 440. One who claims title to property under adverse right cannot be made liable for rent as upon an implied contract to pay by proof that the landlord notified him that he would be required to pay rent at a specified rate, if he stayed, and presented monthly bills therefor.—Smith v. Haight, 188 Mich. 512.

¶ 441. The acceptance of rent money from a stranger to a lease did not tend to show any substitution of parties, in an assumpsit for the rent, and did not release the lessee from liability for such rent.—Hartz v. Eddy, 140 Mich. 479.

¶ 442. Where a tenant has vacated the leased premises prior to the expiration of his term, mere knowledge on his part that the landlord has since entered, and is making repairs inconsistent with the occupancy of the premises, is insufficient to charge him with consent thereto, so as to affect the question of his liability for rent accruing subsequent to such entry.—Schulenburg v. Uffelmann, 106 Mich. 453.

¶ 443. A lease in the usual form, limited only by a reserved right to mine, for the exercise of which right the lessor was to pay consequent damages if it rendered occupancy for a family residence impossible, was assigned, and the assignee platted the land, and leased lots to defendant, who, when sued for rent, sought to show that an iron formation ran across the land, including the lots leased to himself; also what were the methods generally used in mining iron ore, and that the original lessor objected to plaintiff's platting and leasing the lots. Held, that such evidence was properly excluded, it not tending to show want of consideration, and plaintiff's rights being determined by his lease, and not by what his lessor may have claimed subsequently.—Ray v. Johnson, 98 Mich. 34.

§ 126. Failure of consideration.

Failure of consideration in general, see Contracts, V, C.

Promise to pay rent to one without possession or title as lacking consideration, see Contracts § 134.

¶ 444. Rent is the consideration for occupancy, and there is no consideration for its payment when the enjoyment of the rented premises ceases.—Bates v. Phinney, 45 Mich. 388.

¶ 445. Where the consideration of a lease fails, the lessee is justified in leaving and in refusing to pay further rent; and when premises are rented with the distinct understanding that they are in good condition, that becomes part of the consideration.—Tyler v. Disbrow, 40 Mich. 415.

¶ 446. A parol promise by one in possession to pay rent to one out of possession, and who has no title, is void for want of consideration.—Fuller v. Sweet, 80 Mich. 237.

¶ 447. Rent for water power is not recoverable for a period during which water was not furnished.—Gordon v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 117 Mich. 620.

§ 127. Injury to or destruction of premises.

Premises untenantable for purposes of tenancy, see post § 128.

Injury to or destruction of premises as termination of lease or tenancy, see ante § 48.

Statutory provision relieving lessee from payment of rent on the destruction of leased premises without his fault or neglect, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 42.

¶ 448. Where a lessee rents a lot and an entire building thereon smaller than the lot, and has the right to rebuild in case of fire, he is liable for the rent if the building is destroyed by fire.—Bowen v. Clemens, 161 Mich. 493.

¶ 449. The fact that a building is damaged and that the owner recovers the insurance does not release the lessee from the payment of rent.—Bowen v. Clemens, 161 Mich. 493.

¶ 450. When a tenant covenants to pay rent, and does not provide against liability in case of destruction of the premises by fire or other casualty, he is bound, in the absence of statutory provisions or covenant on the part of the landlord to rebuild, to pay the rent.—Minnis v. Newbro-Gallogly Co., 174 Mich. 635.

¶ 451. A tenant is bound to pay a rent, when a written lease does not provide against liability in case of destruction of the premises by fire or other casualty, and when there is no statutory provision or covenant on the part of the landlord to rebuild, although there is an exception to the rule where a room in a building is leased, and the whole building is destroyed so that the tenancy is terminated.—Lieberthal v. Montgomery, 121 Mich. 369.

¶ 452. A tenant cannot claim that he is not bound to pay rent because of a fire in a building, where the whole building was not destroyed, and there was no such destruction of the leased property as to deprive the tenant of his right of occupancy for the purpose of repairing, there being no covenant in the written lease for repairs by the landlord, and in such case the landlord could not enter to make repairs without the consent of the lessee.—Lieberthal v. Montgomery, 121 Mich. 369.

¶ 453. A tenant cannot claim that a written lease of a store building and land in the rear of such building is terminated because of a fire in the building, where there is no evidence of surrender of the premises after the fire.—Lieberthal v. Montgomery, 121 Mich. 369.

¶ 454. Where a lease, under which rent is payable monthly, is void under the statute of frauds, so that the only rights and liabilities of the parties arise from the lessee's holding over, the lessee is not liable for rent beyond the month in which the building is totally destroyed by fire.—Chesebrough v. Pingree, 72 Mich. 438.

¶ 455. A store building leased by plaintiff to defendant was damaged by fire and defendants moved out but retained the key. Plaintiff entered and began reconstructing the building without any arrangement with defendants but the latter subsequently requested certain changes and when completed moved in and remained paying the monthly rental as before. In a suit for the rent during the time the building was being reconstructed, held, that verdict for plaintiff was properly directed, since plaintiff's acts did not amount to an eviction.—Schloss v. Schloss, 137 Mich. 289.

¶ 456. A covenant to repay rent in the case of a fire cannot be implied under the statute (How. St. § 5655), and where there is no covenant in a written lease to repay such rent, a voluntary advance payment cannot be recovered.—Lieberthal v. Montgomery, 121 Mich. 369.

§ 128. Premises untenantable or unsuitable for purposes of tenancy.

Necessity of notice to landlord, see post § 129.

Injury to or destruction of premises, see ante § 127.

Statutory provision relieving tenant from payment of rent upon the premises becoming untenantable without his fault or neglect, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 42.

¶ 457. Where premises that were habitable when demised have become untenantable through inherent defect, rent is still payable, if there was no fraud on the landlord's part.—Petz v. Voight Brewery Co., 116 Mich. 418.

¶ 459. Where, from defects in its construction, a dwelling-house cannot be properly heated and is unhealthy because filled with sewer-gas, a tenant may vacate the premises without being liable for further rent.—Leonard v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 577.

¶ 460. Where a well of water is an important part of leased dwelling-house premises, the fact that the water, unknown to the tenant, is polluted, amounts, if the cause cannot be removed, to an eviction, and relieves the tenant from paying rent after leaving the premises in consequence thereof.—Maywood v. Logan, 78 Mich. 135.

¶ 461. Where a landlord expressly covenants to have the leased building in suitable condition for the tenants' business on the date they are to take possession, and to keep the premises in good repair, his failure to perform his covenant is a bar to an action for the collection of rent for the unexpired term of the lease, the tenants having, after repeated notices of such breach, vacated the leased premises.—Pierce v. Joldersma, 91 Mich. 463.

¶ 462. One who leases premises to an Odd Fellows lodge, "to be occupied for lodge purposes," binds himself that they shall be suitable for the lessee's purposes, cannot recover rent therefor if the premises are not suitable or are not rendered suitable within a reasonable time after notice.—Young v. Collett, 63 Mich. 331.

¶ 463. Where premises leased for the purposes of an Odd Fellows lodge were given up to the landlord, who took up the floor, rendering the room untenantable, and then neglected to make the needed changes and repairs, such neglect amounted to an eviction, excusing non-payment of rent.—Young v. Collett, 63 Mich. 331.

¶ 464. In January, 1904, the city council ordered defendant, owner of a building used for theatrical purposes, to make certain alterations as a protection against fire. In October, 1904, plaintiff leased the premises to defendant to be used as a theater, without informing him of the requirements of the council. In August, 1905, defendant renewed the lease and agreed to make certain changes as required by law and the ordinances with reference to scenery, dressing rooms, and a fly gallery, relying on plaintiff to satisfy the fire requirements. In a suit for rent, defendant offered as a defense the withholding of information by the plaintiff as to the fire requirements, and plaintiff's failure to satisfy the same. Held, this defense was good, and was not rendered invalid by the fact that defendant in the renewal of August, 1905, agreed to make certain specified changes.—Norris v. McFadden, 159 Mich. 424. (Grant J., dissenting.)

¶ 465. A tenant was in possession of premises hired for a particular purpose, under a lease providing that he should keep the premises in repair. The premises were damaged by servants of the lessor which was called to his attention and he attempted to make repairs but failed, and though requested, he made no further attempt to make the premises fit for the purpose for which they were leased. Held that the tenant was justified in terminating the lease and vacating the premises.—Adams v. Werner, 120 Mich. 432.

§ 129. ——Necessity of notice to landlord.

¶ 466. In an action for rent the defense that the premises were untenantable is not made out where the lessor had no notice that the house was claimed to be untenantable, and the tenant assigned other reasons for leaving the premises in his notice of removal, and, while testifying to the presence of bad odors, arising from the alleged want of repairs, did not testify that he left the house on that account.—Holmes v. Wood, 88 Mich. 435.

§ 130. Re-entry or eviction precluding recovery of rent.

Waiver by tenant of constructive eviction, see post § 131.

Termination of lease or tenancy by notice to quit for nonpayment of rent, see ante § 40.

Pollution of well of water appurtenant to dwelling house as eviction, see also ante ¶ 460.

¶ 467. A tenant's obligation to pay rent ceases upon termination of his right to occupancy of the land by act of the landlord in evicting him.—Stott Realty Co. v. United Amusement Co., 195 Mich. 684.

¶ 468. Where a landlord, during the continuance of a lease, without the consent of the tenant, enters upon the demised premises, which have been vacated by the tenant, and the entry is followed by a continuous possession inconsistent with the possessory right assured to the tenant by the lease, such possession amounts to an eviction, and precludes the recovery of rent while it continues.—Day v. Watson, 8 Mich. 535.

¶ 469. A landlord's entry upon the demised premises followed by continuous possession, amounts to an eviction whether the entry be for condition broken or not. If for condition broken, it signifies an intention to terminate the lease entirely; while, if the landlord regard the lease as still continuing, the right to rent is suspended during the occupancy.—Day v. Watson, 8 Mich. 535.

¶ 470. A water-lot, extending by the terms of the lease to the channel-bank of the river, and including "all the liberties and privileges belonging to the premises," was rented to be used for a boat house. During the last month of the term the landlord caused his propeller to be moored at the docks, on either side of the slip and in front of the premises, shutting off ingress and egress, and thereby depriving the lessee of the particular and only use for which the premises were rented. Held, such an actual eviction as would abate the rent during its continuance.—Pridgeon v. Excelsior Boat Club, 66 Mich. 326.

¶ 471. Where, under a lease authorizing the lessor to terminate it at his option for nonpayment of rent, the lessor serves a notice to quit, and immediately thereafter excludes the lessee from part of the premises, the latter is not liable for the rent of such part of the premises after his exclusion therefrom, nor for any rent after vacating the rest of the premises in accordance with the notice.—Wreford v. Kenrick, 107 Mich. 389.

¶ 472. It does not necessarily follow from the fact that an action by a landlord for rent after eviction cannot be maintained that the parties may not by contract obligate themselves in such manner that an action technically upon the covenant to pay rent may not survive re-entry, and such contracts are lawful and enforceable.—Stott Realty Co. v. United Amusement Co., 195 Mich. 684.

¶ 473. Where, in a suit for rent accruing after the abandonment of premises, the tenant sets up as a defense a partial eviction in the act of the landlord in permitting third persons to pass over the premises and in filling a part of them with building materials and rubbish, it is error for the trial court to refuse to submit to the jury the question of the tenant's waiver of such eviction, where there is evidence that the defendant expressly consented to the acts of eviction complained of and impliedly consented to same by joining in the doing of such acts.—Kuschinsky v. Flanigan, 170 Mich. 245.

¶ 474. Where a landlord permits the tenants of an apartment to pass over a lessee's lot in going to and from the second story of a rear apartment located on the lot of the lessee and on the adjoining lot of the landlord, and fills the lessee's back yard with building materials and rubbish, the lessee does not waive his right to insist upon such partial eviction as a defense, in a suit for rent accruing after the abandonment of the premises, by reason of the fact that after such eviction the lessee stayed for several months in possession of the remainder of the premises.—Kuschinsky v. Flanigan, 170 Mich. 245.

¶ 475. Where a part of a dock has been leased to A. for storage purposes, a subsequent lease thereof to B. will not, in an action for rent, be regarded as an eviction of A. if he, by accepting and using another part of the wharf, consented to the change.—Cunning v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 88 Mich. 237.

§ 132. Disturbance or dispossession of tenant by third person.

¶ 476. Where a tenant is dispossessed by one who enters under a paramount title, such entry is equivalent to an eviction by legal process, and will excuse the tenant from paying rent to the landlord. The tenant is not bound to retain possession until actually expelled by legal process; but may quietly yield possession, incurring the risk of being able to show that the entry was under a paramount title.—Marsh v. Butterworth, 4 Mich. 575.

§ 133. Vacation of premises during term or without notice.

Releting by lessor to mitigate damages, see post § 134.

¶ 477. A tenant at will until the tenancy is legally terminated by notice must pay for use and occupation, and is not relieved from payment by vacating the premises while the tenancy exists.—Huntington v. Parkhurst, 87 Mich. 38.

§ 134. ——Releting by lessor to mitigate damages.

See also post ¶ 607.

Rerenting by lessor as eviction, see post ¶ 598.

¶ 478. Where a lessor, having accepted no surrender, rents to others premises that have been given up to him by the lessees before their term expires, doing so for the lessee's benefit, he does not release the payment of any deficiency in rent that may arise.—Stewart v. Sprague, 71 Mich. 50.

¶ 479. By seeking to rent and finally renting vacated premises, the lessor does not relieve the lessee from paying rent for that part of the term during which they were vacant.—Scott v. Beecher, 91 Mich. 590.

¶ 480. Where the tenant's possession is not received from the party who claims rent, it is proper to authorize the claimant's title to be investigated, unless there is some other ground of estoppel.—Fuller v. Sweet, 30 Mich. 237.

¶ 481. A complainant seeking to set aside a deed is not bound to account for rent to the wife of his landlord who is the defendant but to the estate of such landlord, if the relation of landlord and tenant could be found to exist.—Williams v. Williams, 118 Mich. 477.

¶ 483. A lessee, who held under an unfiled chattel-mortgage lease, mortgaged the property covered by this clause of the lease. The mortgage was withheld from record. After the mortgage and the lease had been filed, the lessee gave the mortgagee a second mortgage upon the same property, which recited that it was subject to the former mortgage and to the lease. Held, that the second mortgage being expressly subject to the lease, the rights of the lessors as creditors, to the extent of the rent which had accrued between the time of the execution and of the filing of the first mortgage, are superior to the rights of the mortgagee.—Crockett v. Bearce, 104 Mich. 257.

§ 136. ——Grantees and assignees of landlord.

Assignment by lessor of rent or of leasehold in general, see ante §§ 58-60.

Grantee of lessor as proper party to sue for rent, see post ¶ 545.

¶ 484. The deed of premises covered by a lease carries with it to the grantee, as an incident of the reversion, the right to collect the rent.—Simons v. Diamond Match Co., 159 Mich. 241.

¶ 485. Under an assignment of rents and after notice thereof to the tenants, the rent after it becomes due can be collected by the assignee.—Brownson v. Roy, 133 Mich. 617.

¶ 486. A conveyance of premises to a receiver under order of court subsequent to an assignment of future rents, did not terminate the right created by such assignment, where the latter was given as security for a claim against the owner.—Brownson v. Roy, 133 Mich. 617.

¶ 487. Under an agreement of joint occupancy of premises and joint conduct of business, there can be no claim for rent assigned by one of the parties as against the other because such claim is not distinct and severable.—Carver v. Palmer, 33 Mich. 342.

¶ 488. Where a paid-up lease for a certain period is given to mortgagees as additional security, the assignee of the mortgagor's claim for rent of the leased premises has no greater rights than his assignor.—Storey v. Dutton, 46 Mich. 539.

¶ 489. The surrender of a lease by the tenant before the expiration of his term, with the lessor's knowledge, will defeat a suit for subsequent rent by the lessor's grantee, who takes a deed while the premises are unoccupied.—Foster v. Fleishans, 69 Mich. 543.

¶ 490. An assignee of the rents of premises having knowledge of the actual possession by tenants has notice enough to exclude any benefit from assignor's neglect to inform plaintiff of the advance payment of rent.—Spicer v. Bonker, 45 Mich. 630.

¶ 491. B. and S. held mortgages on certain rented premises already heavily incumbered. S. obtained an assignment of B.'s mortgage, and in order that his own might not be merged procured a deed of the premises to be made to his wife, intending to collect the rents until a foreclosure of prior mortgages. His wife assigned to him "all the use of" the premises "for his use and benefit." B., who understood these arrangements, meanwhile procured assignments of the leases and collected the rents himself in advance. S. sued him for money had and received to plaintiff's use. Held, that an instruction to find for defendant did not prejudice the plaintiff, whose right of action arose under the assignment from his wife, and as she did not hold the leases, her right to collect the rents, if she had that right, rested on her ownership of the equity of redemption and on whatever estoppel may have arisen against B.; but the word "use" in her assignment was too uncertain to cover rents under leases which she did not hold.—Spicer v. Bonker, 45 Mich. 630.

Subletting and liability of subtenants, see post § 138.

Liability for rent under and for appeal in summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 58.

¶ 492. Where, as security additional to a mortgage, a paid-up lease for ten years of other than the mortgaged premises was given, which provided that it should be at the lessees' option to keep possession after a certain date, on or after which, also, the lessees might cancel the lease if the bond should be fully paid, held, that when the mortgagees had satisfied their debt by a foreclosure, they could not keep possession without paying rent.—Dutton v. Merritt, 41 Mich. 537.

§ 138. ——Subletting and liability of subtenants.

Liability of assignee of lease for rent according to terms thereof, see also ante ¶ 308.

¶ 493. Ordinarily a subtenant is not liable for rent to the original lessor, there being no privity.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 133 Mich. 448.

¶ 494. Under the rule that after the expiration of the time limited by a notice for the nonpayment of rent, the lessee is a trespasser; a subtenant could not be made liable to the landlord by an agreement made by the tenant after the expiration of the time limited under a notice to quit, and while the tenant had only a bare possession and that wrongful.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 133 Mich. 448.

¶ 495. A subtenant was not liable to the landlord for rent, where the latter had accepted a surrender from the tenant and an assignment of the subtenant's lease, but where there was no reservation from the surrender and no confirmation of such subtenant's lease.—Williams v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 133 Mich. 448.

¶ 496. A subtenant cannot resist the payment of rent or abandon the premises because the lessor makes an untenable objection to the subtenant's rightful use of the premises.—Ray v. Johnson, 98 Mich. 34.

¶ 497. Where a tenant has sublet the whole or any part of the leased premises, and the subtenant is in possession at the termination of the original lease, the tenant must remove him, otherwise he will not be in a situation to render that complete possession to which the landlord is entitled; and, unless the entire possession is surrendered, the reponsibility of the tenant for rent will continue, although it may have become impossible for him, in consequence of the obstinacy or ill-will of the subtenant, and his refusal to quit, to give the landlord full possession.—Campau v. Michell, 103 Mich. 617.

§ 139. Acceptance of rental as waiver of breach of conditions.

Effect of acceptance of rent on rights of assignee, see ante ¶¶ 304, 305.

¶ 498. Continuing conditions in a lease are not necessarily waived by receipt of rent after they have been violated; the lessor can exercise forbearance in furtherance of his own interests and those of the tenant.—Alexander v. Hodges, 41 Mich. 691.

¶ 499. The mere receipt of rent due before forfeiture, after the lease has been forfeited, is not a waiver of the forfeiture.—Pendill v. Union Min. Co., 64 Mich. 172.

¶ 500. The rental of premises may be fixed on the basis of a certain percentage of the cost of the premises.—Eames v. Barber, 192 Mich. 1.

¶ 501. A lessee has the whole of the day on which his rent falls due for making payment, and a taking, under a lease purporting to give a lien, of property for default in payment of rent before the day has expired, is a taking before default, and consequently a trespass.—Dalton v. Laudahn, 27 Mich. 529.

¶ 502. Where rent is payable weekly, or at other stated intervals, in advance, the tenant has the whole of the first day of each succeeding week, or other interval of time, in which to make the payment.—Sherlock v. Thayer, 4 Mich. 355.

¶ 503. Where a lease for half-months expires with the last day of a month the period for which rent is due ends at midnight and the lessee cannot be required to leave before. —Detroit Sav. Bank v. Bellamy, 49 Mich. 317.

¶ 504. A son who leases a farm from his parents, according to the terms of which lease he is to have the sole management and all that the land produces, but is to support the parents and pay them a small sum of money, is not entitled to payment for his services in the management of the farm.—Montgomery v. Montgomery's Estate, 191 Mich. 398.

¶ 505. On the expiration of a lease it was renewed for five years by an unsigned interlineation to that effect. In consideration of such renewal the lessee agreed to pay a three per cent increase based upon the increased valuation for assessment. This was indorsed on the lease but not signed. The lessee paid the increased rent as computed by the lessor until the latter sold the premises. The grantee attempted to raise the rent upon the basis of the increased assessment. Held, that the original lessor and lessee had construed the lease by acting thereon without objection, and that the lessor's grantee was estopped to question such construction.—Poli v. Jacob, 177 Mich. 238.

§ 141. ——Payments in services or board.

Nonassignability of contract involving personal skill or services, see Assignments § 7.

¶ 506. Rent may be reserved in services as well as in money.—Shaw v. Hill, 79 Mich. 86.

¶ 507. By the terms of a lease of a hotel the rent was made payable in monthly instalments, and the lessor agreed to take one-half the same "in board as the same falls due." Held, that it was not optional with the lessee to pay in money or board, but that he was under the same obligation to pay the board, if demanded, as the lessor to receive it.—Evans v. Norris, 6 Mich. 369.

¶ 508. The lessee, covenanting to furnish board in payment of rent, was under no obligation to call upon the lessor, and demand that boarders be sent, but the lessor was bound to call for the board within the term, and substantially as the same fell due.—Evans v. Norris, 6 Mich. 364.

¶ 509. A contract under which one comes into possession of a farm is a lease; where such contract provides that the tenant is to pay the owner of such farm two-thirds of the income of the farm, unless otherwise specified, when the hay, grain, potatoes, hogs, wool or any other marketable product is sold the toll to be first deducted, and where under the terms of such contract the tenant became the owner of such crops, with full power to sell, and a right of security in case of a breach of the covenants thereof is expressly reserved against such owner by such tenant.—Cockerline v. Fisher, 140 Mich. 95.

¶ 510. Under a contract by which lessees work a farm on shares, it seems to be their duty to deliver to the lessor his share, and not his duty to parcel their shares out to them.—Coe v. Wager, 42 Mich. 49.

¶ 511. The tenant in possession under an agreement whereby the owner of a farm rents it for a term of years, and furnishes to the tenant the stock on the farm, and one-half the seed grain, and pays one-half the expenses of carrying on the farm, exclusive of charges for labor, which is furnished and paid for by the tenant, the owner and the tenant each to receive one-half the products, is not entitled to any part of grain previously sown, although harvested during his tenancy.—Williams v. Rogers, 110 Mich. 418.

¶ 512. Whether a tenant on shares is entitled to remuneration from the owner for delivering milk from the farm to regular customers is properly left to the jury, under instructions that, if it was understood by the parties to the agreement that the tenant's obligation to do the work included this service, he could not recover therefor, but that if it was not so understood, and the work was performed by the tenant under a special arrangement at the request of the owner, he should be allowed what such services were reasonably worth.—Williams v. Rogers, 110 Mich. 418.

¶ 513. Complainant's land was worked by defendant during the year 1900 on shares, and the land was seeded to grass with the crop of grain, by complainant at his own expense. For the year 1901, defendant's son, at his father's consent and request, made an agreement for the cutting of the hay for that season. No further agreement was made. Complainant arranged with another for the harvesting of the hay in 1902 when defendant interfered claiming that he was a tenant at will and his tenancy not terminated. Held, that his rights terminated with the season of 1901, and injunction granted to restrain him from interfering.—Kenney v. Apley, 139 Mich. 320.

§ 143. Liability for use and occupation.

Occupancy under contract of purchase, see ante § 5.
Occupancy by grantor after conveyance, see ante § 6.
Actions for use and occupation, see post § 151.
Liabilities under implied contract in general, see Implied Contracts.
Person entitled to compensation for use and occupation during period between execution sale and deed, see Executions ¶ 211.
Liability of person in possession of land for rent thereof, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11809.

¶ 514. A contract for use and occupation cannot be made out unless the person charged as tenant has either accepted possession from the landlord, or done some other act in plain recognition of the relationship, or which equitably estops him from denying it.—Lockwood v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 42 Mich. 536.

¶ 515. Recovery for the use and occupation of leased premises cannot be had against others than the lessees during the term of the lease, if it has not been assigned or the lessees discharged from liability, or if they have not surrendered their interest or known or assented to any new lease that may have been made to the other.—Doty v. Gillett, 43 Mich. 203.

¶ 516. One who enters upon the use of another's property with full knowledge of the rent demanded therefor is under contract obligation to pay such rent, even though he has originally refused to or has said that he would only pay under protest.—Thompson v. Sanborn, 52 Mich. 141.

¶ 517. A tenant by sufferance will be liable for use and occupation, etc., after notice to quit and demand of possession.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 518. Where the occupancy of premises by a tenant at will has been beneficial to him, that is a sufficient ground to imply a promise to pay a reasonable sum as a compensation for such occupancy, unless there is something in the circumstances inconsistent with the notion of such a promise or of an obligation to pay.—Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566.

¶ 519. Where mortgaged merchandise was placed in a leased storeroom, the mortgagees under an arrangement with the lessee having placed an agent in the store to receive the cash from the sales and to apply it upon the indebtedness to them, the lessee and mortgagor being permitted to draw out a stated sum for expenses, in the absence of an express agreement to pay rent the mortgagees are not liable to the lessor for the use of the store while their agent was there.—Fisher v. Pforzheimer, 93 Mich. 650.

¶ 520. A receiver of an insolvent company who retains possession of leased premises, but who does not assume the lease, either expressly or impliedly, but who repudiates liability under the lease, is only liable for the reasonable rent of the property during the time of actual occupancy.—Stoepel v. Union Trust Co., 121 Mich. 281.

¶ 521. In an action for the use and occupation of premises under the lease of a right of way it is no defense that other persons also had a right of way if the right was in neither case exclusive.—Ledyard v. Morey, 54 Mich. 77.

Rights and liabilities towards third persons, see post VII.
Stipulation in lease granting power of sale of chattels, effect as chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages § 2, ¶ 7.

¶ 522. Although the landlord, to whom possession of a merchandise stock is surrendered with the lease, may not be a warehouseman within the meaning of the statute, he is entitled to a lien as such as against the tenant, where he immediately advises the latter that he will make a claim for storage if the goods are not removed.—Schneider v. Dayton, 111 Mich. 396.

¶ 523. A change of possession of a stock of merchandise from the merchant to the owner of the store building is effected, where the latter, on being informed by the merchant that he has sold the goods, and that he claims no further interest therein, acquiesces in a surrender of the lease, and thereafter watches and cares for the goods during litigation between the former tenant and the alleged purchaser.—Schneider v. Dayton, 111 Mich. 396.

§ 145. Underwriting, guaranty or suretyship.

General law of guaranty and suretyship, see Guaranty; Suretyship.

Necessity of writing under statute of frauds to answer for debt of another, see Frauds, Statute of, I, B; II, A.

¶ 524. Where, at the time a lease is executed, a third party executes under seal, upon the back thereof, an agreement to become surety for the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants mentioned in the lease, such agreement becomes a part of the lease, and he may be sued jointly with the lessees for the rent due; and a subsequent reduction of the rent without his knowledge or consent does not discharge him.—Preston v. Huntington, 67 Mich. 139.

§ 146. Provisions in lease.

Property included, see post § 147.

¶ 525. A lien on property given by a lease to secure the performance of its conditions is inseparable from the lease, and can only be enforced against the lessee by the landlord or his assignee.—Hansen v. Prince, 45 Mich. 519.

¶ 526. A clause in a lease providing that anything placed on the premises shall be liable for the rent, and that the lease shall constitute a mortgage to secure it, and that on default the lessor may seize and sell the property on certain notice and may retain from the proceeds the rent and the "costs of such sale," does not justify the detention of property so seized if the rent is paid without sale and there is no showing of actual costs or of information thereof to the lessee, or of any notice of proceedings to be taken.—Hamilton v. Langley, 52 Mich. 549.

¶ 527. Defendant leased a farm to one Young. The lease contained a provision that all the fruit raised thereon should be shipped in the name of the lessor, and a mortgage clause in favor of the lessor on all the produce of the land, whether harvested or not, to secure the tenant's compliance with the terms of the lease. After the execution of the lease Young gave a mortgage to the plaintiff on his fruit crop to secure a note. The crop was harvested by Young and sold and shipped by him in defendant's name. Young gave an order on the consignee to pay to plaintiff the amount of the note out of the proceeds of the fruit. Defendant refused to sign such order. Held, trover would not lie for the conversion of the fruit.—Lytle v. Peters, 167 Mich. 345.

§ 147. ——Property included.

¶ 528. By the terms of a lease of a planing-mill the lessors were to have a lien for unpaid rent upon all "improvements" made by the lessee on the premises, and the lessee was authorized to remove—in case the rent should be paid—all machinery placed thereon by him, such machinery to be treated by both parties as "chattel property." Held, that no present lien upon or interest in the machinery was created by the lease, and that it was subject to mortgage by the lessee as personalty.—Booth v. Oliver, 67 Mich. 664.

¶ 529. Where a lease provides that the lessors shall have a lien enforceable, like a chattel mortgage, on machinery placed on leased premises, such lien not being recorded as a chattel mortgage, nor the property reduced to the lessor's possession, is void as against levies by third persons.—Lake Superior Ship Canal, R. & I. Co. v. McCann, 86 Mich. 106.

¶ 530. A clause in a lease stipulating, by way of securing the payment of rent, that "all goods, wares and merchandise, household furniture, fixtures or other property which are or shall be placed in or on said premises by them, shall be liable, and this lease shall constitute a lien or mortgage on said property," does not cover the dwelling-house upon the premises.—Kuschell v. Campau, 49 Mich. 34.

I. RIGHT TO QUIT AND TERMINATE.

§ 148. In general.

See also ante ¶ 333.

Estoppel to assert right, see post § 149.

Right of lessor to terminate lease for breach of implied covenant, see ante ¶ 62.

Right to emblements, issues and profits on vacation or abandonment of premises or crops, see ante § 114.

Forfeiture of lease for breach of covenant, see ante § 90.

Right of tenant to vacate or abandon premises because of landlord's failure to repair, see ante § 88.

Rights and liabilities towards third persons, see post VII.

Termination of lease or tenancy in general, see ante II.

Termination by ouster or eviction, see ante II.

Right of tenant to quit when leased property is destroyed or rendered untenantable without his fault or neglect, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 42.

¶ 531. A tenant who has refused to pay rent until repairs are made, and is accordingly notified to quit, has a right to regard the lease as ended.—Conkling v. Tuttle, 52 Mich. 630.

¶ 532. The failure of a landlord, upon notice, to compel other tenants to cease offending a tenant by the use of offensive language and conduct does not constitute an eviction barring recovery for rent, under a covenant for quiet and peaceable possession and a clause in the tenant's lease forbidding the use of foul and abusive language so as to become a nuisance to other tenants and neighbors, where the tenants causing the disturbance have no title interest in the premises and the landlord does not encourage the conduct of such tenants, and although the leases of the other tenants contain similar clauses against the use of such language, and the tenants might have been ejected because thereof.—Stewart v. Lawson, 199 Mich. 497.

¶ 533. Defendant leased premises with right of renewal for one year. Before his term expired, he stated to the lessor's brother-in-law, whom he supposed to be the lessor's agent, that he would renew the lease if proper heating facilities were provided which was promised and he continued in possession. The promise was ratified by the lessor but the heating facilities were not provided, and he vacated. In an action for the rent after the abandonment, held that he was justified in vacating the premises before the year expired and the rent thereupon ceased.—Rogers v. Babcock, 139 Mich. 94.

¶ 534. In determining the right of the lessee to quit because the premises leased were not suitable for the lodge purposes to which the lease restricted the lessee and were not made suitable within a reasonable time by the lessor, it is immaterial whether the lodge had any legal existence.—Young v. Collett, 63 Mich. 331.

¶ 535. Tenants who continue to occupy leased premises without offering to surrender them after egress has been cut off on one side by the lessor's erecting a fence across an adjoining street, are estopped from claiming that such erection constitutes an ouster. —Beecher v. Duffield, 97 Mich. 423.

V. MUTUAL REMEDIES AND ACTIONS.

A. ACTION FOR RENT AND ADVANCES OR FOR USE AND OCCUPATION.

§ 150. Right of action in general.

Actions for use and occupation, see post § 151.
Necessary and proper parties, see post §§ 152, 153.
Declaration and other pleadings, see post § 154.
Issues, proof and variance, see post § 155.
Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence, see post § 156.
Questions of law and fact and instructions, see post § 157.
Actions against tenant for breach of covenant or condition, see post § 160.
Actions against landlord for breach of duty, see post §§ 161-164.
Particular defenses or conditions affecting cause of action for rent, see ante §§ 125-132.
Summary proceedings to oust tenant and recover possession, see post V, B, and see also Forcible Entry and Detainer.
General law of assumpsit, see Assumpsit.
Judgment as bar or estoppel upon landlord or tenant of party, see Former Adjudication § 74.
Decree reforming a lease as res adjudicata upon surety on the lease, see Former Adjudication § 72.
Judgment in action for rent as res adjudicata of the execution of the lease, see Former Adjudication ¶ 406.
Proper limitations of actions for rent and computation of time, see Limitations.
Assumpsit on leases under seal, see Assumpsit § 2.
Recoupment of damages or right to set-off in action for rent, see Set-off.
Actions for recovery of rent, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11810, 11811.

¶ 536. An agreement that a person who retains no ownership in the lease, and has sold the land, should receive certain portions of the rent thereafter payable, gives him no title to enforce such payment by any action founded directly on the lease itself. All rights of that kind belong to the grantee of the land under lease, where they cannot be separated from the ownership of that instrument, and the beneficial interest in the partial revenues must be enforced in some other way.—Hansen v. Prince, 45 Mich. 519.

§ 151. ——Actions for use and occupation.

Liability for use and occupation, see ante § 143.
Occasion and propriety of use and occupation, and of the other common counts, see Assumpsit, II.

¶ 537. An action for use and occupation does not lie where no actual use existed or was bargained for.—Bates v. Phinney, 45 Mich. 388.

¶ 538. The action of assumpsit for use and occupation does not lie where the holding is adverse, or where there is no obligation to pay rent by virtue of an express or implied contract relation, as of landlord and tenant.—Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566; Ward v. Warner, 8 Mich. 508; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351; Dalton v. Laudahn, 30 Mich. 349; Wilmarth v. Palmer, 34 Mich. 347; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Harlow, 37 Mich. 554; Lockwood v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 42 Mich. 536; Henderson v. City of Detroit, 61 Mich. 378.

¶ 539. An action of use and occupation, being founded on contract, express or implied, will not lie where the occupancy of the one sought to be charged is under claim of adverse right, as the remedy, if any, is by action of trespass or tort.—Smith v. Haight, 188 Mich. 512.

¶ 540. An action for use and occupation may not be maintained by the owner of land against an occupant who is neither a tenant nor a contract purchaser until notice to quit is given.—Robinson v. Batzer, 195 Mich. 235.

§ 152. Necessary and proper parties.

Assignee or grantees, see post § 153.

¶ 541. An action for rent must be brought in the names of the lessors if the lease has not been assigned.—Hecht v. Ferris, 45 Mich. 376.

¶ 542. One named as the payee of the rent in a lease executed by another party may in her own name sue the lessee therefor.—Toan v. Pline, 60 Mich. 385.

¶ 543. In an action for rent the nonjoinder of a cotenant as plaintiff can only be set up in abatement, and where not so pleaded it will go merely to apportion the damages.—Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 292.

¶ 544. In an action for the use and occupation of premises under the lease of a right of way, persons also having the use of the right of way are not necessary parties.—Ledyard v. Morey, 54 Mich. 77.

¶ 554a. One who undertakes, as copromisor to pay rent under a lease may be sued jointly with the other copromisors, the promises being parts of one contract though placed in different writings.—Preston v. Huntington, 67 Mich. 139.

§ 153. ——Assignees or grantees.

¶ 545. The grantee of leased land, not the grantor who by agreement has a beneficial interest in part of the rent, is the proper person to sue on the lease for rents.—Hansen v. Prince, 45 Mich. 519.

¶ 546. Where a lessor has conveyed the reversion with the rent, or has assigned the rent, retaining the reversion, the grantee or assignee, as the case may be, may sue for the rent.—Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 292.

¶ 547. An action for rent must be brought in the lessor's name where the lease has not been assigned.—Hecht v. Ferris, 45 Mich. 376.

¶ 548. An assignee of a nontransferable lease may recover rent advanced to the lessor through the original lessees where the lessor has rented to a third person after having given his verbal assent to the lessees' transfer of the lease and surrender of possession to the assignee.—Harrington v. Hall, 126 Mich. 704.

¶ 549. There can be no action for use and occupation by a lessor on an assignment from the lessee of a claim for rent against a third party who entered into an agreement with the lessee for joint occupancy of premises and joint conduct of business.—Carver v. Palmer, 33 Mich. 342.

¶ 550. The remedy for the breach of an agreement by a lessee against another for the joint occupancy of premises and joint conduct of business is not an action for use and occupation by the lessor under an assignment of rent claim by the lessee but an action by the lessee himself for breach of contract.—Carver v. Palmer, 33 Mich. 342.

§ 154. Declaration and other pleadings.

¶ 551. The declaration in an action for rent on a parol lease must allege the time the term commenced.—Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 Mich. 220.

¶ 552. In declaring on an agreement as a demise, it must either be stated by its legal effect or be set forth in such a manner that its legal character can be seen.—Tillman v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 113.

¶ 553. In an action for rent the declaration set forth an agreement on the part of the plaintiff to lease the premises to the defendant, in consideration of which the defendant did actually rent and hire the premises. It was held that such agreement to lease could not be a consideration for an actual renting, unless it was so stated as to amount to a present demise.—Tillman v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 113.

¶ 554. A declaration alleging that defendant agreed, "as per lease attached and made part of this declaration," to pay plaintiff a specified sum per month, for one year, for the rental of certain premises, and to perform certain other conditions, all of which he had neglected and refused to do, is sufficient if not demurred to, a copy of the lease being attached as stated, to authorize a recovery for use and occupation, though no formal count for use and occupation is made.—Twitchel v. Goebel, 106 Mich. 225.

¶ 555. Use and occupation may be sued for specially without reference to the form of the lease.—Conkling v. Tuttle, 52 Mich. 630.

§ 155. Issues, proof and variance.

Proof of new lease under general issue, see also Assumpsit § 52.

¶ 556. In an action for the recovery of rent on a parol lease the time of the commencement of the term must be proved as alleged.—Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 Mich. 220.

the absence of such showing is fatal, and excludes from the case everything that depends on the count.—Ives v. Williams, 53 Mich. 636.

¶ 558. In an action for rent of premises which defendant vacated without giving sufficient notice, the defense that the premises were untenantable cannot be shown under the plea of the general issue without notice.—Holmes v. Wood, 88 Mich. 435.

¶ 559. Where, pending a suit to recover rent, the lessee dies, and on the trial it appears that, after the lessee had entered upon a second term provided for in the lease, the lessor, under a provision giving him that right, sought to terminate the lease, but, on the claim of the lessee that he had entered upon another term, acquiesced in his continued possession of the leased premises, for which use and occupation the suit was brought, the court will not inquire into the validity of the lease, which is claimed by the administrators to be void, and to have been terminated by its terms before the commencement of the use and occupation sued for, but will leave that question to be settled on the hearing in probate court of a contingent claim filed against the estate, based upon such lease.—Brush v. Beecher, 98 Mich. 235.

§ 156. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

Presumptions and burden of proof arising from occupancy, see ante § 21.
Evidence and proof of relation, see ante § 22.
Presumptions and evidence as to liability for injuries from defective or dangerous conditions, see ante § 107.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Presumption of tenancy, see also Forcible Entry ¶ 146.
Admissibility of lease to prove amount of rent due, see Comp. L. 1915 § 11810.

¶ 560. The burden of proof in an action by the administrator of an estate of a woman against decedent's son on notes given for rent of property leased for life by the son to the mother and sublet by him to her to establish a tenancy and agreement to pay rent is on the plaintiff.—Heinze v. Heinze, 195 Mich. 365.

¶ 561. Where a telegraph company abandons space leased by it in a hotel lobby, and the lessor thereupon uses the space abandoned, along with the rest of the lobby, for hotel purposes, it cannot be inferred from this that the lessor in a suit for rent has derived from such use the rental value of the space.—Chittenden v. Western U. Tel. Co., 154 Mich. 1.

¶ 562. In determining, in an action for rent upon an oral lease, the time when the lease commenced, it is proper to consider the time when defendant went into possession, the time from which he paid the rent, and all other circumstances throwing light upon the question.—Pendill v. Neuberger, 67 Mich. 562.

¶ 563. In an action for rent where rental value was in dispute, it was error to require plaintiff to testify what rent he received for adjoining premises owned by him.—Stevens v. Beardsley, 122 Mich. 671.

¶ 564. Plaintiff, the owner of a building used for theatrical purposes, was ordered by the city council to make certain alterations as a measure of safety against fire. Afterwards, plaintiff leased the premises to defendant to be used as a theater, without informing him of the requirements of the council. In a defense against a suit for rent, held, it was error to exclude the records of the city council offered in evidence by defendant to show the official action and reports of the agents of the city in enforcing the said requirements.—Norris v. McFadden, 159 Mich. 424.

¶ 565. In an action for rent against the sureties on an appeal bond bringing up proceedings for the recovery of the premises leased by a man and his wife, an order payable out of the rent, signed by the man but not by the wife, and drawn upon the tenant, is inadmissible where there is no assignment of the lease by both lessors.—Hecht v. Ferris, 45 Mich. 376.

¶ 566. Proof that saloon fixtures belonging to defendant remained in plaintiff's building for some months will not support an action for use and occupancy, where it appears that at the time plaintiff purchased the building the fixtures were in possession of another, and that defendants did nothing to disturb such possession.—Bonnazza v. Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co., 155 Mich. 36.

¶ 567. Where an action for use and occupation was brought against one of the original lessees and a stranger to the lease, and supported by evidence that the defendants acted as copartners, the latter may show their actual relation, and the contract between them may be put in evidence. They may also show that the stranger had agreed to pay what would have been his proportion of the rent under the lease to his codefendant.—Doty v. Gillett, 43 Mich. 203.

§ 157. Questions of law and fact and instructions.

Instructions in general, see Instructions.
Right to set-off against rent for expenditure by tenant for repairs and improvements as jury question, see Set-off.

¶ 568. In an action for rent by an administrator held that it was a question for the jury whether an agreement was made between decedent and defendant, her son, whereby the defendant should be liable to decedent for the use of the premises which had been originally leased by defendant to decedent.—Heinze v. Heinze, 195 Mich. 365.

¶ 569. It is not error to refuse to charge on a month to month letting where plaintiff's testimony showed a letting for a year, if believed, while that of defendant, if believed, showed merely a license terminable without notice on nonpayment of compensation, neither showing a month to month tenancy.—Hirschfield v. Franks, 112 Mich. 448.

¶ 570. It is error to instruct in an action upon a lease for rent, that a surrender and cancellation of the lease by operation of law resulted, where it appears that plaintiff was informed that defendants, the original lessees, had failed and that thereafter a corporation occupied the premises and paid rent, but it did not appear that plaintiff released the original lessees or that he had dealings with the corporation other than to make bills against it for rent and to collect such rent, and where checks of the corporation for the rent were delivered by one of such original lessees.—Detroit Pharmacal Co. v. Burt, 124 Mich. 220.

¶ 571. Plaintiffs, partners, sued defendant to collect a bar bill, and for money loaned. Defendant claimed a set-off for rent due, the rate per month being in dispute. One of the plaintiffs testified that he had turned over to his deceased partner his share of the rent money to be paid to defendant, but could not testify that the money had ever been so paid over. The deceased partner and defendant had been on very friendly terms. There was no other evidence that the rent had been paid. Held, the court should have instructed the jury to find in favor of defendant that there was no payment of rent, and should have directed them to confine their inquiry to the disputed question of the rate of the rent.—Trudeau v. Boivin, 158 Mich. 585.

¶ 572. In an action by the administrator of the estate of a woman on promissory notes given for rent of real estate rented by defendant of decedent, his mother, after having been leased for life by him to her, where he was not living on the property and was but a gratuitous tenant at will up to the time of his father's death, held that an instruction that the mother had the right under the instrument to possession and use of the land described in it, that whether she saw fit to assert that right and had an understanding or contract with defendant by which he recognized her right and agreed to attorn to her as a tenant for the use of the land was a question of fact, but, if she did not assert her right and saw fit not to put him off or rent it to him, simply permitting him to remain in possession of it, if there never was any agreement by which he rented it to her, plaintiff could not recover, and that the burden of proof rested upon plaintiff to establish a tenancy and agreement to pay rent by a preponderance of evidence, was not erroneous.—Heinze v. Heinze, 195 Mich. 365.

¶ 573. A finding for plaintiff will not be directed in an action for rent against the original lessees where there is testimony tending to show a surrender of the lease and occupancy by the plaintiff after business failure of an assignee of such lessees.—Detroit Pharmacal Co. v. Burt, 124 Mich. 220.

¶ 574. A verdict should not be directed for the plaintiff in an action to recover rent, where the testimony is conflicting as to whether there had been an eviction.—Bamlet Realty Co. v. Doff, 183 Mich. 694.

B. SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS TO OUST TENANT AND RECOVER POSSESSION.

§ 158. In general.

Necessity of notice or proceedings for reentry for breach of covenant, see post § 171.

Proceedings where lease provides that lessor may terminate without notice, see post ¶ 621.

Expulsion of licensee, see post § 180.

Summary proceedings to put landlord in possession, see Forcible Entry.

Forcible entry and detainer proceedings or summary proceedings by lessor against lessee or by tenant against landlord, see Forcible Entry.

Right of sublessors to forcible entry or summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry, I.

Necessity that rent be earned and due before summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 9.

Propriety of summary proceedings by evicted or excluded tenant to recover possession, see Forcible Entry § 9.

Issues of title in summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry §§ 36, 37.

Propriety of summary proceeding by lessor against lessee's assignee, see Forcible Entry ¶ 70.

Notice to quit as basis for summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry §§ 10, 11.

Grounds for and maturity of right to summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry and Detainer §§ 9-11.

Ouster of jurisdiction of forcible entry or summary proceedings by raising issue of title, see Forcible Entry § 13.

Right of landlord to maintain ejectment before terminating tenancy, see Ejectment ¶ 61.

Right of landlord to ejectment against tenant after expiration of tenancy, see Ejectment ¶ 30.

Pleadings, procedure, trial and judgment in forcible detainer action or summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry and Detainer, II.

Bill in equity as remedy to obtain possession of premises from tenant, see post ¶ 575.

Actions on appeal bonds in summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 62.
Propriety of handcuffing tenant in executing writ of restitution, see Forcible Entry ¶ 217.
Judgment in summary proceedings as res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication § 13.
Right to pay amount due and avoid restitution, subtenant's right, see Forcible Entry § 64.
Liability for rent under bond for appeal in summary proceedings, see Forcible Entry § 58.
Alternative remedy on appeal bond for damages or in trespass for treble damages, see Forcible Entry § 60.
Presumption of tenancy, see also Forcible Entry ¶ 146.
Estoppel of dowress renting to husband's grantee to eject him while lease endures, see Dower ¶ 156.

C. ON OTHER CAUSES OF ACTION.

§ 159. Remedies and procedure in equity.

Actions against tenants for breach of covenant or condition, see post § 160.
Actions against landlord for breach of duty, see post §§ 161-164.
Actions for rent, see ante V, A.
Liability for treble damages for forcible entry and eviction, see Damages § 208.
Recovery of over-payments of rent made by mistake, see Payment, VI.
Right of lessor to interplead his vendee and the lessee, both claiming possession, see Interpleader ¶ 16.
Injunction to restrain violation to leases, see Injunctions § 30.

¶ 575. A bill in equity is not the appropriate remedy to obtain possession of premises from a tenant holding over after the expiration of a lease, nor to try the title he sets up to maintain his holding, and though in a proper case, in aid of legal proceedings to recover possession, a court of equity might by injunction restrain the tenant from committing irreparable mischief pending the proceedings, it will not take original jurisdiction for such a purpose.—Torrent v. Muskegon Booming Co., 22 Mich. 354.

¶ 576. A bill set out that complainant orally leased his farm to defendant for a certain rental per acre; that defendant failed to pay the rent; that defendant did not farm according to good husbandry; and that defendant has disposed of his personal property in order to avoid the collection of rent. Held, equity had no jurisdiction to decree possession to the lessor as the remedy at law was adequate.—Gault v. Gault, 158 Mich. 303.

¶ 577. Neglect to cultivate a vineyard on a farm will not sustain a bill to cancel a lease on the ground that the lessee had obtained it by the fraudulent representation that he was a skilful farmer in all branches of husbandry. If the lease provides for its termination by notice the lessor has an adequate remedy at law for any actual damages.—Arnold v. Bright, 41 Mich. 207.

¶ 578. Equity has not jurisdiction to decree a forfeiture in favor of parties claiming under an agreement to give a lease and who are out of possession, against one who is in possession under the holders of the legal title.—Grummett v. Gingrass, 77 Mich. 369.

§ 160. Actions against tenant for breach of covenant or condition.

Remedy for breach of implied covenant, see also ante ¶ 63.

¶ 579. In an action for breach of a lease, alleging that the lessee negligently allowed debris to accumulate and be around the premises (a saw mill) and negligently allowed fire to be thrown among such debris and failed to provide a watchman and protect the property, it cannot be urged against the lessor that he was negligent in not protecting the property merely because he knew that fire had once before broken out and was likely to do so again; where there was not yet any termination of the lease and he had no actual knowledge that there was fire smoldering or that it was not watched.—Stevens v. Pantlind, 95 Mich. 145.

¶ 580. Where a certain lease provided that in case of the lessee's default the lessor might re-enter and repossess the premises and deduct from the sum deposited in the lessor's hands as security all sums due the lessor and bring action for and collect all damages sustained by the lessor on account of the breach by the lessee, and that the remedies of the lessor should be cumulative, held, that re-entry and eviction for such default were not a bar to an action to recover damages for such breach of the contract.—Stott Realty Co. v. United Amusement Co., 195 Mich. 684.

§ 161. Actions against landlord for breach of duty.

For keeping tenant out of possession, see post § 162.
For damages for disturbances, eviction or wrongful dispossession, see post § 163.
For fraud or concealment in procuring tenant, see post § 164.

¶ 581. In an action brought by the assignee of a lease against the lessor upon a contract to repair made separate from the lease, a declaration in which the plaintiff claims his rights under such contract by virtue of the assignment of the lease, should not be so strictly construed as to exclude proof that he acquired such rights by a parol transfer.—Keeley Institute Co. of West Michigan v. Shaw, 149 Mich. 519.

¶ 581a. A special declaration on the covenants of a lease suffices without expressly alleging actual ouster by the lessor, where it sets forth facts estopping the lessor to deny that there was one.—Cornelissens v. Driscoll, 89 Mich. 34.

§ 162. ——For keeping tenant out of possession.

¶ 582. Where a landlord refuses possession to a lessee, but exercises no force or intimidation, the remedy of the tenant is either by an action for damages or in ejectment.—Chylowski v. Steinberg, 198 Mich. 547.

¶ 583. In action for damages to a lessee by the refusal of a lessor to let the former into possession of demised premises a request to charge the jury that after the mutual abandonment of an agreement to lease premises, the minds of the parties never met in a new agreement, held covered by the general instructions.—Murdock v. Roe, 186 Mich. 233.

¶ 584. A verdict in favor of the plaintiff in an action for the breach of an agreement to let him into possession of a house, held sustained by the evidence.—Murdock v. Roe, 186 Mich. 233.

¶ 584a. A tender of the rent is unnecessary to permit a recovery by a lessee for the breach of an agreement to rent property, where the owner absolutely refuses to recognize the agreement.—Murdock v. Roe, 186 Mich. 233.

§ 163. ——For damages for disturbance, eviction or wrongful dispossession.

Ouster or eviction by landlord in general, see ante § 72.

¶ 585. Any one who has the right of possession under a lease can sue in an action on the case for disturbance of such right.—Ives v. Williams, 53 Mich. 636.

¶ 586. In an action on the case for the disturbance of rights held under a contract of lease, any one who has rights of possession derived from the lease can sue for their disturbance and recover his actual damages.—Ives v. Williams, 53 Mich. 636.

¶ 587. A tenant in possession of a house and lot may recover in an action of trespass against his landlord who in the tenant's absence and without his consent, enters upon the premises and moves the house and digs a cellar and erects another house on the lot.—Maney v. Lamphere, 139 Mich. 429.

¶ 588. In an action by a tenant against a landlord for wrongful ejectment under Comp. Laws 1897, § 11206, which provides for treble damages, such damages may be recovered for the loss sustained by plaintiff in moving his household goods, but not for his tools and household goods injured or left on the place, or for the deprivation of profits and benefits under the lease.—Carman v. Scott, 172 Mich. 44.

¶ 590. In an action by a tenant for damages for ouster from the leasehold premises the lessor is estopped by deed to purchaser and by notice to the tenant, then not in actual occupancy, of termination of lease from relying upon absence of technical ouster, where he also told the tenant not to resume possession because of such deed and the purchaser excluded him.—Cornelissens v. Driscoll, 89 Mich. 34.

¶ 591. In an action by a tenant against the landlord to recover damages for injury to his business as the result of rendering the premises untenantable in removing the building to a new location where defendant was to occupy it until a new building was erected on the old location, and failing to repair it, where the only evidence as to the loss of profits was a mere summary of his receipts and disbursements, held, that the refusal of defendant's requested instruction that there was no evidence in the case as to the loss of profits and that the jury could not consider that question in reaching their verdict was erroneous.—Kezeli v. River Rouge Lodge, No. 410, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, 195 Mich. 181.

§ 164. ——For fraud or concealment in procuring tenant.

¶ 592. Where the landlord makes false or fraudulent representations as to material facts not obvious to the lessee, or, knowing such facts, of which the lessee is excusably ignorant, and which would seriously impair the value of the lease, conceals them, he may be held liable to the lessee for damages incurred in consequence thereof, in an action for fraud and deceit.—Morton v. Hanes, 162 Mich. 366.

¶ 593. While the tenant, by remaining in possession, waives the right to rescind the lease, he does not waive his claim for damages for the fraud and deceit whereby he was induced to enter into the lease.—Morton v. Hanes, 162 Mich. 366.

VI. SURRENDER AND RE-ENTRY.

§ 165. Surrender in general.
Surrender of tenancy at will, see post § 166.
Surrender by operation of law, see post § 167.
Acceptance of surrender, see post §§ 168, 169.
Re-entry for breach of covenant, see post §§ 170-172.
Peaceable re-entry after notice to quit, see post §§ 173, 174.
Presumptions and evidence of surrender or re-entry, see post § 175.
Questions of law and fact and instructions, see post § 176.

Right of lessee to surrender leased property destroyed or rendered untenantable without his fault or neglect, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 42.

¶ 594. The surrender of a lease must be the mutual and voluntary action of the parties to the lease.—Wray-Austin Machinery Co. v. Flower, 140 Mich. 452.

¶ 595. A voluntary surrender of leased premises to a landlord prior to the expiration of the term by the lessee's assignee in bankruptcy, who is informed by the landlord that he intends to hold the lessee for the rent for the residue of the term, does not, though the landlord afterwards rents the premises to others, amount to an eviction or to a surrender of the term; surrender must be by mutual consent of the parties to the lease.—Stewart v. Sprague, 71 Mich. 50.

¶ 596. Vacating leased premises before the term expires, and offering the key, which is refused, is not a surrender.—Huntington v. Parkhurst, 87 Mich. 38.

¶ 597. Where, after agreeing to surrender a lease, the lessee says to the lessor, "you may consider the ground in your possession this evening," and acting upon that statement the lessor takes possession without hindrance, and keeps it, the surrender is as effective and valid as if the lessee had broken a twig over the land, or made any other symbolical delivery.—Baumier v. Antiau, 65 Mich. 31.

¶ 598. Delivery of the keys of leased premises by the lessee's assignee in bankruptcy to the lessor, who declares that he will hold the lessee's estate liable for the residue of the term, does not, though the lessor subsequently rents the premises to others, amount to a surrender of the term or to an eviction.—Stewart v. Sprague, 76 Mich. 184; same case on former writ of error, 71 Mich. 50.

¶ 599. Where the tenant leaves the premises, and sends the key by a clerk to the landlord, who declines to receive it, and the clerk then hands it to one of the bell-boys at the hotel where the landlord is boarding, and it comes into the landlord's possession, such acts will not constitute a surrender and acceptance of the premises.—Scott v. Beecher, 91 Mich. 590.

¶ 600. If a tenant at will vacates the premises, which he may do at any time, it will be treated as a surrender to the landlord.—Shaw v. Hill, 79 Mich. 86.

¶ 601. The lessee of a building went out of business by joining with others in forming a corporation. The lessor refused to accept the corporation as lessee under the lease but agreed to let it use the premises at the same rental until he could find another tenant and the corporation thereafter used the premises for storage purposes. Held that there was a surrender of the lease by the original lessor and a new contract with the corporation.—Drew v. Billings-Drew Co., 132 Mich. 65.

¶ 603. Under a lease authorizing the lessee to surrender the premises in the event of his being prevented "by reason of any statute or law or authoritative order from using said premises for the purpose of a saloon," the fact that the lessee was unable to secure a tenant as a saloonkeeper who was acceptable to the common council of the city in which the building was located, was held not to authorize a surrender.—Lynch v. Val Blatz Brewing Co., 179 Mich. 355.

¶ 604. A lease of a mill for sawing certain logs which provided that when work was done lessees should restore premises in as good condition as when received, was not terminated when timber was cut and mill shut down, lessees not having removed all their lumber from yard or rubbish from mill which were necessary to put it in the condition in which it was received.—Stevens v. Pantlind, 95 Mich. 145.

§ 166. ——Surrender of tenancy at will.

¶ 605. The relation of general tenancy at will is not terminable by either party without notice to the other; nor can the tenant without justifiable cause abandon the premises and treat such abandonment as a surrender without giving the statutory notice.—Huntington v. Parkhurst, 87 Mich. 38.

§ 167. Surrender by operation of law.

¶ 606. An agent executed a lease to certain parties for his principal. While it was still in force the principal executed an independent lease of the same premises to the agent, who then orally leased them for a smaller rent than before to the original tenants, who continued in possession without change. Held, that the original lease was surrendered by operation of law, and not assigned to the agent, and therefore that he could not claim from the tenants the difference in rent between the two.—Donkersley v. Levy, 38 Mich. 54.

§ 168. Acceptance of surrender.

Estoppel to accept or enforce surrender, see post § 169.

¶ 607. A landlord who receives from his tenant before the expiration of the term a letter stating the vacation of the premises and enclosing the key, is not bound to search out the tenant or serve him with notice that he holds him for rent, but may take possession and diminish as far as possible the tenant's obligation by renting to other parties.—Joslin v. McLean, 99 Mich. 480.

¶ 608. Where a telegraph company, having leased space in a hotel and built a railing around it, abandons its lease, and takes down the railing, it cannot be inferred that the lessor has accepted the attempted termination of the lease from the fact that it uses thereafter the space abandoned, along with the remaining portion of the lobby.—Chittenden v. Western U. Tel. Co., 154 Mich. 1.

§ 169. ——Estoppel to accept or enforce surrender.

Estoppel in general, see Estoppel.

¶ 609. Failure for some weeks to enforce a contingent arrangement for surrender of farming premises at planting time will estop owner from showing such arrangement and recovering possession.—Pickard v. Kleis, 56 Mich. 604.

§ 170. Re-entry for breach of covenant.

Necessity of notice or proceedings, see post § 171.

Right to seize crops for breach of farm lease, see post § 172.

Peaceable re-entry after notice to quit, see post §§ 173, 174.

Moving or assuming dominion of tenant's goods on retaking possession as a conversion, see Conversion ¶ 15.

¶ 610. Where a lease does not provide for re-entry on breach of condition, and there is no agreement that a failure to perform shall operate as a forfeiture or termination of the lease, the tenant cannot for such cause be said to "hold over" contrary to the terms of the lease.—Pickard v. Kleis, 56 Mich. 604.

¶ 611. The re-entry clause in a lease provided for its termination if the tenant holds over contrary to the conditions or covenants thereof. Held, that this referred to such conditions and covenants as were in the nature of limitations, and not to the lessee's mere agreement to do certain things.—Langley v. Ross, 55 Mich. 163.

¶ 612. The erasure of a re-entry clause in a lease divests the landlord of the statutory remedy (How. St. § 8295) for recovering possession on the tenant's default in paying rent, because no terms of limitation are left in the lease, and the covenants are no longer linked with a condition.—Langley v. Ross, 55 Mich. 163.

¶ 613. In a farm lease in the absence of express covenants as to husbandry, a clause in regard to re-entry for conditions broken does not apply to the implied covenants.—Somers v. Loose, 127 Mich. 77.

¶ 614. Where plaintiff as lessor peaceably re-entered upon an evicted defendant as sublessee from the leased premises after defendant had been in default as to certain provisions of the lease for more than thirty days, and the lease provided that the lessor might in case of default in any of its provisions for thirty days re-enter and repossess the premises and remove and put out the lessee, and that the lessee expressly waived demand for possession, such re-entry and eviction by plaintiff held lawful.—Scott Realty Co. v. United Amusement Co., 195 Mich. 684.

¶ 615. Where the agreed mode of declaring a lessor's election to forfeit the lease is by re-entry and taking possession, he has the right, and it is his duty, in the first instance to resort to it; and if prevented from so doing he may adopt any other lawful mode to obtain possession.—Pendill v. Union Min. Co., 64 Mich. 172.

¶ 616. A provision and a contract of lease that the lessee shall not sell any produce without the consent of the landlord is a covenant within the meaning of a clause of re-entry on breach of covenants.—Vincent v. Crane, 134 Mich. 700.

¶ 617. Where a farm lease provided for a letting upon shares and that the lessee should work the farm in a good and husband-like manner and should he fail to do so then the lessor reserved the right to do it or cause it to be done and the cost thereof should be deducted from the lessee's share, the forfeiture and re-entry clauses being stricken out of the printed blank used in preparing the lease, the right of the tenant to remain in possession during the term of his lease does not depend upon the manner of performance of his agreement as to working the farm, and the lessor could not upon the failure to observe the covenants and conditions re-enter.—Nanaw v. Bailey, 83 Mich. 24.

¶ 618. A three years' lease of a farm stipulated that if the land were sold for a certain sum the tenant should immediately surrender possession on being reimbursed for his labor and crops; it further provided that if the landlord did not return to his farm to occupy it himself the tenant was to have the privilege of continuing to farm the premises as heretofore. Held, that in summary proceedings to recover possession for violation of the provisions of the lease the return of the landlord was properly treated as on the same footing as a sale to a third person, and that on coming in at the end of the second year after three months' notice, and offering to pay for labor and crops, the landlord had a right to resume possession.—Lord v. Walker, 49 Mich. 606.

¶ 619. In a farm lease where the land is unoccupied a denial by the landlord of the tenant's right to harvest the crop does not show that the landlord has taken possession.—Somers v. Loose, 127 Mich. 77.

§ 171. ——Necessity of notice or proceedings.

Summary proceedings to oust tenant, see ante V, B.

¶ 620. Where a lease is forfeited for nonperformance of its conditions, no notice of re-entry or of intention to re-enter is necessary.—Pendill v. Union Min. Co., 64 Mich. 172.

¶ 621. Though a lease gives the lessor the right to terminate it without notice, yet if proceedings to gain possession are necessary they must be taken by the statutory summary method or by action of ejectment.—Pendill v. Union Min. Co., 64 Mich. 172.

¶ 622. A lease of a billiard-room provided that, in case of the violation of conditions, the lessor might re-enter, have again, retain, repossess, etc. Held, that absolute notice to quit and demand of possession, made at such a time and place that if complied with possession would be at once secured, constituted a sufficient re-entry.—Alexander v. Hodges, 41 Mich. 691.

§ 172. ——Right to seize crops for breach of farm lease.

See also ante ¶ 618.

Construction and operation of covenants in general, see ante § 16.

Lease reserving share of produce as basis of rental, see ante § 142.

¶ 623. A farm lease on shares providing that in the event of failure of the lessees in the performance of any of the conditions of such lease, the lessor might peaceably re-enter and take possession "of the premises and property hereby rented, without any formal proceedings," was construed as giving the lessor merely the right of re-entry and possession of the stock and farming implements in case the lessee failed to work the farm properly, and not to authorize the seizure of crops for such breach.—Koeleg v. Phelps, 80 Mich. 466.

§ 173. Peaceable re-entry after notice to quit.

Re-entry for breach of covenant, see ante §§ 170-172.

Waiver of notice and demand, see post § 174.

¶ 624. A tenant's right to possession of leased premises terminates upon his failure to pay the rent due within the seven days' notice to quit provided for by How. St. § 5774, and the landlord may then exercise his common-law right peaceably to re-enter and take possession to the exclusion of the tenant; and such right is in no way abridged by the summary procedure provided by section 8295, for recovery of land withheld by a tenant.—Smith v. Detroit Loan & Building Ass'n, 115 Mich. 340.

¶ 625. The party entitled to the possession of property may take it in any manner that does not involve a breach of the peace, and How. St. § 8295, making a demand for payment of rent a condition precedent to re-entry, does not take away this right.—Pendill v. Union Min. Co., 64 Mich. 172.

¶ 626. Where a landlord, by notice to quit, terminates a tenancy for nonpayment of rent, and afterwards, during the tenant's temporary absence, gains possession of the premises and removes the tenant's goods, he is not liable to the latter for injuries inflicted by his agents in repelling the efforts of the tenant to regain possession, unless more force was used than was necessary to accomplish the result.—Smith v. Detroit Loan & Building Ass'n, 115 Mich. 340.

¶ 627. A landlord did not forfeit his right of re-entry for nonpayment of the rent by resorting to artifice whereby he gained peaceably possession of the leased premises, having induced his tenant and his family to leave home, since if such tenant had remained at home at the time of such re-entry, it would have been his duty to deliver possession on demand of his landlord's agents; so held in trespass quare clausum fregit by such tenant against such landlord, where it appears that after such peaceful re-entry such tenant was denied possession with a show of force.—Cockerline v. Fisher, 140 Mich. 95.

§ 174. ——Waiver of notice and demand.

¶ 628. At common law and by statute a demand for the rent or royalty due is necessary before the lessor can re-enter, but such demand can be waived by the parties.—Pendill v. Union Min. Co., 64 Mich. 172.

§ 175. Presumptions and evidence of surrender or re-entry.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Rebuttal of evidence as to collusion to procure surrender, see also Evidence ¶ 442.

¶ 629. If a tenant at will abandons the premises, it will be presumed that he abandoned the possession to the landlord as a surrender.—Shaw v. Hill, 79 Mich. 86.

¶ 630. The abandonment or surrender by a lessee of his interest under a lease cannot be inferred from a mere nonuser.—Doty v. Gillett, 43 Mich. 203.

¶ 631. A surrender of leased premises before the expiration of the term by the tenant is not made out by evidence of her statements to the landlord that she would vacate on a future date, by similar statements to a prospective tenant, and by permitting her to place some furniture and household goods on the premises. This is at most merely a promise to surrender and not enforceable by summary proceedings for possession.—Fish v. Thompson, 129 Mich. 313.

¶ 632. In an action to recover rent, where the defense set up is that the tenants surrendered and abandoned the lease and premises with the landlord's assent, evidence of the occupancy of the premises or a part of them by third parties, of the delivery of the key to the landlord, and of negotiations between the landlord and third parties for a new lease, is competent upon the question of surrender in fact.—Hill v. Robinson, 23 Mich. 24.

¶ 633. In an action to recover damages for a breach of a covenant in a lease the trial court erred in finding as a matter of law, upon plaintiff's testimony presented, that the defendants had surrendered possession of the mill leased of the plaintiff prior to its destruction by fire, and that its care had been assumed by the plaintiff, where after presenting certain testimony plaintiff's counsel was interrupted by the court and asked to explain how he expected to recover on this evidence so far presented, when he had not rested his case and made certain offers to make proofs of which the court refused to receive testimony, and in his offers he had advanced no theory inconsistent with the case set forth in his declaration, his contention being that the defendants were still in possession when the fire occurred and that the lessee's agent had no authority to surrender possession, and that plaintiff had refused to accept a part of the premises.—Stevens v. Pantlind, 87 Mich. 476.

¶ 634. The payment of rent in full on the last day of the term, and on the day following, the landlord's declaring the lease to have expired, that the property was his, and he wanted it, and that he (the tenant) must get out that day, to which the tenant responded tnat "even so, we want some time to get a place. If it is impossible to get out we cannot, but if it is possible of course we will get out," are evidence of a surrender by the tenant.—Gillespie v. Beecher, 85 Mich. 347.

¶ 635. A finding of a surrender to the landlord is supported by evidence of the payment of a final month's rent and the delivery of the key to a daughter of the owner, then the landlord, and evidence that the daughter always attended to all things about the renting and collecting of rents.—Foster v. Fleishans, 69 Mich. 543.

¶ 636. Under an agreement made between a landlord and his tenant after the latter had quit upon the expiration of a 30 days' notice of intention to quit, to the effect that no further claim for rent should be made after the commencement of the term of a new tenant who might be procured, but that neither of the parties should waive any rights by the making of the agreement, the landlord was entitled to recover for the period between said quitting and the commencement of the term of the new tenant, and the acceptance of the key by the landlord was no evidence of his intention to agree to a surrender of the term.—Steketee v. Pratt, 122 Mich. 80.

¶ 637. A forfeiture of a lease and taking possession by the landlord is not shown by testimony that the landlord told the tenant "he couldn't have" the crop of hay and wheat growing thereon.—Somers v. Loose, 127 Mich. 77.

¶ 638. Where the sole possession of leased property is evidenced by fences and under the terms of the lease, the lessee is entitled to possession and has put in crops, the mere fact that the landlord has repaired the fences is not sufficient to justify the conclusion that he has retaken possession.—Somers v. Loose, 127 Mich. 77.

§ 176. Questions of law and fact and instructions.

¶ 639. Under a contract of lease requiring the tenant to keep the premises in as good repair as when taken, it is erroneous to instruct in an action for possession for breach of covenant that the defendant is required to use the care exercised by the ordinary prudent farmer in keeping the buildings in repair.—Vincent v. Crane, 134 Mich. 700.

¶ 640. Whether under the circumstance of the case, a tenant availed himself within a reasonable time of the permission of his landlord to leave demised premises before the expiration of his term, is a question for the jury.—Bamlet Realty Co. v. Doff, 183 Mich. 694.

¶ 641. A lessee, in violation of his covenant not to assign the lease or sublet the leased premises without the written consent of the lessor, assigned the lease. The assignee made a second assignment, and, at the request of the lessee, the lessor consented to the occupancy of the premises by the second assignee, coupled with the statement that she should look to the lessee for the rent. The second assignee arranged to sell his interest in the lease, and the proposed purchaser and the lessee, the latter representing the second assignee, called upon the lessor, who, as she testified in an action brought by her against said proposed purchaser to recover rent subsequently accruing, made an oral lease of the premises to him, while he testified that she consented to his occupancy, but told the lessee that she should look to him for the rent. The lessee testified that the lessor said she was satisfied to let the proposed purchaser take the place of the second assignee so long as he paid the rent, and, if not paid by him, she should look to the lessee for it. The second assignee thereupon surrendered the premises to the proposed purchaser. Held, that these negotiations and circumstances may have amounted to a surrender of the term, and a leasing to the proposed purchaser, which questions were properly submitted to the jury.—Youell v. Kridler, 105 Mich. 344.

¶ 642. It is error encroaching on a jury question to charge that a lessor's entry was quiet and peaceable and that he did not break and enter, where the tenant was a farmer on shares who did not live on the land and the lessor moved on it during the season and excluded the tenant.—McClure v. Thorpe, 68 Mich. 33.

¶ 644. Plaintiff and her husband were in possession of a house on the farm where the husband was at work, and, on the same day on which a notice to leave the premises was served on the husband, the wife and sons of the owner of the farm came to the house in the absence of plaintiff's husband, and, after informing her that she must move out at once, commenced taking the furniture out of the room where she was into an old kitchen, and told her to pack her clothes, shortly after which her husband came, and took her away. Plaintiff sued the wife and sons in trespass, claiming that she was driven from the house by defendants, and that the time for which her husband had taken the premises had not expired. The defense was that the hiring was only for one month, and that the time had expired. The court left this latter question of fact to the jury, and instructed them that, if they found that the hiring had not terminated at the time of defendants' entry, they should take into consideration what took place in the house on that day; that the mere entry into the house by defendants, under the circumstances, would not give plaintiff a right of action, even if the lease had not terminated, and, if plaintiff recovered, it must be for an injury to herself; and that the jury, in order to find a verdict for plaintiff, must find that the conduct of defendants amounted to an eviction. Held, that the charge properly stated the law.—Brown v. McKimmie, 102 Mich. 35.

VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES TOWARDS THIRD PERSONS.

§ 177. Duty of landlord towards third persons.

Nuisance or injury during tenant's exclusive occupancy, see post § 178.

Liability for injuries to pedestrians caused by defective walls, see Highways § 258.

General duty and negligence towards third persons with respect to conditions in buildings, see Buildings.

General duty and negligence towards persons in adjoining streets with respect to dangers coming from buildings, see Highways, XII, G.

¶ 645. For the protection of persons lawfully using an area way in entering his building, it is incumbent on a landlord to make a proper inspection of said area way.—In re Sullivan's Estate, 165 Mich. 585; Staniszewski v. Lane, Id.

¶ 646. In a suit for personal injuries due to the alleged negligence of a landlord in failing to inspect and keep up an area way in his building, it is error for the trial court to instruct the jury that in determining the question of defendant's negligence they may consider whether or not defendant failed to comply with a course of inspection customary among landlords in the community.—In re Sullivan's Estate, 165 Mich. 585; Staniszewski v. Lane, Id.

¶ 647. A landlord held liable for an injury to a one-year-old grandchild of a tenant, which was temporarily staying with him, caused by the falling of an insecurely fastened post supporting a porch used in common by the several tenants, though the grandfather of the child had stated, when he rented the premises, that the youngest member of his family was ten years of age, and was told by the landlord that he did not want to rent to parties having small children.—Butler v. Watson, 193 Mich. 322, 16 N. C. C. A. 1013.

§ 178. ——Nuisance or injury during tenant's exclusive occupancy.

¶ 649. As between landlord and tenant the tenant is presumptively liable for a nuisance on the premises unless the lease contemplated its continuance, in which case both would be liable.—Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164.

¶ 650. The tenant, and not the landlord, is liable for nuisances originating and kept up during the tenant's exclusive occupancy, unless the landlord is shown to be responsible for repairs. So held where the nuisance consisted in overflowing a neighbor's cellar by means of leaky and defective supply and water pipes.—Harris v. Cohen, 50 Mich. 324.

¶ 651. The owner of premises is not required at his peril to inspect them and prevent his tenant from creating and maintaining a nuisance upon the sidewalk in front of said premises.—Maclam v. Hallam, 165 Mich. 686.

¶ 652. Where a tenant has exclusive control over a freight elevator which is operated by his own employee subject only to the occasional use by tenants on lower floors, the landlord is not liable for the death of a person who is killed while delivering freight to the tenant because of the negligent operation of the elevator.—Sikora v. Fellowcraft Club, 189 Mich. 235.

¶ 653. The owner of premises who has leased them to a tenant without covenanting to keep them in repair is not liable to a third party who is injured by reason of their being out of repair while they are in the tenant's control, if the defect complained of did not exist at the time they were leased.—Johnson v. McMillan, 69 Mich. 36.

¶ 654. Where a tenant of a building permits crates to be piled on a sidewalk, by reason of the presence of which a plaintiff suffers personal injuries, the landlord is not liable at common law, although the crates remained so piled for so long a time as to give the landlord knowledge of their presence.—Maclam v. Hallam, 165 Mich. 686.

§ 179. ——Effect of covenant imposing duty to repair.

Covenants to repair in general, see ante IV, C.

¶ 655. The duty of landlord to keep portions of premises, used by his tenants in common and not rented to any one tenant, in safe condition for the use of all persons entitled to use them, does not rest upon any covenant to repair.—Butler v. Watson, 193 Mich 322, 16 N. C. C. A. 1013.

¶ 656. A licensee of a tenant, who was injured through the defective condition of the premises in question, had no right of action against the landlord, by reason of his covenant to repair.—Brady v. Klein, 133 Mich. 422.

¶ 657. A landlord was not liable by reason of his covenant to repair, for an injury sustained by his tenant's child through falling into a hole in a door sill, which was in existence at the time of renting the premises in question.—Brady v. Klein, 133 Mich. 422.

¶ 658. Where an accident arises from a defect known by the tenant and one which was not a nuisance, the remedy against the landlord is upon his covenant and must be brought by the tenant, there being no privity between the landlord and a third party who was injured on the premises, nor did he owe such party any duty; but the rule is otherwise in case of a nuisance.—Brady v. Klein, 133 Mich. 422.

§ 180. ——Expulsion of licensee.

Rights of licensee in general, see Licenses to Enter.

¶ 659. Plaintiff took sick with a contagious disease while visiting with her son-in-law, the janitor of an apartment building, living in rooms in the same supplied by the landlord. Upon complaint of the other tenants, defendant, the landlord, ordered plaintiff to leave, and threatened to have an officer put her out. Plaintiff left while sick, and sued for damages. Held, the defendant owed no legal duty under the circumstances to permit plaintiff to remain, and was not liable, since he acted to protect his tenants. —Tucker v. Burt, 152 Mich. 68.

§ 181. ——Property on demised premises belonging to third persons.

¶ 661. A lease of a hotel covenanted that new furniture added by the lessees should be included in the inventory to be made up when the lease expired, and accounted for accordingly, and that the lessor should have the right to take possession of it. Held, that this covenant could not cover furniture belonging to a third person but allowed by the lessee to be placed on the premises.—Beecher v. Bartlett, 42 Mich. 60.

§ 182. Rights of landlord against third persons.

Rights of landlord against tenants, see ante IV.

Evidence of tenancy to defeat adverse possession, see Adverse Possession § 48.

Right of landlord to action for trespass under void condemnation proceedings where tenant is in actual occupancy, see Eminent Domain ¶ 494.

¶ 662. An action in case will lie for damages sustained by a landlord through the burning of a blacksmith shop and adjoining buildings caused by a fire started in the forge by a trespasser.—Wyant v. Crouse, 127 Mich. 158.

§ 183. Rights and liabilities of tenants towards third persons.

Towards other tenants or successors in leasehold, see post § 184.

Duty of landlord towards third persons, see ante §§ 177-181.

Rights and liabilities of tenants towards landlords, see ante IV.

Liability of tenant for nuisance on leased premises, see also ante ¶¶ 649, 650.

Right of lessee to receive notice of condemnation proceedings for drains, see Drains § 29, ¶ 105.

Party entitled to choose place for way of necessity for tenant, see Easements § 16.

Right of lessee who builds dwelling on leased land and occupies same to claim homestead exemption, see Homesteads § 7, ¶ 15.

¶ 663. So far as regards any injury by third persons to the use of land during a term of lease, no distinction exists between the rights of tenants for years or other terms and those of owners of the fee in possession. A term for years is as clearly property as ownership in fee, and just as much entitled to the protection of the law.—Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 Mich. 308.

§ 184. ——Towards other tenants or successors in leasehold.

Lessee as bailee of property held over term, see Bailments ¶ 5.

¶ 664. A tenant in control of and using an artificial water supply under pressure in the upper stories of a building while not an insurer is bound to use a high degree of care proportionate to the known danger, in order to prevent injury to the occupants of the lower floors.—Waidelich v. Andros, 182 Mich. 374.

¶ 665. A prima facie case is shown by evidence that the plaintiff tenant suffered damage from the overflow of a water closet in the control of the defendant tenant on the upper floor of a building, under circumstances tending to indicate that it was caused by the negligence of the defendant. —Waidelich v. Andros, 182 Mich. 374.

¶ 666. The evidence of the upper tenant's negligence need not be direct and positive in order to make a prima facie case of injury sustained by the overflow of a water closet under his control on the upper floor of a building, since injury from such an unusual occurrence indicates negligence.—Waidelich v. Andros, 182 Mich. 374.

¶ 667. A former tenant of a farm who claimed the right to a crop of grass which he had seeded on the land but whose right thereto was disputed by the present tenant who was in possession, had no right to enter upon the land and forcibly obstruct the tenant in cutting the grass. (Comp. L. 1897, § 11153.)—Byers v. Anderson, 143 Mich. 178.

Statutes defining larceny and the various statutory thefts, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 257, entitled "Offenses Against Property." See sections 15295-15300 for statutes defining the punishments with respect to the manner, circumstances, and property value of the goods taken. For statutory larcenies, see also sections 15229, 15319, 15339, 15350, 15389, 15398, 15407, 15409, 15411.

¶ 1. The fact that moneys wrongfully appropriated by a bookkeeper and assistant cashier first went into the cash drawer of his employer does not make the offense larceny, rather than embezzlement.—People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 479.

§ 2. Subjects of larceny.

Taking one's own chattel from another's possession as larceny, see post § 4.
Attempt to steal as affected by nonexistence of thing coveted, see post ¶ 32.
Describing property and ownership in indictment or information, see post § 9.
Instructions as to subjects and value, see post § 15.

¶ 2. In order to amount to larceny at common law it is necessary that the thing stolen be of some value, however small.—People v. Grimm, 182 Mich. 643.

¶ 3. By "value" is meant not what the thing is worth to the owner, but the price that it would bring in open market.—People v. Gilbert, 163 Mich. 511.

¶ 4. Though, like bonds, certificates of stock or paper money, the intrinsic value of a promissory note is insignificant, it has real value in the right of property which it represents, and is itself property which may be the subject of larceny.—People v. Gregg, 170 Mich. 168.

¶ 5. Stealing beer was punishable even while the prohibitory liquor law was in force.—Kreiter v. Nichols, 28 Mich. 496.

¶ 6. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11563, providing that "every person who shall commit the offense of larceny by stealing, of the property of another, any money, goods or chattels," etc., a dog may be the subject of larceny.—Rockwell v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 133 Mich. 11.

¶ 7. A promissory note may be the subject of larceny by the maker from the holder, since it has the quality of property notwithstanding its value lies in the fact that it evidences the debt which remains unaffected.—People v. Gregg, 170 Mich. 168.

¶ 8. Where money alleged to be the subject of a larceny is mingled with that of a person other than the one named in the information, the title to it remaining unchanged, it is not necessary that it should be distinguishable to authorize a conviction.—People v. Williams, 24 Mich. 156.

§ 3. Intent.

In larceny by bailee, see post § 7.
Drunken incapacity for specific intent to steal as defense, see Crimes ¶ 68.
Evidence of intent, see post §§ 12, 13.
Intent as jury question, see post § 14.
Instructions on intent, see post § 15.

¶ 9. The felonious intent is essential to larceny; and one who in good faith takes another's property under a claim of right to do so, or of title in himself, is exempt from the charge of larceny.—People v. Hillhouse, 80 Mich. 580.

¶ 10. There can be no larceny where it appears that respondent at one time owned the article—a sewing-machine—alleged to have been stolen; that he claimed it as exempt property; that it was sold on execution against him, and that under the advice of counsel he peaceably took it away from a person who held it under the execution purchaser, telling such person by what right he claimed it, and giving a receipt for it, stating his name and residence. Testimony to such facts is admissible in defense.—People v. Schultz, 71 Mich. 315.

¶ 11. A conviction of larceny will be reversed because of the absence of felonious intent, where the assignee of a contract for the purchase of an organ with right to retake possession upon default, takes possession of the organ under the belief that a default exists, though the jury found that the contract had been fully paid up.—People v. Walburn, 132 Mich. 24.

¶ 12. Where one enters a corn crib and chicken coop with one left by the owner in charge of such buildings, and takes certain property therefrom, he is guilty of neither burglary nor larceny, in case he has good reason to believe that the caretaker has charge of the property, and can dispose of it as he pleases.—People v. Evans, 150 Mich. 443.

¶ 13. One cannot rely upon the advice of counsel to show that he has acted in good faith in taking a chattel under claim of right unless he also shows that he has followed the advice.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249.

§ 4. Wrongful taking by owner from rightful possessor.

Larceny by bailee of goods in his possession, see post § 7.

¶ 14. It is larceny for the owner of property to remove it clandestinely from the rightful possession of one who has a valid lien upon it.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249.

§ 5. Taking by trick or pretense.

Taking under bona fide claim of right, see ante § 3.

Misappropriation by one in lawful keeping of another's money or property but without any taking, when regarded as embezzlement, see Crimes, II.

¶ 15. Larceny covers the taking of money by confederates on a sham bet contrived by them to defraud a person who advances the money for the bet, and takes part in the transaction.—People v. Shaw, 57 Mich. 403.

¶ 16. Fraud in obtaining possession of money may supply the place of a trespass in taking it, so as to make the conversion of it felonious.—People v. Shaw, 57 Mich. 403.

§ 6. Statutory and specific larcenies.

Requisites and sufficiency of indictments or informations, see post § 10.

Embezzlements and cheats and obtaining money or property by false pretenses, see Crimes, II.

Statutes defining various specific larcenies, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 257, §§ 15229, 15319, 15339, 15350, 15389, 15398, 15407, 15409, 15411.

¶ 17. It does not change the nature of larceny from the person that the person plundered was asleep.—Hall v. People, 39 Mich. 717.

¶ 18. Whether taking merchandise away from the door of a store clandestinely is not a larceny from the store itself, and therefore a compound larceny under How. St., § 9137, quære.—People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506.

¶ 19. Under statute, one who, having committed larceny in another of the United States, brings the stolen property into this state, may here be found guilty of larceny and punished.—People v. Williams, 24 Mich. 156.

¶ 20. Money is "property" within the meaning of Comp. L. 1857, § 5797, How. St., § 9177, punishing persons in the possession of stolen property in this state, having stolen the same in another state.—People v. Williams, 24 Mich. 156.

¶ 21. Whether one who, after committing larceny in a foreign country brings the stolen property into this state, may, under statute, be prosecuted in this state for the larceny, quære.—Morissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327.

¶ 22. A furnished room in the basement of a building, the upper part of which was used in the day time by several persons for offices, was occupied at night by one of those persons, he having no other abiding place. Held, that the building was a dwelling-house within the meaning of How. St., § 9137; a single man may have a dwelling.—People v. Horrigan, 68 Mich. 491.

¶ 23. How. St., § 9180 (Laws 1877, Act No. 102), is aimed at preventing such horse-stealing as should be done in this state, and disturb peace of the state while the general statutes punish the receiver of property stolen beyond the state as well as any other.—In re Franklin, 77 Mich. 615.

¶ 24. How. St., § 9180, imposing heavier penalty for horse-stealing than for larceny of other property of same value, is valid.—People v. Morris, 80 Mich. 634.

§ 7. Larceny by bailee.

Larceny by cashier from cash drawer, see also ante ¶ 1.

¶ 25. Under 1 Laws 1875, p. 195, How. St., § 9156, which makes him guilty of larceny who converts to his own use property that has been delivered to him, it is a sufficient delivery of baggage to give him the checks for it.—People v. Husband, 36 Mich. 306.

¶ 26. The fact that a hotelkeeper, to whom checks for baggage have been delivered by a guest, would have a lien upon the baggage for the bill of such guest, would give him no authority to dispose of the property as his own, and would not justify his conversion of the same to his own use, or of itself preclude his being held for larceny under 1 Laws 1875, p. 195, How. St., § 9156, on the ground that he was a bailee with special property in the goods.—People v. Husband, 36 Mich. 306.

¶ 27. A man got a horse belonging to another from the latter's minor son and claimed to have exchanged another horse for it. On demand he refused to give it up and afterwards secreted it. Held, that as it was found his intention in taking it was felonious he was properly convicted of stealing it.—People v. Camp, 56 Mich. 548.

¶ 28. The recapture by a mortgagee of a mortgaged horse replevied from him by an adverse claimant is not of itself larceny; and if it is shown that the mortgagee found the horse running at large in the highway, and supposed that plaintiff in replevin allowed him to run and had thus given up possession of the animal, he cannot be convicted.—People v. Hillhouse, 80 Mich. 580.

¶ 29. Where A. entrusts B. with money to be used in buying a bicycle for A., who does not intend to give B. the title to the money, whereas B. intends at the time to convert such money to her own use, and to deprive A. of it, which she does, B. is guilty of larceny.—People v. Martin, 116 Mich. 446.

¶ 30. Where, in a prosecution for larceny, it appears that respondent's possession of the property was lawful in the first instance, his mere refusal to deliver it to the owner on demand will not warrant a conviction.—People v. Taugher, 102 Mich. 598.

¶ 31. There is no delivery of money under Comp. L. 1915, § 15315, providing that any person to whom any money of another is delivered shall embezzle or fraudulently convert to his own use, or secrete it with intent to embezzle or fraudulently use it, or any part thereof, shall be deemed guilty of larceny, where a purchaser of land makes a payment on the contract to the executor of the vendor.—People v. Day, 200 Mich. 636.

§ 8. Attempts.

¶ 32. The fact that there was nothing to take is no defense to a prosecution for an attempt to commit a larceny from the person.—People v. Jones, 46 Mich. 441.

II. PROSECUTION, TRIAL, EVIDENCE AND PUNISHMENT.

Mode of pleading value of articles taken at one time, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15754.
Jurisdiction of justice courts, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15769.

¶ 33. An information for larceny must allege the ownership of the goods taken.—People v. Stewart, 44 Mich. 484.

¶ 34. The word "chattels" in an indictment under How. St., § 9140, which provides for the punishment of larceny by stealing the property of another, any bank note, bank bill, etc., denotes property and ownership, and an allegation that bank bills were the goods and chattels of a person named is a sufficient averment that they were his property.—People v. Kent, 1 D. 42.

¶ 35. Picking a pocket or appropriating a dropped pocketbook needs no description in an information for larceny different from that employed in other cases of stealing.—People v. Long, 44 Mich. 296.

¶ 36. An information for the larceny of money ought, if drawn according to common-law rules, to contain either a statement of the kind, denomination and number of the pieces, notes or bills claimed to have been stolen, or an allegation of some excuse for the omission of such statement.—Merwin v. People, 26 Mich. 298.

¶ 37. While our statutes gauge the punishment for larceny according to the value of the property stolen, the value is "of the essence of the offense," and an omission of statement of it in the information is not excused by Comp. L. 1857, § 6054, and it is generally unsafe to omit such a statement unless clearly dispensed with by statute, except, perhaps, in case of the larceny of money specifically described as of some of the particular kinds the value of which is expressly prescribed by act of congress.—Merwin v. People, 26 Mich. 298.

¶ 38. An indictment for the larceny of "fifty dollars in money, of the value of fifty dollars," would not, at common law, have been good in this general form without alleging the grand jury's inability to describe the money more specifically, and then only on proof of larceny of coin or legal tender of the country. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 7930, How. St., § 9541, an information for the larceny of "fifty dollars in money" is held sufficient where the larceny is of coin or bank notes, or of what is generally used and recognized as money. Whether such a general charge would warrant proof of larceny of promissory notes, or bills of exchange generally, or of the notes of private parties, quære.—Brown v. People, 29 Mich. 232.

¶ 39. An information for larceny which describes the property simply as "one hundred and thirty-five dollars * * * of the property, goods and chattels of," etc., and without any allegation of its value, or of any excuse for the want of greater particularity, is fatally defective. Whether the theft was of money or of other personal property is left uncertain; if of the former, the information should allege a larceny of "money," even under Comp. L. 1857, § 6055, allowing a general allegation. The defect is not merely formal which under section 6055, is subject to demurrer or motion to quash, but affects the defendant's substantial rights.—Merwin v. People, 26 Mich. 298.

¶ 40. In an indictment under the statute of 1840, p. 42, § 1 (see How. St., § 9140), which provides for the punishment "of larceny, by stealing, of the property of another, any bank note, bank bill," etc., it was held that a description of the property stolen, as bank notes or bank bills merely, was sufficient.—People v. Kent, 1 D. 42.

¶ 40a. Where respondent was arrested, examined and held under a complaint and warrant charging the larceny of a stick pin, he cannot be convicted of larceny of a sum of money, though the information charges both offenses.—Clute v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 139 Mich. 337.

§ 10. ——For specific statutory and qualified larcenies.

¶ 41. Assuming that Comp. L. 1857, § 5797, How St., § 9177, providing for the punishment in Michigan of persons who, having committed a larceny in a foreign country, bring the stolen property into this state, is valid, whether an information under it is sufficient which charges the defendant in the ordinary form with a larceny committed in this state, quære.—Morissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327.

¶ 42. Laws 1877, Act No. 102 (How. St., § 9180), for the prevention and punishment of horse stealing, if valid at all, cannot be made to cover a case of horse stealing unless by the clearest averments, and will not support as an information for horse stealing an information that consists of the ordinary charge of larceny and includes other property besides the horse.—Boody v. People, 43 Mich. 34.

¶ 43. Whether the theft of other property besides a horse can be included in an information based on the special statute imposing an excessive penalty for that offense (How. St., § 9180), quære.—People v. Seller, 58 Mich. 327.

¶ 44. An information charging larceny from a "residence," while on fire, is sufficient compliance with Comp. L. 1897, § 11551 which provides that "every person who shall commit the offense of larceny by stealing in any building that is on fire, shall be punished, etc.," since residence so used is practically synonymous with building.—People v. Klammer, 137 Mich. 399.

Variance of information from examination and commitment, see ante ¶ 40a.

¶ 45. In prosecuting for the larceny of money, proof of the larceny of any single piece or bill of any denomination alleged, and of any value whatever, will sustain the indictment.—Brown v. People, 29 Mich. 232.

§ 12. Admissibility of evidence.

Sufficiency of evidence, see post § 13.
General law of criminal evidence, see Indictment, VIII.
Rules for examination and cross-examination of witnesses, see Examination of Witnesses.
Evidence to identify stolen goods, see also Indictment § 177.
Expert testimony as to value of article, see Indictment ¶ 948.
Evidence of possession of recently stolen goods and inferences from such possession, see Indictment §§ 141, 174.
Possession of stolen goods as evidence of guilt of burglary, robbery, etc., see Indictment § 174.
Acts and declarations as res gestæ of possession of money or property taken, see Indictment § 242.
Evidence as to affluence or impecuniosity before and after crime, see also Indictment § 163.
Evidence of other crimes or larcenies, see Indictment § 165 et seq.
Other larcenies as evincing intent in breaking and entering, see Indictment § 166.
Advice of counsel as to property right as evidence on intent to steal, see also Indictment ¶¶ 868, 869.

¶ 46. Value of stolen property is fixed by rates prevailing at the time and place where the theft was committed, and not in some neighboring city; hence exclusion of evidence of the latter value is proper in larceny.—People v. Cole, 54 Mich. 238.

¶ 47. Where in a trial for larceny of a watch and chain, the complaining witness states that she does not know their value, it is reversible error for the court to permit her to state what their value is to her.—People v. Gilbert, 163 Mich. 511.

¶ 48. Stolen property may be identified by comparison.—People v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397.

¶ 49. Stolen property may be identified by tabs attached thereto which are proved to correspond with like tabs on property in the store from which it was stolen.—Cole v. People, 37 Mich. 544.

¶ 50. In a prosecution for larceny from the person, alleged to have been committed in the presence of others, the jury may properly consider the fact that no one saw the accused near the person of the complaining witness.—Hall v. People, 39 Mich. 717.

¶ 51. Respondent charged with larceny may show, as bearing on his innocence, that he had proposed marriage to a woman who testifies that she asked him for a large loan of money soon after the larceny and that he promised to make it.—People v. Howes, 81 Mich. 396.

§ 13. Sufficiency of evidence.

Sufficiency to make jury question, see post § 14.
Identity of money commingled with other money, see also ante ¶ 8.
Degree and sufficiency of proof required in criminal cases, see Indictment, VIII, C.
Sufficiency of confession as proof of corpus delicti, see Indictment ¶ 1404.
Sufficiency of proof of complicity of accused, see also Indictment ¶ 1386.
Sufficiency of proof of identity of articles, see also Indictment § 319.

¶ 52. There is a tendency to prove one guilty of larceny where it is in evidence that he was found with another's money; that he had a chance to steal it, and that the owner at once accused him of doing so; that he lied about the manner in which he obtained it; that when accused he claimed it as his own, but afterwards admitted it to be the other man's and said that the latter had intrusted it with him for safety; and that he had been seen acting as if trying to pick the other's pocket.—People v. Walker, 38 Mich. 156.

¶ 53. An intent to commit larceny is sufficiently shown by evidence that a bundle of clothing had been collected, belonging to the inmates of the house, and placed outside the door, and that respondent was surprised in the house, and fled to escape arrest.—People v. Curley, 99 Mich. 238.

¶ 54. Evidence of taking and carrying away by respondent of property delivered to him by a boy whom he had sent to obtain it, held sufficient to go to jury on question of intent.—People v. Griswold, 64 Mich. 722.

¶ 55. H. hired the buggy from a liveryman at Saginaw and took respondent driving; then H. became intoxicated, and was arrested; and respondent thereupon drove to Bay City with the buggy, and traded it off for another. On trial for larceny respondent claimed to be a bona fide purchaser for value from H., but there was evidence of admissions made by him shortly after his arrest, tending to show that he and H. had obtained the buggy, and had intended to trade it off. Held, that a conviction was justified.—People v. Dunn, 114 Mich. 355.

¶ 56. The value of the articles stolen need not be directly shown, but may be inferred generally in a prosecution for larceny from the facts in evidence.—People v. Grimm, 182 Mich. 643.

¶ 57. Evidence that the hog stolen was of a certain weight and that an animal of similar size had been sold for thirteen cents per pound, is sufficient evidence of value on a prosecution for larceny.—People v. Grimm, 182 Mich. 643.

¶ 58. Where in a trial for larceny there is no evidence that the articles stolen exceed $25 in value, so as to make the offense grand larceny, except that of complaining witness, to the effect that she valued them personally at $42.50, a conviction for grand larceny cannot be sustained.—People v. Gilbert, 163 Mich. 511.

¶ 59. The fact of the nonconsent of the owner of property alleged to have been stolen to the taking may be proved by any person having knowledge of the facts as well as by such owner or the person having control of the property at the time, or by facts and circumstances which sufficiently satisfy the jury that the taking was felonious.—People v. Jacks, 76 Mich. 218.

¶ 60. A conviction in a case involving the question of intent, e. g., where larceny is charged, cannot be predicated upon the admissions of counsel, and it is error in such case to instruct the jury either that defendant took the property with felonious intent, or that the jury must find him guilty of the offense charged.—People v. Hall, 86 Mich. 132.

¶ 61. On a prosecution for larceny of bonds, there being no contest as to the ownership of the bonds, and no claim that they were taken by authority, it is sufficient for the people to prove that the bonds were taken from the vault where they were kept, without the consent of the surviving member of the firm to which they belonged, or of an executor of one of the deceased partners, who had actual charge of the bonds, it appearing that the other executor, as also a coexecutor with the survivor of the third partner, had nothing to do with the management of the partnership business.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

§ 14. Questions for court and jury.

General law as to court and jury questions in prosecutions for crime, see Indictment, IX, D.

¶ 62. Felonious intent is a question for the jury, to be inferred by them from all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the testimony.—People v. Griffin, 77 Mich. 585.

¶ 63. Held, in a prosecution for larceny in the day time that there was evidence to support the charge that the property was taken in the day time, and the question was one of fact for the jury.—People v. Danenberg, 176 Mich. 337.

¶ 64. The watch which respondent was charged with stealing was shown to be the property of a person from whom respondent admitted receiving it shortly before the death of the owner. It was found on respondent's person, although he had no interest in it, according to his own story, and he deliberately made false statements in regard to it at a time when, if his story was true, he could have had no motive to lie; and there was evidence from which the jury might find that respondent induced a witness to swear falsely in order to acquit him. Held, that the jury was properly left to determine whether larceny had been proved.—People v. Hawksley, 82 Mich. 71.

¶ 65. In a prosecution for larceny the prosecuting witness testified that, while standing with her daughter in front of a store, she felt some one taking her pocketbook from her pocket, and on turning about saw the accused running away; that she followed him with an outcry, and accused him of stealing her pocketbook, and that he was caught and denied it, but thrust upon her another pocketbook, which he said was hers, and forced a ten-dollar bill on her daughter, and ran off. Held, that the trial judge committed no error in refusing to charge that there was no evidence warranting conviction, and in submitting the case to the jury.—People v. Howard, 50 Mich. 390.

¶ 66. Respondent went to a drug store and directed a quart of brandy to be sent, with change for $5, to a certain house in Cass avenue. The druggist sent a boy with the brandy and money, and before the boy reached Cass avenue respondent met him, and told him the place to go was Second street, and before coming to that street he told the boy he would carry the "goods" himself, and thereupon the boy gave respondent the brandy and money, and took from him a worthless paper which he delivered to the druggist. A bottle of brandy of the same description was subsequently found at respondent's room. Held, that such evidence was sufficient to warrant the submission to the jury of the question of felonious intent.—People v. Griswold, 64 Mich. 722.

General law of criminal instructions, see Indictment, IX, E.

Instruction as to burden of proof of taking, see also Indictment ¶ 1921.

Instructions on inferences to be drawn from incriminating possessions, flight, concealment, etc., see Indictment § 431.

¶ 67. There is no necessity for an instruction defining larceny where the evidence shows clearly that the goods were stolen and the defendant does not claim that he was in lawful possession but denies all connection with the transaction.—People v. Carey, 125 Mich. 535.

¶ 68. In a prosecution for larceny for money lost by the prosecuting witness, and found by defendant, instructions that if at the time of finding the money and picking it up, defendant formed and had the intent to convert it to his own use, he is guilty of larceny, but if, having no such intent at that time, he afterwards converted the property to his own use, he is not guilty of larceny, sufficiently state the law.—People v. Coulon, 151 Mich. 200.

¶ 69. Where, on a trial for larceny, there is no testimony tending to show that the property is worth less than $30, it is unnecessary to instruct the jury that stealing property worth less than $25 will not constitute the offense charged.—People v. Harris, 77 Mich. 568.

¶ 70. Where an information for stealing a horse is based on the general statute and makes no reference to How. St. § 9180, the value is material, and the jury should be instructed to ascertain and report the value if their verdict is guilty, in order that the punishment may be determined in passing sentence according to whether it exceeds or is less than $25.—People v. Martin, 91 Mich. 650.

¶ 71. An instruction which in substance informs the jury that respondent is charged with feloniously stealing, taking and carrying away a cow, the property of another, and from his possession, of the value of $50, sufficiently describes and defines the charge made in the information, and states what acts are necessary to be done, and with what intent, to constitute the crime of larceny.—People v. Harris, 77 Mich. 568.

¶ 72. In a prosecution for the larceny of railroad bonds, respondent was held not prejudiced by instructions that the people must prove at least the de facto existence of the railroad company, beyond a reasonable doubt, and that if the jury found the company had completed its road several years before the bonds were issued, and had equipped it with rolling stock, and had during that time actually been doing business as a railroad company, such de facto existence would be established sufficiently.—People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177.

¶ 73. Instructions to the jury that in case they found respondent claimed to have a lien upon the goods, and thought he had a right to pledge the goods by virtue of having such lien, then such claim of right, if made in good faith, would negative an intent to deprive the owner of her goods, are as favorable in this regard to the respondent as he is entitled to demand.—People v. Husband, 36 Mich. 306.

¶ 74. It is error to instruct in a larceny case that, in order for the taking of the property in good faith and under the advice of an attorney to be an excuse, the defendant must have submitted all the facts known to him, and then have acted under such advice in good faith; as in a criminal case, unlike one of malicious prosecution, there is no such limitation upon the defense of good faith as that advice of counsel may not be relied upon unless all the facts are stated to counsel.—People v. Slayton, 123 Mich. 397.

§ 16. Verdict, sentence and punishment.

Averments of value to fix degree of punishment, see ante § 9.

Matters common to all prosecutions, see Crimes, I, E; Indictment, IX, G, XI.

Term and duration of imprisonment, see Crimes § 30 et seq.

Intoxication as mitigating offense, see Crimes § 16.

Satisfaction or reparation to mitigate punishment, see Crimes § 34.

¶ 75. Larceny is not classified here as grand and petty, and as "grand larceny," is not a crime known to our law, and the crime known by that name at the common law might fall within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, it would be doubtful how far a conviction under that name would sustain a sentence for the higher grade of larceny.—Boody v. People, 43 Mich. 34; and see Nelson v. People, 38 Mich. 618.

¶ 3. All persons who have been engaged in, or have been in any way connected with, the publication of libel, are responsible therefor.—Grinnell v. Cable-Nelson Piano Co., 169 Mich. 183.

¶ 4. A father-in-law who publishes and pays for publishing a false and defamatory article concerning his daughter-in-law is liable to her for libel even though the husband indicted and signed the libel, which was in the form of a notice not to give credit to her, and requested his father to publish it.—Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445.

¶ 5. A clergyman could not recover damages resulting from the reading from his pulpit by himself of a letter derogatory of his character, sent by defendant under qualified privilege to church authorities, in an action for a libel consisting of such letter; since the defendants were not responsible for such publication.—Konkle v. Haven, 140 Mich. 472.

¶ 6. Though two or more persons cannot as a general rule be held jointly liable for an oral slander, yet, under circumstances where all are jointly concerned and interested, and participate in the general purpose, such concert and co-operation may be shown, although the false and malicious statements may have been made by one alone.—Chesebro v. Powers, 78 Mich. 472.

¶ 7. A publication imputing a crime is actionable per se.—McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 85 Mich. 453.

¶ 8. An article published in a newspaper charging a person with having committed several crimes, such as burglary, forgery, embezzlement, assault, and other disgraceful and degrading acts is libelous per se.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 9. Language is actionable if, under the circumstances in which it was used, the hearer would reasonably understand that it was intended to impute a crime.—Line v. Spies, 139 Mich. 484.

¶ 10. A publication to the effect that a member of the board of supervisors charged a fellow member during a meeting of the board with being a liar, a thief and a perjurer, and stated that he could prove it, is libelous per se.—Orth v. Featherly, 87 Mich. 315.

§ 4. Imputations of particular acts and misdoings.

¶ 11. A charge of burning one's property to defraud insurers is actionable per se whether one is actually insured or not.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292.

¶ 12. Where two or more persons play at cards in a saloon where liquors and cigars are kept for sale, with the agreement that the one that is defeated at such game shall pay for the liquor or cigars for the party, such playing is within words imputing gambling.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 13. A statement that "if the defendant hadn't gone away we should issue warrants for him" may mean, as charged by the innuendo, that he "had absconded, and had been guilty of some offense for which he was liable to arrest," and if so meant it is actionable.—Ayres v. Toulmin, 74 Mich. 44.

¶ 14. A newspaper article, after stating that P. had murdered a certain girl, said she was known as P.'s woman, and that he had told an alleged confederate that he need have no fears about her murder, and had hired him to steal a sack, which he received (to put the body in); that he had furnished a wagon in which to take her body to the river; that he had intimated to his wife that the girl had been murdered to get rid of her, and that he had confessed adultery to his wife, for which the wife had left him. Held, that these were all libelous charges, for which P. was entitled to damages unless it was proved that he had murdered the girl.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

§ 5. ——Bribery and corruption.

Good faith in imputing bribery, see post ¶ 116.

Notice to warrant evidence of specific acts of bribery, see post ¶ 264.
General law of bribery, see Crimes, II.

¶ 15. It is libelous, if untrue, to state in a published article that a member of the legislature (naming him) accomplished the passage of a particular bill by "keeping open house, with liquors," or that "he did it by the use of boodle."—Randall v. Evening News Assoc., 79 Mich. 266.

¶ 16. A picture, the only meaning of which is to show that the monument of a member of the legislature should show that liquor and money were the source of his success in passing a particular bill, is libelous if not true.—Randall v. Evening News Assoc., 79 Mich. 266.

¶ 17. Where it is charged in an alleged libel that a franchise has been procured by the use of "boodle," the inference is that the persons granting the franchise were, as officials, bribed by money to make the grant.—Boehmer v. Detroit Free Press Co., 94 Mich. 7.

¶ 18. A publication made pending an election, attributing to plaintiff a remark that there was not one of a certain class of voters who could not be bought for a two-dollar bill, and charging plaintiff with being one of a ring's chief heelers, and stating that such remark was indicative as to how the ring expected to carry the coming election, was libelous per se as not only holding plaintiff up to public hatred and contempt, but charging him with the purpose of committing the offense of bribery.—Field v. Magee, 122 Mich. 556.

¶ 19. A published letter being in answer to a published article, and stating that plaintiff had, against the wishes of the writer of the letter, got up a raffle for the benefit of the writer and his family; that the writer had received nothing from the raffle, and that the letter was published so that those who had purchased tickets would get their money back, was not libelous as imputing the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses and the crime of embezzlement.—Brown v. Boynton, 122 Mich. 251.

¶ 20. A charge in substance that the plaintiff had moved furniture from a rented apartment house, had wrongfully collected money from the tenants, and denied doing so, and had left the city with pockets filled with money, is not slanderous per se.—McCloy v. Vaughan, 185 Mich. 189.

¶ 21. To say to another, "You are a swindler," imputes degrading conduct and acts, and is indictable under How. St. § 9315, which provides that any person who shall falsely and maliciously, by word, writing, sign, or otherwise, accuse, attribute or impute to another the commission of any crime, felony, or misdemeanor, or any infamous or degrading act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.—Schultz v. Huebner, 108 Mich. 274.

¶ 22. A letter stating that a designated person is "a liar and a dead beat of the first order, and I would like to sue him to get what he owes me," is libelous per se.—Morgan v. Andrews, 107 Mich. 33.

¶ 23. A publication charging plaintiff, who was the trustee of his father's estate, with having "got away with the property of" his parents and with having left them to starve, is libelous per se.—McDuff v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 84 Mich. 1.

General law of larceny, see Larceny.

¶ 24. Words charging another with the crime of larceny are actionable.—Bell v. Fernald, 71 Mich. 267.

¶ 25. To say of another "He is a thief," is prima facie actionable.—Line v. Spies, 139 Mich. 484.

¶ 26. Publishing words calling plaintiff a thief is actionable per se.—Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115.

¶ 27. A railroad company supplied certain of its agents with a tabulated list of employees who had been discharged, stating in parallel columns the name and occupation of the employee, and under the heading "Why discharged," the reason. Held, where the reason given was "stealing," the statement was libelous, and its issue to agents was a publication.—Bacon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 55 Mich. 224.

¶ 28. The following words were held actionable per se and presumptively malicious: "For some months back I have missed things from my laundry—gentlemen's wear. Jennie [the plaintiff] has stolen them, and I have come to search your house."—Bell v. Fernald, 71 Mich. 267.

¶ 29. The publication of a statement that the party therein named, giving his street and number, has been arrested for theft, is libelous per se.—Davis v. Marxhausen, 86 Mich. 281.

¶ 30. Language imputing larceny to plaintiff, who was a member of an ice company to which also defendant and persons before whom the language was used belonged, was not privileged, although it was defendant's theory that plaintiff had fraudulently taken for his own use ice belonging to his copartners.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 31. To say to another, "You are a liar and a thief," is slanderous and actionable per se if unexplained.—Youngs v. Adams, 113 Mich. 199.

§ 8. ——Forgery.

General law of forgery, see Forgery.

¶ 32. Charging a son with having forged his mother's name to a note means a note susceptible of forgery, and the words are actionable per se.—Beneway v. Thorp, 77 Mich. 181.

Aggravated assault, see also post ¶ 266.
General law as to disorderly conduct and disorderly house, see Crimes, II.

¶ 33. Defendants addressed a petition to a police justice complaining that plaintiff was an obnoxious and peace disturbing neighbor and was quarrelsome and a general nuisance and asked that he be requested to move. Held, the subject-matter was libelous.—Flynn v. Boglarsky, 164 Mich. 513.

¶ 34. To say to a woman in another's hearing, "You are not a decent woman; you do not keep a respectable house," is slanderous per se as imputing the keeping of a bawdy house.—Loranger v. Loranger, 115 Mich. 681.

¶ 35. A newspaper article stating that an assemblage of disreputable citizens had held high carnival at the hall of a certain person is not libelous per se.—Weber v. The Detroit Daily Post, How. N. P. 119.

§ 10. ——Perjury or false swearing.

See also ante ¶ 10; post ¶¶ 265, 268.
Words imputing readiness to commit perjury, see also post ¶ 406.
Sufficiency of declaration, see post § 53.
General law of perjury, see Crimes.

¶ 36. To say of another "he has sworn to a damned lie, and I will put him through for it if it costs me all I am worth," is actionable per se, as the words imply that the party has forsworn himself under circumstances rendering him punishable.—Crone v. Angell, 14 Mich. 340.

¶ 37. If the proceeding is mentioned in which the false swearing is alleged to have taken place, and it is one in which there is no authority to administer an oath, the bystanders must be supposed cognizant of that fact; and to say of another he swore to a lie in such a proceeding would not be actionable per se.—Crone v. Angell, 14 Mich. 340.

¶ 38. To charge one with false swearing and with having been indicted before the grand jury therefor is charging him with the criminal offense of perjury, and is actionable as slander.—Brace v. Brink, 33 Mich. 91.

¶ 39. It is libelous to charge that jurors have perjured themselves in rendering a certain verdict.—Welch v. Tribune Publishing Co., 83 Mich. 661.

¶ 40. A publication alleging that the plaintiff would not hesitate to commit perjury to defend himself from certain charges of political treachery is libelous per se.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

Imputing want of chastity to woman actionable per se, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 12756.

¶ 41. A publication charging a married man with bastardy involves a criminal charge, even though the publisher does not know the man is married.—Park v. Detroit Free Press Co., 72 Mich. 560.

¶ 42. Imputing want of chastity to a woman is actionable per se.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

¶ 43. The publication of an article, without investigation, charging an estimable young woman with the grossest immorality, when a brief investigation would have reached the truth, is libelous.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593.

¶ 44. The words "you damned old bitch" are not slanderous per se as imputing a want of chastity to a woman, when used in an altercation over a matter foreign to such a charge.—Warren v. Ray, 155 Mich. 91.

¶ 45. Words charging that the maternal grandfather of a woman, plaintiff in a slander suit, was "a woman's man" and that plaintiff was "just like him" and that plaintiff's mother was like such grandfather and that plaintiff was no better, are actionable per se as meaning that plaintiff consorted with men of bad repute for immoral purposes.—Derham v. Derham, 123 Mich. 451.

¶ 46. Respondent imputed a want of chastity to the complaining witness, an unmarried woman, by charging that her employer had got himself into a nice scrape; that he had borrowed a doctor's instruments and committed abortion on her; and that she demanded $15,000, and his wife had kicked him out of doors. Held, language would support a conviction for criminal slander.—People v. Parsons, 163 Mich. 329.

¶ 47. In the course of a dispute over some wood which plaintiff was attempting to prevent defendant and his tenant from hauling away from premises claimed by her, defendant was alleged to have said to plaintiff, in the presence of the tenant: "You are not a decent woman; you do not keep a respectable house." Held, that defendant could not complain that the jury, in an action for slander, were permitted to find that the words used imputed to plaintiff a want of chastity.—Loranger v. Loranger, 115 Mich. 681.

B. INVOKING CONTEMPT, RIDICULE OR OSTRACISM.

§ 12. In general.

Imputing crime, turpitude or unchastity, see ante II, A.

Presumption as to plaintiff's good character, see post ¶ 296.

Construction and application of words used, see post § 24 et seq.

¶ 48. Any printed publication the natural result of which is to bring ridicule or contempt upon a person is, if untrue, libelous.—Orband v. Kalamazoo Tel. Co., 170 Mich. 387.

¶ 49. Any word published of another, the natural tendency of which is to hold him up to hatred, scorn, contempt or ridicule, and to beget an evil opinion of him in the minds of right-thinking persons, and to deprive him of their friendly intercourse and society is libelous and actionable per se.—Van Lonkhuyzen v. Daily News Co., 195 Mich. 283.

¶ 50. A publication alleging that plaintiff was engaged to be married, that he had ordered his wedding supper and had employed a clergyman, that just before the time set for the marriage his fiancée was married to his youthful cousin (which was termed "a triumph of youth over middle age"), and that he denied both his relationship to the bridegroom and his engagement, is libelous if untrue; it tending to hold him up to ridicule, and also charging him with falsehood.—Hatt v. Evening News Ass'n, 94 Mich. 114, 119.

¶ 51. An article which falsely states a woman is engaged to a person who is in fact a drunken degenerate, falsely states that she walked and associated with him, and that she broke her alleged engagement with him because her dogs could not ride on the street car, is libelous per se.—Orband v. Kalamazoo Tel. Co., 170 Mich. 387.

§ 13. Neglect or desertion of spouse or family.

Notice not to give credit to wife, see post § 40.

¶ 52. In connection with a notice forbidding all persons to harbor or trust the advertiser's wife on his account, words charging her with deserting him in his sickness are libelous per se.—Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445.

§ 14. Violation of personal confidence or trust.

¶ 53. It is libelous to publish to the injury of a newspaper reporter an untrue statement showing that he has violated a private confidence by tale-bearing.—Tryon v. Evening News Ass'n, 39 Mich. 636.

§ 15. Fraudulent, corrupt or improper conduct in public matters.

Criticism of public officers or candidates for office, see post § 38.

¶ 54. Articles were published in a daily newspaper charging a citizen with having favored and carried to a successful issue a scheme for his own and others' aggrandizement at the expense of the public, whose interests and desires were in opposition to it, through the acts of the board of estimates of the city where the paper was published, the names of the members of which the articles declared were to be held in reprobation by every citizen who believed in honest administration of the public finances. Held, that the implication from the articles is plain that the citizen named had induced corrupt or improper action for his private gain; that the tendency of such charges is to bring him into public hatred, disgrace, contempt, and obloquy; that they reflect on his character, and are actionable.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 101 Mich. 561.

C. IMPAIRING OCCUPATIONAL OR BUSINESS CREDIT.

§ 16. In general.

Distinction between written and spoken words, see post § 25.

Rule of privilege as applied to business communications, see post § 41.

¶ 55. A statement made concerning a person that a bond on which the person was surety was no good, that he was not worth a dollar, his property is all in his wife's name is not slanderous per se unless the statement was one touching him in his business and tended to injure him therein.—Dallavo v. Snider, 143 Mich. 542.

¶ 56. Whether, where dismissal from employment as agent is the special injury complained of in a case of libel, the words, to be libelous, must impute some charge or matter in relation to the plaintiff's business, trade or avocation, which, if true, would render him unworthy of employment, quære.—Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 Mich. 366.

§ 17. Charges injurious to professional reputation.

Charging physician with misuse of trocar in vaccination, see post ¶ 403.
Words charging physician with illicit intercourse with patient, see post ¶ 411.
Charging minister with publication of seditious articles, see also post ¶ 430.
Charges injurious to attorney running for office, see post § 18.
Charges reflecting on plaintiff's conduct as city attorney, see also post ¶ 409.
Charging attorney with wrongful appropriation of client's money, see also post ¶ 398.
Sufficiency of evidence of malice in making charges against minister, see post § 102.
Statements made in grand jury report, see post § 34.

¶ 57. Spoken words are defamatory without allegation of special damages when the imputation cast by them on plaintiff is so injurious that the court will presume without proof that his reputation has thereby been impaired; which presumption arises when the words are spoken of plaintiff in the way of his profession.—Mains v. Whiting, 87 Mich. 172.

¶ 58. It is libelous to publish of a lawyer an article charging him with giving dishonest, unprofessional advice, with making false statements in professional dealings, with incurring loss of confidence by misconduct, with embezzling moneys, and with making false charges for services and extorting excessive compensation.—Atkinson v. Detroit Free Press Co., 46 Mich. 341.

¶ 59. The words "you are the dirty sewer through which all the slums of this embezzlement have flowed," and "if that $20 had been turned over to you or to ——— ——— [the person charged with the embezzlement] the company would never have seen twenty cents of it," addressed to an attorney who is at the time conducting the defense of a client charged with such embezzlement, are actionable per se if shown by plaintiff to have been spoken of and concerning him in the way of his profession.—Mains v. Whiting, 87 Mich. 172.

¶ 60. The following words are libelous per se of Smedley, an attorney, whose bill for services is mentioned therein: "Does any citizen believe that he (the mayor) did not have a 'divy' in the notorious fraudulent Smedley bill? * * * The notorious Smedley bill, that the mayor has included as one of the items the people are asked by him to bond the city to pay, don't have to be paid. Judge Padgham has taken care of that. The people will not have to stand that fraud."—Smedley v. Soule, 125 Mich. 192.

¶ 61. Publication of charges that plaintiff in a libel action had attempted to loot the village treasury, and had used his position of village attorney for the purpose of exacting illegal fees from the village, that he was incompetent as an attorney and a pettifogger, that he had misled the council by means of dishonest advice is libelous per se.—Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637.

¶ 62. A newspaper statement to the effect that a designated city physician, appointed by the common council and not chosen at a public election, has caused the death of a patient by reckless treatment, is not privileged, and if false is libelous.—Foster v. Scripps, 39 Mich. 376.

¶ 63. Words in a newspaper article charging a minister as being an interloper, a meddler and a spreader of distrust, discontent and sedition held to be libelous per se.—Van Lonkhuyzen v. Daily News Co., 195 Mich. 283.

¶ 64. An article which, to the common understanding, charges that the principal of a school has been guilty of taking indecent and criminal liberties with the persons of his pupils, and that plaintiff, one of the teachers, assisted him in so doing, is actionable per se.—Thibault v. Sessions, 101 Mich. 279.

¶ 65. An article charging the superintendent of schools in a village with trickiness and dishonesty in avoiding the payment of his debts, of meanness in his treatment of students, and of responsibility for the loss of experienced and capable teachers, is, if false and malicious, libelous per se, and relieves plaintiff from the necessity of proving special damages.—McCormick v. Hawkins, 169 Mich. 641.

§ 18. Charges concerning candidate for office.

See also post ¶ 115.
Charging political treachery, see also post ¶ 405.
Criticism of candidates as privileged statements, see post § 38.
Meaning of "pettifogging shyster" as applied to candidate, see post ¶ 92.

¶ 66. A candidate for office has a right of action for aspersions upon his character and cannot be subjected to unwarranted and untruthful charges.—Eikhoff v. Gilbert, 124 Mich. 353.

¶ 67. Where one is a candidate for the office of representative in congress, it is libelous falsely and maliciously to publish in a coarse and blotted imitation of his handwriting the words, "I don't propose to go into debate on the tariff differences on wool, quinine, and all the things, because I ain't built that way," with an imitation of the candidate's signature attached; such a letter would show him to be ignorant, illiterate, and incapable of performing intelligently the duties of the office sought.—Belknap v. Ball, 83 Mich. 583.

¶ 68. Words of a circular addressed to voters charging that a candidate for public office had in his official capacity of representative championed measures opposed to the moral interests of the community, constitute an attack upon the moral character of the party charged and would be likely to bring him into public contempt and disgrace, are not privileged as constituting legitimate criticism, and are libelous per se.—Eikhoff v. Gilbert, 124 Mich. 353.

¶ 69. In an action for libel against a publishing company for charging a candidate for public office with having held the office of prosecuting attorney for two years when he was not a citizen "and as a lawyer he knew that he was illegally holding the office and receiving compensation for the same," held that, while a good deal of latitude must be allowed to newspapers and individuals in discussions of this character, the verdict for the defendant should be reversed.—Smurthwaite v. News Publishing Co., 124 Mich. 377.

¶ 70. In an action for slander where it is charged that defendant, a candidate opposing plaintiff, told that plaintiff offered to withdraw in his favor for a certain sum, it is held, that as such a statement was calculated to injure plaintiff in his profession as an attorney and as a candidate for office, the declaration states a cause of action.—Lewis v. Weidenfeller, 175 Mich. 296.

¶ 71. A circular addressed to voters charging a certain named candidate for office with being indecent and immoral and unworthy of support for that reason, concluding with a request that for reasons equally as good the voters should vote against plaintiff, is libelous per se.—Eikhoff v. Gilbert, 124 Mich. 353.

§ 19. Imputing misconduct in office.

Charging legislator with corrupt practices, see also post ¶ 419.

Privilege as extending to false or malicious charges concerning public officers, see post § 29.

Instructions as to meaning of words used, see post § 116.

¶ 72. An affidavit for leave to appeal from a justice's judgment alleged that the cause was tried on a certain day; that the testimony was not concluded until after dark, when the court announced an adjournment, but fixed no time, whereupon all the parties left the office; that affiant's attorney was sick several days thereafter, and was unable to attend to business; that judgment was rendered against affiant on the day of the trial, whereby affiant was deceived; that by reason thereof affiant was prevented from taking an appeal within the statutory time; and that the judgment is a fraud upon affiant's rights. Held, not libelous of the justice of the peace.—Murphy v. Nelson, 94 Mich. 554.

¶ 73. Personal misconduct in office is imputed, in an alleged libel against plaintiff, the president of the police and fire board, which in answer to his statement of present conditions refers to past conditions as regards gambling, and then asks how he could allow such a terrible state to exist in the past and why he is stopping it now, asking "who stopped putting up? who purchased immunity for this vice? how much did they pay? to whom was it paid?"—Weston v. Grand Rapids Publishing Co., 128 Mich. 375.

§ 20. ——Of sheriff or constable.

Evidence to show malice or intent, see post ¶ 347.

Sufficiency of evidence to justify charges that sheriff knew gambling was going on, see post § 101.

¶ 74. A newspaper article charging a sheriff with being drunk in a public place, while attending to his official duties, is libelous per se.—Aronson v. Baldwin, 178 Mich. 565.

¶ 75. Charging a public official, the sheriff, with intentional neglect of duty is actionable per se.—Scougale v. Sweet, 124 Mich. 311.

¶ 76. A publication that in its necessary meaning charges plaintiff with gross misconduct in the office of deputy-sheriff, with arresting and handcuffing men without right, merely to get the legal fees, and oppressing the poor and friendless under color of office, is libelous per se.—Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425.

§ 21. Charges injurious to plaintiff in his business or trade.

See also post ¶ 277.

Sense and meaning of words used, see also post § 24.

Allegations of damage or injury, see post § 58.

Allegations showing application of words used to plaintiff, see post § 57.

Province of court and jury as to meaning and construction of words used, see post § 105.

¶ 77. Words, spoken or written, injurious to a person in his business, and false and malicious, are actionable per se, and special damages need not be proved.—Haney Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 1; Oliver v. Perkins, 92 Mich. 304; Henkel v. Schaub, 94 Mich. 542.

¶ 78. It is libelous per se to publish of and concerning a merchant false statements touching him in his business and naturally tending to injure him therein.—Dallavo v. Snider, 148 Mich. 542.

¶ 79. A newspaper article charging a druggist with making as well as selling counterfeit Haarlem Oil, and putting it in counterfeit wrappers, is libelous.—Steketee v. Kimm, 48 Mich. 322.

¶ 80. In business a reasonable latitude for puffing should be allowed. But this right must be so far limited that no agent, for the purpose of adding to his own sales and diminishing those of a rival agent, should be allowed to place his rival in the false position of having recommended the article supported by his opponent as better than his own, since both are supposed to be experts upon whose judgment the public will greatly rely. Nothing short of the truth of such a representation will justify its publication.—Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 Mich. 366.

¶ 81. The lessee of a stall in a market is not libelled, nor is his business, by a publication stating that such market is not a "howling success," and that at no time were more than a dozen persons therein on Saturday night.—McGraw v. Detroit Free Press Co., 85 Mich. 203.

¶ 82. Circulars issued by a rival manufacturer containing false statements, and charging the plaintiff with false statements and malicious motives, and unscrupulous attempts to injure the defendant's business, and with bad faith, fraud, and deceit are libelous per se.—Burr's Damascus Tool Works v. Peninsular Tool Mfg. Co., 142 Mich. 417.

§ 22. Disparagement of financial responsibility or credit.

¶ 83. A statement that a merchant has conveyed $10,000 worth of real estate to his wife for $5,000; that his other real estate is heavily mortgaged; and that he is heavily indebted to banks, upon which indebtedness he is paying a high rate of interest, giving the rates,—if it has no significance further than a personal one, is not libelous per se.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 84. A statement that a merchant has conveyed real estate to his wife at half its value, though his property is heavily mortgaged and he deeply in debt to banks, sent to firms from whom the merchant is in the habit of purchasing goods on credit, would necessarily cause a loss of credit, and, if false, is actionable per se.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 85. A statement that the bond of the plaintiff was no good, that he was not worth a dollar and that his property was all in his wife's name, held, not to have been slanderous per se, not having been spoken of and concerning the plaintiff in relation to his business.—Dallavo v. Snider, 143 Mich. 542.

¶ 86. A newspaper article stating that plaintiff has turned over his assets and sought a new country, and that he is financially hard pressed and stating that business men generally agree that he has not defrauded any one, clearly tends to injure plaintiff in his good name, credit and business, and is libelous per se.—Gustin v. Evening Press Co., 172 Mich. 311.

¶ 87. The words, "Goes to Australia. Alpena Man Turns Over Assets and Seeks New Country," published as a newspaper headline in display type, contain in themselves the sting of libel and are libelous per se.—Gustin v. Evening Press Co., 172 Mich. 311.

D. SLANDER OF TITLE OR PROPERTY.

§ 23. In general.

See also post ¶ 414.

Malice as an element, see post ¶ 192.

¶ 88. The false statement of a lessor that his lessee has no right to sublet for saloon purposes is not actionable if made without malice, although an opportunity to sublet is thereby lost to the lessee.—Harrison v. Howe, 109 Mich. 476.

¶ 89. A levy of execution against one person upon lands belonging to another, and without going upon the land, creates no lien upon it and is not an actionable wrong, where there is no malice; and if not alleged to be malicious it will not sustain an action for slander to title.—Walkley v. Bostwick, 49 Mich. 374.

E. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION.

§ 24. In general.

Evidence to show application of words to plaintiff, see post § 73.

Evidence as to meaning of words, see post § 77.

Words imputing bribery, see also ante § 5.

Construction words charging forging of name to note, see ante ¶ 32.

Words imputing perjury or false swearing, see also ante § 10.

Words imputing unchastity or immorality, see also ante § 11.

Time, place and attending circumstances as important considerations, see also post ¶ 301.

Allegations showing application of words to plaintiff, see post § 57.

Inducement, colloquium and innuendo to show meaning, application and actionable character of words used, see post §§ 54, 55, 56.

Presumptions as to understanding of words in foreign language, see post ¶ 295.

Evidence to show application of words to plaintiff, see post § 73.

Evidence as to meaning or understanding of words, see post § 77.

Province of judge and jury, see post § 105.

Instructions as to construction and meaning of words, see post § 116.

¶ 90. Where, in an action for libel, the alleged libelous words, standing alone, are unambiguous, they must be construed in their ordinary sense, in the light of such allegations of the circumstances surrounding the transaction as the declaration sets forth. —Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 91. A charge that the plaintiff "has left town" is not susceptible of the meaning that he had absconded and given up his business and is insolvent.—Ayres v. Toulmin, 74 Mich. 44.

¶ 92. The term "pettifogging shyster," as used in a newspaper article attacking a candidate for congress, means an unscrupulous practitioner who disgraces his profession by doing mean work, and resorts to sharp practice to do it.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 94. The sense or meaning of a statement that a merchant has conveyed $10,000 worth of real estate to his wife for $5,000; that his other real estate is heavily mortgaged; and that he is heavily indebted to banks upon which indebtedness he is paying a high rate of interest if true, is not changed into a charge of fraud by the facts that the person therein referred to is a merchant, in the habit of dealing upon credit with the firms to whom the statement is sent; that the person sending the statement intended to injure the credit of said merchant with said firms; and that he accomplished his purpose. —Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 95. To bribe means to give a bribe to a person; to pervert his judgment or action by some gift or promise.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

§ 25. Distinction between written and spoken words.

¶ 96. In determining whether words are slanderous per se, there is a distinction recognized between words written and words spoken; but an exception is made in the case of words affecting a person in his profession or business, in which case the distinction does not exist.—Dallavo v. Snider, 143 Mich. 542.

¶ 97. The rules which divest spoken words of an actionable quality do not necessarily apply to written or printed libels.—Foster v. Scripps, 39 Mich. 376.

§ 26. Construction as a whole.

Giving in evidence entire slanderous conversation, see post § 72.

Instructions as to construing publication as a whole, see post §§ 115, 116.

¶ 98. A published article, to test its libelous quality, must all be read together. Parts of it cannot be severed from the rest so as to give them a meaning which the whole would not justify; and the spirit of the whole article must be determined from the occasion that led to it.—O'Connor v. Sill, 60 Mich. 175.

¶ 99. To test its libelous quality, a publication must be considered as a whole, which would include, if it is published in a newspaper, the character of the display of the headlines as well as the words used in them. —Gustin v. Evening Press Co., 172 Mich. 311.

¶ 100. Where the words "rob" and "steal," as used in articles alleged to be libelous, are qualified by the rest of the language used, and it clearly appears that they are not used in the ordinary sense, the court, in an action of libel brought for the publication of the articles, should explain to the jury that the articles are to be interpreted as a whole, and that the ordinary and natural meaning of said words, in the connection in which they were used in the articles, should be taken.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 101 Mich. 561.

§ 27. Words of double intendment, unintended meanings.

Innuendo to explain ambiguous language, see post § 56.

¶ 101. A person is responsible for such meaning of his language as is most natural, and is actually by his own fault accepted under the particular circumstances. But there is no responsibility for any other meaning than that which is shown to have been intended and actually understood.—Wieman v. Mabee, 45 Mich. 484.

III. PRIVILEGE AND JUSTIFICATION.

§ 28. In general.

Privilege of witness as to slander, see post § 33.

Loss of privilege by excessive publications, see post § 46.

Reiteration of charge after cessation of privilege, see post § 47.

Notice of justifications, see post § 59.

Truth as justification in criminal prosecutions, see also post § 122.

Negotiating privilege in declaration, see post § 53, ¶ 252.

Issues as to privilege, see post §§ 60, 61.

Burden of proof as to privilege and justification, see post §§ 66, 67.

Evidence in justification, see post § 89 et seq.

Sufficiency of evidence to justify charges, see post § 101.
Province of court and jury as to privilege, see post § 108.
Absolute privilege as warranting directed verdict, see post § 114.
Instructions as to privilege, see post § 118.
Instructions as to justification, see post § 119.
Constitutional provision as to freedom of speech, see Const. art. II, § 4.

¶ 102. An action for libel will not lie on a communication relating to personal character, if made in good faith and for an honest purpose by persons concerned, and to the proper person. Nor will it lie when such a communication is untrue, if it is not maliciously made.—Wieman v. Mabee, 45 Mich. 484.

¶ 103. Absolute privilege in uttering slanderous words applies more directly to matters of public concern, in regard to which it is considered for the general welfare that persons should be permitted to express their views more freely and fearlessly than in regard to private matters or persons.—Bolton v. Walker, 197 Mich. 699.

¶ 104. In slander it is the occasion which determines the question of privilege and the language is only proper to be considered in connection with the question of malice; and malice is negatived where there was no publicity except in answer to questions asked by one who has the right to ask them and to be answered.—Schultz v. Guldenstein, 144 Mich. 636.

¶ 105. Qualified privilege extends to all communications made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party comunicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty to a person having a corresponding interest or duty; and it embraces cases where the duty is not a legal one, but where it is of a moral or social character of imperfect obligation.—Bacon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 66 Mich. 166; Pollasky v. Minchener, 81 Mich. 280.

¶ 106. A mercantile agency does not stand in such relation, either of interest or duty, with its subscribers generally, that communications from it to them generally are privileged.—Pollasky v. Minchener, 81 Mich. 280.

¶ 107. Qualified privilege extends to all communications made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, to a person having a corresponding interest or duty.—Madill v. Currie, 168 Mich. 546.

¶ 108. The rule of qualified privilege in the law of slander relates more particularly to private interests, where the occasion casts upon the defendant a duty, or right, to communicate to another in regard to some matter of special concern to one or both or to others for the protection of society, or some interest he represents.—Bolton v. Walker, 197 Mich. 699.

¶ 109. Where a party has an interest in the subject-matter of a slanderous communication, or owes a legal or moral or social duty to speak, he has a qualified privilege.—Trimble v. Morrish, 152 Mich. 624.

§ 29. Malice, intent and falsity affecting privilege.

Malice and intent in libel and slander generally, see post § 49.
Burden of proof as to malice or falsity, see post § 65.
Admissibility of fact of malice, see post § 78.
Evidence to show malice, see post § 79 et seq.
Instructions as to malice, see post § 120.

¶ 110. Where the privilege in uttering slanderous words is absolute the questions of good faith and absence of malice are immaterial.—Bolton v. Walker, 197 Mich. 699.

¶ 111. Communications absolutely privileged are not actionable slander, though spoken with malice.—Trimble v. Morrish, 152 Mich. 624.

¶ 112. A communication having qualified privilege is actionable slander, if actual malice is present.—Trimble v. Morrish, 152 Mich. 624.

¶ 113. Privilege does not extend to false publications made to persons who have no interest in the subject-matter.—Flynn v. Boglarsky, 164 Mich. 513.

¶ 114. If communications or publications, which upon occasions are privileged, are maliciously published and contain matter that is false, there is no privilege.—Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445.

¶ 115. Publications of falsehoods are never privileged even though made concerning candidates for public offices.—Belknap v. Ball, 83 Mich. 583.

¶ 116. The publication in a newspaper of a false charge of a criminal offense (e. g., attempting to bribe a member of the legislature) is not privileged, so as to relieve the publisher from responsibility, although he had reason to believe the charge to be true, and acted in good faith.—Owen v. Dewey, 107 Mich. 67.

¶ 117. Plaintiff had been a member of a police board, and had been active in getting up a card system to keep tab on the conduct of saloon keepers. The defendant newspaper published an interview to the effect that plaintiff had devised the card system in order to blackmail saloonkeepers when his party should get into power. Held, the publication was not privileged, since plaintiff was a private citizen at the time of publication, and the wilful intent of defendant to injure plaintiff would destroy the privilege.—Lawrence v. Herald Pub. Co., 158 Mich. 459.

¶ 118. Where plaintiff and defendant were rival manufacturers and defendant issued circulars containing false statements, and charging malicious motives, and unscrupulous attempts to injure business, and charging bad faith, fraud, and deceit their relations are not such as to make their circulars privileged where they were untrue.—Burr's Damascus Tool Works v. Peninsular Tool Mfg. Co., 142 Mich. 417.

§ 30. Privilege of the press.

Criticism of public officers or candidates for office, see also post § 38.
Newspaper criticism of books, see post § 43.
Matters published in reply to charges, see post § 44.
Repetition of matters published by others, see post § 45.
Publications recklessly and wilfully made, see also post § 50.
Privilege in publishing pleadings, see post § 31.
Evidence bearing on care or negligence in managing defendant's paper, see post § 84.
Right of corporation to freedom of the press, see Constitutional Law § 186.
Restriction of privilege of newspapers to public personages or proceedings, see also Damages ¶ 502.
Constitutional provision as to freedom of the press, see Const. art. II, § 4.

¶ 119. While the mischief which may be caused by an abuse of the press is such as to render its conductors responsible for great care in guarding against the danger, yet the necessities of civilization require that no unreasonable or vexatious restrictions should be imposed upon them.—Detroit Daily Post Co. v. McArthur, 16 Mich. 447.

¶ 120. Newspapers have no privilege that will excuse them in printing libels of which any other publication would not be excused.—Foster v. Scripps, 39 Mich. 376.

¶ 121. All newspaper mention of private persons must be made under the private obligation of publishing no untruths to their prejudice, and the public obligation of saying nothing at all to their prejudice unless on adequate occasion. Otherwise the statements made may be libelous even though they would not be actionable if unwritten.—Tryon v. Evening News Ass'n, 39 Mich. 636.

¶ 122. It is the right and duty of newspapers to discuss measures relating to the health, welfare, comfort and happiness of the people. But this will not justify libelous statements.—Scripps v. Foster, 41 Mich. 742.

¶ 123. A newspaper statement imputing the commission of crime, but based on facts that have no legal tendency to prove it, is not privileged.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

¶ 124. The publisher of a newspaper, possesses no immunity from liability in publishing a libel, other or different from any other person. The law makes no distinction between the newspaper publisher, and any private person who may publish an article in a newspaper or other printed form; and if either abuses the right to publish his sentiments on any subject and upon any occasion, he must defend himself upon the same legal ground.—Bronson v. Bruce, 59 Mich. 467.

¶ 125. Private persons cannot lawfully be made the subject of ill-natured remarks in the public press, where they have done nothing to expose themselves to public censure; and where such things, having an injurious tendency, are published, the persons giving them publicity must find some justification, or be responsible for the mischief.—O'Connor v. Sill, 60 Mich. 175.

¶ 126. A newspaper proprietor is not as such privileged in the dissemination of news, but is liable for what he publishes in the same manner as any other individual is.—McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 76 Mich. 338.

¶ 127. The publication of a report of matters of public interest is privileged, and not actionable unless express malice is proved.—Madill v. Currie, 168 Mich. 546.

§ 31. ——Reports of judicial proceedings and papers.

See also post §§ 32, 33.

¶ 128. Newspapers are not privileged in publishing pleadings or other proceedings in civil cases before trial.—Park v. Detroit Free Press Co., 72 Mich. 560.

¶ 129. It is matter of privilege to call public attention to the act of a judicial officer in ordering a person into confinement without a charge against him, or in requiring bail in an amount which, considering the prisoner's probable means and position in life, he is unable to pay; these are violations of the most important guaranties of constitutional freedom, and are matters of public concern.—Miner v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 49 Mich. 358.

¶ 130. The publication of court proceedings is not so far privileged as to justify a sensational accompaniment of defamatory comments upon the characters of those in relation to whom the proceedings are taken.—Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

¶ 131. The publication of judicial proceedings is not privileged to the extent of protecting statements made in connection therewith but drawn from other sources and without stating the judicial conclusion.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 132. A newspaper publication stating that a married man had eloped with another woman without regard for his family, is not justified as based upon a judicial proceeding where the information upon which it was based was obtained from a police officer at police headquarters after the wife and others had related to him the alleged family troubles, and from the wife and her companions before they left the police headquarters, complaint to a police officer not being a judicial proceeding.—Jastrzembski v. Marxhausen, 120 Mich. 677.

§ 32. Matter contained in pleadings and affidavits and process.

See also ante § 31; post ¶ 216.

¶ 133. Whether the publication of libelous allegations contained in a bill of complaint upon the files of a court is privileged, quære.—Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371.

¶ 134. Whether statements made in pleadings are all absolutely privileged, quære.—Hartung v. Shaw, 130 Mich. 177.

¶ 135. A complaint for larceny, made before a justice of the peace, is privileged, and cannot be made the basis of an action for libel.—Graham v. Cass Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 425.

¶ 136. Statements in a affidavit made in support of an answer to be used in opposition to an application for an injunction are privileged, provided they are not irrelevant and impertinent.—Hart v. Baxter, 47 Mich. 198.

¶ 137. Where a bill was filed by a mortgagor to reform the mortgage, and the bill charged an agent of the mortgagee with fraud in connection with the drafting of the mortgage, and the agent made his affidavit in support of the answer, and averred therein that the charge of fraud was wilfully and maliciously false, held, that an action counting on these words as a libel would not lie.—Hart v. Baxter, 47 Mich. 198.

¶ 138. In a suit for libel and slander in accusing plaintiff of stealing defendant's goods, it is error to receive in evidence a copy of the writ of replevin sued out by defendant against plaintiff, such evidence being privileged.—Wells v. Toogood, 165 Mich. 677.

§ 33. Statements made in course of trial.

See also post ¶ 217.

¶ 139. The testimony given as a witness that he had uttered certain words is so far privileged that it cannot be used as proof by way of an admission of the slander in an action therefor against himself.—Osborn v. Forshee, 22 Mich. 209.

¶ 140. Statements made in judicial proceedings, if relevant, material or pertinent to the issue, are absolutely privileged and their falsity or the malice of their author is not open to inquiry, and hence cannot be made the basis of an action for libel.—Hartung v. Shaw, 130 Mich. 177.

¶ 141. Public policy requires that a witness in a criminal proceeding should not be trammeled with fear of prosecution for slander.—Acre v. Starkweather, 118 Mich. 214.

¶ 142. Quære, whether the privilege, of a witness in a criminal proceeding, as to slander, is absolute or conditional.—Acre v. Starkweather, 118 Mich. 214.

¶ 143. A witness' answer to a general question in a criminal prosecution, as to why he believed an accused's reputation as to truth and veracity to be bad, to the effect that he was a thief and had stolen his paint clothes, brushes, and harness, held not to give rise to an action for slander, as no action will lie for slanderous words uttered in a criminal proceeding, in response to direct and leading questions put by the attorney for the accused on cross-examination.—Acre v. Starkweather, 118 Mich. 214.

§ 34. Report by grand jury.

Evidence of good faith in making report, see also post ¶ 834.

Practice in respect to grand jury reports, see Grand Jury.

¶ 144. A report made by a grand jury to the circuit court and filed therein containing reflections of the gravest character upon the official conduct of the prosecuting attorney, if not actually charging him with the commission of a felony, held not privileged, in an action by such attorney against the members of the jury for libel in making and filing such report.—Bennett v. Stockwell, 197 Mich. 50.

¶ 145. Where a report by a grand jury to the court, containing alleged libelous matter concerning plaintiff, in an action against the members of the jury for libel in making and filing such report, began "We, the members of the grand jury now in session, beg leave to report," was signed "The grand jury," etc., by the foreman, and was presented by him to the court in the presence of the other members of the jury, held that all of the members of the jury were prima facie responsible for such publication.—Bennett v. Stockwell, 197 Mich. 50.

§ 35. Reports or complaints to police officers.

Statements made to police officer at plaintiff's request, see post ¶ 186

¶ 146. In a suit for slander by charging the plaintiff with theft, statements made by the defendant by letter and verbally to detectives detailed to examine into the theft of defendant's property, are privileged and such letters and statements are therefore incompetent.—Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 124 Mich. 230.

¶ 147. Defendants addressed a petition to a police justice complaining that plaintiff was an obnoxious and peace disturbing neighbor and asking that he be requested to move. Held, such proceeding was privileged in so far as the proceeding before the magistrate was concerned.—Flynn v. Boglarsky, 164 Mich. 513.

¶ 148. In an action for slander against defendant for charging plaintiff with theft of goods, it is error to permit the plaintiff to introduce the evidence of a deputy sheriff as to the complaint made by defendant to said sheriff, in which defendant accused plaintiff of the theft, the communication to said officer being privileged.—Wells v. Toogood, 165 Mich. 677.

¶ 149. Reports made to police officers charging persons with crime are not privileged and any one publishing such reports does so at his peril.—Jastrzembski v. Marxhausen, 120 Mich. 677.

§ 36. Official reports or communications.

See also post § 218.
Province of court and jury, see post § 108.
Instructions as to privilege, see post § 118.
What constitutes the "record" of proceedings of the county board, see Counties § 8.

¶ 150. A resolution introduced into a city council by a member thereof for the withdrawal of the city's money from a bank on account of the rendition of judgment against the principal surety on the bank's bond as a depository of city funds, which resolution recited the facts and suggested that the bank was no longer safe without additional security, is absolutely privileged.—Wachsmuth v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 96 Mich. 426.

¶ 151. A mayor's written message to the common council of his city giving his reasons for vetoing a resolution adopted by the council is absolutely privileged at least so far as it is pertinent to the subject.—Trebilcock v. Anderson, 117 Mich. 39.

¶ 152. In communicating to the common council his reasons for vetoing a resolution allowing to a "taxpayers' union," the use of the council rooms, the mayor has a right to state any matters bearing upon the previous relations with the city of the individuals who compose the association, and upon their unfitness—as alleged—to influence public affairs.—Trebilcock v. Anderson, 117 Mich. 39.

¶ 153. Defendant in a suit for libel was appointed by the county board of supervisors, upon petition of several hundred electors, as chairman of a committee to investigate accounts of plaintiff as county treasurer. On his own responsibility he published a report of the findings of the committee. Held, on the question of his liability for imputing crime to plaintiff, he was entitled to the benefit of the rule of qualified privilege, and such privilege was not destroyed by his failure to file the report with the county clerk.—Madill v. Currie, 168 Mich. 546.

¶ 154. Words spoken by the president of the poor commission of the City of Detroit, who is ex officio member of the city board of estimates, with power to participate in the deliberations and proceedings of such board, but without right to vote upon measures brought before it, imputing that a member of such board was susceptible to improper influences, by bribery or otherwise, are absolutely privileged, since such board has a function in taxation demanding the exercise of semi-legislative discretion.—Bolton v. Walker, 197 Mich. 699.

§ 37. ——Concerning schools.

¶ 155. Where the president of a state normal school, charged with the duty of looking after the students attending the school and their environment, and approving the rooming houses in which they lived, upon complaint against the plaintiff, one of such students, by four out of six roomers at the house where she lived, investigated such complaint and reported his conclusions to the keepers of the house, held that the occasion was privileged and an action for slander would not lie against him for language used by him in such report in regard to plaintiff without malice and in good faith.—Everest v. McKenny, 195 Mich. 649.

¶ 156. A superintendent of public schools, who, in order to vindicate himself from a newspaper attack emanating from a member of the board of education and involving his opposition to a certain teacher, authorizes the publication of an article critizing the teacher's method and her conduct toward him, cannot be held responsible for libel unless he makes serious false charges of fact or wanton or irrelevant assaults on such teacher.—O'Connor v. Sill, 60 Mich. 175.

¶ 157. A communication, representing that a certain person was of bad moral character, and wholly unfit to teach and have the care of a district school, was made to a township superintendent, by persons interested in a particular school within his jurisdiction, for the sole purpose of preventing the issue to the person so charged of a license to teach the school. Held, that it was a privileged communication, and abundantly justified by proof that he was an habitual blasphemer and profane person, and an open violator of the Sabbath.—Wieman v. Mabee, 45 Mich. 484.

§ 38. Criticism of public officers or candidates for office.

Imputing bribery and corruption to public officer, see also ante § 5.
False statements concerning candidates, see also ante ¶ 115.

Privilege of the press, see ante § 30.
Privilege in criticizing public officers, see ante § 19.
Words charging officer with presenting a false claim to supervisors, see post ¶ 333.

¶ 158. The public conduct of public men is properly subject to legitimate discussion. —Lawrence v. Herald Pub. Co., 158 Mich. 459.

¶ 159. An article in a newspaper falsely charging a public officer with gross misconduct in office cannot be claimed to be privileged on the ground of its publication being a public good.—Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425.

¶ 160. A publication in a newspaper falsely imputing a charge of crime against a candidate for an elective office is not privileged though made in an honest belief of its truth; though the fact that it was published in good faith and after reasonable investigation may go in mitigation of damages. —Bronson v. Bruce, 59 Mich. 467.

¶ 161. One who attacks the character of a candidate for office, must be as careful to ascertain the truth of the facts charged as in any other case of libel.—Austin v. Hyndman, 119 Mich. 615.

¶ 162. Pending plaintiff's candidacy for the appointive office of city controller, defendant, a citizen, said in an interview with a reporter that he "shouldn't wonder if the city would have the same experience with plaintiff that England had with Cyprus, in which England thought it secured a great bargain, but which turned out a huge graveyard." There was an innuendo that this meant the plaintiff's honesty was sham and that he was morally corrupt. The interview being published in a newspaper, held, that the publication was not privileged.—Wheaton v. Beecher, 66 Mich. 307.

¶ 163. The right of criticism upon the conduct of a public officer does not embrace the right to make a false statement of his acts involving his integrity or faithfulness in the discharge of his duties. So held where an alleged libelous article charging an officer with neglect of duty stated, among other things, that the censure visited upon the officer was for making a certain arrest in a fit of temper and failing to arrest dozens of others who more deserved arrest than the one so arrested. Such statement is not mere comment and criticism on the acts of a public officer, but, if false, is objectionable.— Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 164. Plaintiff was a candidate for county treasurer. The defendant stated editorially that he was an unfit candidate; that he had been given reason to expect, two years before, that he would be appointed deputy in the same office; that the reason why he was not so appointed was that the treasurer's bondsmen seriously objected, not wishing to be held in any way responsible for the public funds if plaintiff had any share in the handling of them. On the trial, four of said bondsmen testified that, after investigation, they refused to sign the treasurer's bond if he appointed plaintiff. Held, that the gist of the article was the refusal of the bondsmen to become responsible if plaintiff should be appointed, which was proved to be true; and that all else in the article was justifiable criticism based upon that fact.—Dunneback v. Tribune Printing Co., 108 Mich. 75.

¶ 165. Newspapers have a right to state, for the guidance of electors, any fact which affects the fitness of a candidate for a public office. While the law of libel requires, in such cases, that, in their statements of facts, they observe an honest regard for the truth, when they have done so, they are not responsible.—Dunneback v. Tribune Printing Co. 108 Mich. 75.

§ 39. Charges made in association or lodge proceedings.

Communications to board of a church derogatory of its pastor, see also post ¶ 286.
Evidence to show malice and intent, see post § 79.

¶ 166. Statements made by a member of a church quarterly conference called for the purpose of electing trustees, concerning a nominee for trustee whom he opposed, made in response to an inquiry as to the reason for his opposition, are privileged where made in good faith and without malice.—Howard v. Dickie, 120 Mich. 238.

§ 40. Notice not to give credit to wife.

Notice not to give credit to daughter-in-law, see ante ¶ 4.

¶ 167. Where a husband has permitted his wife to trade upon his credit, notice to the public not to give her credit upon his account is justifiable and to that extent privileged; but defamatory words concerning the wife in such a notice are not privileged.—Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445.

§ 41. Communications respecting business between persons interested therein.

Statements contained in lists of employees furnished by railroad company to its agents, see ante ¶ 27.

Rule as to qualified privilege, see ante § 28.

Words imputing larceny of ice by employee, see ante ¶ 30.

¶ 168. The defendant had an arrangement with a doctor by which he was to pay a part of the latter's office rent in consideration of the doctor's agreement to turn over to him all prescriptions to be filled. The defendant told the doctor of certain rumors calling in question the character of his clerk, the plaintiff. Held, the communication was under a qualified privilege.—Trimble v. Morrish, 152 Mich. 624.

¶ 169. The "discharge lists" which each division agent of a railroad company sends monthly to his fellow agents to put them on their guard against men whom he has discharged and stating the reasons for discharge, are qualifiedly privileged.—Bacon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 66 Mich. 166.

¶ 170. Where the cashier of a bank, who suspected that a minor employed as janitor and under clerk was in the habit of taking small sums of money from the bank, and that this occasioned the shortage in the bank accounts which occurred from day to day, accused the boy of the theft in the presence of the bookkeeper, who was the only other person who had access to the funds, and who, as well as the cashier, was interested in their safekeeping, and later in the same day informed the boy's father, in a private conversation, that his son had taken the money, the communications were qualifiedly privileged, and not actionable in the absence of proof of express malice.—Livingston v. Bradford, 115 Mich. 140.

§ 42. Reports by commercial and credit agencies.

¶ 171. Communications from a commercial agency are privileged, not generally, but qualifiedly, and only so far as they are furnished on special request to persons interested in obtaining the particular information.—Pollasky v. Minchener, 81 Mich. 280.

§ 43. Criticism of literary productions.

¶ 172. An author who places his book before the public, invites criticism; and, however hostile that criticism may be, and however much damage it may cause by preventing the sale of the book, the critic is not liable in an action for libel, if he does not misstate material facts contained in the book, and does not attack the author's character.—Dowling v. Livingstone, 108 Mich. 321.

¶ 173. It is not libelous to ridicule literary composition; and, in a newspaper review of a book, a critic who correctly states the author is the sole judge of the language of his criticism.—Dowling v. Livingstone, 108 Mich. 321.

¶ 174. Where a newspaper review of a book criticized an argument therein in behalf of a minimum wage rate of two dollars per day by saying "of course, like all other quack remedies, the one suggested would intensify the trouble, if it had any effect at all," this was not libelous.—Dowling v. Livingstone, 108 Mich. 321.

¶ 175. It was not libelous for a book-review to say, in reference to a recommendation in the book of legislation restricting the acquirement of land, that it had not the merit of originality, as another person had advocated the same thing fifty years before; and this, even though it should appear that such other person never advocated such a doctrine.—Dowling v. Livingstone, 108 Mich. 321.

§ 44. Statements by way of defense or in answer to charges.

¶ 176. Where a party provokes a controversy by making libelous publications, the party charged may retort upon his assailant where such retort is a necessary part of his defense, or fairly arises out of the charges made.—Smurthwaite v. News Publishing Co., 124 Mich. 377.

¶ 177. A communication to a newspaper, called out as an answer to a libelous article published against the party sending it, and not going beyond what was fairly to be expected of a man who might very well have been exasperated, instead of being good-naturedly contemptuous, will not support an action for libel.—Myers v. Kaichen, 75 Mich. 272.

¶ 178. An article in a newspaper written in reply to an article in another newspaper, charging the author with corruption in office, which undertakes to show that the author of the first charge is an imposter, and has no interest in the public welfare, by showing his past history, and charging him with various crimes, and disgraceful and degrading conduct, is not relevant to the charge which called it forth, and therefore is not privileged, as being made in self-defense, and being a denial or an explanation of the charge first made.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 179. If a published article is libelous and is untrue and is not a proper reply to articles published by the plaintiff which provoked its publication, the publication is actionable irrespective of the question of malice.—Smurthwaite v. News Publishing Co., 124 Mich. 377.

§ 45. Repetition or publication of charges made by others.

Proof of repetition admissible under declaration, see post ¶ 282.
Evidence of repetition as bearing on malice or intent, see post § 80.
As bearing on damages, see also post § 52.

¶ 180. No one can be justified in repeating a slander unless on such evidence as legitimately tends to establish its truth.—Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41.

¶ 181. A newspaper article which does not explicitly charge a person with having committed crimes and disgraceful and degrading acts, but which states that the author is informed that the person has committed such acts, and that the records show arrests for the crimes, is nevertheless libelous per se, as the author cannot shelter himself by showing that he only said what he had heard, and every repetition of a slander originated by a third person is a wilful publication of it rendering the person repeating it liable to an action.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

§ 46. Loss of privilege by exceeding occasion.

¶ 182. A qualified privilege exists in cases where some communication is necessary and proper in the protection of a person's interest, but this privilege may be lost if the extent of its publication is excessive.—Smith v. Smith, 73 Mich. 445.

¶ 183. Defendant addressed a petition to a police justice complaining that plaintiff was an obnoxious and peace disturbing neighbor and asking that he be requested to move. Defendants further gave publicity to the petition by circulating it around the neighborhood and publishing it in the daily press. Held, the privilege of the petition was destroyed, the extent of the publication being excessive.—Flynn v. Boglarsky, 164 Mich. 513.

§ 47. Reiteration of charge after cessation of privilege.

¶ 184. Privilege does not constitute a defense to an action for the reiteration of an alleged slander after the occasion for the privilege has ceased.—Wolff v. Smith, 112 Mich. 359.

¶ 185. Quære, whether a defamatory statement originally privileged loses that privilege when afterwards uttered, the occasion of privilege having passed, but the later utterance being made as an incident to a denial and explanation by defendant upon being charged with having made a slander in such original statement.—Wolff v. Smith, 112 Mich. 359, per Grant and Moore, JJ., dissenting.

IV. PUBLICATION.

§ 48. In general.

Persons responsible for publication, see ante § 2.
Loss of privilege by excessive publication, see ante § 46.
Statements made during church quarterly conference, see ante ¶ 166.
Evidence of other similar publications to show malice or intent, see post § 82.
Notice of justification as constituting a republication, see post ¶ 380.
Time, place and attending circumstances as important considerations, see post ¶ 301.
Proof of publication admissible under the declaration, see post ¶ 281.
Evidence as to publication, see post §§ 74, 80.
Province of court and jury, see post § 104.
Instructions as to publication, see post § 117.
Injunction to prevent publication of libel, see Injunctions § 94.

¶ 186. A statement made by the defendant in a slander suit, before a third person, charging plaintiff with theft, solicited by plaintiff for the purpose of having the charge reiterated before such third person who was a police officer whom plaintiff had called, is not a publication for which the law gives a remedy.—Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 124 Mich. 230.

¶ 186a. A clergyman could not recover damages resulting from the reading from his pulpit by himself of a letter derogatory of his character, sent by defendant under qualified privilege to church authorities, in an action for a libel consisting of such letter; since the defendants were not responsible for such publication.—Konkle v. Haven, 140 Mich. 472.

¶ 187. In an action for slander, where there is evidence tending to prove that a report or charge, for which defendant is responsible, came to the knowledge of plaintiff and her husband, in consequence of which, after some delay, the husband, to the knowledge of plaintiff, first called upon the defendant, but it does not appear that she directed or encouraged the interview, but rather discouraged it, and in answer to his questions the accusations were repeated, it cannot be said that there was no publication of the charges.—Schultz v. Guldenstein, 144 Mich. 636.

V. MALICE AND INTENT.

§ 49. In general.

See also ante ¶ 104.
Malice as gist of the action, see also post ¶ 298.
Malice and intent as affecting privilege, see ante § 29.
Malice as affecting damages, see also post § 52.
Burden of proof as to malice, see post § 65.
Presumptions as to malice and intent, see post § 69.
Evidence to show malice or intent, see post § 79 et seq.
Sufficiency of evidence to establish malice, see post § 102.
Province of court and jury as to malice and intent, see post § 111.
Error in directing verdict where some evidence of express malice appears, see post § 114.
Instructions as to malice or intent, see post § 120.

¶ 188. A publication is malicious in law if made without justifiable ends and knowingly, even if done without any actual personal ill will.—Davis v. Marxhausen, 103 Mich. 315.

¶ 189. Malice in a legal sense means a wrongful act done intentionally and without just cause or excuse.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

¶ 190. Some degree of malice in defendant is necessary to sustain an action for slander. This malice is sometimes said to be either express or implied, but in both cases it is actual malice or malice in fact, the difference being only in the mode of proof.—Huson v. Dale, 19 Mich. 17.

¶ 191. Express malice is shown by some affirmative proof beyond that of the false and slanderous words, while implied malice is that which is naturally inferred as a presumption of fact from the proof of the publication of the false and injurious charge.—Huson v. Dale, 19 Mich. 17.

¶ 192. An action for slander to title must be grounded on malice.—Walkley v. Bostwick, 49 Mich. 374.

¶ 193. An admission that a slander had formerly been made cannot attach malice to such an admission for the purpose of renewing the slander.—Vickers v. Stoneman, 73 Mich. 419.

§ 50. Reckless and wilful publication.

¶ 194. The wilful publication of injurious statements involves the design to produce whatever injury must necessarily follow; and when done purposely, knowingly and for no good purpose or justifiable end, it is malicious in the sight of the law even if done without any actual personal ill-will.—Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

¶ 195. A false and injurious publication made in a public journal "for sensation and increase of circulation" is, in a legal sense, malicious.—Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

§ 51. Good faith of defendant.

See also ante ¶ 102.
Good faith as affecting damages, see also post § 52.
Good faith in charging candidate for office with crime, see also ante § 38.
Good faith as affecting privilege, see ante § 29.
Evidence of good faith in making charges, see also post § 78.

¶ 196. Good faith cannot protect a false publication, nor can one excuse himself for making a mistaken assault upon his neighbor's reputation by showing the absence of malice when, even had his charge been true, there was no proper purpose in bringing the matter to public notice.—Whittemore v. Weiss, 33 Mich. 348.

¶ 197. A printer's mistakes, made without wrongful intent in printing a self-laudatory article furnished for publication by the subject of it, cannot be held a malicious libel.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

¶ 198. Slander, like other wrongs, is actionable because injurious, and while intention may have much to do with the question of damages, it is not necessarily involved in the question of guilt.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 199. Where the libelous matter is actionable per se, good faith in its publication by a newspaper in no way relieves defendant's liability to compensate the plaintiff for actual damages to reputation or feelings.—Clair v. Battle Creek Journal Co., 168 Mich. 467.

VI. EXTENT, AGGRAVATION AND MITIGATION OF DAMAGES.

§ 52. In general.

Matters affecting damages, see ante § 58.
Good faith as affecting damages, see also ante § 51.
Good faith in publishing charges against candidate for public office, see also ante ¶ 160.
Evidence in aggravation or mitigation, see post § 95 et seq.
Evidence of good faith in mitigation, see also post § 78.
Evidence as to care in publishing paper as bearing on damages, see post § 84.
Evidence of retractions or refusal to retract as bearing on damages, see post § 86.
Evidence to show the extent of publicity of the words used, see post § 75.
Evidence of plaintiff's character or reputation as bearing on damages, see post §§ 87, 88.

Presumptions as to damage or injury, see post § 70.
Reputation of plaintiff as an issue bearing on injury, see post § 60.
Province of court and jury as to damages, see post § 112.
Jury question as to sufficiency of retraction to relieve defendant of exemplary damages, see post ¶ 505.
Amount and character of verdict, see post § 121.
[Note. The subject of damages is fully treated in Damages, yet it is difficult to draw an exact line between the elements of the injury and the elements of damages for the injury; and the word "damages" is not always used in its technical sense as distinguished from "injury." A few illustrative cases are therefore collected below which seem to illustrate the elements of injury. For other cases see Damages according to cross-references which follow.]
General measure of damages for defamation, see Damages §§ 124, 125.
Measure of damages for slander of title, see Damages § 125.
Injury to feelings as element of damages, see Damages § 25.
Mitigation and aggravation, see Damages §§ 175, 343, 344, 347.
Exemplary and punitive damages, see Damages § 197.
Propriety of nominal or substantial damages, see Damages § 219.

Notice and demand for retraction as prerequisite to claim for exemplary damages for libel, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 23; Comp. L. 1915, § 12759.

¶ 200. Where the words are actionable per se no special damages need be shown.—Newman v. Stein, 75 Mich. 402; Haney Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 1; Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189; Burr's Damascus Tool Works v. Peninsular Tool Mfg. Co., 142 Mich. 417; Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115.

¶ 201. The actual damages for charging a woman with gross immorality may include worry of mind and illness of body.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593.

¶ 202. Actual damages for injury to feelings includes damages augmented by the slanderer's malice.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

¶ 203. The damages include injury to credit and reputation from the libel and such injury to the feelings as must be inferred from the credit and reputation of the paper.—Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

¶ 204. The fact that the defamatory article was copied from another paper does not necessarily mitigate the wrong; it depends on the circumstances.—Bronson v. Bruce, 59 Mich. 467.

¶ 205. Damages for falsely charging plaintiff with theft cannot be mitigated by defendant's good faith.—Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115.

¶ 206. The injury is not mitigated by the fact that it was in fact beneficial, though that would affect the amount of the damages.—McCormick v. Hawkins, 169 Mich. 641.

¶ 207. Slander is mitigated by the fact that plaintiff had already suffered in good repute by a common rumor to the same effect as the slander.—Fowler v. Fowler, 113 Mich. 575.

Omission of allegation as to malice aided by verdict, see Pleading, XI.
Impleading joint tort feasors to enforce contribution, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 12761.

¶ 208. A declaration for slander should be demurred to if the averments of the declaration are not formal enough; and if the language, set forth plainly, shows an intention to slander in the way complained of, it will be held sufficient if not demurred to.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292.

¶ 209. A declaration alleged that plaintiffs owned and kept for breeding purposes an imported, full-blooded, Percheron stallion, which had begotten many colts, was a good colt-getter, and was especially valuable to his owners; that plaintiffs represented and held the horse out as such, and that they are upright citizens of good standing in the country; that defendant, maliciously intending to injure them in their good name, made false and malicious statements that their stallion was not imported, and was not a full-blooded Percheron, whereby plaintiffs have been damaged in their standing as honest business men. Held, that the declaration stated a cause of action not only for slandering the horse, but also for slandering plaintiff's business of keeping the horse for hire, gain and reward, and that it was not necessary to allege special damages.—Henkel v. Schaub, 94 Mich. 542.

¶ 210. A declaration for slander in charging plaintiff with burning his property to defraud insurers need not aver actual insurance, nor need such insurance be proved.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292.

¶ 211. A declaration in an action of libel alleged that defendant's newspaper falsely and maliciously reported plaintiff, a candidate for congress, as saying that he would refrain from discussing the tariffs on wool, quinine, etc., because "he wasn't built that way," which the innuendo explained as meaning that plaintiff was too ignorant and imbecile to discuss said question, or to express in a decent way his intention not to discuss it. On demurrer it was held that as the demurrer admitted both the meaning implied by the innuendo and the malice charged, the declaration made out a case.—Belknap v. Ball, 83 Mich. 583.

¶ 212. A count for slander is sufficient which sets out the slanderous words as "M. stole it," and explains their connection with a general statement of loss of property of a corporation without specifically describing the articles taken.—McLeod v. Crosby, 128 Mich. 641.

¶ 213. Even if the words "M. stole it," in a count for slander do not imply larceny the further statement that the defendant was referring to personal property of a corporation is sufficient to raise that inference.—McLeod v. Crosby, 128 Mich. 641.

¶ 214. The mere fact that the occupation or profession of the plaintiff is stated in a declaration for libel is not sufficient to justify the inference that the words were uttered with reference to that business or profession, especially in the absence of any allegation of pecuniary damages to the profession or business and where the question of damages to the profession is not raised.—Smedley v. Soule, 125 Mich. 192.

¶ 215. Action based upon the publication of the following words: "It must be and is painful to all who feel the force of conscientious impulses, and who regard the solemn responsibility of an oath, to witness at our elections the frequent violations of truth, committed by those brought forward at the polls. The recurrence of false swearing is too common to pass unpunished. No casuistry can palliate or excuse it." The inducement set forth was that plaintiff was supervisor of the township; that there was a general election; that plaintiff was a member of the board of election; and also a candidate for re-election. Held, that the alleged libelous words were too vague and uncertain to constitute a charge of perjury; and that in connection with the intrinsic facts pleaded, the perjury was not sufficiently alleged.—Lewis v. Soule, 3 Mich. 514.

¶ 216. A declaration in an action of libel based upon statements made in an answer to a bill in chancery, with averment that such statements were false and malicious is fatally defective in failing to allege that the statements were not relevant, material or pertinent to the issue, since if they were they would be absolutely privileged.—Hartung v. Shaw, 130 Mich. 177.

¶ 217. An averment that defendant made slanderous charges under oath in a court contains no sufficient charge of an actionable wrong.—Ayres v. Toulmin, 74 Mich. 44.

¶ 218. A declaration charging defendant with publishing a false and defamatory libel in words and figures set forth, purporting to be a report of a council meeting, which did not aver that it was simply repeated by defendant, could not on demurrer be regarded as bad because showing that the publication was such report, or was a correct report, so as to justify a claim of privilege.—Boehmer v. Detroit Free Press Co., 94 Mich. 7.

§ 54. ——Inducement.

See also ante ¶¶ 215, 238.

¶ 219. It is the office of the inducement in a declaration for libel to narrate the extrinsic circumstances, which, coupled with the language published, affect its construction and render it actionable, where, standing alone, and not thus explained, the language used would appear either not to concern plaintiff, or, if concerning him, not to affect him injuriously. It is a statement of the facts out of which the charge arises, or which are necessary or useful to make the charge intelligible.—Randall v. Evening News Assoc., 79 Mich. 266.

¶ 220. Inducement is not in every case of slander, essential to the sufficiency of a statement of a cause of action, but in those cases only where, without the facts contained in the inducement, the publication would not naturally and per se refer to the plaintiff, nor convey the meaning plaintiff contends for, nor be construed as actionable.—Derham v. Derham, 123 Mich. 451.

¶ 221. Extrinsic facts or circumstances showing the actionable quality of words not actionable per se must be directly averred in the inducement of the declaration.—Taylor v. Kneeland, 1 D. 67.

¶ 222. A declaration in slander contained the usual inducement, without the averment of any extrinsic facts or circumstances showing the actionable quality of the words spoken, except that the plaintiff was postmaster at F., and one count charged the defendant with having spoken and published of and concerning the plaintiff as postmaster, etc., that "he did not think Marlatt's resignation or his petition had gone to Washington; he had no doubt they were embezzled at F."; adding by innuendo ("at the postoffice at F., of which the plaintiff was postmaster, meaning and intending thereby that the plaintiff had delayed and prevented the transmission of the said resignation and petition to the postmaster-general at Washington)," etc. Held, that the count was fatally defective, the words charged to have been spoken and published appearing not to be actionable; though the words would have become actionable had the inducement of the declaration further averred that the letters or papers referred to were placed in the postoffice at F., or entrusted to the care of the defendant as postmaster at F., or were passed through said postoffice to their place of destination; since the embezzlement by defendant of papers which so came into his possession is made criminal.—Taylor v. Kneeland, 1 D. 67.

See also post ¶ 238.

Necessity that allegations show application of charges to plaintiff, see also post § 57.

¶ 223. Where, in an action for slander, the declaration set forth the slanderous words, averring that they were uttered "of and to the plaintiff," no colloquium was held to be necessary that they were uttered "of and concerning the plaintiff."—Osborn v. Forshee, 22 Mich. 209.

§ 56. ——Innuendo.

See also ante ¶ 162.

Construction and application of words used, see ante § 24 et seq.

Demurrer as admission of allegations of innuendo, see ante ¶ 211.

Innuendo as limiting issues, see post § 62.

Evidence to show meaning of words, see post § 77.

¶ 224. The office of an innuendo is to aver the meaning of the language published; it cannot change the import of the words, or add to or enlarge their sense; and if the meaning of the publication is plain on its face, no innuendo is needed.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629; Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425.

¶ 225. In giving a construction to words declared upon as libelous resort cannot be had to the innuendo, the office of which is to explain the context, not to add to it.—Lewis v. Soule, 3 Mich. 514.

¶ 226. If the meaning of the publication is plain, no innuendo is needed; the use of it can never change the import of the words, nor add to or enlarge their sense.—Randall v. Evening News Assoc., 79 Mich. 266.

¶ 227. The office of an innuendo is merely to apply the different parts of the charge contained in the words to the different facts before averred in the inducement. Its truth must always appear from precedent averments, and it must be supported by the inducement and colloquium.—Taylor v. Kneeland, 1 D. 67.

¶ 228. The province of the innuendo is to explain and give meaning to ambiguous language. If extrinsic evidence is required to ascertain its meaning the jury must determine that question.—Belknap v. Ball, 83 Mich. 583.

¶ 229. In pleading in libel the innuendo is for the purpose of explaining equivocal language, and is not needed where the meaning of the language is not doubtful; and if one is put in in such a case it will be treated as surplusage, though it seeks to enlarge the language alleged to be libelous.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

¶ 230. When the publication complained of is libelous per se no innuendo is necessary; and if the innuendo alleged is not borne out by the words it may be treated as surplusage and a recovery had on the words themselves.—Gustin v. Evening Press Co., 172 Mich. 311.

¶ 231. A charge that plaintiff "went to Lansing, and collected $1,400 of our money, and went west with it," sustains the innuendo that he absconded with money belonging to defendant's firm.—Ayres v. Toulmin, 74 Mich. 44.

¶ 232. A statement that plaintiff obtained commissions on the sale of typewriters for his own benefit exclusive of his partners cannot be made actionable by innuendo where no duty is averred to the contrary.—Ayres v. Toulmin, 74 Mich. 44.

¶ 233. An averment that plaintiff is trying to get and convert to his own use a named person's property without paying for it is properly connected with an innuendo that it means defrauding or swindling that person out of his property.—Ayres v. Toulmin, 74 Mich. 44.

¶ 234. A declaration in an action for slander was sufficient to charge defendant with having charged plaintiff with criminal poisoning of defendant's cattle; the want of averment of the statutory malice essential to the crime of poisoning cattle being aided by the innuendo to the charge that it was intentional, and there being no intentional poisoning like that charged which would be innocent.—Vickers v. Stoneman, 73 Mich. 419.

§ 57. ——Showing application of charges to plaintiff.

See also ante ¶ 214.
Use and purpose of colloquium, see ante § 55.
Evidence to show application of words to plaintiff, see post § 73.

¶ 235. To render a publication libelous it must indicate the person intended by name, or connect him with some fact or circumstance, known to those to whom the publication is addressed, by which they may understand who is meant. And to enable a jury to determine upon the application, such fact or circumstance should be in proof; and that cannot be unless it is pleaded.—Lewis v. Soule, 3 Mich. 514; Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425.

¶ 236. Where, under the allegation in a declaration for libel, no other person than the plaintiff can be presumed to be meant, the declaration is sufficient, even if it does not show by name and in precise terms the application to him of the language claimed to be libelous. The rule of certainty applicable to a declaration never required it to negative every possible implication.—Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 Mich. 366.

¶ 237. In a particular case it was held that there was enough in the several counts in the declaration, after the first, to show that the slanders charged related to plaintiff in the character described in the first count.—Ayres v. Toulmin, 74 Mich. 44.

¶ 238. A declaration for slander in alleging that plaintiff was a thief and had stolen wood from the defendant states a cause of action as against a demurrer on the ground that such declaration contains no colloquium, inducement, or statement of facts which in any wise show that the alleged slanderous words apply to the plaintiff, where, such allegations of slander in the declaration contain the words: "as follows, to wit, 'Uncle Billy, don't you want to go and help catch a thief?' (meaning thereby that the plaintiff was a thief, and had stolen wood from the defendant * * *)"; and: "I (meaning defendant) saw Fred Blount (meaning plaintiff) take wood off from my pile, and he has it now on his wagon, and I (defendant) want you (Sherman) to go with me to the mill, and see it unloaded"; since the innuendos in such declaration do not extend the sense of the words used in such allegations of slander beyond their own meaning.—Blount v. Mason, 140 Mich. 1.

¶ 239. In an action by a trading stamp company against a newspaper for libel, a demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained, where declaration alleged the following publication "Two suits (meaning the suits brought against the city of Detroit et al. by these plaintiffs and another stamp company) brought by trading stamp concerns (meaning as one of these, these plaintiffs, etc.) call attention in emphatic manner to the fact that this particular form of get-rich-quick industry is now outlawed in this city." It was defective because the only suggestion made that the plaintiff had brought suit is in the innuendo, and there was no averment in the declaration that the plaintiff had brought suit against the city.—Watson v. Detroit Journal Co., 143 Mich. 430.

§ 58. ——Allegations of injury or damage.

Necessity of alleging special damage from charges bearing on professional reputation, see also ante § 17.
Province of court and jury, see post § 106.
[Note. The rules for pleading damages as distinguished from injury are treated in Damages, X. But wherever the words are not actionable per se, the necessary allegations of an injury will also be allegation of damages. For this reason in addition to the cases found in this section those collated in Damages §§ 256, 271, should be consulted.]
Pleading the damages, see Damages §§ 256, 271.

¶ 240. The test by which to determine whether special damages must be alleged and proven in order to make out a cause of action for defamation is whether the language is such as necessarily must, or naturally and presumably will, occasion pecuniary damage.—Lewis v. Weidenfeller, 175 Mich. 296.

¶ 241. No averment of special damages to show a cause of action is needed where want of chastity has been imputed to a woman. The plaintiff may, without claiming special damages, show that in consequence of the slander she has been excluded from the society in which she had moved, and was affected in mind and health.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

¶ 242. If a declaration for libel alleges that the publication deprived the plaintiff of divers great gains and profits which would have accrued to him, it is sufficiently clear to indicate the kind of injury to be proved, and to sustain judgment if admitted by the defendants. But such language would not apply to an agent on a salary, and if the plaintiff were an agent it would indicate that he received part of the profits or a commission on the sales.—Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 Mich. 366.

¶ 243. In a declaration for libel a general allegation of the loss of trade is sufficient, ordinarily, without setting out the names of the customers lost, and it may be supported by evidence of such general loss.—Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 Mich. 366.

¶ 244. In an action for slander, an averment in the declaration concerning the good reputation of the plaintiff and that the defendant intending to injure the plaintiff in his good name, credit and reputation, uttered the words set out, and an allegation of the plaintiff's injury in his good name, credit and reputation is sufficient to allow the recovery for injury to the reputation.—Savlan v. Ayer, 129 Mich. 545.

¶ 245. Where the words of an alleged libel are actionable per se, the jury may be allowed to bring in general damages, though no special damages are alleged or proved.—Clair v. Battle Creek Journal Co., 168 Mich. 467.

§ 59. Pleas and notices.

Plea or notice of justification as evidence of malice, see post § 85.

Striking plea or notice from files, see Pleading, IV.

¶ 246. The notice of special matters to be given in evidence is required to contain all the requisites of a special plea in bar; and where, therefore, to a declaration in slander alleging that defendant charged plaintiff with having sworn falsely, defendant pleaded the general issue, and gave notice that he would prove on the trial "that the plaintiff was guilty of the acts charged on and imputed to him by the defendant in the several conversations in the declaration mentioned, and that if the words were uttered and published as charged in the declaration the defendant had good reason for uttering and publishing, and did it from good motives and for justifiable ends," held, that the notice was fatally defective, especially in omitting any averment that the plaintiff wilfully and deliberately swore falsely.—Thompson v. Bowers, 1 D. 321.

¶ 247. Under the statutory system of pleading (see Comp. L. 1857, §§ 4176-4178, which applies to actions for slander as well as to others) a notice of justification need not contain the substance of a special plea or be good on general demurrer; but it is enough if it briefly states the precise nature of the matter of defense.—Cresinger v. Reed, 25 Mich. 450.

¶ 248. The notice of justification attached to the plea in a libel suit stated that "the defendant would prove the truth of the allegations in said declaration contained." Held, that this evidently meant the allegations in the libels complained of, and that it was not too general.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 249. Where the notice of justification contained no specific averments, and was confined to the statements in the libel concerning the plaintiff, other acts not mentioned in the libel and not justified could not be proved either in justification or mitigation.—Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425, per Campbell, C. J., Champlin and Sherwood JJ. Morse, J., contra.

¶ 250. Pleadings in a libel suit that simply put in issue plaintiff's general character for probity require that a notice of justification should be special so as to inform plaintiff what he has to meet.—Wheaton v. Beecher, 79 Mich. 443.

¶ 251. A notice in a plea of truth in an action of slander that the words, "M. stole it" referred to certain corporate property in the plaintiff's possession and control which the plaintiff fraudulently sold and converted and caused to be carried away and used and appropriated by others and sold and appropriated the funds to his own use and "in this sense" that the defendant would prove the statement to be true is insufficient in that it does not charge larceny or facts sufficient to establish embezzlement because of its failure to allege that the plaintiff was an officer, clerk, or servant of the corporation.—McLeod v. Crosby, 128 Mich. 641.

¶ 252. Failure to demur to a declaration in an action for libel alleged to have been uttered in an answer to a bill in chancery does not waive the objection that the declaration failed to allege that the publication was not privileged.—Hartung v. Shaw, 130 Mich. 177.

¶ 252a. In an action for libel in charging that plaintiff had been guilty of taking indecent and criminal liberties with the persons of his pupils, defendants gave notice that they would give in evidence in their defense that they had learned that the teachers in the school in which plaintiff was teaching were in the habit of sending to saloons for liquors to be taken to the school, to plaintiff's knowledge, that defendants had been credibly informed of plaintiff's grossly immoral conduct as such teacher, and of his habit of having intoxicating liquors in the school, and of his immoral conduct in other respects while engaged as such teacher; that a coteacher, who was referred to in said article, had prosecuted defendants for criminal libel, and they had been acquitted; and that, believing the facts alleged against plaintiff to be true, defendants published the article complained of as a matter of great public interest and concern, and therefore should insist that it was privileged. Held, that the facts set forth in the notice, if true, do not support the charge published.—Thibault v. Sessions, 101 Mich. 279.

Admissibility of evidence of character and reputation, see post § 87.
Matters to be submitted to jury, see also post § 108.

¶ 253. One who sues for libel puts his previous reputation in issue, and defendant can show that even if the charge was false it probably did not injure him.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 255. In an action for libel against a newspaper publisher where the article complained of is to the effect that the plaintiff was arrested for crime, the plaintiff, the defendant having pleaded justification, may prove that the charge against him was a mere violation of the postal laws, was withdrawn shortly after having been made, and was followed by no further charge, also that the defendant's reporter, when preparing the item was fully aware of these facts.—McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 95 Mich. 164.

¶ 256. Where the defendant in an action for libel, under a special notice of justification, has proved the truth of the charge that plaintiff was guilty of a criminal offense, which constituted the gist of the publication sued upon, the fact that the article averred that plaintiff had been held for trial for such offense when in fact he had been held for examination only, becomes immaterial.—McGuire v. Vaughan, 106 Mich. 280.

¶ 257. There is no question of privilege in a libel suit where the defendants admit that they had no ground for charging the plaintiff with being party to a corrupt agreement alleged to have been made between him and the mayor and where they admit that the plaintiff is in no way connected with their present controversy with the mayor.—Smedley v. Soule, 125 Mich. 192.

§ 61. ——Scope of plea or notice.
See also ante § 59.

¶ 258. Pleading the general issue in an action for slander admits the falsity of the words charged.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292.

¶ 259. In an action for slander in accusing plaintiff of burning defendant's barn, the plea of the general issue does not raise the question whether plaintiff burnt it or not; and evidence of threats by plaintiff that the barn would be burned are not admissible, except to show the bias of plaintiff, or in mitigation of damages, if communicated to defendant before the alleged slanderous words were spoken.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112.

¶ 260. That alleged slanderous words were privileged cannot be shown under a plea of the general issue.—Sanford v. Houghton, 184 Mich. 44.

¶ 261. In an action for libel, if the communication was privileged, the plaintiff is bound to prove both the falsity of the publication and the malice in making it, and the defendant is entitled to give evidence of its truth under the general issue without special notice.—Edwards v. Chandler, 14 Mich. 471.

¶ 262. It is not competent to prove distinct facts in defense that have not been made part of the issue as framed.—Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425.

¶ 263. Where plaintiff, in an action for libel, sets out the published article complained of in his declaration, such article containing charges against plaintiff, a public officer and also against other officers in the township, but the justification is specific on the charges against plaintiff alone, the court will restrict the evidence for the defense to the particular charges against plaintiff.—Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425, per Campbell, C. J., Champlin and Sherwood, JJ. Morse, J., contra.

¶ 264. Defendant sued for libel for charging plaintiff with securing, while a member of the legislature, the passage of a bill by bribery, cannot, without having given notice in its plea, show specific acts of bribery committed by plaintiff at different political meetings prior to his nomination and election.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

¶ 265. Where in an action for slander consisting, as alleged, in charging plaintiff with having committed the crimes of perjury and larceny, defendant gives notice that under his plea of the general issue he will prove the truth of the charge as to the commission of the first-named crime, the court should exclude, not only such circumstances as tend to prove the truth of the other accusation, but all the circumstances which would tend to cast suspicion upon plaintiff as having been guilty of said offense.—McNaughton v. Quay, 102 Mich. 142.

¶ 266. In an action for libel in charging plaintiff with having committed an assault with intent to do great bodily harm, less than the crime of murder, the specific averment being that plaintiff had seized a pitchfork and thrust it into the thigh of a certain person, evidence that plaintiff ran the fork through the person's clothing, but that it did not penetrate his thigh, is admissible under a special notice of justification setting up the facts.—McGuire v. Vaughan, 106 Mich. 280.

¶ 267. In an action for slander charging the defendant with saying "M. stole it" which words refer to corporate property, a notice under a plea setting out the appropriation of the corporate property and that the plaintiff became guilty of larceny or embezzlement is sufficient to give notice that the defendant relied upon proving embezzlement and such proof would establish the truth of the charge, as under the statute one who embezzles may be said to steal.—McLeod v. Crosby, 128 Mich. 641.

¶ 268. The defendant under a plea justifying libelous language that charges the plaintiff with political treachery and with readiness to commit perjury to defend himself against charges of such treachery, may show the plaintiff's general reputation not only for truth and veracity, but also for political integrity.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

¶ 269. In an action for libel, where a plea of justification was filed, evidence of plaintiff's good reputation previous to the publication complained of held admissible, as such plea in effect puts upon the record a repetition of the defamatory charge and included a deliberate averment of its truth.—Cyrowski v. Polish-American Pub. Co., 196 Mich. 648.

§ 62. ——Innuendo as limiting issues or proof.

Nature and purpose of innuendo, see ante § 56.

¶ 270. If a plaintiff counts upon a publication as an entirety, he cannot, by confining the innuendo to a portion of it only, limit defendants' right to justify it as an entirety and show that he had no reputation that would be injured by any part of it.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 271. Where a publication complained of in its entirety as a libel charged the several offenses of seduction, adultery and abortion, which, while distinct in themselves, were parts of a single and continuous transaction, it was held that the plaintiff could not, by so using the innuendo as to confine his cause of action to the charge of abortion alone, limit defendants' right to show that plaintiff's previous reputation was such that nothing in the publication could have injured it.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

§ 63. Variance between declaration and proof.

Sufficiency of declaration, see ante § 58 et seq.

Necessity of alleging special damage or injury, see ante § 58.

Variance as to charges of theft or larceny, see post § 63.

General law as to variance, see Pleading, X.

¶ 272. A count in slander alleging that the defendant uttered and published that the plaintiff, who was postmaster at F., embezzled certain papers, is not supported by proof that he said he had no doubt that the papers were embezzled at F., or he thought that the papers were embezzled at the post-office at F.—Taylor v. Kneeland, 1 D. 67.

¶ 273. Slanderous words, uttered in a conditional or hypothetical statement, will not support an averment of slanderous words laid as a positive and direct assertion.—Evarts v. Smith, 19 Mich. 55.

¶ 274. The rule that the use of slanderous words must be proved as alleged in the declaration does not exclude proof of other words not changing their effect.—Brown v. Barnes, 39 Mich. 211.

¶ 275. In an action for libel an allegation that a person has been "indicted" is supported by proof that he has been prosecuted and convicted in justice's court on information.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 276. A charge made against a justice of the peace that he stole whisky fines is not supported by proof that he has not paid over a fine which he had imposed for an assault.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 277. A declaration averring injury to plaintiff's business and reputation among his Holland fellow-citizens does not put plaintiff to proof that they are citizens in the technical sense. All persons are citizens in the ordinary popular sense.—Steketee v. Kimm, 48 Mich. 322.

¶ 278. An allegation in a declaration for slander that defendant charged plaintiff with larceny from a "butcher shop" is supported by proof that the charge was of larceny from a "meat market."—Wiest v. Luyendyk, 73 Mich. 661.

¶¶ 279, 280. Evidence that defendant in an action for slander stated to witnesses that he was confident that plaintiff had taken money and certain other articles, and made other statements fairly imputing a charge of larceny, supplemented by his admission that he intended to convey the idea that plaintiff had stolen, will support a verdict for plaintiff, although the words proved to have been uttered are slightly different from those set out in the declaration.—Hewitt v. Morley, 111 Mich. 187.

¶ 281. Under a declaration for slander alleging that the words complained of were used in the presence and hearing of divers persons besides plaintiff, plaintiff may establish publication by showing that one person other than the parties was present and heard the slanderous words.—Loranger v. Loranger, 115 Mich. 681.

¶ 282. Proof of the repetition of slanderous words need not show a verbatim repetition.—McCloy v. Vaughan, 185 Mich. 189.

¶ 283. Where the charge is the uttering of slanderous words affecting business standing, it must be sustained by proof that the words were actually spoken of and concerning the plaintiff in relation to his business, in order to make them slanderous per se.—Dallavo v. Snider, 143 Mich. 542.

¶ 284. Whether or not an oral slander in words that would be actionable as a libel would be actionable without proof of special damage, quære.—Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 Mich. 366.

Instructions as to degree of proof necessary in establishing crime imputed to defendant, see post ¶ 556.

¶ 285. The burden of proving malice, whether express or implied, rests upon plaintiff.—Huson v. Dale, 19 Mich. 17.

¶ 286. A letter derogatory of a clergyman's character, written by a member of his congregation, to the board of a church of which he is about to assume charge, and referring to persons to confirm such information, is a quasi privileged communication, and where made the basis of an action for a libel, plaintiff must prove both the falsity of the charge and malice.—Konkle v. Haven, 140 Mich. 472.

¶ 287. In an action for slander the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to prove the defendant's knowledge of the falsity of the charge made where the publication was qualifiedly privileged, and made in answer to questions asked by one who had the right to ask them and be answered.—Schultz v. Guldenstein, 144 Mich. 636.

¶ 288. The burden of proving the negligence of a newspaper proprietor in retaining employees through whose recklessness or malice a libel has been published is on plaintiff.—Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

¶ 289. Where a communication is privileged, the plaintiff must prove not only the falsity of the communication, but also that it was published with express malice.—Trimble v. Morrish, 152 Mich. 624.

§ 66. ——As to privilege.

¶ 290. In an action of slander for words in a letter which contains nothing on its face to show that it is privileged, the burden of proof is on defendant to show that it is so; and where it was a reply to one written to defendant which defendant had not introduced, raising no objection, meanwhile, to plaintiff's failure to call for it, defendant cannot, on the basis of any presumption that his letter was strictly responsive to the other, raise the question of its admissibility unaccompanied by the other by a request to charge that if it was thus strictly responsive and without malice, and written in the ordinary course of business, he is entitled to a verdict.—Day v. Backus, 31 Mich. 241.

¶ 291. In a slander case where the publication was qualifiedly privileged the plaintiff has the burden of proving an abuse of privilege, and such abuse is not found in the words spoken, the manner of speech, or the presence in which they were spoken.—Schultz v. Guldenstein, 144 Mich. 636.

§ 67. ——As to justification.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish justification, see post § 101.

¶ 292. Where the defendant in a libel suit gives notice of a general justification without serving particulars, he must prove the truth of the libelous statements precisely as charged in the declaration.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 293. The following words were printed of a clergyman: "Then there was that Iowa Beecher business of his which beat him out of a station at Grass Lake." He sued for libel, alleging that they implied a charge of adultery. A general notice of justification was filed with the plea. Held, that to justify the words, the defendant must have shown a loss of position at Grass Lake upon some charge of immoral conduct affecting the plaintiff's clerical character.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 294. Plaintiff in an action for slander having shown the utterance of slanderous words in the presence of third persons, the burden is upon defendant to prove his justification.—Finley v. Widner, 112 Mich. 230.

§ 68. Presumptions.

General law as to presumptions, see Evidence, II.

¶ 295. It is presumed that an article in the Dutch language, printed in a local Dutch newspaper of large circulation, is understood by its readers without an English translation.—Steketee v. Kimm, 48 Mich. 322.

¶ 296. The law presumes that the character of a plaintiff is good until attacked, and he can safely rest upon that presumption, in an action for libel.—Cyrowski v. Polish-American Pub. Co., 196 Mich. 648.

§ 69. ——As to malice and intent.

See also ante § 49.

Evidence to show malice or intent, see post § 79 et seq.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish malice, see post § 102.

Instructions as to malice or intent, see post § 120.

¶ 297. Words charging another with the crime of larceny are actionable, and if used without warrant the law presumes malice.—Bell v. Fernald, 71 Mich. 267.

¶ 298. Malice is the gist of an action for slander, and is evidenced by the speaking of actionable words.—Ritchie v. Stenius, 73 Mich. 563.

¶ 299. A publication libelous per se is presumed to be voluntary and malicious.—Owen v. Dewey, 107 Mich. 67.

¶ 300. Printed matter charging a person with being dishonest is libelous per se, and legal malice is presumable from its publication.—People v. Talbot, 196 Mich. 520.

¶ 301. The time, place and attending circumstances are an important consideration in a charge of slander, and not only may the occasion and surrounding circumstances rebut the presumption of malice but a distinction must be recognized in many particulars between the same or similar defamatory words, when spoken in passion or in the heat of controversy and when deliberately written or printed.—Bolton v. Walker, 197 Mich. 699.

¶ 302. Express malice may be inferred from reckless charges of crime primarily intended for another than the plaintiff who is brought in incidentally, notwithstanding the plaintiff testifies that he never believed that the defendants had anything personally against him.—Smedley v. Soule, 125 Mich. 192.

¶ 303. An inference of actual malice may be drawn from the mere publication of a slanderous privileged communication, but it must contain on its face evidence of malice.—Trimble v. Morrish, 152 Mich. 624.

¶ 304. In an action of slander, actual malice in the defendant cannot be inferred from the fact that he declines to reveal his informant.—Trimble v. Morrish, 152 Mich. 624.

§ 70. ——Injury or damage.

See also post ¶ 515.

Extent, aggravation and mitigation of damages, see ante § 52.

Presumption of injury from charges bearing on professional reputation, see also ante § 17.

[Note. The presumptions as to damages (not injury) have been treated in Damages § 289 et seq. The so-called presumption of damages from words that are per se defamatory is merely the rule, stated in the form of a presumption, that the words are in themselves an injury without regard to extraneous facts; but because of the difficulty of making this distinction in the cases, those in Damages should be consulted as well as those found here.]

¶ 305. Newspapers may discuss what relates to the life, habits, comfort, happiness and welfare of the people, and in doing so may state facts, draw inferences therefrom and express views upon the facts. Their deductions, even if false, are not actionable unless they cause special damages, but damage is presumed if they impute the commission of crime.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

§ 71. Admissibility of evidence in general.

Communications to police officer excluded on ground of privilege, see ante ¶ 148.

Proper mode of examination, cross-examination, and redirect examination, see Examination of Witnesses.

¶ 306. Repetition of a newspaper libel may be shown by proving the publication of the declaration containing the libelous articles in full.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

¶ 307. It is incompetent for defendant in a libel case to read at the trial a statement from plaintiff's affidavit for a change of venue that he believed a fair and impartial trial could not be had in his own county.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

¶ 308. In an action for slanderously charging adultery, testimony that a certain witness had sent defendant a message offering to clear him for a sum of money is irrelevant to the main issue, though it would be proper on cross-examination of the witness himself.—Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41.

¶ 309. In an action for libel against a husband and wife based upon a letter signed with both their names, it was prejudicial error to permit the plaintiff to introduce damaging statements made by the wife and evidence of her conduct toward him before any evidence had been introduced connecting her with the alleged publication of the letter, there being evidence that the letter was written by the husband alone and that she knew nothing of it until after it was written, and the error was not cured by an order of the court striking it out at the close of the trial and directing the jury to disregard it.—Konkle v. Haven, 144 Mich. 667.

§ 72. ——Complementary and related parts or versions of slanderous statements.

Right of defendant to introduce other articles to show good faith, see post § 82.
Whole conversation as res gestæ of defamatory words, see Evidence ¶ 2355.

¶ 310. Where the defendant admits using the slanderous words charged, but claims they were spoken of a person other than the plaintiff, the whole conversation may be given to show of whom they were spoken.—Newman v. Stein, 75 Mich. 402.

¶ 311. The whole of the conversation in which the alleged slanderous words were used is admissible as part of the res gestæ.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 312. After plaintiff has given his version of a slander defendant may give his version of the conversation alleged to have been slanderous, even though he has given notice of justification, and though such version includes statements not narrated by plaintiff, since the additional words may throw light upon the question of malice.—Georgia v. Bond, 114 Mich. 196.

§ 73. Evidence as to application of words to plaintiff.

Allegations showing application of words to plaintiff, see ante § 57.
Giving entire conversation in evidence, see ante ¶ 310.

Sufficiency of evidence to show application of words to plaintiff, see post § 100.
Province of court and jury, see post § 106.
Instructions as to application of words used, see post § 116.

¶ 313. A newspaper article complained of as libelous did not name the plaintiff, but it was practically conceded that he was the person referred to. Held, that the exclusion of a subsequent article, naming him, when offered merely for the purpose of establishing identity and objected to as incompetent for that purpose, was not material error.—Peoples v. Evening News Ass'n, 51 Mich. 11.

¶ 314. Where the name of plaintiff in a libel suit is misspelled in the alleged libelous article, but in sound is very similar to the correct name, it is competent for the plaintiff to show by persons living in the vicinity, and who read the article, that they understood it to refer to the plaintiff.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593.

¶ 315. In an action for slander against a priest for words spoken from the pulpit, admission of testimony of witnesses who were present, to the effect that they understood defendant to mean plaintiff, because "he referred to a 'barber,' and made a motion with his hand about a razor," was not prejudicial, where defendant admitted that he used the word "barber" in his talk, and that plaintiff was the only barber in his church.—Provost v. Brueck, 110 Mich. 136.

¶ 316. In an action for slander for accusing plaintiff of theft, the defendant may properly be cross-examined as to whether, on a previous trial, he did not testify that to his mind the words "take" and "steal" mean the same thing, where defendant insists he did not use the word "steal" with reference to plaintiff.—Kelley v. Paulsen, 162 Mich. 169.

§ 74. Evidence as to publication.

¶ 317. In an action for slander there is no error in refusing to admit a neighbor's testimony that he never heard it.—Brown v. Barnes, 39 Mich. 211.

¶ 318. The testimony of ministers who in their ministerial office draw forth from a party statements of an ancient transaction, which is made the ground of a slander suit, is inadmissible to show publication of the slander.—Vickers v. Stoneman, 73 Mich. 419.

¶ 319. It is not proper, in an action for slander, to prove the utterance of slanderous words by reading to the plaintiff as a witness the words as laid in the declaration and by then interrogating him with regard to them; nor is it within the circuit judge's discretion to permit such mode of examination.—Osborn v. Forshee, 22 Mich. 209.

§ 75. ——Extent of publicity.
Business and social standing of defendant as bearing on influence of his word in community, see post § 97.

¶ 321. As showing the extent to which the public has taken notice of a libelous article it may be shown that various persons called plaintiff's attention to such article.—Park v. Detroit Free Press Co., 72 Mich. 560.

¶ 322. In an action for libel the circulation of the defendant's paper may be shown, as making it probable that the article has been read by several persons.—Park v. Detroit Free Press Co., 72 Mich. 560.

¶ 323. In an action for libel alleging special damage by reason of the libelous matter charged, testimony of statements made by third persons not produced as witnesses relating to remarks made by them, their conduct and opinions as exhibited and expressed by them concerning the plaintiff after some time had elapsed from the publication of such matter, held admissible.—Cyrowski v. Polish-American Pub. Co., 196 Mich. 648.

Province of court and jury, see post § 104.

¶ 324. Where statements complained of as libelous were published in several papers besides the one against which suit was brought and then retracted, it was error to allow the plaintiff to show that the same correspondent gave the information to all the papers, when he was in no sense the general representative of any of them, and defendant was not responsible for what he might do except in so far as it adopted his statements and published them.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 326. Where, in an action of libel, it appears that the statement complained of was made by defendant to a newspaper reporter and was afterward published, and where the reported testifies fully as to his interview with defendant and that he afterward wrote out the conversation without showing it to defendant and without his request, it is proper to ask the reporter whether he had anything to do with the publication of the article; for the question must be understood as relating to the procurement of publication or printing in the newspaper.—Wheaton v. Beecher, 79 Mich. 443.

¶ 327. The facts that a wife, codefendant with her husband in an action for a libel consisting of a letter defamatory of a clergyman, had made statements derogatory of the character of the plaintiff and his family to a third person, and that she and her husband did not attend church of which plaintiff was pastor after some difficulty arising therein, were not evidence that she signed such letter.—Konkle v. Haven, 140 Mich. 472.

¶ 328. In a civil action for newspaper libel, defendant, who was publisher of the paper, was properly allowed to state, on cross-examination, that the article complained of was not written by him.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

§ 77. Evidence as to meaning or understanding of words.
Construction and application of charges, see also ante § 24 et seq.
Evidence to show application of words to plaintiff, see ante § 78.

Instructions bearing on meaning and application of words used, see post § 116.
Inadmissibility of opinion as to libelousness of words, see Evidence § 211.
Judicial notice of meanings of figurative expressions, see Evidence § 5.

¶ 329. In an action for slander it is not competent to ask a witness who has testified to a conversation held with defendant since the suit began what he understood defendant to mean by his remarks. That is a question for the jury.—Cresinger v. Reed, 25 Mich. 450.

¶ 330. One sued for libel may be permitted to testify that he had no ill-will against plaintiff when he made publication, and that the sole motive was the public good; but it is error to allow him to testify, where the article is unambiguous, that he did not intend to charge plaintiff with any crime or misdemeanor.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 331. In an action for slander for saying of plaintiff "He is a thief," the surrounding circumstances as well as the connection in which the words were used, may be shown for the purpose of establishing that the words could not have been understood as imputing a crime.—Line v. Spies, 139 Mich. 484.

¶ 332. In an action for slander, testimony as to the understanding of the words used, by the bystanders cannot be used to aid an innuendo or to enlarge the meaning of the words actually used.—Line v. Spies, 139 Mich. 484.

¶ 333. In an action for libel imputing to an officer the presentation of a false claim to supervisor's evidence tending to show the opinions of the supervisors relative to the matter is incompetent.—Gripman v. Kitchell, 173 Mich. 242.

§ 78. Admissibility of fact of malice or good faith.

Malice and intent in general, see ante § 49.
Evidence to show malice or intent, see post § 79.

¶ 334. In an action for libel brought against members of a grand jury in making and filing a report containing libelous matters as to plaintiff not privileged, evidence of defendant's good faith in making such report held not admissible in bar of the action, but in mitigation of damages only.—Bennett v. Stockwell, 197 Mich. 50.

¶ 335. As a general rule, in actions of libel and slander, defendant may mitigate damages by showing any circumstances which tend to disprove malice.—Orth v. Featherly, 87 Mich. 315.

¶ 336. Where a libelous charge is made against a candidate for office, and there is only a technical variance between the charge and its justification, proof that the party making it honestly believed it should be received to show that there was no wrong intent.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 338. In an action for newspaper libel the motive of a subordinate in publishing the article complained of is irrelevant if not communicated to his principal, the defendant, and if a showing has been made of everything that passed between principal and subordinate before publication. And where defendant, besides testifying that he had no ill-will toward plaintiff and did not know him, and that he had put implicit confidence in his subordinate, had also been allowed to show all that took place before the publication, and the information on which he acted, there was no material error in excluding a question as to whether he had any purpose to injure plaintiff in assenting to the publication, especially where it was put by his own counsel in cross-examining him when called by plaintiff to show his control of the paper.—Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

Res gestæ showing malice or knowledge, see also Evidence § 451.

¶ 339. In an action for slander brought by a servant of the owner of goods alleged to have been stolen against a person who, having been requested to recover such goods, accused plaintiff of theft, evidence of a misunderstanding unknown to defendant, between plaintiff and her employer, which led to plaintiff's discharge, is inadmissible to show malice.—Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498.

¶ 340. Defendant was charged with saying of plaintiff "he is a damned, low-lived, thieving son of a bitch, and I have had a man watching him and seen him steal." Held, that in order to show malice, though not to prove the words charged, it was proper to permit a witness who had heard the latter part of the conversation, in which such words were used, to state that defendant in such part said that plaintiff "is a thief and I can prove it."—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 341. In an action against a corporation for libel evidence tending to show malice against plaintiff on the part of one of defendant's stockholders who is not shown to have instigated the article complained of, or to have been connected with the publication thereof, is inadmissible.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

¶ 342. A letter sent by defendant to one of the firms to whom the alleged libelous statement had been sent, dated about the time of the sending of the same, informing said firm that the firm of which defendant was a member would withhold its patronage from any house or firm, etc., which might thereafter accept less than the full amount of its claim from any customer in the city where plaintiff and defendant resided, except it should be from an assignee or a court of equity, and for liquidation, is admissible as tending to indicate malice, and show a motive for injuring plaintiff's credit.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 343. Testimony that the statement containing the alleged slanderous words was made to a police officer in a public place, in the presence of others, is evidence for the jury on the question of malice.—Garn v. Lockard, 108 Mich. 196.

¶ 344. In an action for slander from the pulpit evidence of an altercation in the church so connected with the utterance of the alleged slanderous words as to form a part of the res gestæ is admissible as bearing upon the question of malice.—Provost v. Brueck, 110 Mich. 136.

¶ 345. The fact that a privileged statement is false is no evidence of malice in the absence of proof that the party making it knew of its falsity.—Howard v. Dickie, 120 Mich. 238.

¶ 346. The fact that one, making a statement at a quarterly church conference in regard to a candidate for trustee, alleged to be slanderous, had previously notified the pastor that he should oppose the election of the person in question, is no evidence of malice since he had a right to give such notice of his intention.—Howard v. Dickie, 120 Mich. 238.

¶ 347. In a libel suit by a sheriff, cross-examination as to statements made by the defendant during trial to the effect that he had made another sheriff smart and would make the plaintiff smart before he got through, is inadmissible to show malice, as it had no relation to the feelings of the defendant at the time of the publication in question.—Scoufale v. Sweet, 124 Mich. 311.

¶ 348. In an action of slander, evidence of prior dealings of the parties, their acts and treatment in regard to each other, and generally, evidence showing the state of their feelings, is admissible as tending to prove the motive in making a defamatory statement.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

¶ 349. In an action for libel, testimony of third persons who advised the editor of the defendant publishing company to question the plaintiff about the truth or falsity of the alleged libelous article before publication, held admissible as bearing upon defendants' good faith and as showing malice.—Cyrowski v. Polish-American Pub. Co., 196 Mich. 648.

¶ 350. In an action for slander for speaking words accusing plaintiff of having set fire to defendant's house, the fact that defendant had previously signed and verified a complaint for arson against plaintiff is not evidence of defendant's malice where such complaint was made by defendant upon the request or advice of the examining officers, but it may be considered by the jury where it is one of a series of acts.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

¶ 351. In an action for newspaper libel the judge instructed the jury that a portion of the article complained of was privileged, but permitted them to consider it with the rest in deciding from the general spirit of the article whether that part which was left to their consideration was malicious.—Held error.—Miner v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 49 Mich. 358.

§ 80. ——Repetition or republication of charges.

See also ante ¶ 282.
Evidence to show repetition of newspaper libel, see also ante ¶ 306.

Showing other similar publications, see post § 82.
Repetition of charges made by others, see ante § 45.
Jury question as to effect of second publication, see post ¶ 506.

¶ 352. In an action for slander, proof of repetitions of the slander charged in the declaration is admissible to show malice upon defendant's part.—Beneway v. Thorp, 77 Mich. 181.

¶ 353. Evidence of repetitions of slanderous words is competent only to prove malice, and not to prove the commission of the particular slander sued for.—Kelley v. Paulsen, 162 Mich. 169.

¶ 354. In an action of libel against a newspaper a republication, with comment, after suit began of the alleged libelous article, is admissible to show malice.—Welch v. Tribune Publishing Co., 83 Mich. 661.

¶ 355. In an action for libel, subsequent publications similar in character to that complained of are admissible upon the question of malice.—Owen v. Dewey, 107 Mich. 67.

¶ 356. Malice may be shown from the repetition of slanderous words of similar import to those alleged, and which are calculated to produce the same impression on the community as those originally spoken.—McCloy v. Vaughan, 185 Mich. 189.

§ 81. ——Privileged statements of same charge.

¶ 357. Privileged communications are not admissible in a slander suit for the purpose of showing malice.—Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 124 Mich. 230.

§ 82. ——Other or similar publications or statements.

Admission of subsequent newspaper article to establish identity, see ante ¶ 313.
Admissibility of articles published in other papers, see also post ¶ 417.
Statements of defendant when asked to retract, see post ¶ 386.

¶ 358. Other similar publications made by defendant on the same or the following day may be shown as bearing on the question of malice.—Whittemore v. Weiss, 33 Mich. 348.

¶ 359. Where an alleged libelous article is one of a series relating to a matter of public concern, defendant may introduce them all to show good faith on his part.—Scripps v. Foster, 41 Mich. 742.

¶ 360. In an action for slander, evidence of other slanderous statements than those alleged in the declaration, made during the course of the same conversations, and being of the same general character, is admissible to show malice and ill feeling on defendant's part.—Botsford v. Chase, 108 Mich. 432.

¶ 361. In an action for newspaper libel an offer was made to show that the declaration was afterward published with head-lines referring to the plaintiff's attorney but not to plaintiff. Held proper to exclude proof of the head-lines.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

¶ 362. In an action for newspaper libel the editor was properly allowed to testify that at the request of plaintiff's counsel he had previously published a synopsis of the declaration in a similar suit brought by the same plaintiff against another paper.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

¶ 363. In an action for libel against a newspaper publisher for publishing an article charging that gambling was going on in the village of which plaintiff was marshal, and that he, with knowledge of the fact, failed to suppress it, defendant testified that the first information that he had that gambling was being so carried on was from reading an article in a village paper, and that he was afterwards asked why he had not made as full a statement of the matter as the paper named, and that this led up to the publication of the alleged libelous article. Held, that under this testimony the other article was properly admitted in evidence, not as proof of the facts therein stated, but to show defendant's good faith and in mitigation of damages.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 364. Where the libel complained of charges that the plaintiff has been guilty of political treachery and would commit perjury to defend himself from charges thereof, the defendant may introduce in evidence prior publications in his paper which refer to the same matters, in which publications the plaintiff is charged with political treachery, and which in general arraign him as a political traitor; notwithstanding that suit was brought on such publications.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

¶ 365. In an action of slander for calling plaintiff a thief, evidence that at another time and place than as stated in the declaration defendant said that "he had called" plaintiff "a thief to his face, and that he could prove it," is admissible as bearing on malice.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 366. Other publications authorized by defendant and made prior to the one sued for are admissible when evincive of animus, if that is in issue in the case, as to which, quære, where the article was a political comment and justification was pleaded.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

¶ 367. In an action by a city attorney against a newspaper for a libelous publication an article printed in the same paper eight months after the publication of the alleged libel attacking his candidacy for office is admissible to prove malice, and an objection that it was too remote, incompetent and immaterial is properly overruled.—Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637.

¶ 368. Previous statements of the defendant tending to show malice may be shown in an action for slander.—Sanford v. Houghton, 184 Mich. 44.

¶ 369. In an action against a newspaper company for charging a jury of which plaintiff was a member with perjury in their verdict, it is not an abuse of discretion to allow plaintiff to be asked on his cross-examination whether all the newspapers in the city did not publish articles severely criticizing the jury's action; the publications having characterized the verdict as extraordinary, and thus tending to show that the public so regarded it.—Welch v. Tribune Pub. Co., 83 Mich. 661.

§ 83. ——Common rumor or reports of similar imputation.

¶ 370. A witness to the uttering of slanderous words cannot testify that he had heard the same and similar remarks extending over a period not limited to the time before the slander, and not shown to have led to the defendant's belief in the truth of what he had said.—Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41.

¶ 371. That defendant, before publishing the libel complained of, had heard the same charges made by others, is admissible in mitigation of damages.—Orth v. Featherly, 87 Mich. 315.

¶ 372. Where, in the trial of an action for libel charging plaintiff with bribing other members of the legislature, a witness for defendant has testified to the badness of plaintiff's general reputation in respect to the corrupt use of money in political connections, such witness cannot be asked on cross-examination whether charges of corruption against prominent politicians are not common.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

¶ 373. In an action for newspaper libel, an alleged interview with plaintiff, published in another paper, and claimed by defendant to be the basis of the article in suit, is admissible to rebut the presumption of malice, but not to prove the truth of the publication.—Owen v. Dewey, 107 Mich. 67.

¶ 374. A defendant in an action for slander may show in mitigation of damages, as bearing on the quo animo, that, before uttering the words imputed to him, he had been informed that stories to the same purport as his subsequent statement were already afloat in the neighborhood.—Fowler v. Fowler, 113 Mich. 575.

¶ 375. In mitigation of damages, in an action for libel, it is competent to show that the defendant has heard that the charges contained in the article have been made by other persons, but it is unimportant whether other persons have heard them or not, as proof that the gist of the charges was true would tend to show belief as well as justification, but proof that others have heard rumors or statements tends to prove neither that the defendant has heard them nor that he has believed them.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 376. In an action for slander by imputing a crime the testimony of third persons, that they had heard a damaging report imputing a like crime to plaintiff some years before, is incompetent; where it appears that defendant's information was acquired from an entirely different source and that such report was not communicated to him; since it would not tend to show belief of the truth of the charge by defendant, and thus rebut malice and mitigate damages, and was inadmissible for any other purpose.—Wolff v. Smith, 112 Mich. 359.

§ 84. ——Negligence of defendant as employer.
Evidence bearing on gravity of injury, see post § 95.

¶ 377. In an action for newspaper libel an article published in the same paper more than a month after the article complained of is too remote to be admissible as bearing on the care and prudence with which the paper was managed at the time of the libel; its management afterwards is immaterial.—Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371.

¶ 378. Copies of a newspaper containing specimen articles may be put in evidence to show the character it has established, as bearing on the question what degree of care and prudence was exercised in publishing an article complained of as libelous.—Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

¶ 379. In an action for newspaper libel, the haste incident to issuing the paper, the time at which the libelous article was handed in, and the sufficiency of the force employed on the paper for gathering the news and preparing and supervising articles for publication, may be considered as bearing on the question of the publisher's negligence.—Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10.

§ 85. ——Plea or notice of justification as evidence of malice.
Provisions that notice of justification not proof of malice, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 12755.

¶ 380. A notice of justification is not evidence of malice, nor can it be treated as a republication of the libel, and no facts are put in issue except those declared on.—Wheaton v. Beecher, 79 Mich. 443.

¶ 381. Under How. St. § 7776 providing that in actions for slander or libel, notice in justification that the statements were true, though not maintained by the evidence, shall not be of itself proof of malice, such notice may be considered as evidence tending to show malice since "proof" as used in the statute is not synonymous with "evidence."—Jastrzembski v. Marxhausen, 120 Mich. 677.

¶ 382. Notice of justification, though not maintained by the evidence, is not of itself proof of the malice charged in the declaration for malice under Comp. L. 1897, § 10415, How., 2nd Ed., § 13129 but such unsustained notice may be evidence tending to show malice when taken in connection with other facts established.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

§ 86. Admissibility of retractions and demands for and refusals thereof.

Province of judge and jury as to retraction, see post § 110.
Provisions as to retraction, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 23, Comp. L. 1915, § 12759.

¶ 384. Retractions are not evidence of the circumstances under which the original publication was made, or of the good faith of such publication, but when published before suit and immediately after the libel they are admissible in mitigation of damages.—Davis v. Marxhausen, 103 Mich. 315.

¶ 385. A subsequent article published by defendants, containing a letter from plaintiff demanding a retraction, which was refused, was properly admissible on the issue of malice.—Thibault v. Sessions, 101 Mich. 279.

¶ 386. In an action for newspaper libel, an article subsequently published in another paper, containing plaintiff's explanation of the circumstances constituting the foundation for the charge complained of, and shown to have been read by defendant at the time of his refusal to publish a retraction, is admissible, upon the question of motive; and, for a like purpose, it is competent to show what was said by defendant when asked to retract.—Long v. Tribune Printing Co., 107 Mich. 207.

¶ 387. A notice to retract all of a libelous article is good as to a portion thereof, and hence such notice is properly admitted after the plaintiff by amendment had eliminated portions of the article claimed to be libelous.—Aronson v. Baldwin, 178 Mich. 565.

¶ 388. Where plaintiff, on being shown a writing asking defendant to retract the alleged libelous charge, testifies that he signed it, it is proper to admit such paper conditioning its reading to the jury upon proof that it be shown to have reached defendant.—Welch v. Tribune Publishing Co., 83 Mich. 661.

§ 87. Admissibility of character and reputation.

Showing reputation under plea of justification, see ante ¶¶ 268, 269.
General reputation as sufficient justification for charges, see post § 101.
Plaintiff's general reputation for dishonesty, see also post ¶ 549.
Evidence to show character and reputation, see post § 88.
Evidence bearing on gravity of injury or in mitigation, see also post § 95 et seq.
Rebuttal testimony as to general reputation of plaintiff, see also Trial, V, B.

¶ 389. The plaintiff in an action for slander cannot introduce evidence of his general good character and reputation unless it has been attacked; and this is so even though on cross-examination inquiries have been made of him as to specific facts that may tend to affect his good character.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112.

¶ 390. The general reputation only of a plaintiff, and not specific acts, can be shown in libel and slander.—Wells v. Toogood, 165 Mich. 677.

¶ 391. Plaintiff's general reputation only can be shown in mitigation of damages.—Thibault v. Sessions, 101 Mich. 279.

¶ 392. In an action for slander in charging plaintiff, a stock buyer, with cheating in the weight of defendant's hogs, evidence of plaintiff's bad reputation for honesty and uprightness in a place where he had formerly lived is admissible on the question of damages.—Georgia v. Bond, 114 Mich. 196.

§ 88. Evidence to prove character and reputation.

Reputation as issue, see also ante § 60.
Evidence bearing on damages, see also post § 95 et seq.

¶ 393. In showing that the reputation of the plaintiff in a libel suit was such that the charge could not have injured him, the defense is properly confined to the testimony of witnesses who could testify that they knew plaintiff's reputation before the charge was published.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 394. In an action for slander in charging plaintiff with being a woman of gross unchastity, her character for chastity can only be assailed by testimony of general reputation, and not by proof of particular acts or particular suspicions.—Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41.

¶ 395. It is proper on authority of Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41, to exclude evidence of alleged orgies of a plaintiff in an action for libel, and of other matters affecting her character, offered to reduce damages.—McGee v. Baumgartner, 121 Mich. 287.

§ 89. Evidence in justification.

Justification in general, see ante III.
Sufficiency of evidence in justification, see post § 101.
Province of court and jury, see post § 109.
Instructions as to justification, see post § 119.
Order of proof as to justification and privilege, see Trial, V, B.
Impropriety of proving justification by cross-examination of adversary witnesses, see Examination of Witnesses § 44.

¶ 396. Irrelevant slanders are not admissible in evidence by way of colorable justification.—Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41.

¶ 397. Evidence to justify statements published after the commencement of a suit for libel is not admissible.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 398. A lawyer brought an action for libel based on a newspaper article which charged him with having appropriated more than a fair share of the moneys which a client had caused to be placed in his charge just after departing for a foreign jurisdiction where his creditors could less easily trouble him. Under a plea of justification evidence was admitted of the statements of a couple of creditors who had pursued their debtor and who professed that he had intimated some suspicion as to the safety of his funds. There was no evidence that plaintiff had done anything to have the money sent back to him, but the evidence was admitted as res gestæ and on the ground that the lawyer and client and the go-between who carried the money were "all together in the transaction." Held error. Such declarations could not be treated as res gestæ, nor could the conduct of creditors among themselves out of the plaintiff's presence and not communicated to or acted on by him.—Atkinson v. Detroit Free Press Co., 46 Mich. 341.

§ 90. ——Partial justification.

¶ 399. In a civil action for libel based on a newspaper article tending to throw ridicule upon plaintiff, it is competent for defendant to show how far the facts alleged or any part of them were true, and how far their truth would leave any cause of action remaining. It is also admissible to show under what circumstances the article was prepared and published.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

§ 91. ——Truth or falsity of charge.

Admissibility of negative evidence on truth of words, see also Evidence § 80, ¶ 411.

¶ 400. A person charged with seduction sued for libel. Held admissible to show, as bearing upon the probability of an alleged arrangement between him and the girl's mother, that she and her mother were paupers and in extreme poverty and dependence.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 401. In an action for libel based on a newspaper article imputing the murder of a girl, defendant sought to justify by proving it. Held, that plaintiff, on producing evidence that tended to show that the girl was the victim of an abortion procured by some one else, was entitled to have the case submitted on that theory, and it was error to exclude a question put to a competent witness as to whether the facts shown were inconsistent with death by abortion.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

¶ 402. Testimony that plaintiff after the alleged libel suit was commenced was employed to collect a claim against the village trustees, upon commission, was properly excluded on failure of counsel to connect it with the relations of plaintiff with the claimant before the libel suit was begun, and while he was still village attorney.—Smith v. Hubbell, 151 Mich. 59.

¶ 403. A newspaper charged a city physician with causing death by the careless use of the trocar in vaccination after its use had been forbidden by the board of health. Held, that in an action for libel defendant might show that plaintiff had, in his presence, justified its use.—Scripps v. Foster, 41 Mich. 742.

¶ 404. Where a defendant sued for slander for calling plaintiff a thief seeks to show that the latter fraudulently took ice belonging to his copartners, testimony bearing upon plaintiff's conduct in taking the ice is admissible on the question of fraud.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 405. Evidence that nineteen years before the publication of a libel charging plaintiff with political treachery, a certain number of his party bolted his nomination for the legislature and published a letter giving their reasons, is inadmissible to prove the truth of the libelous charges.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

¶ 406. Where the publication complained of in a libel case charges the plaintiff with political treachery and readiness to commit perjury, testimony that it has been generally understood that he is a professional lobbyist is incompetent.—Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119.

¶ 407. In an action for libel by a woman against a newspaper for publishing an article which it was claimed charged plaintiff with adultery, where the evidence tended to show circumstances well calculated to arouse suspicion on the occasion stated and also tending to show previous acts of intimacy, it was error to refuse to admit testimony as to acts of familiarity and intimacy committed three months subsequently.—Matthews v. Detroit Journal Co., 123 Mich. 608.

¶ 408. In an action for slander specific acts of lewdness cannot be proved to support a plea of justification in the statement "You can't imagine how low this woman is."—Smitley v. Pinch, 148 Mich. 670.

¶ 409. In an action of libel against defendant for the publication of matter reflecting on plaintiff's conduct as village attorney, plaintiff cannot, on cross-examination, be questioned as to a matter which took place two or three years before, and was in no way connected with the case under investigation, in order to show misconduct.—Smith v. Hubbell, 151 Mich. 59.

¶ 410. Cross-examination of a witness at length in a suit for libel, consisting of general inquiry regarding rumors and publications and testimony upon other trials, and the opinion of the witness as to the effect upon the plaintiff's character, is not competent. A defense like that of truth would be more orderly if made after the plaintiff's case is closed, and if a defendant desires to show that he published an article upon information and an honest belief of truth, the natural course would be to show in an orderly way his information, reliance upon it, and the rectitude of his intentions, rather than to enter upon a general investigation of the plaintiff's history, and the opinion of members of the public regarding it.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 411. A physician accused of illicit intercourse with a patient sued his defamer for libel. Held, that he could show the patient's physical condition as bearing on the probability of the charge. But in contradicting the patient's testimony that she was weak and sick at home, the defense was properly confined to that issue, and it was not error to exclude their testimony as to her mode of employment there and her visiting elsewhere.—Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214.

§ 92. ——Acts and statements of third persons and coparties.

¶ 412. Where, in a suit for libel for publishing a statement that the plaintiff was arrested on suspicion of having committed a felony, it appeared that such arrest was in fact made, evidence of the manner in which the arrest was made, and of the indignities to which plaintiff was subjected at the hands of the officers making it, is inadmissible against defendant.—McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 85 Mich. 453.

¶ 413. In an action for libel against defendant newspaper for charging plaintiff and his wife with stealing a purse left on a train, since the plaintiff could be found guilty of larceny only if he himself formed the intent feloniously to appropriate the purse, or aided and abetted his wife in so appropriating it after she had communicated to him her intent to do so, her secret resolve to steal the purse and its contents would have no tendency to prove guilt on the part of the plaintiff.—Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115.

¶ 414. In a suit for defamation of title by the execution of a deed containing a statement that plaintiff had fraudulently and without consideration obtained possession of the land described in the deed, and that he pretends to own it, etc., which statement is found to have been malicious and upon no foundation of right, plaintiff should be allowed to make full proof of the acts and conduct of all of the defendants,—they having all participated and actively engaged in the execution and delivery of the deed,—in their continued claim of title under the deed and the recital therein, not only to show their continued claim of pretended rights in the premises, but also their motive in inserting the recital in the deed, and in their pretended claims thereunder.—Chesebro v. Powers, 78 Mich. 472.

¶ 415. In a trial for libel based on a charge of seduction it was not clearly error to exclude the fact that the girl alleged to have been seduced committed suicide just as the trial was about to take place.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 416. Where a libel suit was based on an article charging the plaintiff with arson to defraud insurers and with murder, it was proper to permit the defendant, in justifying, and as bearing upon the malice of the libel, to show that plaintiff's claim for insurance on the house that was burned was contested.—Peoples v. Evening News Ass'n, 51 Mich. 11.

¶ 417. In a suit for libel against defendant newspaper for charging plaintiff with theft, other articles concerning plaintiff's arrest published by another paper contemporaneously with the libel complained of are inadmissible.—Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115.

§ 93. ——Other and distinct acts and deeds of plaintiff.

¶ 418. Suit was brought for slander upon a charge that plaintiff had burned his property to defraud insurers. Held, that proof of alleged frauds by him against third persons concerning agreements regarding insurance was inadmissible.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292.

¶ 419. In an action for libel for charging plaintiff with corrupt practices while a legislator, evidence of statements made by plaintiff as to his purpose in being elected to the legislature, of his connection with a bill of which he is charged with having by bribery secured the passage, of his reputation while there, of his entertainments, of his keeping "open house," whether or not the members visited it and partook of his hospitality, and whether this was done for the purpose of improperly influencing their action, is inadmissible.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

¶ 420. In an action for libelously charging plaintiff, a school teacher, with having taken indecent liberties with the persons of his pupils, evidence that he had liquor in the school and gave it to the pupils is inadmissible unless supplemented by evidence connecting such facts with the acts alleged in the libel.—Thibault v. Sessions, 101 Mich. 279.

§ 94. ——Explanation and rebuttal evidence.

¶ 421. In an action for libel for publishing a statement in substance that plaintiff, who was then agent for a certain piano alone, had formerly been agent for both that and another, and while agent for both had invariably recommended such other as superior in every respect, it was held competent, where defendant had undertaken to prove the publication to be true, to show in rebuttal the comparative number of each sold by plaintiff during the period he was engaged in selling both.—Whittemore v. Weiss, 33 Mich. 348.

¶ 422. Where sworn statements, made before a justice, apparently furnish legal cause for an arrest, but the justice does not issue a warrant, it is proper, in an action for libel based on a report of the facts stated, to ask him why he did not issue it.—Bathrick v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 629.

¶ 424. In an action for slander consisting of words charging the plaintiff and a woman with having been at night in a compromising position in a shop where they were employed, if the plaintiff and the woman have testified that they went to their shop to get the pay that was due them, testimony by them on redirect examination intended to show how much was due them and how long it had been due, is immaterial and inadmissible.—Beers v. Payment, 95 Mich. 261.

¶ 425. In a suit for slander the court properly refuses to let defendant tell his reasons for requesting plaintiff to get his name off a certain note, where such inquiry is immaterial.—Kelley v. Paulsen, 162 Mich. 169.

¶ 426. In a suit for libel against defendant newspaper for charging plaintiff with theft, the testimony of the prosecuting attorney that the case against plaintiff was dropped on account of plaintiff's ill health is inadmissible.—Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115.

¶ 427. Testimony of the financial condition of the church and the number of members admitted under plaintiff's pastorate was inadmissible, in an action for a libel consisting of a letter written calling in question the professional fitness of a clergyman to take charge of a new pastorate, since such evidence had no legitimate tendency to disprove the truth of the charges or to show malice.—Konkle v. Haven, 140 Mich. 472.

¶ 428. Where, in an action for libel, the only material fact to be established is that gambling was going on in a particular room, and that an officer knew it, it is improper to ask a witness who has testified to playing cards in the room how much he lost between certain dates, that being immaterial.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 429. A slander is admitted to be false if there is no plea of justification, and evidence of its truth is inadmissible. But where such proof was inadvertently admitted, it was held proper to let it be answered.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292.

¶ 430. In an action by a minister against a newspaper company for alleged libel in publishing an article in defendant's newspaper charging plaintiff with the publication of seditious articles relating to the conduct of the European War, held that the admission in evidence of the notes exchanged between the United States and Germany regarding the Lusitania incident as showing the basis upon which the editorial comments of the defendant were founded was not prejudicial error.—Van Lonkhuyzen v. Daily News Co., 195 Mich. 283.

§ 95. Evidence bearing on gravity of injury or in mitigation.

Evidence to show extent of publicity of words used, see ante § 75.
Evidence of threats by plaintiff to burn defendant's barn, see ante ¶ 259.
Evidence as to plaintiff's character or reputation, see also ante §§ 87, 88.
Plaintiff's reputation for dishonesty as bearing on damages, see also post ¶ 549.

Admissibility of retractions and refusals to retract, see ante § 86.
Evidence bearing on negligence of defendant as employer, see ante § 84.
Evidence of damages or bearing on extent of damages, see Damages §§ 315, 343, 344, 347, 348.

¶ 432. Evidence of the relations of the parties is admissible as bearing on damages for slander.—Loranger v. Loranger, 115 Mich. 681.

¶ 433. Where the gravamen of the claim laid by plaintiff in an action for slander is that, by reason of defendant's false and defamatory statements, plaintiff's neighbors and friends have refused to have business dealings with him, and that he has been compelled to resign his position as manager of a corporation, and to sell his stock therein, but not that he had to sell below its value, evidence that upon such sale plaintiff received the full value of his stock is properly excluded as immaterial.—Botsford v. Chase, 108 Mich. 432.

§ 96. ——Effect of charges upon plaintiff's feelings.

¶ 434. The effect of alleged slanderous words on the feelings of the plaintiff may be shown in an action for slander.—Sanford v. Houghton, 184 Mich. 44.

¶ 435. Testimony was received of the conduct, exclamations and acts of the plaintiff in a libel suit when she first read the libelous article. No testimony was offered as to what she said afterwards, but her uncle and aunt, with whom she lived the most of the time for about two months after such publication, testified to her appearance and conduct during that time, and that they often heard her cry and sob in the night. Held competent, the judge having carefully instructed the jury in regard to its consideration and effect.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593.

§ 97. ——Financial, business or social standing of defendant.

Evidence to warrant submission of defendant's financial standing to jury, see post ¶ 516.

¶ 436. The pecuniary condition of defendant in slander may be shown, not to swell the damages, but as bearing on the influence his word would have in the community.—Brown v. Barnes, 39 Mich. 211.

¶ 437. In action for slander it is proper to show that defendant is a director in a national bank, as bearing upon the influence his word would have in the community.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 438. Evidence of financial standing of person sued for slander is admissible to show the influence his word would have in the community.—Botsford v. Chase, 108 Mich. 432; Loranger v. Loranger, 115 Mich. 681.

¶ 439. It is not competent to enter into the details of the finances of a defendant in a libel or slander suit. The inquiry should be directed to his reputed financial standing in the community. So held where the plaintiff was allowed to introduce the assessment rolls of the township and wards in which the defendants were assessed, for the purpose of showing their standing.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593.

¶ 440. It is the reputed and not the actual wealth of defendant which may be shown in an action for slander.—McCloy v. Vaughan, 185 Mich. 189.

¶ 441. The reputed wealth of the defendant may be shown in an action for slander. —Sanford v. Houghton, 184 Mich. 44.

¶ 442. Evidence of the reputed wealth of a defendant corporation is not admissible.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

§ 98. ——Truth of charges or reports substantiating belief.

Truth or falsity of charges as bearing on justification, see also ante § 91.
Instructions as to truth of charges, see post § 119.

¶ 443. Though there is no plea of justification, yet reports coming to the knowledge of the defendant and tending to substantiate the truth of his statements and to warrant his belief may be shown in mitigation of the wrong.—Huson v. Dale, 19 Mich. 17.

¶ 444. Where the notice of justification is of the truth of the charges but is not as broad as the innuendo makes them, and hence is not good as a complete justification, the evidence of the truth of the charges is admissible as tending to show grounds of belief and good faith on defendant's part and so to mitigate the wrong, provided, however that defendant had knowledge and founded his belief thereon.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 445. Under the settled rule of Huson v. Dale, 19 Mich. 17, that evidence of the truth is admissible to mitigate damages for libel by showing belief and therefore want of malice, but that for this purpose it must have been known to defendant at the time of publication in order to have affected his belief, it was not error to reject evidence of the truth of charges made where there was no foundation laid by showing knowledge at the time and where the issues were not so drawn as to let it in as on a plea of justification.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 446. Two newspapers accused a man of murder and he sued them separately for libel. The affidavit of a convict that he was present when the murder was committed was procured for one of the cases, but it conclusively appeared that he was elsewhere at the time sworn to, and the affidavit was not used. Held, that though it might perhaps be admissible in the other case to show defendant's good faith, it could not be used as proof of the murder.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

¶ 447. Common reports in circulation that plaintiff was "suspected" previous to the speaking of slanderous words, of having committed the crime of arson imputed to him, cannot be given for the purpose of contradicting the statement in the declaration that he had not been suspected, until the speaking of the words, of being guilty of the offense charged, but can be received only in mitigation.—Moyer v. Pine, 4 Mich. 409.

¶ 448. It is not error to allow defendant to show on what ground he based his information, the plaintiff having been a candidate for office and the matter pertinent thereto.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

§ 99. ——Provocation or invitation of charges.

¶ 449. In an action for slander whatever has occurred at or about the time to provoke the words complained of may be shown in mitigation of damages.—Ritchie v. Stenius, 73 Mich. 563.

¶ 450. The jury may consider in mitigation of damages evidence showing that plaintiff provoked the defendant to utter the words charged as slanderous.—Newman v. Stein, 75 Mich. 402.

¶ 451. Where, in order to show provocation in mitigation of damages in slander, the fact that defendant had an interest in a certain company, a partnership, is to be shown, which firm it is alleged was defrauded by plaintiff as copartner, and where it clearly appears that defendant is one of the company—so that he has presumably a one-fifth interest—it is not prejudicial to exclude evidence that his interest is one-third; for the difference between one-fifth and one-third would not make any appreciable difference in the degree of irritation.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 452. An article charging a person with corruption in office is admissible in mitigation of damages, as showing provocation, where the person accused replies with another article charging the author of the first article with being guilty of various crimes and other disgraceful conduct.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 453. In an action for libel against a publishing company, articles written by and published with the consent of the plaintiff relating to the defendant and some of the stockholders, are admissible for the defense to show that the publications complained of were in reply to such articles by plaintiff.—Smurthwaite v. News Publishing Co., 124 Mich. 377.

¶ 454. In an action for libel against a newspaper, articles reflecting on the shareholders of the defendant company published in a rival newspaper owned by the plaintiff are not admissible as tending to show provocation or excuse for the libelous article where they did not relate to the same subject-matter.—Weston v. Grand Rapids Publishing Co., 128 Mich. 375.

§ 100. Weight and sufficiency.

Admissibility of evidence, see ante § 71 et seq.
Burden of proof, see ante § 64.
Province of court and jury, see post § 103 et seq.
Sufficiency of proof of damages to business, see Damages ¶ 1340.

¶ 455. A civil action for newspaper libel was based on the publication of an article shown by defendant to have been handed to him for publication by plaintiff himself, but which was illegibly written, and was not published as written; there was no showing that it had been intentionally altered nor any plain proof of negligence; and it was also shown by defendant that plaintiff had said he would be satisfied if it could be corrected and put in the weekly edition. Plaintiff did not deny this and was not examined as to the article, and there was no testimony indicating what words were changed. Held, that the article could not go to the jury as a basis of damages.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

¶ 457. The testimony of a third person, the only one within hearing, that he did not hear defendant utter the alleged slanderous words is not conclusive that there was no publication, if the evidence shows that he was in a position to have heard them; the jury being at liberty, his denial to the contrary notwithstanding, to find that he did hear the words.—Loranger v. Loranger, 115 Mich. 681.

¶ 458. Where a publication in a newspaper refers to a class of persons engaged in the trading stamp business, and calls them "the get-rich-quick industry," "the trading stamp fake," "the trading stamp blood suckers," without referring to all of them engaged in that business, a case of libel of one particular concern engaged in that business is not sustained.—Watson v. Detroit Journal Co., 143 Mich. 430.

¶ 459. Where in an action for libel it appears that plaintiff was generally known as J. D. F., having adopted the middle initial to distinguish him from a person known as J. F. (the name given in the alleged libel), and where there is no evidence that plaintiff was the person referred to in said article, the verdict should be for defendant.—Finnegan v. Detroit Free Press Co., 78 Mich. 659.

§ 101. ——To justify charges or prove falsity.

¶ 460. General reputation is sufficient to justify the charge that a lawyer is a pettifogging shyster.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 461. A charge of bad moral character, if made generally, is not fully justified by proof of profanity and Sabbath-breaking.—Wieman v. Mabee, 45 Mich. 484.

¶ 462. Evidence that one accused of murder was in the neighborhood where it took place at the time it was committed, and was in such a situation that he might have committed it, is not sufficient to show that he did it, if no stronger motive is alleged than that he wished to hide an unlawful intimacy indulged before his marriage and to escape liability on a note.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457.

¶ 463. In justifying the publication of a statement that a village marshal had knowledge that "gambling was being carried on before his very eyes, and yet he made not the least effort to suppress it," it is not necessary to prove that the officer was in the room, and saw the persons gambling there, but the expression "carried on before his very eyes" is fully met by proof that he knew that gambling was going on in a certain room in the building, while he was in the building, and that he knew where the room was located.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 464. Proof that a village marshal was present in a saloon in the village, and saw persons playing cards there for a wager of five cents, or any other sum, or for the wager that the party losing should pay for the drinks or cigars of the parties playing, and that he took no steps to suppress it, justifies the publication of the charge afterwards made that gambling was being carried on before the marshal's very eyes, and yet he made no effort to suppress it.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 465. Evidence that a member of the legislature keeps for the entertainment of members "open house" where they may partake of light refreshments, wine, beer, liquors and cigars, does not establish a case of bribery charged in an alleged libelous article.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136.

¶ 466. A newspaper, the circulation of which was limited to subscribers, each of whom received all issues, published an article stating that a certain named person, giving the number and street where he resided, had been arrested for larceny. Plaintiff resided at the place designated, but another person bearing the same name had been arrested for the offense mentioned. In the next issue but one of the paper appeared a correction in so far as the residence was concerned. Six days later the publisher received a notice from plaintiff's attorney that he had been retained by him to bring a suit for libel in publishing the article. On the same day an article was published in the newspaper, in which it was stated that the residence of the alleged thief was erroneously given in the article complained of, and that in the house designated lived a party of the same name, who was a thoroughly honest man, and to whom, on account of the error, an unfortunate injury had been done. Held, that it was not conclusively shown by the facts stated that the publication was made for justifiable ends, and that the article was made to point to plaintiff through a mistake.—Davis v. Marxhausen, 103 Mich. 315.

¶ 467. In an action for libel charging crime, justification is established by a preponderance of evidence and need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.—Owen v. Dewey, 107 Mich. 67.

¶ 468. In an action for the utterance of slanderous words imputing the commission of a felony, justification may be established by a preponderance of evidence.—Finley v. Widner, 112 Mich. 230.

¶ 469. Justification for the utterance of slanderous words imputing the commission of a felony may be established by a preponderance of the evidence only: it being unnecessary to produce a record of conviction, or to show plaintiff's guilt by evidence sufficient to convict him if he were on trial for the crime charged.—Finley v. Widner, 112 Mich. 230.

¶ 469a. The defense of justification is not established, in an action for slander in calling one a thief, by proof of cheating, trickery, and fraud, not amounting to actual theft.—Youngs v. Adams, 113 Mich. 199.

¶ 471. Where the publication of a slander was made in answer to questions asked by one who had the right to ask and be answered, and therefore qualifiedly privileged, the defendant is protected unless the charge was false and he knew it to be false; and evidence that the charge was repeated does not tend to prove the fact that it was false, neither does it prove that he knew it to be false.—Schultz v. Guldenstein, 144 Mich. 636.

¶ 472. Where a suit for libel is based on the ground that defendant imputed the commission of crime to plaintiff, the defendant in order to establish the defense of truth is not required to prove the commission of said crime beyond a reasonable doubt, but only by the preponderance of the evidence. Madill v. Currie, 168 Mich. 546.

§ 102. ——To establish malice.

Malice and intent in general, see ante § 49.
Admissibility of evidence to show malice, see ante § 79 et seq.
Burden of proof as to malice or intent, see ante § 65.

¶ 473. In an action against the general manager of a commercial agency for an alleged libelous communication, the facts that a notice from a local representative, stating that a chattel mortgage of $10,000 had been filed against the stock of goods of plaintiffs in favor of C. N. Bank, Detroit, and expressed the opinion that it was the forerunner of failure, and the further fact that the chief clerk of such manager, acting according to his custom and authority, opened the letter containing such notice, and, although he knew that there was no such bank in Detroit, published the contents of such notice to the patrons of the agency, advising prompt action on the part of creditors, were circumstances from which the jury might infer malice.—Polasky v. Minchener, 81 Mich. 280.

¶ 474. The mere fact that defendant cashier, for the purpose of determining whether the suspected employee was responsible for the shortages, placed marked coins where the latter might take them if he were so disposed, was not sufficient to establish express malice in an action for slander in charging theft of such coins.—Livingston v. Bradford, 115 Mich. 140.

¶ 475. Malice on the part of a defendant in a libel suit is sufficiently shown by evidence that a defendant did not act merely as a disinterested and voluntary amanuensis for two other defendants, but that he was actuated by a desire to assist such other defendants and procure the discharge from employment of the person libeled, that the defendant knew that the other defendants were not acting in the interest of good morals but were trying to "get even" with the person libeled, especially as the defendant testified that he knew nothing about the character of the person libeled until the charges were made by the other defendants, but pleaded that the charges were matters of common report and were true.—McGee v. Baumgartner, 121 Mich. 287.

¶ 476. Remarks by a wife in the absence of her husband derogatory of the character of a clergyman, and the fact that she and her husband did not attend church during plaintiff's pastorate, did not show malice on the part of her husband, in an action for a libel consisting of a letter derogatory of the character of such clergyman.—Konkle v. Haven, 140 Mich. 472.

¶ 477. In an action for slander for using words accusing plaintiff of having burned defendant's house, evidence held insufficient to prove any actual malice of defendant in uttering the words or in pleading justification.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

§ 103. Questions of law and fact.

See also post ¶ 544.
Words imputing crime actionable per se, see also ante § 3.
General law as to province of court and jury, see Trial, VI.
Jury questions on damages and effect of retraction, see Damages §§ 374, 375.

¶ 478. It seems that Const. Art. VI, § 25, providing that the jury in all prosecutions for libel shall have the right to determine the law and the fact, applies to criminal cases only. At any rate, such provision does not deprive the trial judge of the power to rule upon the admission of evidence in libel cases.—Thibault v. Sessions, 101 Mich. 279.

¶ 479. A jury cannot be permitted to say that an article libelous per se is not libelous, and in the case of the publication of such an article, the only questions to be submitted are the truth or falsity of the statements, and the question of damages.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 480. In a libel suit the truth of the innuendoes, the colloquium, and of the inducement or extrinsic matter, is a question for the jury.—Orband v. Kalamazoo Tel. Co., 170 Mich. 387.

§ 104. ——Publication and responsibility therefor.

Persons responsible generally, see ante § 2.

¶ 481. One Smoke, a dealer in pianos in Michigan, wrote a letter to defendant Proctor, the agent of defendant piano manufacturing company located at Chicago, stating that plaintiffs had tampered with the pianos manufactured by defendant for the purpose of giving them a bad reputation in his community. Defendant Proctor and defendant company's president solicited Smoke to put his letter in the form of an affidavit and Proctor actively co-operated with Smoke in getting up the same. Plain white envelopes were sent some time thereafter from Chicago to various musical dealers in Michigan containing copies of said affidavit. Defendant's president admitted that said affidavit was placed in the hands of one of defendant's officers to be used as the latter saw fit. Held, there was sufficient evidence of publication and circulation to require the submission of the question to the jury.—Grinnell v. Cable-Nelson Piano Co., 169 Mich. 183.

¶ 482. On evidence that a libelous newspaper publication was based in part on information which only the defendants possessed, that they had paid for advertising but none was published in the paper unless it was the libelous article, that corresponding stories were circulated by defendants or their servants, and that the article was written in a communication from some undisclosed person and by none of the reporters, plaintiff was entitled to have the alleged libelous article placed before the jury; and, under proper instructions, it was a question of fact for the jury whether its publication was within defendants' knowledge, or whether they were responsible for it.—Haney Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 1.

¶ 483. In an action against the head of a commercial agency and against a general district manager thereof, for an alleged libelous communication, the testimony was sufficient to be submitted to the jury upon the question whether such manager published, or caused to be published, the publication complained of, where it appeared that such libelous communication came to the office of such manager in an envelope addressed to him, was opened by his chief clerk, and by him published, and that it was the business of such chief clerk to open such letters addressed to such manager, and to incorporate in the notification sheets the items of news without consulting the manager, unless there was something exceptional in connection with the matter.—Pollasky v. Minchener, 81 Mich. 280.

¶ 484. In an action for libel against a publishing company and its general manager, who was also a stockholder and director, and who allowed the libelous article to be published after reading it and made no effort to see that a retraction demanded by plaintiff was published, held that the manager's connection with the company was such that the court was justified in submitting his liability to the jury.—Cyrowski v. Polish-American Pub. Co., 196 Mich. 648.

§ 105. ——Construction, meaning and effect of words used.

See also ante ¶ 329.

Construction and meaning of words used generally, see ante § 24 et seq.

¶ 485. Whether ambiguous words in a letter imply a charge of embezzlement or larceny is a question for the jury in an action for libel.—Edwards v. Chandler, 14 Mich. 471.

¶ 486. A letter contained the following language concerning plaintiff: "It is wondered at how he can live in more than ordinary style, as he does, while having merely the honorable receipts of his agency to live upon." The letter had previously accused him of vexatious acts, and of charging unusual rates. Held, that this did not necessarily imply that he had embezzled or stolen, but was ambiguous, and was properly submitted to the jury.—Edwards v. Chandler, 14 Mich. 471.

¶ 487. Defendant was sued for publishing of a clergyman: "Then there was that Iowa Beecher business of his which beat him out of a station at Grand Lake." This was set forth in the declaration as intended to charge adultery, and a general justification was put in. Held, that it was error for the court to leave such a charge to the jury as one that they might regard as not involving an accusation of adultery.—Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

¶ 488. Where an action of libel is based on a newspaper article casting ridicule upon plaintiff, and there is evidence tending to show that it arose out of mutual banter, and that defendant told plaintiff he was going to publish it, and that plaintiff assented, it is for the jury to find under proper instructions whether the article is really libelous, even though it would be if unexplained.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

¶ 489. If there is any doubt as to the meaning of the publication, so that extrinsic evidence is needed to determine its character as actionable or otherwise, it is a question for the jury, under proper instructions.—Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425.

¶ 490. Where the language of an alleged libel is ambiguous and capable of being understood in an innocent and harmless, as well as in an injurious, sense, the true interpretation of it is for the jury. So held where an article charging a supervisor with receiving unlawful compensation for his services was ambiguous as to whether the services for which the extra compensation was charged to have been received were done in the board of supervisors or were committee work.—Ewing v. Ainger, 96 Mich. 587.

¶ 491. The question whether an intimation that a merchant is in failing circumstances or unworthy of credit is contained in the words, "In time of peace, prepare for war," used in connection with a true statement, sent to firms from whom the merchant is in the habit of purchasing goods on credit, that said merchant has conveyed certain real estate to a woman bearing the same surname for $5,000, is for the jury.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 492. It is a question for the jury whether or not the defendant in a slander suit intended to charge the plaintiff with want of chastity by a statement that if she had been a decent and respectable woman the defendant (who was her father-in-law) would have put her (and her husband) up on a farm, but that she was not decent and respectable.—Derham v. Derham, 123 Mich. 451.

¶ 493. Whether publications will bear the construction placed upon them by the plaintiff in his declaration in a libel suit is a question for the jury.—Orband v. Kalamazoo Tel. Co., 170 Mich. 387.

¶ 494. Where the meaning of alleged slanderous words was uncertain, held that the question was properly submitted to the jury.—Maciejewski v. Rychart, 192 Mich. 530.

§ 106. ——Application of charges to plaintiff.

Allegations applying charges to plaintiff, see ante § 58.

Evidence to show application of charges to plaintiff, see ante § 73.

¶ 495. The publication complained of charged that a certain franchise was signed by the members of the township board and by plaintiff as highway commissioner; it stated generally that "boodle was used," and charged the "township board" with granting the franchise. Held, that whether the language used applied to plaintiff as well as to the township board was for the jury.—Boehmer v. Detroit Free Press Co., 94 Mich. 7.

§ 107. ——Correctness of translation of words.

¶ 496. Where slanderous words were spoken in a foreign language, held that the question whether the English translation of them was corect was properly submitted to the jury.—Maciejewski v. Rychart, 192 Mich. 530.

§ 108. ——Privilege.

Instructions as to privilege, see post § 118.

¶ 497. Where the occasion and attending circumstances are not in dispute the question of privilege in uttering slanderous words is for the court.—Bolton v. Walker, 197 Mich. 699.

¶ 498. It is for the court to determine whether the subject-matter of a libel, and its author's interest in and relations to it, make it a privileged communication; but it is for the jury to decide as to his good faith, belief in the statement and actual malice.—Bacon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 55 Mich. 224.

¶ 499. It is a law question whether words in a veto message by a mayor to the council are so pertinent as to be entitled to privilege.—Trebilcock v. Anderson, 117 Mich. 39.

¶ 500. The question whether a writing is one within a qualified privilege is for the court.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 501. Whether defendant's statement imputing a charge of larceny against plaintiff were for the purpose of making an investigation which he had a right to make, or of imparting information to one who had a right to know, and were therefore privileged, is a question for the jury, under proper instructions.—Hewitt v. Morley, 111 Mich. 187.

§ 109. ——Justification and truth of charges.

See also ante § 103.

Instructions as to justification, see post § 119.

¶ 502. It is error to withdraw the subject of justification from the jury in an action for libel where many witnesses give testimony tending to prove the truth of the charges against plaintiff, since the subject of justification and partial justification should be submitted.—Kovacs v. Mayoras, 175 Mich. 582.

¶ 503. In an action of libel by a minister who was of foreign birth and had not become a naturalized citizen, and had published an article criticizing the government in its stand on the European War, and had been the leader in the circulation of a petition to the President of the United States protesting against the sale of ammunition and the conduct of the war in general, against a newspaper company which had charged him with the publication of seditious articles, held that it was a question for the jury whether the libelous language was justifiable.—Van Lonkhuyzen v. Daily News Co., 195 Mich. 283.

¶ 504. In an action for libel for charging the plaintiff while a candidate for public office with having in his official capacity as representative championed measures opposed to the moral interests of the community, where the undisputed evidence showed that such candidate had introduced or at least approved and supported measures calculated to change the liquor laws by permitting sales on legal holidays and election days and by repealing the act prohibiting screens in saloons; the question as to whether plaintiff's support of these measures was opposed to the moral interests of the community as a matter of fact, or in other words, the truth of the charge, is one for the jury.—Elkhoff v. Gilbert, 124 Mich. 353.

§ 110. ——Retraction and sufficiency thereof.

Evidence as to retraction, see ante § 86.
Reasonableness of retraction to mitigate damages, as court or jury question, see Damages § 375.

¶ 505. Where under section 10425, Comp. L. 1897, a defendant newspaper retracts a libelous publication, it is for the jury to say whether the retraction was adequately made as to space and position in the paper so as to relieve defendant of exemplary damages. ——Lawrence v. Herald Pub. Co., 158 Mich. 459.

¶ 506. In an action for libel it is for the jury to say from the evidence what was the effect of a second publication subsequent to the libel complained of, modifying it and explaining that there was no criminality.—McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 95 Mich. 164.

§ 111. ——Malice and intent.

See also ante ¶¶ 343, 498, 506.
Instructions as to malice or intent, see post § 120.

¶ 507. In an action for libel where the publication is not privileged, the question of malice is for the jury.—Smedley v. Soule, 125 Mich. 192.

¶ 508. Where the evidence in an action for slander was sufficient to warrant a finding that the defendant had not observed due caution, and had assisted considerably in spreading the injurious report, it was held not error to submit to the jury the question whether there was actual malice in the utterance, even though no actual design to injure was shown.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

¶ 509. The reasonableness of a publisher's investigations into the truth of the charges against plaintiff published by him and alleged to be libelous, was for the jury, under all the circumstances, from which they were to deduce the fact whether the publication thereof was made in good faith, and with an honest purpose to enlighten the public upon the character and fitness of the plaintiff for the position he sought.—Bronson v. Bruce, 59 Mich. 467.

¶ 510. The words "thief," "rogue" and "robber" are not actionable unless the party using them intended to impute crime; such intention will be presumed if not explained, but defendant may show as evidence of want of deliberation and malice that the words were spoken in the heat of passion and under strong provocation, and this is a question for the jury under proper instructions.—Ritchie v. Stenius, 73 Mich. 563.

¶ 511. Where it appears in an action for slander of title based upon a statement that the premises could not be sublet for saloon purposes, that the lease authorized the plaintiff to sublet for business purposes, and that he himself had, to the lessor's knowledge, sold liquors while occupying under such lease, the question of malice is for the jury.—Harrison v. Howe, 109 Mich. 476.

¶ 512. A communication made in good faith to a public officer, in relation to matters within the scope of his duties, is privileged, in the absence of express malice. The question whether the occasion was privileged is for the court; but, if the circumstances surrounding the publication are such that an inference of malice may be drawn from them, the question of malice is one for the jury.—Garn v. Lockard, 108 Mich. 196.

¶ 513. Defendants addressed a petition to a police justice complaining that plaintiff was an obnoxious and peace disturbing neighbor and was quarrelsome and a general nuisance and asked that he be requested to move. They further gave publicity to the petition by circulating it around the neighborhood and publishing it in the daily press. Held, the question of excess of privilege and of malice were for the jury.—Flynn v. Boglarsky, 164 Mich. 513.

¶ 514. In an action for libel and slander it appeared that plaintiff had been in defendant's employ as a servant and that she had been discharged. Defendant met and informed a prospective employer of plaintiff's shortcomings but the employer accepted her. Defendant thereafter wrote a letter to such employer further expressing herself as to plaintiff's habits. As a result plaintiff was discharged. Held, that the question of defendant's malice should have been submitted to the jury.—Carroll v. Owen, 178 Mich. 551.

§ 112. ——Extent of injury or damage.

See also ante ¶ 479.

¶ 515. The circulation of vile, defamatory or slanderous language concerning another, and especially concerning a woman's chastity, is not excused by a protest at the time of disbelief, or by a showing that those who had heard the slander did not believe it to be true; it is actionable, and the question of the extent of the responsibility is for the jury, and not to be solved by any presumption of harmlessness.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

§ 113. ——Influence or financial standing of parties.

Evidence of financial or business standing of parties, see ante § 97.

¶ 516. In the absence of evidence of the reputed wealth of the defendant in an action for slander, that question should not be submitted to the jury.—McCloy v. Vaughan, 185 Mich. 189.

§ 114. ——Directing verdict.

General law as to directing verdict, see Directing Verdict.

¶ 517. Where in a "discharge list" sent by one division superintendent of a railroad company to another for information, the reason given for the discharge of an employee was "stealing," and it appeared that he was turned off because he had taken a good coat of a passenger from a train on which he was also riding, and left his own, much worn, in its place, and that on investigation he explained that he did it by mistake while hurriedly leaving the cars at his station, that the investigation was incomplete and prejudiced, there was evidence tending to show express malice on the company's part, and it was error to direct a verdict in its favor.—Bacon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 66 Mich. 166.

¶ 518. In an action of libel for a publication of a newspaper interview given by defendant to a reporter and not privileged, it is error to direct a verdict for defendant where plaintiff's evidence tends to show that defendant authorized the publication and also to show express malice on defendant's part in so doing.—Wheaton v. Beecher, 66 Mich. 307.

¶ 519. Where the article published by defendant describing the arrest of plaintiff was confessedly untrue in several particulars, which tended, in the connection used, to convey the impression that plaintiff was guilty of safe breaking and felony the publication was not privileged, and the case should have been submitted to the jury.—McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 76 Mich. 338.

¶ 520. A newspaper article which, construed most strongly, meant only that a certain prisoner was willing to part with a gold watch to obtain five dollars to pay his fine, and that plaintiff, who was the jailer, took it to enable him to do so, and that it developed that the watch was stolen, is not slanderous and a verdict should have been directed for the defendant.—Steyskal v. Detroit Journal Co., 119 Mich. 246.

¶ 521. In a slander suit, proof of words: "You took my money and went to Owosso, and swore to a God damn lie, and I can prove it, and damn you, you are getting ready to swear to a lie again," taken together with testimony that an action was tried at the place named, where the parties in question were witnesses upon opposite sides and that shortly thereafter such accusation was made, was sufficient to have the case go to the jury on the question as to whether the talk referred to the judicial proceeding testified to.—Dell v. McBride, 133 Mich. 649.

¶ 522. The court should have directed a verdict in favor of a wife who was made codefendant with her husband, in an action for a libel consisting of a letter defamatory of plaintiff, and purporting to have been signed by both defendants, where there was no evidence that her signature was placed upon such letter by her, or afterwards received her sanction.—Konkle v. Haven, 140 Mich. 472.

¶ 523. A plaintiff sued defendant for slander for words made actionable per se by Comp. L., § 10401. Held, it was error for the trial court to direct a verdict for plaintiff and assess the damages at six cents, since the question of damages was for the jury, and that judgment would be reversed at the instance of the plaintiff.—Richter v. Stolze, 158 Mich. 594.

¶ 524. Where a privilege in uttering slanderous words is found by the court to be absolute a verdict should be directed for the defendant.—Bolton v. Walker, 197 Mich, 699.

§ 115. Instructions.

Instructions on damages, see Damages § 400.
Necessity of conformity of instructions to issues and evidence, see also Instructions, IV.
Instructions as to consideration of evidence bearing on acts of plaintiff on reading libel, see ante ¶ 435.
General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 525. An instruction, in a libel suit, that an article is libelous per se, followed by a series of requested instructions, covering nearly every charge contained in the article, and stating that the jury is to consider the whole article together, and if it does not believe that an ordinary person reading the same would fairly understand that the defendant intended to charge that the plaintiff had been guilty of crime, then the plaintiff could not recover, is erroneous as permitting the jury to find that the article was not libelous, contrary to the first portion of the charge.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 526. In slander for calling plaintiff a thief it is not error to refuse a charge that makes the slander depend entirely upon defendant's intention, and that in effect says vituperation is not slander when provoked, though it transcends the bounds of truth and propriety.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 527. In an action for libel for publishing words charging plaintiff with theft, an instruction that the burden is on plaintiff to prove the falsity of the words is erroneous.—Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115.

§ 116. ——Construction, meaning and application of words used.

Construction and application of words generally, see ante § 24 et seq.
Construction of publication as a whole, see also ante ¶ 525.

¶ 528. Where a publication is plainly libelous upon its face, or manifestly wanting in defamatory meaning, the court should so instruct the jury.—Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 Mich. 425.

¶ 529. Where the libel complained of does not charge specific facts, but makes the general charge that plaintiff is corrupt and unworthy of confidence, an instruction that proof of one part of the charge cannot deprive plaintiff of his right to damages for the part not shown to be true is properly refused.—Wheaton v. Beecher, 79 Mich. 443.

¶ 530. A statement contained in an article charging a village marshal with neglect of his official duty generally, and particularly in failing to suppress gambling in the village, that "he was called to the place from the bar and gamblers' table, and nothing better could have been expected of him," is held to mean that the officer was a drinking man and a gambler before he was appointed marshal, and can have no other interpretation, and the court should so have instructed the jury instead of leaving it to them to determine the meaning.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 531. The charge of the court that certain statements in the various publications declared upon, and which are set forth in the opinion, are not libelous per se, is sustained.—Hanaw v. Jackson Patriot Co., 98 Mich. 506.

¶ 532. In slander for calling plaintiff a thief requests to the effect that if the language was used in relation to circumstances which could not or did not constitute larceny, and was so understood by all its hearers, no slander was proved, were properly refused where the substance was correctly given.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 533. In an action for libel in imputing to public officers a purpose to "steal and rob" the public by a wasteful appropriation for private gain, the charge on the meaning to be given the article as published should have explained that the sense was to be taken from it as a whole and that the ordinary and natural meaning of the words in the connection in which they were used should be taken; and a charge that the "ordinary sense" of the words should be taken is misleading in that it might induce the jury to believe that "steal and rob" were used in their ordinary sense.—Randall v. Evening News Ass'n, 101 Mich. 561.

¶ 534. The words "You broke in there and stole some goods the other day, out of that house," are actionable per se and circumstances which might give them another meaning would not justify the court in charging that they were not actionable per se where such circumstances were not known to the persons in whose presence the words were spoken.—Hinchman v. Knight, 132 Mich. 532.

¶ 535. In an action of libel where under the evidence the article complained of clearly refers to plaintiff, describing him both by name and residence, it is error to instruct the jury that if from the evidence they believe another person of the same name was libeled, there can be no recovery.—Davis v. Marxhausen, 86 Mich. 281.

§ 117. ——Publication and responsibility therefor.

¶ 536. Where the evidence in an action for slander does not show the use of the substance of the language alleged in the declaration, a charge requested by the defendant to that effect should be given.—McCloy v. Vaughan, 185 Mich. 189.

¶ 537. Where a portion of alleged slanderous words are not proven the jury should be so instructed.—McCloy v. Vaughan, 185 Mich. 189.

¶ 538. In action for slander where charges of theft were instituted by others on which defendant acted, a request for an instruction concerning defendant's nonresponsibility for acts of others, not his agents was wrongly refused.—Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498.

¶ 539. Where the statement complained of was made by defendant to a newspaper reporter, an instruction that defendant had nothing to do with reducing it to writing or with its publication is not objectionable in case the main issue—whether defendant was responsible for the publication—was presented by the court to the jury with the instruction that they were to pass on all the testimony; the jury could not have understood that the word "publication" meant more than the actual printing in the paper.—Wheaton v. Beecher, 79 Mich. 443.

¶ 540. Where a newspaper is sued for libel because of its reporter's mistake in reporting the contents of a legal document, it is error to charge that defendant's liability is to be determined by the care which reporters usually take, since reporters, like others, must use such degree of care as is reasonably certain to prevent mistake.—Park v. Detroit Free Press Co., 72 Mich. 560.

¶ 541. Where an alleged libelous letter written to a minister is read by him to his congregation from the pulpit, the author of the letter is not responsible for such publication and no damages can be recovered for such, and the defendant is entitled to have such an instruction given to the jury.—Konkle v. Haven, 144 Mich. 667.

§ 118. ——Privilege.

Province of court and jury, see ante § 108.

¶ 542. An instruction in a libel case brought by a candidate for public office, defining actual and implied malice, was not equivalent to stating that the case was tried precisely the same as if no privileged occasion existed; where the court had previously instructed the jury that the occasion was privileged, but that the publication, if untrue, was not.—Austin v. Hyndman, 119 Mich. 615.

¶ 543. Defendant in a libel suit was appointed chairman of the committee by a board of supervisors to investigate the accounts of plaintiff as county treasurer, and on his own responsibility published a report of the findings of the committee in a newspaper. Held, the trial court was in error in instructing the jury that the defendant could not be privileged in imputing to the plaintiff the commission of a crime.—Madill v. Currie, 168 Mich. 546.

¶ 544. In case of a quasi or qualified privilege, the questions of slander or no slander, malice or no malice, are usually matters of fact for the jury, but it still remains for the court to instruct the jury as to the nature and legal effect of the qualified privilege and its bearing upon the consideration of the facts in issue.—Bolton v. Walker, 197 Mich. 699.

§ 119. ——Justification or truth of charges.

Province of court and jury, see ante § 109.
Instruction as to burden of proving falsity, see also ante ¶ 527.

¶ 545. Where defendant in an action for slander consisting, as alleged, in charging plaintiff with having committed the crime of perjury, proves the truth of the charge to the satisfaction of the jury, plaintiff is not prejudiced by a statement in the charge that defendant admits speaking the words charged in the declaration, it appearing that the words admitted by him to have been spoken were not actionable per se.—McNaughton v. Quay, 102 Mich. 142.

¶ 546. A plaintiff in a libel suit for the publication of an article containing several libelous charges is entitled to an instruction to the jury that the effect of defendant's justifying as to a portion of the charges and not as to the whole is only to mitigate or reduce the damages which plaintiff would otherwise be entitled to recover.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296.

¶ 547. In an action for slander brought by a former servant charged with stealing her employer's goods, it is proper to charge that the verdict should be for defendant if it is found that he had no malice against plaintiff and that he had just cause or excuse for making the accusation, and made the charges simply to recover what he supposed plaintiff had taken.—Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498.

¶ 548. The publication of an article imputing the commission of a crime is not justified by the existence of reasonable grounds for a belief in the guilt of the person accused; and therefore, in an action for libel founded upon such publication, a request for an instruction that if, from such facts stated in the article as were true, there was reasonable ground to suspect the plaintiff of being implicated in the offense charged, the jury, in determining the damages, can only consider such portions of the article as they may find to be untrue to the extent that the statements made therein would tend to confirm or strengthen such suspicion of guilt, is properly refused.—Long v. Tribune Printing Co., 107 Mich. 207.

¶ 549. In an action by a horse jockey for charging him with theft in retaining the winnings of defendant's horse, evidence of plaintiff's general reputation for dishonesty in failing to account to the owners for the winnings of horses driven by him is admissible as bearing on the damages; but it is not competent in support of a plea of justification, and it is error to refuse so to instruct the jury.—Finley v. Widner, 112 Mich. 230.

¶ 550. Refusal to instruct that if the plea of justification was not proved the jury might take proved common rumor of the truth of the charge into consideration as showing a reputation already disparaged, was not justified by the fact that plaintiff claimed defendant was himself responsible for some of the rumors; since the proposed instruction was proper in the abstract, and might have been qualified, if desired by plaintiff, so as to exclude rumors started by defendant himself.—Fowler v. Fowler, 113 Mich. 575.

¶ 551. An instruction, in a suit for libel, that the plaintiff cannot recover if the defendant has fairly established the truth of the publication sued upon substantially as the publication is set forth in the plaintiff's declaration, operates so that the jury may conclude that it is unnecessary for the defendant to show that the plaintiff has been guilty of the acts charged him, and that it is sufficient to find that he has been accused of them, and this would not be proof of the substance of the charge, and would not constitute a justification.—Brewer v. Chase, 121 Mich. 526.

¶ 552. In libel by a sheriff, for charging him with intentional neglect of duty in failing to prevent playing of a public baseball game on Sunday, it is error to instruct the jury that the mere fact that a game of ball was to be played at a certain park upon Sunday, does not impose upon the sheriff the duty of going there to stop the game.—Scougale v. Sweet, 124 Mich. 311.

¶ 553. In an action for libel based upon the publication in a newspaper consisting of a criticism of a village attorney for his action in trying to compel the village authorities to pay a certain claim for which the members of the council had made themselves personally liable, the defendant is entitled to have a requested instruction to the effect that the councilmen were personally liable on the claim, and for that reason the allowance of the claim was invalid and the attempt to bind the village for the services of the attorney in the proceedings to compel the payment thereof was futile.—Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637.

¶ 554. Where a city attorney had sued a newspaper for a libelous charge that he put in an improper claim for services, a requested charge for defendant, that it was plaintiff's duty as attorney for the village when an attempt was made to enforce the payment of a certain claim presented to the council to make a full investigation and if this would disclose to plaintiff that the bill was invalid it was his duty to so inform the council, is held to have been substantially covered by a charge given, that if plaintiff knew or if an investigation would have disclosed that the claim was invalid his services in attempting to enforce payment would not constitute a legal charge against the village.—Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637.

¶ 555. In an action for libel for the printing of matter reflecting on plaintiff's conduct as village attorney, it was attempted to show that the article charged perjury in making out an affidavit of services to the village. The only possible view that would sustain the theory of perjury was that plaintiff falsely stated that the services were performed for the village. Held, although the instruction complained of did not bring out this point, but was ambiguous, it cannot be complained of if cured by a later instruction.—Smith v. Hubbell, 151 Mich. 59.

¶ 556. An erroneous statement in the charge of the trial court in a libel suit to the effect that defendant in establishing the defense of truth must prove beyond a reasonable doubt the commission by the plaintiff of the crime imputed to him, is not cured by a correct statement of the rule in a later portion of the charge requiring defendant to make such proof by a preponderance of the evidence.—Madill v. Currie, 168 Mich. 546.

§ 120. ——Malice, motive or intent.

See also ante ¶ 351.

Instruction defining actual and implied malice, see also ante ¶ 542.

¶ 557. Defendant to mitigate damages testified that he believed the facts stated in the libelous article to be true, and that he had heard the same charges made by others. Held, that the court's failure to instruct the jury that defendant's testimony should be considered in determining whether he was malicious and so liable to exemplary damages was not prejudicial error where the publication showed malice upon its face, and where the jury was instructed to consider the mitigating circumstances.—Orth v. Featherly, 87 Mich. 315.

¶ 558. In case for slander, it is proper to charge that if defendant communicated to others a criminal charge against plaintiff, and in so doing acted wantonly and recklessly, his conduct might be considered as bearing upon the question of malice.—Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498.

¶ 559. It is error to charge that there is no evidence from which improper motives could be inferred, where the only evidence is that a retraction was made stating that the address which identified plaintiff with the publication was erroneous.—Davis v. Marxhausen, 103 Mich. 315.

¶ 560. While How. St., § 7776 providing that in actions for slander or libel, notice in justification that the statements were true, though not maintained by the evidence, shall not be considered as proof of malice, does not forbid the use of such notice as evidence of malice, an instruction under which a finding of malice may be based on such notice alone is erroneous.—Jastrzembski v. Marxhausen, 120 Mich. 677.

¶ 561. Where plaintiff in an action for slander requested an instruction that malice is to be inferred from slanderous words, and the court gave such instruction, and added that good faith was no defense to the action, plaintiff's contention that the modification of his request was error, is without merit.—Hammond v. Porter, 150 Mich. 328.

¶ 562. In an action of slander an instruction restricting the jury to the consideration of the question whether defendant uttered the words in good faith with good reason to believe them to be true at the time he uttered them, held to be in fact a correct statement as to what constitutes malice.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

¶ 563. In an action for slander an instruction advising the jury that if they found the defendant guilty of slander they must award plaintiff actual damages, that malice of defendant might increase and augment natural damages recoverable, that if, when he filed notice of justification, defendant had not reason for hope or expectation of proving the truth of it, they might consider that as evidence tending to show malice, held not open to the objection that it told the jury that they might consider the unsustained notice as evidence of malice.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

¶ 564. In an action for slander for speaking words charging plaintiff with having set fire to defendant's house, held that it was not reversible error to refuse to charge the jury that malice means the doing of an act or the secreting of some facts or circumstances which ought to be disclosed and from which it could be reasonably determined that the acts and conduct were not in good faith, where the court, during the course of an argument in which the effect of complaints made by defendant charging plaintiff with the violation of the liquor law as evidence of malice was being presented by counsel to the jury, had instructed the jury that such complaints could not be considered as evidence of malice and a complaint in a criminal case against plaintiff for arson made by the defendant was properly admitted in evidence to show malice.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

¶ 565. Where a defendant sued for libel is entitled to an instruction that the alleged libelous words, as set forth in some of the counts of the declaration, are not susceptible of the construction alleged in the innuendo, but fails to ask that such instruction be given except by a request which applies equally to all of the counts, and does not assign error upon language in the general charge upon the subject which made it possible for the jury to find defendant guilty upon all of the counts, and where his counsel fails to make the point in his brief that the court erred in using such language, a general verdict of guilty, which is sustainable under the good counts, will not be set aside.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 566. An attorney is not entitled to recover verdict for damages for injuries in his profession on account of a libel where there is no positive evidence of such injury.—Smedley v. Soule, 125 Mich. 192.

¶ 567. A verdict in an action for slander itemizing separately damages for character and damages for suffering, held in compliance with Comp. L. 1897, § 10424, How. 2nd Ed., § 13137.—Maciejewski v. Rychart, 192 Mich. 530.

¶ 568. In an action for libel there is no reason for the jury to specify in the verdict the amount awarded for injury to feeling where they were specifically limited to a verdict for injuries to feelings.—McArthur v. Sault News Printing Co., 148 Mich. 556.

See also ante ¶ 21.
Criminal libel based on words imputing unchastity, see also ante ¶ 46.
Criminal libel and slander, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15573 et seq.

¶ 569. A libel criminal at common law, but not enumerated in Laws 1879, Act No. 192 (How. St., § 9315), which enumerates criminal libels and specifies their punishment, is not punishable.—Glassmire v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 84 Mich. 447.

¶ 570. Prior to the passage of Laws 1879, Act No. 192 (How. St., § 9315), the statutes contained no express provision for the punishment of libel and slander, but they were punishable as misdemeanors under How. St., § 9261, since they were such at common law.—Glassmire v. Circuit Judge of Manistee County, 84 Mich. 447.

¶ 571. It was evidently the intention of the legislature in enacting Laws 1879, Act No. 192 (How. St., § 9315), to exclude from its operation nonenumerated cases of libel and slander known to the common law, namely such cases as where one is held up to contempt and ridicule, and possibly where one may be charged with having a loathsome disease.—Glassmire v. Circuit Judge of Manistee County, 84 Mich. 447.

¶ 572. One who circulates a libel may be guilty of an offense under Comp. L. 1897, § 11762.—Mack v. Sharp, 138 Mich. 448.

¶ 573. In a criminal prosecution for libel, the truth alone, if not published with good motives and for justifiable ends, is not always a complete defense.—Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 Mich. 408.

¶ 574. It is not libelous to publish of and concerning one who is a druggist: "The above druggist in the city of Detroit refusing to contribute his mite with his fellow merchants for watering Jefferson avenue, I have concluded to water said avenue in front of T.'s store, for the week ending June 27, 1846."—People v. Jerome, 1 Mich. 142.

§ 123. Indictment, information or complaint.

General law as to indictment and information, see Indictment and Information.
Requisites of indictments for libel, see Comp. L. 1915, § 15756.

¶ 575. An indictment for a libel is bad for uncertainty if it contains no prefatory statement that the person libeled is engaged in the particular business of, and concerning which, the alleged libelous statements were made.—People v. Jerome, 1 Mich. 142.

¶ 576. A complaint for criminal libel is bad for duplicity which sets out three articles as published in consecutive issues of defendant's newspaper, each of which charged a degrading act within the meaning of the statute; to wit, having had an arm broken under dishonorable and disgraceful circumstances, bearing marks of adventure at disreputable places, and that a statement by another, that the libeled person's arm was broken when he was ejected from a house of prostitution, was true.—People v. Jackman, 96 Mich. 269.

¶ 577. A complaint charging defendant with publishing in a newspaper that complainant's arm was broken while being ejected from a house of ill-fame alleges the imputation of a degrading act within the meaning of How. St., § 9315.—People v. Jackman, 96 Mich. 269.

¶ 578. In an information for criminal libel, asserting the truth of a doctor's statement that one's arm was broken while being ejected from a house of ill-fame in setting forth the doctor's explanation as to the cause of defendant's broken arm it is not necessary to give the exact words claimed to have been used by him.—People v. Jackman, 96 Mich. 269.

¶ 579. In information for criminal libel the complaint properly introduces extrinsic matter to explain the character of the charge complained of, where the meaning would otherwise be doubtful.—People v. Jackman, 96 Mich. 269.

¶ 580. In a prosecution for criminal slander for imputing a want of chastity, an averment that the complaining witness was unmarried sufficiently negatives the idea that said witness might have become lawfully pregnant and might have been a recently divorced woman.—People v. Parsons, 163 Mich. 329.

§ 124. Evidence and trial.

Province of judge and jury, see also ante ¶ 478.
Evidence in civil cases, see ante VIII.
Constitutional provisions in respect to truth as defense, see Const. Art. II, § 18.

¶ 581. One prosecuted for criminal libel cannot be allowed to show that the facts complained of as criminally libelous and published on the strength thereof without investigation had long been currently reported and believed in the community, and had been so reported to him.—People v. Jackman, 96 Mich. 269.

¶ 582. Under the Constitution, Art. II, § 18, providing that in all prosecutions for libel the truth may be given in evidence to the jury and that the accused shall be acquitted if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous was true and was published with good motives and justifiable ends, a defendant may only show his good faith and that he published the libel complained of for justifiable ends after he has shown its truth.—People v. Talbot, 196 Mich. 520.

¶ 3. To be sustained as a police regulation an act imposing a fee must be plainly intended as such and the revenue derived therefrom must not be disproportionate to the cost of regulation.—Vernor v. Secretary of State, 179 Mich. 157.

¶ 4. In determining whether a fee imposed by an enactment claimed to be an exercise of the police power is reasonable, the absence or amount of regulative provisions, and the nature of the subject of regulation must be considered, and if the amount is wholly out of proportion to the expense involved the fee will be declared a tax.—Vernor v. ¶ 7. The fact that section 1, of Act No. 301, Public Acts 1913, provides for the payment of an annual license fee by private employment agencies, does not prevent the Commissioner of Labor prorating the fee according to the period covered by the license.—People v. ¶ 8. An ordinance requiring a license for hawking and peddling, fixing graduated fees for licenses greater if horse-drawn vehicles were used, and making all licenses expire on the first of the next ensuing June without any difference in fees for parts of a year is not in restraint of trade or discriminatory.—People v. Hotchkiss, 118 Mich. 59.

¶ 9. A license fee of $10 for one week and $50 per year for peddling tea, coffee, spices, etc., is not unreasonable or excessive so as to void the ordinance.—City of Muskegon v. Zeeryp, 134 Mich. 181.

In determining whether a person comes within an ordinance made in the exercise of a power to regulate sales from house to house, and providing that any person who shall go about from house to house and sell or offer to sell any article of trade or commerce shall be deemed to be a hawker and peddler, decisions as to who is a huckster or hawker and peddler, resting upon a judicial construction of statutes or ordinances in which the words are employed without qualification, are not controlling.—Allport v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 486.

¶ 11. The license fee imposed by Act No. 301, Public Acts of 1913, on private employment agencies of twenty-five dollars per annum in cities under two hundred thousand population and one hundred dollars in larger cities, is not excessive.—People v. Brazee, 183 Mich. 259. Affirmed in 241 U. S. 340, 60 L. ed. 1034, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561.

¶ 12. A statute or ordinance relative to "hawkers and peddlers" includes persons traveling from place to place for the purpose of taking orders for the purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise by sample, lists, or catalogues on the authority of City of Muskegon v. Zeeryp, 134 Mich. 181.—City of Alma v. Clow, 146 Mich. 443.

¶ 13. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 212, § 6, providing that applicants for license as a barber shall pay five dollars, excepting barbers "now engaged in the business of a barber in the state" and who have been so engaged for two years; and section 7 providing that persons "now engaged in the business of a barber in the state" and who have been "so engaged" for two years or more shall file a statement, and upon payment of one dollar receive a certificate, construed to mean that the words "so engaged" referred to the words "engaged in the business of a barber in this state" and that an applicant who had for part of the period of two years preceding his application worked outside the state, must pay a license fee of five dollars.—Wass v. Board of Examiners of Barbers, 123 Mich. 544.

¶ 14. An ordinance of the City of Detroit provided that no person should drive or use a vehicle for hauling earth or other named articles without procuring a license of the mayor. Defendant, a corporation engaged in the cement and sand business, was convicted for failure to take out a license for one of its wagons. Held, said ordinance was passed under paragraph 186 of the City Charter of Detroit, relating to licensing vehicles for hire, and did not apply to defendant's business, and that the conviction should be reversed.—City of Detroit v. C. H. Little Co., 163 Mich. 444.

¶ 15. An ordinance providing that persons going about from house to house for the sale of articles to be delivered then or in the future shall be regarded as hawkers and peddlers, and subject to license as such, applies to local retail merchants who conduct stores, and who also perform the acts which the ordinance in terms prohibits.—Allport v. Murphy, 153 Mich. 486.

¶ 16. An ordinance requiring licenses for peddlers, etc., and expressly applying to persons taking orders for future delivery is not invalid in its application to one who takes orders for teas, coffee, etc., which he himself subsequently fills by ordering sufficient supply from the domestic warehouse of a foreign corporation.—City of Muskegon v. Zeeryp, 134 Mich. 181.

¶ 17. A contractor and builder who has agreed to employ an architect to draw plans and specifications for the owner, and employs an unlicensed architect, cannot recover the contract price for drawing the plans and specifications, where an ordinance requires a license of architects, and it is immaterial whether the contractor himself is an architect.—Wedgewood v. Jorgens, 190 Mich. 620.

¶ 18. Claimant took charge of the stock of goods turned over to a legatee and sold drugs, medicines, and poisons as a part of the business. He was not a registered pharmacist, as required by Act No. 134, Pub. Acts 1885, as amended by Act No. 332, Pub. Acts 1905. Held, he was acting unlawfully and could not recover against the legatee's estate for services rendered.—In re Reidy's Estate, 164 Mich. 167; Shattuck v. Watson, Id.

§ 8. Refunding or recovery of fees wrongfully collected.

¶ 19. One Smith, the agent of plaintiff company, paid certain fees for a peddler's license to defendant city. The license was issued to Smith as an individual, and not to plaintiff company. Upon paying said fees, Smith filed a written protest with defendant protesting that it had no right to collect said fees and stating that the fees were being paid to avoid repeated arrests and to await the decision of the courts regarding the legality of said fees, and further stating that the payments were made for the purpose of preserving plaintiff's business and with the distinct understanding that in case the courts should hold the fees illegal the plaintiff would demand them back of defendant. This protest was signed in the name of plaintiff company, by Smith as agent. At the time of the suit Smith had left plaintiff's employ and never made any assignment of his claim to plaintiff. Held, the fees having been exacted of and the license having been issued to Smith, as an individual, and threats of arrest having been directed to Smith and not to plaintiff no duress was established sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover the fees paid.—Grand Union Tea Co. v. City of Ionia, 165 Mich. 67.

¶ 1. A license is a permission to do some act or series of acts on the land of the licensor without having any permanent interest in it. It is founded on personal confidence, and is therefore not assignable; it may be in writing or by parol; or without consideration or subject to revocation.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 2. A license is a permission to do some act or series of acts on the land of the licensor, without having any permanent interest in it. It is founded on personal confidence, and therefore not assignable, quoting the definition cited in Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. p. 282.—Stewart v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co., 89 Mich. 315.

¶ 3. Where something is promised beyond a mere temporary use of the land, and the promise is not founded on personal confidence, but has reference to the ownership and occupancy of other lands, and is made to facilitate the use of those lands in a particular manner and for an indefinite period, so that the right to revoke at any time would be inconsistent with the evident purpose of the permission, the interest is something more than a license, if the proper formalities for conveyance have been observed. It may be an easement or a leasehold interest or otherwise, according to the character of the possession, occupancy or use of the promisee, the time it is to continue, and perhaps the mode in which compensation, if any, is to be made for it.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 5. Oral permission to the trustees of a church to build, upon premises contingently contracted to be conveyed to them, sheds for the convenience of attendants upon worship, was held to be a revocable license, not a lease.—Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439; Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189.

§ 5. ——License or sale.

¶ 6. A written agreement permitting the establishment of a dam, granting a right of flowage, providing for a perpetual use and for the settlement of damages, and containing no clause of forfeiture on default, is not a revocable license, but an absolute sale on time for credit.—Fitch v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 44 Mich. 74.

¶ 7. The following letter accepted by the purchasers going into possession and making improvements is sufficient to show a contract to sell and not a mere license; and a subsequent grantee in a quit-claim deed from the vendor, takes subject to the rights of the vendee: "You ask me what I would do with you about my place. If you want it, I will let you have it for $150, and you pay the back taxes. I will give you five years to pay it in, but I can't give you a contract until I come home. I don't expect to come home for two years, but you can go on and build a house, and I will give you a contract then. You will have to pay the taxes this summer."—Garvey v. Parkhurst, 127 Mich. 368.

¶ 8. An instrument gave a right to the grantee to cut and remove timber for a term of fifteen years for consideration of two dollars per acre, all uncut timber at the end of the period to remain the property of the grantor. The parties were called licensor and licensee. Held, the instrument was a mere license and did not convey, in præsenti, the title to all the timber, but title to the timber passed only as it was cut and removed.—Scott v. Sullivan, 159 Mich. 297.

¶ 9. A land contract, unless so conditioned, does not operate as a license to use the land.—Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439; Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189.

¶ 11. Oral permission by the vendor of land to the vendee to take possession at any time is a mere license, revocable at pleasure so long as the terms of the sale are unfulfilled.—Gault v. Stormont, 51 Mich. 636.

¶ 12. Where the vendor and vendees in a land contract enter into a parol agreement whereby the latter are allowed to remove the timber in violation of the terms of the contract, such permission amounts, so long as it remains unperformed, to a mere license.—Stickney v. Parmenter, 35 Mich. 237.

Contract void under statute of frauds operative as license, see Frauds, Statute of § 129.

¶ 13. Where defendants entered into an agreement with a development company, at such company's solicitation, by the terms of which said defendants paid a valuable consideration for certain lots and the privileges of shooting on the lake near by, such agreement is not a mere license, revocable at will, but a valid contract, which might be enforced in a court of equity.—St. Helen Shooting Club v. Barber, 150 Mich. 571.

¶ 14. A parol agreement to extend the time limited for the removal of standing timber sold by a written instrument was to be regarded as a contract for waiver of a right of forfeiture, and was more than a revocable license.—Williams v. Flood, 63 Mich. 487, per Campbell, C. J., and Sherwood, J. Champlin and Morse, JJ., dissenting that it was void under the statute of frauds, but was a revocable license.

§ 7. Creation and acts constituting license.

Creation by acquiescence or consent of licensor, see post § 8.

Invitation by wife as license to enter, see Assault ¶ 18.

Statements to others as license, see also Assault ¶ 60.

Necessity of writing to create or transfer licenses to enter on land, see Frauds, Statute of § 44.

¶ 15. A parol extension of the time allowed by a contract of sale for taking off timber is valid as a license.—Haskell v. Ayres, 35 Mich. 89.

¶ 16. A license to enter upon land and cut timber thereon need not be in any particular form.—Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311.

¶ 17. Where the owner of land along a lake through his agent orally permits a lot owner to erect a boathouse on the lake frontage, an oral license is created which is binding until revoked by the licensor.—Bell v. Reed, 199 Mich. 35.

¶ 18. A parol agreement for the sale of standing timber is good as a license so far as acted upon.—Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153; Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 Mich. 362; Sovereign v. Ortmann, 47 Mich. 181; Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365.

§ 8. ——Creation by acquiescence or consent of licensor.

¶ 19. Acquiescence in the use of premises so as to create a license must depend upon some known customary use.—Sandstrom v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 198 Mich. 99.

¶ 20. The consent of a riparian owner to the building of a bridge on his premises amounts to a revocable license.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453.

§ 9. Necessary implications arising from license.

Limitation and scope of license, see also post ¶ 36.
Right to use road for railroad purposes implied from permission to build it, see Railroads, III.

¶ 21. A license to do a particular thing carries with it, by implication, the right to do those things necessary to be done in order that the licensee may avail himself of his rights under the license.—Newberry v. Bunda, 137 Mich. 69.

§ 10. Presumptions and evidence of license.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Proof of license by parol evidence as best evidence, see Evidence § 114.
Presumption that license has been acted upon by licensee, see post ¶ 24.

¶ 22. The owner of the land enclosing a small lake has the exclusive right to take fish from such lake; but it having always been customary to permit the public to take fish in the small lakes and ponds in the state, one may be presumed to have a license to do so.—Marsh v. Colby, 39 Mich. 626.

¶ 23. A parol license to remove timber should be very clearly shown when relied on to avoid a forfeiture set up in defense to a bill for specific performance of a land-contract.—Stickney v. Parmenter, 35 Mich. 237.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES; REVOCATION.

§ 11. In general; extent, operation and effect of license.

Rights of licensor, see post § 12.
Duty and liability of licensor, see post § 13.
Rights of licensee, see post §§ 14, 15.
Liabilities of licensee, see post § 16.
Duration of license, see post § 17.
Right and authority of licensor to revoke, see post §§ 18, 19.
What constitutes revocation see post §§ 20-24.
Forfeiture of license, see post § 25.
Rights after termination, see post § 26.
Nature and creation of license, see ante I.
License as defense in action for trespass, see Trespass, II.

Infant's license as defense to action of trespass, see Infants ¶ 107.

¶ 24. A licensor's actual knowledge that his consent has been acted on is not necessary to the protection of the licensee; he is bound to assume that it has.—Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365.

¶ 25. A parol license to cut timber is binding on the licensor if executed before revocation.—Wait v. Baldwin, 60 Mich. 622.

¶ 26. A mere license to enter upon land and cut timber will confer no legal right to do so.—Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311.

¶ 27. A license to enter and cut standing timber and remove the same passes the title to so much timber as is severed from the soil before the license is revoked.—White v. King, 87 Mich. 107.

¶ 28. Where a tenant is obliged to cross his landlord's premises in going to and from those which he occupies, and is allowed to do so as a licensee without objection, the arrangement being for the benefit of both parties, his children or members of his family may also go upon such premises to carry him his dinner or to help him.—Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507.

¶ 29. A tenant gave his landlord a written license to occupy as much of the premises as should be reasonably necessary in putting up an elevator. Held, that in suing the landlord for exceeding his privileges, the tenant could not show that the space to be occupied by him was marked out upon the floor; the license controlled, and the necessary space was a question for the jury.—Ives v. Williams, 50 Mich. 100.

¶ 30. An unrevoked parol license to flow lands, given by a third person, who at the time had the right to flow, is a good defense to an action for flowing lands.—Millerd v. Reeves, 1 Mich. 107.

§ 12. Rights of licensor.

Duty and liability of licensor, see post § 13.
Expulsion of licensee by landlord, see Landlord and Tenant § 180.
Power of summer resort association to sell concessions, see Associations § 7.

¶ 31. Permission to a grantor to remain upon the premises after his deed is a mere license, which, even while unrevoked, does not preclude the licensor from taking actual possession of the premises generally and putting his stock upon them. Any occupation by the grantor inconsistent with this general right in the grantee would be unwarranted.—Eaton v. Winnie, 20 Mich. 156.

§ 13. Duty and liability of licensor.

Liability for injuries to licensees in buildings, see Buildings §§ 4-6.

Liabilities of tenants towards licensee for injury on leased premises, see Landlord and Tenant §§ 183, 184.

Duty of landlord towards licensee and liability for injury on leased premises, see Landlord and Tenant §§ 177-181.

¶ 32. During the lifetime of a license to use realty the licensor cannot make the use thereof more dangerous, without being answerable for resulting injuries.—Groesbeck v. Shelden, 185 Mich. 583.

¶ 33. A license to come upon one's premises, especially if in the licensor's interest, imposes upon him the duty to warn those who come of any danger in coming of which he knows or ought to know and they do not. —Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507.

¶ 34. An owner, who cuts down timber previously sold to another without giving him notice of revocation of his license to remove, is guilty of conversion.—Wood v. Elliott, 51 Mich. 320.

Duty and liability to persons on premises seeking employment, see note, 6 N. C. C. A. 935-943.

Liability of owner of premises for injury to person on premises for purpose of transacting business, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 375-383.

Liability of storekeeper for injury to customer in store, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 436-445.

Duty of owner or occupant of premises to warn third persons of dangers incidental to operations thereon, see note, 7 N. C. C. A. 701-705.

Liability of owner of private property for injury to bare licensees, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 426-438.

Liability of owners of domestic animals for injuries to licensees, see note, 8 N. C. C. A. 953-959.

§ 14. Rights of licensee.

Right of licensee to assign or transfer, see post § 15.

Necessary implications arising from license, see ante § 9.

Manner of pleading license as defense in trespass, see Trespass, II.

Right to enter premises to remove chattels peaceably, see also Assault ¶ 64.

Implied license of attorney to enter office on client's business, see also Assault ¶ 61.

License to open road, right to cut and remove trees, see also Highways ¶ 602.

Entry of licensee to sow unauthorized crop, see also Agriculture ¶ 3.

Right of passengers to be in station, see Carriers § 133.

Right of mortgagee to enter premises to take possession of mortgaged chattels, mutual right to be on premises, see also Chattel Mortgages ¶ 292.

¶ 35. A license until revoked will protect the licensee so far as he has acted under it. —Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311.

¶ 36. A license, like an estoppel, is limited to the fair understanding on which the parties are at liberty to act; it does not give the licensee a general authority to do what he pleases.—Ortmann v. Sovereign, 42 Mich. 1.

¶ 37. A license creates an estoppel against complaining of acts done under it before revocation, or from preventing the enjoyment of the results of what was thus done.— Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153.

¶ 38. When the timber is cut under an oral sale of stumpage on cedar land, the title to it passes to the licensee because the right thereto has become a chattel interest. —Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365.

¶ 39. The license implied from an oral agreement for the sale of timber or from the parol extension of time for removal under such an agreement protects the licensee in regard to all trees cut seasonably and before revocation.—Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153; Haskell v. Ayres, 35 Mich. 89; Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 Mich. 362; Sovereign v. Ortmann, 47 Mich. 181; Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365.

¶ 40. Under a contract pursuant to which a railroad builds a sidetrack for the convenience of a mill owner, the railroad reserving the right to use it for other purposes as long as not interfering with its use by the millowner, the railroad has the right to continue such use as long as the sidetrack remains on the premises.—Pontiac, Oxford & N. R. Co. v. Reed, 130 Mich. 661.

§ 15. ——Right of licensee to assign or transfer.

See also ante ¶¶ 1, 2.

¶ 41. An oral permission by one tenant in common of land to cut timber therefrom is not assignable.—Ward v. Rapp, 79 Mich. 469.

§ 16. Liabilities of licensee.

Liability of licensee to licensor for putting diseased sheep on premises, see Animals ¶ 109.

¶ 42. One who, being allowed to remain on land under a mere license, keeps animals upon it that have an infectious disease, in consequence of which the animals of the owner afterwards brought upon the land in ignorance of the danger become infected and damaged, will be liable to an action for such consequent injury.—Eaton v. Winnie, 20 Mich. 156.

¶ 43. Trespass quare clausum will lie against the president of an agricultural association for entering with the buyer and tearing down a barn which he has without authority sold to a third person, even though as president he has a license to enter upon the premises whenever his official duties warrant it.—Kent County Agricultural Society v. Ide, 128 Mich. 423.

§ 17. Duration of license.

Rights after termination, see post § 26.
Effect of time limits for removal of reserved timber, see Deeds § 74.

¶ 44. Where standing timber is sold to be cut and removed by a certain date the license to enter and remove continues until that date.—Utley v. Wilcox Lumber Co., 59 Mich. 263.

¶ 45. The grantee in a quitclaim deed of the timber upon certain land, with the right to enter, and to cut and remove the timber "at any time thereafter," is entitled to a reasonable time after notice to remove.—St. James v. Erskine, 155 Mich. 606.

¶ 46. Under the rule that a gratuitous license must be acted on within a reasonable time where no time is fixed, the question of what constituted an unreasonable delay in acting upon a gratuitous license to remove timber, was properly left to the jury.—Snyder v. East Bay Lumber Co., 135 Mich. 31.

§ 18. Right and authority of licensor to revoke.

License coupled with interest, see post § 19.
Right to revoke license given railroad to enter on land and build its road, see Railroads, III.

¶ 47. An oral license for the erection of a structure on the land of another is revocable at the will of the licensor.—Bell v. Reed, 199 Mich. 35.

¶ 48. A parol license—whatever right it may give to remove erections under it—is revocable at any time.—Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439.

¶ 49. A license to use property for an express purpose, but not operative until a certain contract shall have been performed, is a revocable contract.—Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189; Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439.

¶ 50. Theaters, circuses, race tracks, private parks, and the like in the absence of statute are private enterprises, and license to enter them may be refused by the owners, or when once granted, may be revoked.—Meisner v. Detroit, B. I. & W. Ferry Co., 154 Mich. 545.

¶ 51. Where the grantee of land knows that the timber on it has been previously sold to another with the right to take his own time to remove it, he cannot terminate the other's right to occupy the land with his timber without giving him notice to remove it within a reasonable time.—Wood v. Elliott, 51 Mich. 320.

¶ 52. An oral license to go upon lands to ditch is revocable by parol, and an oral agreement to give a written license if a neighbor will do likewise cannot operate as a license where, after the neighbor had done as requested, the party making such agreement declined to abide by it and forbade the digging of the ditch.—Hitchens v. Shaller, 32 Mich. 496.

¶ 53. Where a petitioner for a village street across his land orally stated to the authorities that he claimed no damages, it was merely a license that would be binding only when they proceeded to take the land, and might be previously revoked by a written notice.—Turner v. Village of Stanton, 42 Mich. 506.

¶ 54. Complainant filed a bill to enjoin defendants from cutting certain standing timber. Said bill alleged the making by the owner of said timber land of a bill of sale to complainant, which recited that said owner thereby sold to complainant all the timber on said land. The bill also alleged that defendants, heirs of said owner, before complainant started to cut said timber, entered into a contract with other persons to cut and remove same. Complainant alleged that he had been in possession of the lands ever since said writing was delivered to him, but in his prayer asked for no relief on account of such possession. Held, said writing was merely a bill of sale of the timber with a license to enter upon the lands and remove same; that such license might be revoked at any time before the timber was severed; and that therefore the demurrer to complainant's bill should be sustained.—Curran v. Gordon, 169 Mich. 250.

§ 19. ——License coupled with interest.

¶ 55. A license coupled with an interest is not revocable while the interest continues; as where a license from a landlord to cross his land is necessary to the tenant's enjoyment of the premises for which he pays rent, and is therefore for the benefit of both.—Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507.

¶ 56. A contract right to cut timber under a license coupled with an interest under a time limit is not revocable, where the owner's reserved right of forfeiture for delay has been once waived.—Newberry v. Chicago Lumbering Co., 154 Mich. 84.

§ 20. What constitutes revocation.

Assignment or conveyance of licensor's interest, see post § 21.
Death of one of parties, see post § 22.
Misconduct or unlawful acts of licensee, see post § 23.
Estoppel to claim revocation, see post § 24.
Forfeiture of license, see post § 25.
Rights after revocation, see post § 26.

¶ 57. A license to use a road over one's premises is revoked by closing the road.—Fowler v. Hyland, 48 Mich. 179.

¶ 58. The license to enter another's private office implied by the opening of such office to the public for the transaction of business with the owner is revoked at once as to a person who is ordered to leave; and one who has been forbidden to enter is a trespasser when he goes in.—Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 Mich. 393.

¶ 59. An oral permission by one tenant in common of land to cut timber therefrom is a mere naked, personal license which is revoked by the licensor's forbidding the licensee to cut timber.—Ward v. Rapp, 79 Mich. 469.

¶ 60. Where the vendor in a land contract has given oral permission to the vendee to take possession, such permission is revoked by the vendor's return to him of a partial payment on failing to get his wife to unite with him in the sale.—Gault v. Stormont, 51 Mich. 636.

¶ 61. Where the owner of certain lands, after contracting for their sale, had given oral license to the other party, who were trustees of a church, to erect sheds thereon, but had afterwards forbidden such erection "until the contract should be carried out," and the other party privately determined not to fulfil the contract, such prohibition operated as an absolute revocation of the license. It was held that the use of the sheds for fifteen months afterwards without interference did not tend to show a new license or the withdrawal of the revocation.—Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189.

¶ 62. A revocation of a license to the trustees of a church made to and in the presence of one of the trustees had the same effect as if made to all.—Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189.

¶¶ 63, 64. Where the heirs of the grantor of a license to cut timber after the death of said grantor made a new agreement with a third person for the cutting of said timber inconsistent with said license, the latter is thereby revoked.—Curran v. Gordon, 169 Mich. 250.

§ 21. ——Assignment or conveyance of licensor's interest.

¶ 65. Where the vendor of land assigns his contract to one who knows nothing of an oral agreement between the vendor and vendee whereby the latter may remove timber in violation of the contract's terms, the agreement is revoked.—Stickney v. Parmenter, 35 Mich. 237.

¶ 66. A bill of sale to a third person of standing timber with license to cut and remove it is no more than a license, and will not revoke a former license before notice to a first licensee.—White v. King, 87 Mich. 107.

¶ 67. The consent of a riparian owner to the building of a bridge on his premises is revoked by his conveying the property.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453.

¶ 68. An oral permission by one tenant in common of land to cut timber therefrom is naked, personal license which is revoked by the licensor's quitclaiming to his cotenant.—Ward v. Rapp, 79 Mich. 469.

¶ 69. A license, given by one tenant in common, with his cotenant's consent, to a third person to cut timber, is not necessarily revoked by a conveyance of the licensor's interest.—Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311.

¶ 70. Where adjoining owners of lots had created a driveway between their two lots for mutual convenience and deeds to one of the lots had been made without any grant or reservation of a highway being made therein, and the husband of the owner of one of the lots became the owner of the other, the wife having joined in the conveyance, the conveyance operated as a revocation of the license to use the driveway as to a later purchaser from the wife of her lot.—Wilkinson v. Hutzel, 142 Mich. 674.

§ 22. ——Death of one of parties.

¶ 71. An oral permission by the owner of land to cut timber thereon is revoked by the death of the licensor.—Estelle v. Peacock, 48 Mich. 469.

¶ 72. A mere license to cut timber is revoked by the death of the grantor thereof occurring before the grantee has severed said timber.—Curran v. Gordon, 169 Mich. 250.

¶ 73. A license to two or more is in general revoked by the death of one of the licensees. Whether such would be the rule under the peculiar facts of this case, quære.—Rust v. Conrad, 47 Mich. 449.

§ 23. ——Misconduct or unlawful acts of licensee.

¶ 74. The license impliedly given to enter another's place of business is revoked the moment the person so entering interferes unlawfully with the proprietor's rights or property.—Webber v. Barry, 66 Mich. 127.

§ 24. ——Estoppel to claim revocation.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.
Loss of right to revoke license granted railroad to construct its road over licensor's land because of his knowledge of permanent nature of construction, see Railroads, III.

¶ 75. The owner of lands may be estopped from revoking a parol license where his conduct has rendered the revocation inequitable. —Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453; Day v. Walden, 46 Mich. 575.

¶ 76. Where a licensee to use land has made costly improvements in reliance on the license, it seems that he should have adequate protection against revocation.—Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453.

§ 25. Forfeiture of license.

Rights after termination, see post § 26.

¶ 77. A licensee to cut timber forfeited his rights by a failure to perform the conditions of the license. Held, equity would not relieve him from the forfeiture when the ground offered by him was that he forgot the time fixed for performance of the conditions and it was inconvenient for him to perform them.—Scott v. Sullivan, 159 Mich. 297.

¶ 78. An instrument gave a right to a licensee to cut and remove timber for a term of fifteen years, all uncut timber at the end of the period to remain the property of the licensor. The licensee agreed to pay a portion of the taxes. Time was made of the essence, and the failure to pay the taxes was expressly stated to be an abandonment of the license. Held, the payment of the taxes was a condition precedent to the licensee's right to cut the timber, and an omission so to do for three years constituted a surrender of his rights.—Scott v. Sullivan, 159 Mich. 297.

§ 26. Rights after termination.

¶ 79. Revocation of a license to appropriate part of a street to private use does not immediately make the licensee a wrongdoer. —Everett v. City of Marquette, 53 Mich. 450.

¶ 80. Where wooden sheds had been erected on another's land after the revocation of the license to erect them, fifteen months were held to have exceeded any reasonable or necessary time for their removal. —Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439; Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189.

¶ 81. A resumption of possession and fencing of land occupied under a license contract permitting erection of sheds is lawful after reasonable time to remove the sheds.— Druse v. Wheeler, 26 Mich. 189; Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439.

¶ 10. A contract not to avoid a valid lien differs from a promise to pay a third person a debt that is entirely unsecured; such a promise is binding only as between the parties to the agreement.—Hunt v. Strew, 39 Mich. 368.

¶ 11. Whether one who sells merchandise to another on credit can establish a lien upon the proceeds of sales made by the debtor by stipulating that they shall be held in trust for him, quære.—Adriance v. Rutherford, 57 Mich. 170.

¶ 12. Where subscriptions of money to induce a person to erect a mill express no provision for a lien, none can be implied.—Ayres v. Dutton, 87 Mich. 528.

¶ 13. No lien upon papers or moneys placed in their hands for use in purchasing land exists in favor of real estate brokers.—Robinson v. Stewart, 97 Mich. 454.

¶ 14. Where a defendant claims that he bought and paid for property, that it was deeded to him, and that he owned it and spent money improving his own property, he cannot, upon failure to sustain such claim, change about and claim a lien under an implied contract as for an expenditure made on property belonging to another.—Dehn v. Dehn, 170 Mich. 407.

§ 3. Equitable liens.

Disregard in equity of discharge of lien by mistake, see post ¶ 55.
Equitable mortgages, see Mortgages, II, C.
Equitable lien resulting from payment under contract void under statute of frauds, see Frauds, Statute of § 139.
Decreeing lien to work out accounting, see Accounting Suits § 14.

¶ 15. A court of equity cannot create a lien, and can only declare one where the testimony equitably establishes an implied contract, as liens can only be made by agreement, express or implied, or by some fixed rule of law.—Dehn v. Dehn, 170 Mich. 407.

¶ 16. An equitable lien may arise in the absence of an express contract, under circumstances from which a contract is necessarily implied.—Dehn v. Dehn, 170 Mich. 407.

¶ 17. Equity cannot create a lien on real estate to secure a debt not contracted on its credit, and not charged upon it by agreement.—Bennett v. Nichols, 12 Mich. 22; Perkins v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 162.

¶ 18. Courts of equity do not create liens upon lands to secure a party for a breach of contract, whether under seal or not, when there is no agreement for a lien between the parties.—Richards v. Lewis L. Arms Shingle & Lumber Co., 74 Mich. 57.

¶ 19. An equitable lien upon real estate requires (1) a written contract identifying the property as security for the debt; or (2) such relations between the parties as will make it right and just to declare the lien; as, for example, in the case of a joint owner or bona fide purchaser making improvements in good faith, or in the case of partners' liens.—Kelly v. Kelly, 54 Mich. 30.

¶ 20. The doctrine of equitable lien is to prevent fraud and do justice, and should never be applied where the establishment of an equitable lien would not be carrying out the intent of the parties.—Kelly v. Kelly, 54 Mich. 30.

¶ 21. Equity cannot, unless allowed by statute, create a lien upon real estate to secure a personal debt, not contracted on its credit, and not charged on it by agreement.—Bennett v. Nichols, 12 Mich. 22; Perkins v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 162.

¶ 22. An equitable lien may arise where a party, innocently and in good faith, under a mistake as to the condition of the title to realty, renders services or makes improvements that are permanently beneficial to another.—Dehn v. Dehn, 170 Mich. 407.

¶ 23. A lien may be decreed on land and improvements for money advanced to parents of a deceased owner for the purpose of aiding the parents in making the improvements, where there are letters showing the intention that the lender should be secured thereon.—Osgood v. Osgood, 78 Mich. 290.

¶ 24. Subscribers to stock in a hotel to be erected and maintained by defendant under an agreement that each shareholder should have "an ownership" in the building and should be paid interest are entitled, though stock was never actually issued, to a lien on the completed building according to the amounts paid; and payment of interest could be enforced by foreclosure.—Near v. Donnelly, 80 Mich. 130.

¶ 25. Subscribers of money to aid in the erection of a flouring-mill, which is thereafter, in good faith, operated for more than two years at a loss, cannot, in the absence of express stipulation for a lien and for a continuance of the business, have a lien declared in their favor upon the property and prevent the sale and removal of the machinery.—Ayres v. Dutton, 87 Mich. 528.

¶ 26. Subscribers of stock for the erection of a mill who have not paid up are in no position to ask that defendant who had erected the mill be enjoined from removing the milling machinery and to declare an equitable lien on such.—Ayres v. Dutton, 87 Mich. 528.

¶ 27. Where sons, while living in the family, contribute not only sufficient to cover their own care and keep, but for the support of the parents and for the betterment of the property which is the family home, such contributions are impliedly gratuitous, in the absence of any agreement or understanding to the contrary, and create no lien. —Dehn v. Dehn, 170 Mich. 407.

¶ 28. Defendant, with his brothers, lived with his parents on premises purchased with money derived from the family inheritance and from family earnings, which premises were deeded to the father. Defendant, while making his home with his parents, expended money for taxes, insurance and improvements. Expenditures for repairs and improvements were also made by other sons and by the parents. Held, defendant was not entitled to a lien upon the premises for the money thus expended by him.—Dehn v. Dehn, 170 Mich. 407.

¶ 29. Upon suit by the guardian to set aside a deed made by an incompetent in consideration of support for life, it cannot be said that the equities are in favor of the defendant and that an equitable lien should be declared in his favor because he furnished the support for years, where her services to the defendant were of some value, the defendant also received some cash from her and had the use of the land in question during the time the support was furnished.—Domling v. Domling, 128 Mich. 588.

¶ 30. On bill for an accounting and for a lien on certain property on the ground that money furnished defendant for a specific purpose was not accounted for, and was used in constructing buildings on which a lien is claimed, held, that the testimony does not support plaintiff's theory.—L. Starks Co. v. Bigler, 175 Mich. 468.

¶ 31. On a bill to subject certain property of defendant to an equitable lien claimed by complainant, it was shown that defendant upon selling certain lands owned by him placed a deed thereto in complainant's hands as an escrow; that thereafter defendant secured a loan from complainant for the purchase of other lands, and thereupon induced the vendee in the first transaction to pay the purchase price directly to him instead of to complainant. It was held that complainant was not entitled to a lien upon the property subsequently acquired, since while defendant's conduct was dishonest and fraudulent he had violated no trust and permitted no fraud at the time the purchase of the lands was made.—Churchill v. Howe, 180 Mich. 150.

¶ 32. An equitable lien upon assets that are subject to the payment of debts in the hands of the administrator arises in favor of creditors, which may be enforced in a court of equity, after distribution by the probate court, to reach assets misapplied by the administrator.—Pierce v. Holzer, 65 Mich. 263.

¶ 33. The finder of lost goods who has been at trouble and expense about them has no lien upon the goods for compensation, unless they were lost at sea; then he has a lien for salvage.—Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1.

¶ 34. A finder of lost property has no lien upon it as finder after he knows to whom it belongs; but he has a lien upon it for whatever reward may be offered for its recovery. —Wood v. Pierson, 45 Mich. 313.

¶ 35. A trespasser who cuts another's trees acquires no lien upon the logs for the expense of cutting and transporting them.—Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 Mich. 309.

¶ 36. One who has discharged a lien on goods by advancing money therefor at the request of the owner has a right to the possession of the goods till reimbursed.—Edwards v. Frank, 40 Mich. 616.

¶ 37. Land conveyed to a fiduciary agent by a party who was in a position rendering him an easy subject for imposition was in equity subjected to a lien for any balance that might be found due on final accounting for its full value.—Rath v. Vanderlyn, 44 Mich. 597.

§ 4. Statutory liens.

¶ 38. Statutory liens often exist although the creditor has not possession of the property and the matter of possession does not deprive statutory liens of the legal attributes of common-law liens to which they are analogous.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 118 Mich. 162.

¶ 39. An automobile repairman is not entitled to a lien on an automobile for the purchase price of an extra tire furnished to be carried on the car under Comp. L. 1897, § 10747, but is entitled to a common-law lien against the tire itself for the price thereof.—Gardner v. Le Fevre, 180 Mich. 219.

Recourse to stockholders for labor debt of corporation, see Corporations §§ 331-337.

¶ 40. How. St. § 8408, giving laborers for mining corporations in the Upper Peninsula a lien for the amount due them for such labor upon all of the real and personal property of the corporation there situate, applies to the personal labor performed by an overseer and custodian of the mines and property of the corporation while in charge of its works and property and is not restricted to any particular class of laborers or kind of labor performed; the statute being liberally construed.—McLaren v. Byrnes, 80 Mich. 275.

¶ 41. An employee engaged by the owner of charcoal kilns contiguous to railroad tracks, to fire the kilns, fight fires and do other work at a fixed compensation, had no such possession of the charcoal as gave him a lien thereon for his wages and a consequent right to maintain trover against a railroad company which removed the coal after notice of such employee's claim.—Van Lesler v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 133 Mich. 664.

Requisites and sufficiency of payment, see Payment.

¶ 42. Liens can only be created by agreement, or by some fixed rule of law, and it is not one of the functions of courts to create them.—Frost v. Atwood, 73 Mich. 67.

¶ 43. Courts cannot create liens, but can only declare and enforce them.—Lyster's Appeal, 54 Mich. 325.

¶ 44. The burden of showing relinquishment of a lien once established is upon the owner of the estate charged.—Kirkwood v. Hoxie, 95 Mich. 62.

¶ 45. A lien once waived cannot afterwards be revived.—Blakeley v. Moshier, 94 Mich. 299.

¶ 46. Whether a lien may not continue, if so agreed, where other collaterals are taken, quære.—Ortmann v. Plummer, 52 Mich. 76.

¶ 47. For a case where a party, under an agreement to pay for lands by taking up encumbrances upon it, was held to have satisfied an encumbrance by buying it in, see Michigan Ins. Co. v. Kibbee, 6 Mich. 410.

¶ 48. A lien for redemption from foreclosure can only be satisfied by a payment or voluntary discharge.—Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 Mich. 468.

¶ 49. One who seeks to break a lien on the ground that the demand is excessive should tender what he himself considers reasonable.—Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 Mich. 377.

¶ 50. A lien once waived is permanently lost.—Au Sable River Boom Co. v. Sanborn, 36 Mich. 358.

¶ 51. All liens created by implication may be waived by implication.—McMaster v. Merrick, 41 Mich. 505.

¶ 52. A lien is waived if the parties entitled to it acquiesce in the action of third persons taking possession of the property on execution without notifying them of their own adverse claims.—McMaster v. Merrick, 41 Mich. 505.

¶ 53. A lien is waived by implication if privileged and unprivileged claims are commingled in the same dealings so that the lien is not kept ascertainable without restating and charging the accounts.—McMaster v. Merrick, 41 Mich. 505.

¶ 54. A lien is not lost by merely restating the account and deducting certain items.—Comstock v. McCracken, 53 Mich. 123.

¶ 55. Equity contemplates a lien discharged by mistake as still in existence.—French v. De Bow, 38 Mich. 708.

§ 7. ——Loss of possession.

In case of maritime liens, see also ante ¶ 4.
Loss of possession as releasing lien for log labor or services, see Forestry § 12.

¶ 56. An unconditional surrender of possession or conduct showing a design to discharge a possessory lien, or plainly inconsistent with it, usually puts an end to it.—De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298.

¶ 57. The holder of a possessory lien may allow the owner of the property to take it into his possession and remove it without prejudice to the lien, if so agreed.—De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298.

¶ 58. A possessory lien on property cannot be destroyed by a removal of such property, without the lienor's consent, from his lienor's possession.—De Witt v. Prescott, 51 Mich. 298.

¶ 59. No common-law lien upon personal property manufactured attaches where the manufacturer parts with the possession in the first instance after the manufacture.—Smith v. Greenop, 60 Mich. 61.

§ 8. Reinstatement of liens.

Revivability of lien, see also ante ¶¶ 45, 50.

¶ 60. A constable's lien upon the chattels of a corporation for his services in foreclosing a mortgage thereon is destroyed by his surrendering the property to the purchaser at the foreclosure sale; and no allowance therefor should be made to him in a subsequent proceeding for the appointment of a receiver for the corporation.—Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Kock, 117 Mich. 118.

¶ 61. It seems that a complainant seeking to reinstate a lien which he has discharged by mistake on lands of which he has since been in possession might be required to account for rents and profits if the pleadings raise the question.—French v. De Bow, 38 Mich. 708.

¶ 65. Equity will not interfere to impound property or tie up interests after an execution sale thereof, in order to establish a lien thereon under attachment proceedings that have not even reached a judgment.—Rollins v. Van Baalen, 56 Mich. 610.

¶ 66. In many lien cases resort to a court of equity, is not necessary or permissible, as courts of law can deal with them cheaply and expeditiously.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 118 Mich. 162.

¶ 67. Equity has not jurisdiction to enforce payment by foreclosure in all cases of statutory liens.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 118 Mich. 162.

¶ 68. Where liens on property are accompanied by a personal responsibility the creditor has a right to rely on both.—Stebbins v. Walker, 46 Mich. 5.

¶ 69. The facts that a vendee of shinglelogs, the title to which, as also to the shingles manufactured therefrom, is retained by the vendor until certain notes given for the purchase-price are paid, has sold the shingles in violation of the contract and in fraud of the vendor, and that the purchasers threaten to remove the shingles out of the jurisdiction of the court, it not being claimed that they are pecuniarily irresponsible, do not create an equity entitling the vendor to maintain a bill in equity to enforce his alleged lien on the shingles, and for an accounting with said purchasers for shingles sold.—Brown v. Ring, 77 Mich. 159.

¶ 70. How. St. §§ 8402-8404, provide for the enforcement of liens for labor performed for mining corporations in the Upper Peninsula by the commencement of a suit by summons, and in case of a failure to obtain personal service the plaintiff may proceed in all respects, as near as may be, as in suits commenced by attachment where personal service is not obtained upon the defendant.—McLaren v. Byrnes, 80 Mich. 275.

¶ 71. Equity having jurisdiction for other purposes may order sales of property for the satisfaction of liens in order to do complete justice between the parties.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 118 Mich. 162.

¶ 72. A common-law lien resting in possession is not enforceable in equity.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 118 Mich. 162.

¶ 73. Although a creditor corporation having a legal security by statute analogous to a common-law lien cannot sell the property, there is no impediment to the recovery of a judgment and a sale of the property, as well as any other property of the debtor, on execution.—Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 118 Mich. 162.

¶ 74. One who buys at an auction subject to liens must take the transfer subject to such liens, notwithstanding they are not such as could have been legally enforced against the title sold.—Eames v. Eames, 16 Mich. 348.

¶ 75. All persons are bound to take notice that unpaid laborers for a mining corporation in the Upper Peninsula have a lien for their labor upon all of the real and personal property of the corporation in that portion of the state, which accrues and attaches as the labor is performed, and which has priority over a subsequent attachment though no notice of lien is filed.—McLaren v. Byrnes, 80 Mich. 275.

¶ 76. Where there are two concurrent liens against property, the court should order an accounting and distribute the proceeds of the property in accordance with the rights of the parties so ascertained.—M. C. Bullock Mfg. Co. v. Sunday Lake Iron Min. Co., 132 Mich. 285.

¶ 77. A judgment lien for mining labor under Comp. L. 1897, § 10755, and a lien under section 5472 for labor and materials furnished a foreign mining and smelting corporation, are concurrent or simultaneous.—M. C. Bullock Mfg. Co. v. Sunday Lake Iron Min. Co., 132 Mich. 285.

¶ 78. A vendor's lien has priority over the claims of assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency or general assignees for the benefit of creditors.—Lyon v. Clark, 132 Mich. 521.

¶ 79. How. St. § 8749m, allowing a preference for claims for labor, applies to services rendered by a clerk in a dry goods store, to services by a salesman and manager in marking goods, placing them on the shelves, getting the stock ready, sweeping out the store, and other general work.—Lawton v. Richardson, 118 Mich. 669.

¶ 80. Labor liens for mine labor were given priority over mortgages prior in point of time, on property of a mining corporation in the Upper Peninsula under How. St. § 8408, providing for such liens to "take precedence of all other" debts, liens, or mortgages; and this language is not restricted by the further provision that the lien shall be enforced in the same manner and under the same "limitations and conditions" as are provided for other liens.—Atlantic Dynamite Co. v. Ropes Gold & Silver Co., 119 Mich. 260.

¶ 81. The rule that a surviving partner had the right to give a mortgage on the partnership property to secure the payment of a debt which should be paid out of the partnership assets, applies as between a mortgage given by a surviving partner individually and also as such partner and an execution levy made after the giving of the mortgage; and the mortgage was held to be the prior lien.—Peoples Nat. Bank of Jackson v. Wilcox, 136 Mich. 567.

¶ 82. The lis pendens for costs filed by complainant in partition with the filing of his bill, under Comp. L. 1897, § 8980, operates to make his lien upon the interest of the defendants in the lands involved in the partition suit superior to the lien of the solicitor of defendants under a mortgage upon such interest, given by them after the commencement of the suit to secure the payment of such solicitor's fee; even though the sheriff by his notice levied upon and sold only the interest of defendants in execution for such costs.—Barbour v. Patterson, 145 Mich. 459.

¶ 83. One having a claim for mining royalties under a lease which provides for a lien on the ore to enforce such claim may obtain a personal decree against the lessee in a court of equity in a suit to enforce the lien, where the bill alleges property upon which the complainant had a lien within the jurisdiction and the answer is silent upon the subject of the removal from the state of the property or sale of it, but on the contrary admits an indebtedness of a part of the amount claimed and offers to pay it and no intimation of sale and removal is made until the presentation of the defense on the hearing.—Hewitt Iron Mining Co. v. Dessau Co., 129 Mich. 590.

¶ 84. On a bill to enforce a lien on stock assigned by a former city clerk as security for the payment of any deficit, if such there should be found in his accounts with such city, the stock was rightly ordered returned to him and such assignment canceled according to his cross-action for accounting, where the evidence shows that at the time of such assignment, he had in fact overpaid such city; and such credit balance was rightly ordered paid to him by such city.—First State Sav. Bank of Three Rivers v. McMurtrie, 145 Mich. 700.

¶ 2. A remainder over to minor children named, in the event of a devisee's dying without issue, is valid as a contingent limitation upon a fee, and will vest in possession on the death of the first taker without issue living at the time of such death.—Goodell v. Hibbard, 32 Mich. 47.

¶ 3. A remainder in fee may be created in favor of an unborn child.—See v. Derr, 57 Mich. 369.

¶ 4. The estate of a remainder-man is a vested one, subject only to the possibility of being defeated by his death previous to that of the life tenant.—Ensign v. Dunn, 181 Mich. 456.

¶ 5. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 8814, a remainder after a life estate cannot be defeated by the act of the life tenant.—Jeffers v. Sydnam, 129 Mich. 440.

¶ 6. Where a woman acquiesced for many years in a probate decree pursuant to the terms of her father's void will, awarding her a life estate in realty with remainder to her unborn children, held that the legal title vested in her children at their birth, and that the mother's grantee did not acquire title to the fee.—James E. Scripps Corporation v. Parkinson, 186 Mich. 663.

Merger of estates in general, see Real Property.
Alienation of expectant estates, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11553.

¶ 7. A remainderman may, before the death of the life tenant, convey his interest, under How. St., § 5551, declaring expectant estates to be descendible, devisable, and alienable in the same manner as estates in possession.—Defreese v. Lake, 109 Mich. 415.

§ 4. Merger of estates.

¶ 8. Where a life estate becomes vested in or is transferred to the owner of the fee without any intervening estate it is merged in the fee.—Ryder v. Flanders, 30 Mich. 336.

¶ 9. The conveyance of the estate of remaindermen and of a life tenant to the same person, subject to a lease given by the life tenant for a term of years does not effect a merger of the two estates which will, in equity, bind the purchaser, on the death of the life tenant before the end of its term, to the terms of the lease, where the latter had no intention of leasing anything beyond the life estate.—Hartz v. Hilsendegen, 182 Mich. 129. Followed in Mintz v. Hartz, 182 Mich. 140.

¶ 10. Where the grantor conveys a moiety in land to each of two grantees for life with remainder to the survivor in fee neither can by conveyance create a tenancy in common so as to cut off the contingent remainder.—Finch v. Haynes, 144 Mich. 352.

§ 5. Presumptions and evidence of estates.

¶ 11. The evidence held sufficient to show that a lost conveyance created a life estate with remainder over to the grantee's son.—Edwards v. Mudge, 186 Mich. 71.

¶ 12. The fact that a lost conveyance created a life estate with remainder over to the grantee's son, held established by the evidence.—Edwards v. Mudge, 186 Mich. 71.

II. MUTUAL AND RELATIVE RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

§ 6. Rights pertaining to life estates.

Construction of wills creative of life estates, see Wills, VI.

¶ 13. The devisee of a life estate is entitled to possession, rents, issues and profits.—Pitcher v. Douglas, 37 Mich. 339.

¶ 14. The right of a life tenant to the proceeds of sales of timber follows the right to cut timber.—Poole v. Union Trust Co., 191 Mich. 162.

¶ 15. Where, before the commencement of the life estate, the land has been cultivated for the produce of salable timber, the tenant may continue the cultivation for his own profit.—Poole v. Union Trust Co., 191 Mich. 162.

§ 7. ——Sale or mortgage by life tenant.

Sale or mortgage of remainder or reversion before death of life tenant, see ante § 3.
Deed from life tenant as color of title, see Adverse Possession § 32.

General law of sales of realty, see Vendor and Purchaser.
Effect of deed by life tenant, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11690.

¶ 16. A widow entitled to a life estate in certain realty, under the will of her husband, agreed to convey her interest to the heirs for $1,500, and certain personal property, provided the heirs should sell the realty within a year and pay her the money. She died before the year was up, and the land was sold within the year. Held, her administrator was entitled to recover by bill the $1,500 out of the money received for the land, in the hands of her husband's administrator.—Ferris v. Poucher, 152 Mich. 251.

¶ 17. The owner of a life estate in land and the remaindermen joined in a conveyance taking a single mortgage back for the unpaid purchase price. Held, that the life tenant was entitled to the interest on the debt until the mortgage was discharged or until her death, notwithstanding a subsequent conveyance and assignment by the remaindermen of their interest in the land and in the debt secured.—Horton v. Howard, 95 Mich. 134.

§ 8. ——Improvements by life tenant.

Right of purchaser from life tenant to remove improvements, see post ¶ 60.
Improvements by life tenant as fixtures or movables, see Fixtures § 13.

¶ 18. Improvements made by a life tenant during his tenancy are presumed to be for his own benefit and are as a rule not a charge against the estate or the remainderman.—Stroh v. O'Hearn, 176 Mich. 164.

§ 9. ——Limitations upon use of estate.

What is prohibited as waste, see Waste.

¶ 19. Where timber lands which were purchased by a testatrix for investment and resale are valuable chiefly for the timber thereon, the trustees of an estate may not sell the timber and pay the proceeds to the life tenant, since such a course would materially injure the fee.—Poole v. Union Trust Co., 191 Mich. 162.

¶ 20. A widow who has a life interest in an entire estate with power to use so much as she shall need does not have power to remit the interest on a mortgage accruing during her life; she is under obligation to account for both principal and interest.—In re Mallary's Estate, 127 Mich. 119.

§ 10. ——Effect of levy upon or sale of remainder or reversion.

Voluntary alienation or incumbrance before death of life tenant, see ante § 3.

¶ 21. The right of the owner of a life interest to control and possess the property during his life is not affected by a levy upon and sale of the remainderman's interest.—Storrs v. Storrs, 58 Mich. 55.

§ 11. Liabilities as between life tenant and remainderman or reversioner.

Obligation to pay taxes, see post § 12.
Duty to make repairs, see post § 13.
Liabilities toward third persons, see post III.
Forfeiture of estate for breach of condition, see Deeds § 88 et seq.

¶ 22. Life tenants must pay the interest on mortgages and debts which are a lien upon the fee of the property.—Stroh v. O'Hearn, 176 Mich. 164.

¶ 23. As between the owners of the fee and of a life estate in the same encumbered property, the life estate is to keep down the interest and the fee is to be charged with the principal. Interest due at the death of the ancestor, as between the tenants for life and in fee, will be treated as principal.—Campbell v. Campbell, 21 Mich. 438.

¶ 24. The interest of a widow in her husband's realty being only a life interest it is her duty as between herself and the owners of the fee to pay the interest upon the encumbrance upon the estate.—Bowen v. Brogan, 119 Mich. 218.

¶ 25. As between a tenant for life in possession and the remainderman, the duty to pay the principal of an encumbrance rests upon the remainderman, the tenant being holden for interest only; and the obligation of the tenant is not extended where the life estate is in expectancy.—Damm v. Damm, 109 Mich. 619.

¶ 26. A grantor of property encumbered by a mortgage, who reserves a life estate therein in himself, is bound, as between himself and the grantee, to pay the interest on the mortgage during the existence of the life estate.—Welbon v. Welbon, 109 Mich. 356.

¶ 27. A life tenant in expectancy is bound to contribute to a remainderman who pays an encumbrance upon their estates, to which the estate of the tenant in possession is not subject, an amount equal to his proportionate share, according to his expectancy, of the interest which would accrue during the expectancy of life of the tenant in possession, and the entire interest which would accrue during his expectancy of life after the commencement of his life estate in possession, less such sum as may be proper on account of immediate payment.—Damm v. Damm, 109 Mich. 619.

¶ 28. It is the duty of a life tenant to pay the interest on encumbrances existing at the time the tenancy was created, and, in case the premises are redeemed, to contribute to the payment of the principal according to the value of his interest in the land. A dowress, therefore, who purchases and seeks to foreclose a mortgage covering lands admeasured to her as dower, the amount of which mortgage was deducted from the value of the land in making the apportionment, should be charged with the present value of an annuity for the remainder of her life equal to the annual interest on the mortgage debt, to be computed, however, at the legal rate of interest, irrespective of that stipulated in the mortgage.—Hodges v. Phinney, 106 Mich. 537.

§ 12. ——Obligation to pay taxes.

¶ 29. It is the duty of a life tenant to pay taxes upon a life estate during his tenancy.—Smith v. Blindbury, 66 Mich. 319; Myers v. Myers, 186 Mich. 215.

¶ 30. Life tenants must pay taxes which are a lien upon the fee of the property.—Stroh v. O'Hearn, 176 Mich. 164.

¶ 31. The duty of a life tenant to pay taxes is not released because a reversioner, who occupies jointly with him, mortgages the reversion agreeing with the mortgagee to pay the taxes.—Jenks v. Horton, 96 Mich. 13.

§ 13. ——Duty to make repairs.

Waste in general, see Waste.
Conveyance of timber land by life tenant as waste, see Waste.

¶ 32. It is the duty of a life tenant to make repairs to prevent waste.—Smith v. Blindbury, 66 Mich. 319.

¶ 33. The life tenant is bound to keep the premises in repair, and is not permitted to commit waste.—Curtis v. Fowler, 66 Mich. 696.

§ 14. Payment of incumbrance by life tenant.

¶ 34. Although a life tenant is under no obligation to pay off the principal of an encumbrance, even to prevent a foreclosure sale, yet if he does so, he is entitled to call upon the remainderman for contribution and has a lien on the property for the amount due, and the amount for which the remainderman is liable is the amount paid less the amount of interest which would have been payable by the life tenant.—Detroit & Northern Michigan Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Oram, 200 Mich. 485.

¶ 35. While a life tenant cannot claim a lien for payments on an encumbrance made voluntarily with no purpose to bind the remainderman, yet payments made in ignorance of the real state of facts cannot be said to be voluntary.—Detroit & Northern Michigan Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Oram, 200 Mich. 485.

¶ 36. Evidence held sufficient to show that a life tenant, in using her own money to apply on a mortgage on property, believed that she was the owner of the premises.—Detroit & Northern Michigan Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Oram, 200 Mich. 485.

¶ 37. It is the duty of the remainderman to pay the principal of incumbrances against the property which is held by a life tenant but if the life tenant pays it he cannot acquire an adverse title against the remainderman but he is entitled to contribution from such remainderman and has a lien upon the property for the amount so paid less interest on the principal.—Stroh v. O'Hearn, 176 Mich. 164.

§ 15. Rights incident to remainders and reversions.

Invalidity as to reversioner and remainderman of recoveries against life tenant, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXIII, § 3, Comp. L. 1915, § 13360.

¶ 38. Permanent improvements made on realty by life tenants inure to the remainderman's benefit.—Curtis v. Fowler, 66 Mich. 696.

¶ 39. Remaindermen are not bound by representations of the life tenant's attorney that in making a lease of the life estate he was acting for them, when in fact he represented the life tenant only.—Hartz v. Hilsendegen, 182 Mich. 129. Followed in Mintz v. Hartz, 182 Mich. 140.

¶ 40. Where a remainderman who has agreed to pay the owner reserving a life estate a monthly sum for the latter's lifetime, enters into possession and makes improvements, he will be presumed to have made the improvements for his own benefit. —Herpel v. Herpel, 162 Mich. 606.

¶ 41. A widow had a life estate in the west half of a building. The reversioner also owned the east half of the building. Held, that the reversioner would not be enjoined from removing a stairway that had been used in common by the two halves, and closing the communication, the stairway not being a way of necessity or a permanent appurtenance, and the proposed change tending to increase the value of the estate as a whole, and the benefit to the reversioner being greater than the injury to the life tenant; such a tenant must make the property available to his profit at his own expense.—Scott v. Palms, 48 Mich. 505.

§ 16. Acquisition of adverse title.

Right of parties to buy in tax titles, see post § 17.
Right of purchaser of life estate to purchase hostile claims and dispute title of life tenant, see also post ¶¶ 58, 59.
Remedies for protection of estate in personalty from waste, see post § 30.

¶ 42. Where, through an agreement fraudulent as to the remainderman, a third person forecloses a mortgage on property subject to a life estate, purchases at foreclosure, and conveys to the life tenant, the remainderman is entitled to redeem.—Engel v. Ladewig, 153 Mich. 8.

¶ 43. Where the life tenant has acquired a title through foreclosure of a mortgage in fraud of the rights of the remainderman, the remainderman is entitled to redeem upon paying the amount of the mortgage less such sum, calculated at its present worth, as would equal the amount of interest which the life tenant would have been required to pay during her expectancy of life.—Engel v. Ladewig, 153 Mich. 8.

¶ 44. Land held by a life tenant, the father of complainants, was covered by a mortgage, the interest on which the father failed to pay. Foreclosure was had, the mortgagee buying in. Later, the mortgagee reconveyed the fee to the father, and took from him a mortgage covering the original debt, interest, and costs. The father then conveyed to his son, the defendant, who knew all the facts. In a bill by other minor children, the remaindermen, to have the deeds set aside, held, the life tenant occupied toward them a fiduciary relation and owed a duty to pay the interest on the mortgage; and the defendant not being an innocent purchaser the deeds to him should be set aside.—McCall v. McCall, 159 Mich. 144.

¶ 45. A life tenant, the father of complainants, minor children, who were remaindermen, permitted a mortgage to be foreclosed, and later, in violation of his fiduciary duty to the remaindermen obtained title in fee to the land. He then conveyed the same to a son, the defendant, with whom the father lived on the land, and who took care of the father during his last illness. In a decree setting aside the deed to the defendant, held, the defendant was not in equity entitled to compensation for taking care of the father, or for money spent in taxes and improvements on the land, since he had had the use of the same and had removed valuable buildings from it.—McCall v. McCall, 159 Mich. 144.

¶ 46. The interest of a widow in her husband's realty being only a life interest, it is her duty, as between herself and the owners of the fee, to pay the interest upon the encumbrance, and therefore a widow who neglected such duty and permitted a mortgage to be foreclosed, could not, by acquiring the property through the foreclosure sale, cut off the title of the remaindermen.—Bowen v. Brogan, 119 Mich. 218.

¶ 47. Land held by a life tenant, the father of complainants, was covered by a mortgage, the interest on which the life tenant failed to pay. Foreclosure was had, the mortgagee buying in. Later, the mortgagee reconveyed the fee to the father, and took from him a mortgage covering the original debt, interest, and costs. The father then conveyed to his son, the defendant, who knew all the facts. Complainants, minor children, who were the remaindermen, brought a bill shortly after the father's death to have the deeds set aside. There was evidence that the father led complainants all along to believe he was acting for their protection. Held, that since complainants acted as soon after their father's death as the defendant informed them of his intent to claim absolute title, they were not guilty of laches.—McCall v. McCall, 159 Mich. 144.

¶ 48. Where a will created a life estate which was accepted and imposed upon the life tenant the duty of paying the interest upon the mortgage debt on the land, but he failed to do so and allowed the property to be sold under a foreclosure sale, and failing to redeem, he was afterwards compelled to take a contract of purchase from the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, this inured to the benefit of the remaindermen who secured all the equitable rights under his contract of purchase.—Lewis v. Wright, 148 Mich. 290.

¶ 49. Under the rule that a life tenant in possession does not hold adversely to the remaindermen, the grantees of such a tenant who acquired title at the foreclosure sale under a mortgage which she had permitted to be foreclosed through neglect of her duty to pay interest, did not acquire title by adverse possession.—Bowen v. Brogan, 119 Mich. 218.

§ 17. ——Right of parties to buy in tax titles.

¶ 50. A purchaser of a life estate cannot neglect to pay taxes and acquire a tax title as against the remaindermen.—Jeffers v. Sydnam, 129 Mich. 440.

¶ 51. A married woman who is in possession with her husband, of land in which the latter has a life estate, cannot acquire a tax title which she can assert adversely to the life tenant or the remainderman.—Myers v. Myers, 186 Mich. 215.

§ 18. Remedies to determine relative rights and liabilities.

Presumptions and evidence of estates, see ante § 5.
Actions and remedies by and against strangers, see post § 26.
Limitation of action by remainderman to recover portion of fund derived from sale of fee by life tenant, see Limitations ¶ 46.

¶ 52. Where a remainderman goes into possession of the premises and the life tenant brings a bill for relief, the chancery court must have sufficient evidence before it of the rental value of the premises before decreeing that the remainderman shall pay a fixed sum per year for the occupation of the land.—Herpel v. Herpel, 162 Mich. 606.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES TOWARDS STRANGERS.

§ 19. In general; persons dealing with life tenant.

Persons holding under life tenant at his death, see post § 20.

Power of life tenant to make leases, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11606-11608.
Statutory prohibition against arbitration of interests in life estates or estates in fee, see Jud. Act, chap. XLV, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13647.

¶ 53. One who contracts with a life tenant for the purchase of the timber standing on the land, and pays the purchase price, with the full knowledge and acquiescence of the remainderman, will be protected, in so far as his acts in cutting and removing the timber without objection by the remainderman are involved, upon the theory that the silence of the remainderman amounted to a parol assent in the nature of a license, revocable at his pleasure.—Huyck v. Bailey, 100 Mich. 223.

§ 20. Persons holding under life tenant at his death.

Right and title of purchaser of life estate, see post § 21.
Rights of foreclosure purchaser, see post § 22.

¶ 54. The death of a life tenant terminates the lease of the premises existing between him and his lessee, and the latter becomes a tenant by sufferance of the reversioner.—Harrington v. Sheldon, 196 Mich. 388.

¶ 55. The death of a life tenant during the continuance of a lease of his estate for a term of years extinguishes the rights of the lessee the lease not being binding on the remainderman.—Hartz v. Hilsendegen, 182 Mich. 129. Followed in Mintz v. Hartz, 182 Mich. 140.

¶ 56. A lease for a term of years by a life tenant of his estate is not, after his death, binding on the remaindermen on the ground of ratification, in the absence of evidence tending to show an intention on their part to recognize the lease as affecting their estate; or that the life tenant acted for them, or attempted to bind them in writing.—Hartz v. Hilsendegen, 182 Mich. 129. Followed in Mintz v. Hartz, 182 Mich. 140.

¶ 57. The lease of his estate by a life tenant for a term of years is not binding on the remaindermen by way of estoppel after the former's death, where the remaindermen did nothing to lead the lessee to believe that the life tenant had power to bind them. —Hartz v. Hilsendegen, 182 Mich. 129. Followed in Mintz v. Hartz, 182 Mich. 140.

§ 21. Right and title of purchaser of life estate.

¶ 58. A purchaser of a life estate cannot dispute the title of the life tenant through the purchase of hostile claims.—Hunt v. Rabitoay, 125 Mich. 137.

¶ 59. The purchaser of a life estate may purchase outstanding claims to set up against the title of the remaindermen upon the termination of the life tenancy.—Hunt v. Rabitoay, 125 Mich. 137.

¶ 60. A purchaser in possession of land under a deed conveying a life estate, who was also tenant in common with others of the remainder, could not, after his grantor's death, recover for improvements made by him upon the premises during his grantor's life.—Curtis v. Fowler, 66 Mich. 696.

¶ 61. As the deed of a tenant for life conveys the present freehold, rescission on the ground of a complete failure of consideration cannot be claimed by tenant's purchaser with warranty, who maintains that he bought the land believing that tenant's title was in fee. —Leal v. Terbush, 52 Mich. 100.

§ 22. Rights of foreclosure purchaser.

Redemption rights of remainderman or reversioner, see post § 23.

Title and rights of foreclosure purchasers in general, see Foreclosure, IV.

¶ 62. Where a will created a life estate which was accepted and there was a duty imposed that he pay the interest upon a mortgage debt on the property, but the property is permitted to be sold under foreclosure for nonpayment of interest, the purchaser obtains a good title; and where he afterwards sells to a stranger the remaindermen will have lost all their interest in the property.—Lewis v. Wright, 148 Mich. 290.

§ 23. ——Redemption rights of remainderman or reversioner.

¶ 63. Where a will created a life estate which was accepted and there was imposed the duty upon paying the interest upon a mortgage debt on the property, but instead of performing the duty owed to the remaindermen he allows the property to be sold under foreclosure, his remaindermen would succeed to every right he obtained in case he had redeemed within the statutory period.—Lewis v. Wright, 148 Mich. 290.

§ 24. Purchaser of reversion or remainder.

¶ 64. The purchaser of a reversion, either by mortgage or absolute conveyance, is subrogated to all the rights of the original reversioner as against a life tenant.—Jenks v. Horton, 96 Mich. 13.

§ 25. Proceedings for sale of lands subject to life estate.

Proceedings in chancery court for sale of life estates with reversion or remainder, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 62-70, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12716-12724.

Chancery power to authorize sale of lands at instance of persons having life estate in them, whose interests would otherwise be jeopardized, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 62 et seq.; Comp. L. 1915, § 12716 et seq.

¶ 65. A petition for the sale of lands subject to devised life estate, filed under Comp. L. 1897, § 9234 et seq., not being under oath, inasmuch as there was no clerk's certificate to the character of the notary, and verification having been made in a foreign state, was properly dismissed.—Metcalf v. Carr, 133 Mich. 123.

¶ 66. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 9234-9242 inclusive as amended by Pub. Acts 1901, No. 55, authorizing chancery courts to sell lands held under a life estate whenever it shall appear that the rights of interested parties will otherwise be jeopardized, and providing for substituted service by publication, the procedure is constitutional and valid where the urgency is shown, the heirs apparent are served and appear by guardians ad litem, but no service other than by publication is had on brothers and sisters of the life tenant who may possibly be entitled if the children of the life tenant die before he does. Persons not in esse will be bound by the decree and the substituted service by publication provides for those now in esse who may possibly become entitled to the remainder.—Garrison v. Hecker, 128 Mich. 539.

§ 26. Actions and remedies by and against strangers.

Presumptions and evidence of estates, see ante § 5.

Remedies to determine relative rights and liabilities, see ante § 18.

Sale of life estate in partition proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXI, § 42, Comp. L. 1915, § 13299.

Right of reversioner or remainderman to sue after tenant for life makes default or surrender of property to stranger, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXIII, § 2, Comp. L. 1915, § 13359.

Right of reversioner or remainderman to defend suit against life tenant, see Jud. Act. chap. XXXIII, § 1, Comp. L. 1915, § 13358.

¶ 67. Ejectment was maintainable by remaindermen against parties in possession under a void mortgage foreclosure, though they and not the life tenant were bound to pay the mortgage debt, and the foreclosure occurred by the life tenant's neglect to pay the interest.—Bowen v. Brogan, 119 Mich. 218.

¶ 68. In ejectment by remaindermen against the grantees of a life tenant who improperly acquired title through the foreclosure of a mortgage based on her own default, such grantees could not defend on the ground that the action was not sustainable until such remaindermen had made payment of the principal amount due to the mortgagee.—Bowen v. Brogan, 119 Mich. 218.

¶ 69. Strangers in possession of land cannot resist the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by the life tenant on the ground that the mortgage violates a condition in the deed to the mortgagor prohibiting a conveyance of the land during his lifetime.—Hayward v. Kinney, 84 Mich. 591.

IV. IN PERSONAL PROPERTY.

§ 27. In general; possession and enjoyment.

Corpus and income, see post § 28.
Sale and conversion to money and reinvestment, see post § 29.
Waste and remedies against it, see post § 30.

¶ 70. Payments on deceased vendor's contract to sell land held good where made to his widow, to whom he left life estate in all his property, and where there was no administration.—Lamore v. Frisbie, 42 Mich. 186.

¶ 71. Replevin cannot be maintained by the administrator of the estate of a daughter who was entitled to the life possession of the property which belonged to her father, subject to the condition of caring for him during his lifetime; as upon the death of the daughter the father alone could assert, not only title to the property, but his right to the possession of it.—Salter v. Sutherland, 123 Mich. 225.

¶ 72. In a particular case it was held that, even on the supposition that a widow's right was limited by will to a life estate, she was entitled to possession of securities and could foreclose them, especially as the coexecutor acquiesced.—Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284.

§ 28. Corpus and income.

¶ 73. Distributions of additional stock in the nature of a stock dividend belong to the corpus of a trust estate and do not constitute income payable to a life tenant when they represent a reduction of capital, or a change of its form, or an enhancement of the value of the capital assets from causes other than the accumulation of earnings.—Poole v. Union Trust Co., 191 Mich. 162.

¶ 74. An instrument made and delivered by a mother to her daughter, selling and agreeing to transfer to the daughter certain stocks and other property, upon the condition that the mother is to have the income during her life, and after her death the property and "all income arising therefrom" to belong to the daughter, is construed to reserve the income to the mother during her life to be used or disposed of as she shall see fit.—Bloodgood v. Terry, 134 Mich. 305.

¶ 75. Where a promissory note bearing annual interest provides that at the death of the payee it is to become the property of another designated person, and that no part of the principal is to be paid during the lifetime of the payee, and the note was secured by a mortgage containing similar recitals the payee does not thereby reserve to himself during his lifetime the interest earned by the principal, but merely reserved the annual interest, and the interest which accrued in the interval between the payment of the annual interest and his death belongs to the person designated in the note, and not to his estate.—Rogers v. Osborne, 146 Mich. 613.

§ 29. Sale and conversion to money and reinvestment.

¶ 76. The owner of a life estate in personal property has the power to make it available according to circumstances. If it consists of securities the estate is not an estate in each particular security, but in the aggregate; and an assignment of a security cannot be complained of unless it would tend to diminish the estate at the life tenant's death.—Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 Mich. 446.

¶ 77. A person holding a life estate in securities has authority to convert them into money when that is the proper proceeding for obtaining the income and protecting the property from loss; and even a sale of a particular security may be entirely admissible where the bulk of the estate is preserved intact; and all that can be required is that the estate shall be so managed as to preserve the aggregation from diminution.—Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 Mich. 446.

¶ 78. A possible remainderman in personalty, in event that the life tenant does not dispose thereof, cannot assert fraud with regard to a sale of such personalty.—Turnbull v. Johnson, 153 Mich. 228.

§ 30. Waste and remedies against it.

¶ 79. If in case of a life estate in personal property, the estate is wasted by the life tenant, the party in whose behalf the limitation order is made has a remedy, but the personal representatives cannot interfere.—Sutphen v. Ellis, 35 Mich. 446.

LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS.

TREATS of statutory restrictions on the time within civil actions and proceedings in the nature of actions may be brought. It excludes regulations and restrictions on the time and sequence of the particular steps in actions, as to which see the specific topics treating of the various actions and proceedings, and the statutes of nonclaim, which require the presentation of the claim within time limits in order to fix a right of action. As to statutes of nonclaim, see Estates of Decedents, VI, C; Highways, XII, H, 1; Municipal Corporations, XIV. For agreements limiting time to sue, see Contracts §§ 47, 48; Insurance § 272 et seq. I. THE STATUTES AND THEIR APPLICATION IN GENERAL.

§ 1. In general; policy and construction of the law.

Implications as to exceptions and exemptions, see post § 23.

Validity of laws imposing limitations on persons in possession of land, see Constitutional Law §§ 146, 154, 289.

¶ 1. The statute of limitations is favorably regarded by the courts as one of repose as well as of presumption, and as affording security against stale claims; and it is not to be defeated by undue strictness of construction, but must be fairly construed to give effect to the legislative intent.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40; Jewett v. Pettit, 4 Mich. 508; Jenny v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 28; People ex rel. Gorman v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 138; Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487; Toll v. Wright, 37 Mich. 93; Proctor v. Bigelow, 38 Mich. 282.

¶ 2. Statutes of limitation, where land is involved, have regard specially to the laches of the owner, and they deny him a remedy for the recovery of his rights because he has failed to pursue them within a reasonable time.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

¶ 3. Statutes limiting the right to bring actions for the recovery of land are for the purpose of preventing litigation, quieting title, and securing peace among citizens. They are statutes of repose, and have come to be regarded with favor by courts and juries, rather than, as formerly, with disfavor.—Greene v. Anglemire, 77 Mich. 168.

¶ 4. The reason for statutes of limitation lies in the danger of losing testimony, and of finding difficulty in getting at precise facts.—Shadock v. Alpine Plank Road Co., 79 Mich. 7.

¶ 5. The chapter on the statute of limitations, Comp. L. 1897, chap. 268, How. St., 2nd Ed., chap. 384 (§§ 14135-14164), must be read as one act with its several parts and clauses mutually acting on each other as their sense requires.—Sproat v. Hall, 189 Mich. 28.

¶ 6. While the statute of limitations is to be construed according to its terms, it is not to be given a construction so technical as to deprive a party of a legal right which the terms of his contract plainly give him.—Busch v. Jones, 94 Mich. 223.

§ 2. Application and operation of the statutes and amendments.

To actions by, for, or against the state or the public, see post §§ 25, 26.
Effect of the statutes as a bar, matters barred, see post §§ 6, 7.

When action deemed commenced or bar complete, see post V.
Validity of acts retrospectively affecting limitations, see Constitutional Law §§ 288, 289.
Application of due process clause, see Constitutional Law § 146.

¶ 7. A general statute of limitation must operate uniformly and hence will not be construed to retroact, when that would operate unequally.—Holmes v. Soule, 180 Mich. 526.

¶ 8. Statutes of limitation are construed to operate prospectively only unless their terms clearly indicate a different intent.—Harrison v. Metz, 17 Mich. 377.

¶ 9. Laws 1863, Act No. 227, amending the limitations of actions for the recovery of lands, does not apply to causes of action that accrued before Jan. 1, 1864, the date when said statute took effect. A right of action that accrued before that date would be controlled by the statute in force at the time.—Price v. Hopkin, 13 Mich. 318; Ludwig v. Stewart, 32 Mich. 27; Stambaugh v. Snoblin, 32 Mich. 296.

¶ 10. A right of action to recover the possession of real estate, accruing prior to the time when Rev. Stat. 1838 took effect, is governed by the statute of limitations theretofore existing.—Miller v. Davis, 106 Mich. 300.

¶ 11. Laws 1867, p. 39 (How. St. § 8736), limiting the time within which actions upon judgments can be brought, applies only to judgments rendered after the act took effect.—Harrison v. Metz, 17 Mich. 377.

¶ 12. Laws of 1869 (Act No. 89, How. St., § 8736), limiting actions upon judgments, provided ample time in which to sue, and hence applied to causes of action existing at the time of its passage.—Parsons v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 287.

¶ 13. Where, by the law as it stood December 31, 1863, a person had sixteen years in which to bring suit for a parcel of land claimed by her, and Laws 1863, Act No. 227 (see How. St., § 8698), if applied to the case, would have the effect, the moment it became operative, to cut off all remedy, it was held not to apply to such a case.—Price v. Hopkin, 13 Mich. 318.

¶ 14. The proviso of Laws of 1879, Act No. 204 (How. St., § 8709), giving a fixed time within which to begin foreclosure proceedings is not to be construed as retroactive save in the cases it mentions.—McKisson v. Davenport, 88 Mich. 211.

¶ 15. Laws 1879, Act No. 204 (How. St., § 8709), provides for a reasonable time within which to begin foreclosure in all cases where the debt has been due and no interest paid thereon for fifteen years prior to the act's taking effect.—McKisson v. Davenport, 83 Mich. 211.

¶ 16. Except in cases coming within the proviso of How. St., § 8709, relating to cases where the mortgages have been due for fifteen years or more, or the last payment upon which was made fifteen years or more prior to the passage of that law, mortgages given before the act of 1879 took effect are controlled by the twenty-year limitation previously in force.—McIntire v. Conrad, 93 Mich. 526.

¶ 17. Laws 1871, Act No. 145 (How. St., § 8718), whereby the statute is made to run against Canadian as well as domestic creditors, held applicable to causes of action already existing.—Krone v. Krone, 37 Mich. 308.

¶ 18. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 155, limiting the time within which actions for personal injuries shall "hereafter" be brought has no application to a cause of action accrued prior to its passage.—Hathaway v. Washington Milling Co., 139 Mich. 708.

¶ 19. The provision of How. St., § 8706, that as to certain amendments to the statutes of limitations, the rights of parties are to be determined by the law in force when the right of action accrued, relates not to the subject of disabilities, but to the time when the statute became a law.—King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194.

¶ 20. Whether, by section 8 of the repealing act contained in R. S. 1838, relating to statutes of limitation, it was intended to continue in force the provisions of the acts of limitation repealed by that act, where the time had "begun to run," or whether the time prescribed in R. S. 1838 was intended as the period at the expiration of which the suits should be barred, quære.—McLean v. Barton, H. 279.

¶ 21. The act of May 15, 1820, limited the time for bringing ejectment, for causes of action thereafter accruing, to twenty years. An act of Nov. 15, 1829, limited the period to ten years, where the cause of action had then accrued. R. S. 1838 repealed these acts and substituted a new limitation of twenty years, with a proviso, however, that causes of action already accrued should not be affected, but be determined by the law under which the same accrued. In ejectment commenced in 1840 for a cause of action which accrued in 1822, it was held, in view of the various provisions of R. S. 1838 relating to the same subject, that the action was barred by the act of 1829.—Lastly v. Cramer, 2 D. 307.

¶ 22. Defendant went into actual possession of lands, under a tax title, in August, 1842, and by the act of Feb. 17, 1842 (Laws of 1842, p. 133), the time for bringing action of ejectment in such case was limited to ten years. This act was repealed by R. S. 1846, but it was held that R. S. 1846, chap. 139, § 9, continued it in force as to all rights of action which had accrued under it, and an action commenced more than ten years from the time defendant entered in possession was barred.—Perry v. Hepburne, 4 Mich. 165.

¶ 26. A court of equity usually applies a statute of limitation by analogy.—Young v. Young, 200 Mich. 236.

¶ 27. Courts of equity should generally apply the statute of limitations by analogy in any case where the remedy in equity is concurrent only or a substitute for an action at law.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Michigan Cent. Ry. Co., 145 Mich. 140.

¶ 28. The statute of limitations cannot be evaded by a suit in equity, where the law gives an action of assumpsit as an alternative remedy to a proceeding in rem.—People ex rel. Attorney General v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 145 Mich. 140.

¶ 29. By analogy, where action for the recovery of lands held under sales by executors, administrators or guardians is barred by Comp. L. 1871, § 7137, How. St., § 8698, they cannot be reached in equity.—Smith v. Davidson, 40 Mich. 632.

¶ 30. The rule of limitation will be applied where a bare equity is sought to be enforced against an equity, and will not be confined to cases where it is sought to enforce an equity against a legal estate.—Campau v. Chene, 1 Mich. 400.

¶ 32. If one's title has become perfected under the statute of limitations so that it cannot be questioned in a suit brought against him, neither can it be in a suit brought by him.—Toll v. Wright, 37 Mich. 93.

¶ 33. Where, by reason of an adverse possession of lands for twenty years, the occupant has acquired a perfect right in the law to defend his possession, he has for all practical purposes a title, and may maintain suits upon it against parties afterwards found upon the land.—Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 Mich. 542.

¶ 34. The statute of limitations cannot bar the right to an easement unless there has been an enjoyment adverse to the easement for the statutory period. Mere nonuser will not extinguish it.—Day v. Walden, 46 Mich. 575.

§ 7. ——Bar of one cause or remedy leaving other available.

Differing times for commencement of running as to several contracts collateral to each other, see post § 50.

Original tort and continuing injuries therefrom, see post § 68.

Bar of action on debt as affecting right to foreclose, see Foreclosure § 12.

Exclusion from foreclosure decree of interest already barred by statute of limitations, see Foreclosure ¶ 394.

Bar of judgment as preventing execution on it, see Executions § 6.

Bar on claim against estate as bar to action on bond of representative given to secure claim, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 1216.

Right to sue for fraud in transfer of note after being defeated by plea of limitations, see also Former Adjudication ¶ 160.

¶ 35. A mortgage does not keep alive the personal obligation to pay the debt it secures.—Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 52 Mich. 124.

II. THE PERIODS AND CORRESPONDING ACTIONS.

§ 8. In general; nature and form of the action.

Form of action as test, see also post ¶ 76.

Real actions and actions for damages to land, see post §§ 9-12.

Actions on judgments, see post § 13.

Actions ex contractu, see post §§ 14, 15.

Actions for injuries to personalty, see post § 16.

Actions for personal injuries, and personal torts, see post § 17.

Actions against sheriffs and public officers, see post § 18.

Mandamus actions, see post § 19.
Equitable suits and trusts, see post §§ 20-22.
Distinction between assumpsit on contracts and assumpsit on judgments, see post § 13.
Application of limitations in equity by analogy to law, see ante § 4.
Policy, construction, operation and effect of the statutes, see ante §§ 1-3.
Time when the various actions are deemed to have accrued, see post §§ 45-74.
Statutory terms of limitations of personal actions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 13; Comp. L. 1915, § 12323.
Statutory time for action to enforce penal liability of managers or officers of partnership associations for omission to make annual reports, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7962.

¶ 36. The form of action and not the cause of action must determine whether an action is barred by the statute of limitations.—Stringer v. Stevens' Estate, 146 Mich. 181.

§ 9. Real actions.

Statutes shortening time to assail judicial or involuntary sales, see post § 10.
Rule applicable to accounting of rents and profits, see also post § 20.
Land in use by public, see post § 25.
Time for actions by the state to recover land, see post § 26.
Applicability of statute to existing causes, see ante § 2.
Suspension of statute while party is in possession, see post § 31.
Accrual of right of entry or action, see post § 45 et seq.
Computation of different periods, see post § 79.
Rights in real property by adverse possession or prescription, see Adverse Possession; Easements; Highways, II, A; Boundaries.
Time within which to contest establishment of public highway, see Highway ¶ 59.
General provisions of the statutes, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12311.

¶ 37. A right of entry must be enforced within the period of limitations.—Cook v. Hopkins, 68 Mich. 514.

¶ 38. Statutes of limitation, however broad and comprehensive, do not bar actions for the recovery of dower unless expressly named or included by unavoidable implication; and they were not barred by the limitation act of November 5, 1829 (2 Ter. Laws, p. 748; Code 1833, p. 408).—May v. Rumney, 1 Mich. 1.

¶ 39. Under R. S. 1838 the right of possession of lands was barred if entry was not made within twenty years from its origin.—Van Vleet v. Blackwood, 39 Mich. 728.

¶ 40. The statute of limitations of 1829 barred recovery of lands after an adverse undisturbed holding of ten years.—Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

¶ 41. The statute places no limitation upon actions of ejectment as such.—Harrison v. Spencer, 90 Mich. 586.

¶ 42. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 7137, ejectment will not lie for land adjoining plaintiff's premises, but on the other side of a fence which for twenty years the adjoining owners and occupants have treated as the boundary between their lots.—Call v. O'Harrow, 51 Mich. 98.

¶ 43. Under our present statutes ejectment is the only action provided for the recovery of dower, and it is subject to the statute of limitations equally with ejectment for the recovery of lands in other cases.—Proctor v. Bigelow, 38 Mich. 282; King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194.

¶ 44. The recovery of dower is barred by the statutory limitation upon actions of ejectment.—King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194; Beebe v. Lyle, 73 Mich. 114.

¶ 45. A wife's right to dower in her husband's lands upon decree of divorce for extreme cruelty is based upon the statute rather than upon the decree since the dower is given by the statute, because of divorce, and action therefor may be brought within 15 years as limited by Comp. L. 1897, § 9714, subd. 3, for real actions.—Moross v. Moross, 132 Mich. 203.

¶ 46. The recovery of a fund by a remainderman under a second valid will from the life tenant thereunder, which fund was the proceeds of the sale of the interest of such life tenant as holder of the fee under the former will, is barred under Comp. L. 1915, § 12311, providing that no person shall bring or maintain any action for the recovery of lands obtained through a devise in a will which has been probated in the state for more than 15 years, during which period no suit in chancery has been brought to test the validity of such will, provided that in cases where such period has elapsed an action shall be barred after two years from the passage of the act, or in case such right has not accrued, then after two years from the accruing thereof, where the remainderman discovered the later will 20 years after the probate of the first will and within two years after the passage of the act, but did not institute suit until nearly three years after such discovery.—Young v. Young, 200 Mich. 236.

§ 10. ——Recovery of land held under void or defective judicial or involuntary sale.

Period for adverse possession under tax deed or judicial sale deed, see Adverse Possession § 34.
Statutory period within which objections to execution or judicial sales must be made or be barred, see Executions § 96; Estates of Decedents § 252.

Statutory time for bill by execution purchaser to declare equities of debtor and others in lands purchased, see Executions § 100.
Statutory limitations applicable specially to suits to assail or question tax deeds and titles, see Taxes, XII, C.
Statutory limit and provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 1, ¶ 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12311, ¶ 1.
Provision as to suit to recover land from holder under tax deed, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 1, ¶ 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12311, ¶ 2.

¶ 47. A sale on execution on a judgment void for want of jurisdiction will not authorize the purchaser to claim the benefit of the statute, requiring action to be brought within five years where title is claimed under a deed made upon a sale by an officer under judgment of a court.—Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526; and see McVickar v. Filer, 31 Mich. 304.

¶ 48. An administrator's sale void for want of jurisdiction is not protected by Comp. L. 1871, § 7137; How. St. § 8698.—Toll v. Wright, 37 Mich. 93.

¶ 49. An administrator's deed executed under order of the probate court, in pursuance of a decree for specific performance, under provisions of sections 9472 and 9486, Comp. L. 1897, though not recorded, is within the protection of the statute of limitations (§ 9714, subd. 1, Comp. L. 1897), relating to titles based on judicial proceedings.—Chandler v. Clark, 151 Mich. 159.

¶ 50. How. St., § 8698, subd. 1, limiting to five years the bringing of actions against persons claiming under judicial sales, applies only when validity of title derived through the sale is challenged, and does not enable one who claims under a commissioner's deed on foreclosure to cut off a title adverse to the mortgagor's.—Donovan v. Ward, 100 Mich. 601.

¶ 51. Where a plaintiff sues in ejectment to recover premises taken from it and given to defendant fifteen years before by a commissioner's deed made pursuant to a decree of foreclosure it is barred from recovering by Comp. L. 1897, § 9714, which provides that no person shall recover land unless action is commenced within five years where defendant claims title under a sale pursuant to an order, judgment or decree of a court.—West Michigan Park Ass'n v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 172 Mich. 179.

¶ 52. Where a mortgagor has lain dormant for a period of nineteen years after the issuance of the commissioner's deed pursuant to a decree of foreclosure, he cannot resist, in an ejectment suit brought by him to recover the premises, the defense of the five-year statutory limitation, since the equities of the situation are not in his favor.—West Michigan Park Ass'n v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 172 Mich. 179.

¶ 53. Under the statute of limitations, Comp. L. 1897, § 9714, defendant in a suit to quiet title who conveyed the property more than five years before as administratrix of her husband's estate and guardian of her minor children, is barred of dower and cannot set up the defense that she did not convey her dower interest.—Hunt v. Stevens, 174 Mich. 501.

§ 11. Suits to establish equitable interests in land or to foreclose.

Accrual of right of action for legacy against land charged therewith, see post ¶ 178.
Suits to annul or to recover possession from holder under judicial sale, see ante § 10.
Limitation of mortgage foreclosures as applicable by analogy to tax liens, see Taxes, XI, A.
Statutory time for foreclosure suits, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 12322.

¶ 54. There is no statute of limitations barring an equitable interest in a share of a mining location, asserted by the shareholder's successors against the corporation succeeding to the property subject to his rights.—Kobogum v. Jackson Iron Co., 76 Mich. 498.

¶ 55. The statute of limitations as to the foreclosure of mortgage liens applies to a case where a testator has imposed a lien upon devised land for the payment of an annuity to his wife and, upon the death of the wife, her administrator is proceeding to foreclose his lien in equity.—Stringer v. Gamble, 155 Mich. 295.

§ 12. Actions for damages to land.

When right of action accrues, see post §§ 68, 69.

¶ 56. The statute of limitations precludes a recovery by an abutting lot owner against a railroad company which has laid its tracks in a city street, for damages accruing more than six years prior to the commencement of suit.—Hoffman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 114 Mich. 316.

¶ 57. Failure for fifteen years to assert a claim for damages arising from the construction of a steam railroad track in a public street, will bar an action by an abutting owner to recover either past or future damages.—Felton v. Wedthoff, 185 Mich. 72.

§ 13. Actions on judgments and transcript judgments.

Applicability of statutes to pre-existing judgments, see ante § 2.
Time when right of action is deemed to have accrued, see post § 47.

Exceptions and suspensions of running, see also post ¶ 117.
Suspension of running as to absent debtors, see post ¶¶ 152, 161.
Exclusion of day of entry in computing time, see post ¶ 292.
Duration of judgment and of right to have execution thereon, see Judgments § 121.
Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 13, ¶ 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 12323, ¶ 1.

¶ 58. The judgment of a court of record is good for ten years.—Ward v. Citizens' Bank, 46 Mich. 332.

¶ 59. Assumpsit upon a judgment of a court of record may be brought at any time within ten years after the entry thereof (How. St. § 8736), though by section 8713, six years is the period for assumpsit on an ordinary contract.—Snyder v. Hitchcock, 94 Mich. 313.

¶ 60. A justice's judgment docketed on transcript in the circuit court is not barred in less than ten years.—Arnold v. Thompson, 19 Mich. 333; settling the question raised in Jerome v. Williams, 18 Mich. 521.

¶ 61. A judgment of a justice of the peace, regularly filed and docketed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, is the judgment of a court of record and the 10 years' statute of limitation applies.—Cole v. Potter, 135 Mich. 326.

§ 14. Contract actions in general.

Period applicable to actions on specialties, see post § 15.
Distinction between assumpsit on bond and assumpsit on simple contract, see post § 15.
Assumpsit on judgments, see ante § 13.
Equitable assumpsit to enforce trust, see post § 22.
When right of action accrues, see post § 48 et seq.

¶ 62. A husband's promise to pay the wife for support of their child while he was living apart from her would be barred in six years.—Lapworth v. Leach, 79 Mich. 16.

§ 15. Actions on sealed contracts, bonds and undertakings.

When right of action accrues, see post §§ 60-62.
Action for accounting under sealed partnership articles, see post ¶ 84.
Provisions as to actions on bonds of executors, administrators, and guardians, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 13, ¶ 4; Comp. L. 1915. § 12323, ¶ 4.

¶ 63. An agreement in a sealed contract to pay for land bought is not barred in less than ten years.—Peters v. Canfield, 74 Mich. 498.

¶ 64. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9734, an action on a personal obligation created by a mortgage on real estate is barred by the statute of limitations after ten years.—Clinton v. Clinton's Estate, 148 Mich. 496.

¶ 65. Where a husband and wife entered into a separation agreement under seal wherein certain property mortgaged by both should belong to her and there was a personal agreement on his part to pay the mortgage within two years, but provided further that if in the meantime she should make any payments of principal or interest she should be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee or have a lien corresponding to the amount paid; if this agreement can be construed as a promise to repay her for payments she might afterward make, it is barred by the statute of limitations after ten years.—Clinton v. Clinton's Estate, 148 Mich. 496.

¶ 66. Debt on bond of administratrix, for failing to file an account in probate court, was not barred until ten years after the right of action accrues; the form, not the cause of action, fixing the bar in such case.—Avery v. Miller, 81 Mich. 85.

¶ 67. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9734, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 14141, personal actions on an official bond must be commenced within ten years.—Township of Forest v. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore, 187 Mich. 657.

¶ 68. An action on a bond given on appeal in a summary proceeding is not governed by the two years' limitation prescribed by § 9753, Comp. L. 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 14161, for actions on bonds on appeal from justice's court.—Hoffman v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 184 Mich. 210.

¶ 69. An action of assumpsit is barred after six years whether brought on a sealed or an unsealed contract.—Sigler v. Platt, 16 Mich. 206.

¶ 70. Comp. L. 1857, § 4550, How. St. § 7778, does not compel a resort to the action of assumpsit upon a sealed instrument; debt may be brought thereon, and is not barred until ten years.—Goodrich v. Leland, 18 Mich. 110.

¶ 71. Comp. L. 1871, § 6194, How. St. § 7778, permits assumpsit to be brought where covenant might be maintained, but Comp. L. 1871, § 7148, How. St. § 8713, bars any action in assumpsit after six years. Held, that it is the form, and not the cause of action, which fixes the bar, and the remedy elected is governed by the limitation appropriate to itself.—Christy v. Farlin, 49 Mich. 319.

¶ 72. Debt on sealed lease for rent may be brought any time within ten years; the period is governed by How. St. § 8719, and is not affected by sections 8713, 7778, which fix a limitation for assumpsit and provide that assumpsit may lie on a specialty.—Stewart v. Sprague, 71 Mich. 50.

¶ 73. How. St. § 8713, providing that the six year limitation applies to "all actions for arrears of rent" has reference to rent accruing on parol leases; and does not limit the provision of section 8719, that "all personal actions on any contract not limited by the foregoing sections" shall be ten years. Hence debt on a sealed lease runs for ten years.—Stewart v. Sprague, 71 Mich. 50.

¶ 74. In an action founded upon and created by a will or other specialty the same statute of limitations does not apply as to one which although incident to a specialty yet rests upon an express or implied promise.—Stringer v. Stevens' Estate, 146 Mich. 181.

¶ 75. Under How. St. § 8713, providing that actions of debt on contracts under seal and of assumpsit must be brought within six years after the cause of action accrues, and section 8719, providing that all personal actions on any contract not limited by previous sections must be brought within ten years, and section 7778, providing that in all cases arising upon contracts when an action of covenant or debt may be maintained, an action of assumpsit may be brought and maintained, in the same manner, in all respects, as upon contracts without seal, and that no bond, deed of conveyance or other contract in writing signed by any party, his agent or attorney, shall be deemed invalid for want of a seal or scroll affixed thereto by such party, where officers of a township intend that evidences of township indebtedness shall be sealed instruments and denominate them as bonds, an action of covenant may be maintained thereon, which action is not barred until the lapse of ten years before issue of summons.—Rondt v. Rogers Tp., 99 Fed. 202.

¶ 76. Under How. St. § 8713, providing that actions of debt on contracts not under seal and of assumpsit must be brought within six years after the cause of action accrues, and section 8719, providing that all personal actions on any contract not limited by previous sections must be brought within ten years, and section 7778, providing that in all cases arising upon contracts when an action of covenant or debt may be maintained, an action of assumpsit may be brought and maintained, in the same manner, in all respects, as upon contracts without seal, an action of assumpsit on a sealed instrument is barred in six years, while an action of covenant on the same cause of action is not barred for ten years, the form, and not the cause, of action fixing the bar.—Rondt v. Rogers Tp., 99 Fed. 202.

§ 16. Actions for injuries to personalty.

When right of action accrues, see post § 66 et seq.

Statutory term and provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 13, ¶ 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12323, ¶ 2.

¶ 77. The common-law action of trespass lies for injuries done to plaintiff's horse and carriage by defendant's not turning to the right on a highway as required by Comp. L. 1871, § 2002, How. St., § 1456; and it seems that the limitation of one year fixed by section 2003 (1457) would apply to this as well as to the public prosecution or the statutory action there provided for.—Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 32.

§ 17. Actions for personal torts and injuries.

For false imprisonment in insane asylum, see also post ¶ 167.

When right of action accrues, see post § 66.

Time and necessity for presentment of claim for injuries incurred on defective highways, see Highways § 266; Municipal Corporations, XIV.

Time within which actions against officers or municipalities for injuries from defective highways and streets must be brought, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4591.

¶ 78. Act No. 155, Pub. Acts 1899, provides that no action for personal injuries shall lie unless brought within three years. Held, an action for seduction under a promise of marriage comes within the statute.—May v. Wilson, 164 Mich. 26.

¶ 79. Pub. Acts 1899, Act No. 155, § 1, providing that no personal injury action should thereafter be brought, unless brought within 3 years from the occurrence, and section 2 providing for the repeal of all contravening acts, did not repeal the provision of the charter of the city of Kalamazoo requiring the bringing of actions for personal injuries arising from defective sidewalks, within four months from the happening of the accident.—Woodworth v. City of Kalamazoo, 135 Mich. 233.

§ 18. Actions against sheriffs and other public officers.

Actions against superintendents of the poor of one county to reimburse other county for outlay for poor, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5222.

Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 13, ¶ 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 12323, ¶ 3.

¶ 80. Comp. L. 1897, § 9730, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 14137, providing a limit of three years for actions against sheriffs for misconduct or neglect of their deputies, is inapplicable in an action against a sheriff for damages for false imprisonment.—Alexander v. Thompson, 195 Fed. 31.

§ 19. Mandamus actions.

Laches or delay as reason for denying mandamus, see Mandamus, I.

¶ 81. There is no statute of limitation applicable to mandamus proceedings.—McDermott v. Alger, 186 Mich. 278.

¶ 82. Whether the statute of limitations applies to mandamus proceedings for collection of a liquidated liability, quære. Certainly the period is not less than ten years (How. St., § 8719).—County of Oceana v. Hart Township Sup'rs, 48 Mich. 319; and see Merrill v. Gladwin County Treasurer, 61 Mich. 95.

§ 20. Accounting suits.

Trust accountings, see post § 22.

¶ 83. One claiming to be a partner, and to have been excluded from participation in the business, is too late to come for an account after a delay of more than six years.—Jenny v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 28.

¶ 84. A member of a partnership, under sealed articles containing covenants, may apply for an accounting even after a delay of six years.—Near v. Lowe, 49 Mich. 482.

¶ 85. The equitable proceeding for an accounting between townships as to personal property and debts is barred in six years, like an action of assumpsit, unless there are special equities to prevent.—Township of Sheridan v. Township of Frost, 62 Mich. 136.

¶ 86. The rule of law whereby a liability for mesne profits is limited to the period of the statute of limitations does not necessarily apply to an accounting for rents and profits under a decree setting aside a deed, but as complainants are bound to do equity as a condition of relief, the accounting may cover the entire period during which the defendant has held the property.—Hack v. Norris, 46 Mich. 587.

¶¶ 87-89. An accounting for past rents and profits may be limited by a shorter period than the claim to the land itself.—Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 Mich. 39.

§ 21. Creditors' suits and suits in aid of execution.

Suit to reach railroad aid bonds returned to issuing township, see post ¶ 93.

Time within which execution creditor must sue to declare equities in land levied on as fraudulently conveyed or as subject to levy, see Executions § 101.

¶ 90. Subsequent to the entering of judgment and taking out of execution, but before the execution was levied, the defendant to a combined bill in aid of execution and creditor's bill sold the land upon which the execution was issued by land contract. More than one year elapsed between the levies and the filing of the bill. Held, the bill might be treated as a creditor's bill so as to make the one-year statute of limitations inapplicable, and so as to enable complainants to seize the interest of defendant in the land.—Rohrabacher v. Walsh, 170 Mich. 59.

§ 22. Establishment or enforcement of trusts.

When right of action accrues and statute runs, see post § 74.

Suspension of running by fraudulent concealment of cause of action, see post § 30.

Actions on bonds of personal representatives for default as such, see ante § 15.

Applicability of limitations to accounting suit against fiduciary, see Accounting Suits ¶ 12.

¶ 91. In cases of an implied trust to be raised by evidence, equity follows the courts of law in applying the statute of limitations.—Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 190, 16 L. ed. 484.

¶ 92. An equitable action of assumpsit, if it lies at all, will be outlawed by the same lapse of time as bars an action at law, particularly if it rests on a merely constructive trust, and the defendant has always denied the equity and relied on an adverse claim.—German American Seminary v. Kiefer, 43 Mich. 105.

¶ 93. The contention by a judgment creditor, seeking by bill in the nature of a creditor's bill, to subject to the satisfaction of a judgment against a railroad company, township railroad aid construction bonds issued under the act of March 22, 1869, deposited with the state treasurer, and returned to the township because of the failure of the company to obtain the certificate of compliance with the provisions of the act from the governor, that the bonds were invested by the statute with the character of trust property while in the hands of the state treasurer and therefore could be followed into the hands of the township and that that right was not subject to the limitation presented for a conversion is untenable since the bonds were never perfected instruments, and it is immaterial that the treasurer returned the bonds canceled a few weeks prior to minimum period of three years prescribed by the statute.—Young v. Township of Clarendon, 132 U. S. 340, 33 L. ed. 356, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; affirming 26 Fed. 805.

III. DISABILITIES, EXCEPTIONS AND SUSPENSIONS.

A. IN GENERAL.

Extensions of time after running has commenced and revival of cause after bar is complete, see post VI.

Interruption or suspension of running of laches, see Equity § 52.

§ 23. Exceptions and exemptions in general.

Exceptions in statutes as to existing causes of action and special provisions as to time for suing on those, see ante § 2.

Applicability of statutes to pre-existing causes of action, see ante § 2.

Exceptions respecting the state or the public, see post §§ 25, 26.

Effect of death and vacancy in administration, see post § 27.
Effect of extinction of corporate party, see post § 28.
Effect of injunction against suing, see post § 29.
Effect of fraud, concealment or ignorance, see post § 30.
Inapplicability of limitations to party while in possession, see post § 31.
Tacking one cause of suspension to another, see post § 32.
Exceptions and suspensions in favor of infants, insane persons, and married women, see post §§ 33-35.
Exceptions and suspensions because of absence, nonresidence, or imprisonment, see post §§ 36-40.
Implied exceptions, see also post ¶ 117.
Deduction of suspensions in computing time elapsed, see post § 79.
Exclusion of time while debtor was in military service, see Comp. L. 1915, § 928.
State of war as time to be excluded in reckoning time, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 16; Comp. L. 1915, § 12326.

¶ 94. Where there is no express exception to the statute the court can create none.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40.

¶ 95. If there is no saving in a statute as to absentees, feme coverts, or residents beyond seas, the court will make none.—Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 190, 16 L. ed. 484.

§ 24. Causes arising after statute begins to run.

Bar of infant on cause accruing to his representative or guardian, see also post § 43.

¶ 96. After the statute has commenced to run, no subsequent disability or devolution of the estate will arrest it.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40; De Mill v. Moffat, 49 Mich. 125; King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194; Dodson v. McKelvey, 93 Mich. 268.

¶ 97. Where the statute of limitations has begun to run against a decedent's estate, no subsequent disability of a distributee can check its operation.—Daniells v. Daniells, 92 Mich. 208.

¶ 98. Plaintiffs in ejectment, claiming as heirs, cannot defeat the plea of adverse possession for the period of the statute of limitations by relying upon a disability which arose before the transmission of the estate from their ancestor and after the statute of limitations began to run.—De Mill v. Moffat, 49 Mich. 125.

¶ 99. An assignment for the benefit of creditors does not prevent the running of the statute of limitations.—Parsons v. Clark, 59 Mich. 414.

¶ 100. Issuing execution on a judgment does not arrest the running of the statute of limitations.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40.

¶ 101. Whether the running of the statute of limitations in the matter of mortgage foreclosure can be interrupted for any cause other than payment, quære.—Rodgers v. Robson, 147 Mich. 656.

§ 25. Actions or claims against state or public.

Ejectment against federal officers in possession of land, see also post ¶ 177.
Adverse possession against the public, see Adverse Possession §§ 2, 3, 5.
Waiver of statute by state by recognizing claim, see also Bounties ¶ 15.

¶ 102. The state may plead the statute of limitations to the same extent as an individual.—McRae v. Auditor General, 146 Mich. 594.

¶ 103. The claim of a private person against the state is subject to the same statute of limitations that the same claim against another private person would be.—McRae v. Auditor General, 146 Mich. 594.

¶ 104. The statute of limitations cannot, it seems, bar a soldier's vested right to bounty; and it is waived by the proviso to Laws 1881, Act No. 173.—Smith v. Aplin, Auditor-General, 80 Mich. 205; apparently overruling Blanchard v. Church, 47 Mich. 644.

¶ 105. The occupation of land by a city for market purposes is not a public easement, but a proprietary occupation, and private adverse rights will be barred by the same lapse of time as if the occupation was by a private person.—Cooper v. City of Detroit, 42 Mich. 584.

§ 26. Actions by, or in name of, or on behalf of the state.

Mandamus actions, see also ante § 19.
Limitations and exceptions applicable to tax titles and deeds, see Taxes, XI, A, XII.
Time to charge back or recover tax moneys on adjustment of accounts between state and its subdivisions, see Taxes, X, B.
Period applicable to suits by the state or on behalf of the state to recover lands, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 12321.
Exception in statute as to limitations of actions by municipalities to recover public grounds, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 1, ¶ 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 12311, § 3.
Provisions for application to personal actions by or for state of same limitations as in ordinary cases, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 12338.

¶ 106. Statutes of limitation will not operate against the state without express words declaring such to be the purpose of the act.—Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24.

¶ 107. As against the state as the trustee of an express trust, the statute of limitations will not run.—State v. Venice of America Land Co., 160 Mich. 680.

¶ 108. A claim by the state against the estate of one admitted to the asylum as an indigent insane person, for expenses incurred in his care, support, or maintenance, is subject to the operation of the statute of limitations.—State v. Dunbar's Estate, 99 Mich. 99.

§ 27. Death and pendency of administration.

Death after running of time commences, see ante § 24.

Accrual of right of action to representative as such, see post § 44.

Allowance of year to bring new action on abatement by death of party, see post § 100.

Death occurring during year within which to bring new action after failure of timely action, see post ¶ 380.

Computation of period and time of suspended right to sue, see post ¶ 295.

Limitation on time for presentment of claims against estate, see Estates of Decedents, VI, C, 2.

Extension of time for presentment of claims against estate by death of party or vacancy in administration, see Estates of Decedents §§ 176-177.

Provisions for extension for time of real actions in case of death of person entitled to sue, but under disability of infancy, insanity, or imprisonment, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 12316.

Provision for absolute bar of claims not presented within ten years after death of debtor, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14620.

Provisions for extension of two years after appointment of personal representative of person dying before period is complete or within thirty days thereafter, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 12328.

¶ 109. The debtor's death suspends the running of the statute of limitations for two years after the granting of letters testamentary or of administration but not longer.—First Nat. Bank v. Sherman's Estate, 117 Mich. 602.

¶ 110. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9737, providing that an action may be brought against the administrator or executor at any time within two years after his appointment, an action will lie against the administrator of the maker of a promissory note, although there has been 12 years' delay in his appointment.—Baker v. Halleck's Estate, 128 Mich. 180.

¶ 111. A claim against the estate of a deceased person for money and effects of claimant, which it is alleged deceased took charge of, is saved by Comp. L. 1897, sec. 9737, How. 2nd Ed., § 14144, relating to the time within which actions may be brought by or against the representatives of deceased persons where the claimant dies and the general statute of limitations expires during the two years after administration is granted on claimant's estate and under such section action on such claim may be brought at any time within two years after administration is granted.—In re Sellman's Estate, 175 Mich. 700.

¶ 113. Comp. L. 1897, § 9737, does not bar a ward's suit against a guardian's estate for pension moneys received in 1873, he dying in 1876, and the ward having first had knowledge of her rights in 1897, whereupon claim and negotiations were begun and an administrator of the guardian appointed for the first time in 1899, followed by suit. [Official reporter states that suit was brought in 1900, but the opinion does not show this fact. —Editor.]—Murphy v. Cady, 145 Mich. 33.

¶ 114. An action for the conversion of shares of stock of a corporation, which would have been barred if brought by the corporation, was likewise barred where brought in the name of the administratrix of the estate of a deceased stockholder, 13 years after the action was barred; where even if such stockholder had brought such action in his own name, it would have been one in behalf of the corporation, and the recovery would have been for the benefit of the corporation and all its stockholders.—Bates v. Boyce's Estate, 135 Mich. 540.

§ 28. Dissolution or expiration of corporation.

Statutory continuance of corporation to sue or be sued for stated period after expiration, see Corporations §§ 259, 260.

Effect of receivership or dissolution proceedings to disable corporation to sue or defend and to cast it on receiver, see Corporations § 244.

¶ 115. Suits against a corporation whose charter has expired must be commenced within three years after expiration.—Montgomery v. Merrill, 18 Mich. 338.

¶ 116. A corporation formed under a general incorporation law can begin suits in its own name at any time within three years after the end of its period, and continue them to a close, unless superseded by trustees or receivers; and this though such general law is repealed.—Bewick v. Alpena Harbor Improvement Co., 89 Mich. 700.

§ 29. Injunctions against suing or other suits affecting parties.

Provisions for excluding time during which chancery suit by debtor was pending, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12339.

¶ 117. Where the statute (Laws 1833, p. 571) prescribed that actions of debt or scire facias on judgments should be commenced within eight years next after the rendition of such judgments, with a saving in the cases of arrest and reversal of judgments, of judgments on plea in abatement and upon demurrer, it was held that the saving clause could not be extended so as to include a case where plaintiff had been delayed by an injunction issued out of chancery after the statute had commenced to run.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40.

¶ 118. The defendant in a bill to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage by him given filed a cross-bill relying on frauds in the sale and on breaches of covenant. In a subsequent action by him on the covenants, held, that the chancery proceedings did not prevent the running of the statute of limitations. How. St., § 8738, suspending the statute during pendency of any case in chancery "commenced by any debtor," does not make an equitable suit suspend the statute except where instituted or prosecuted on behalf of the person who wishes to plead the statute. —Sweet v. Haldane, 68 Mich. 639.

¶ 119. Plaintiff in an ejectment suit cannot escape the defense of the five-year statute of limitations on the ground that the defendants, being bound by an injunction, could not set up the statute as a shield against their own acts, where the injunction issued in a suit to which plaintiff was not a party and which bore no relation to the issues in controversy in the ejectment suit. —West Michigan Park Ass'n v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 172 Mich. 179.

§ 30. Fraud, ignorance or concealment.

Effect of assumption of domestic residence by debtor unknown to plaintiff, see post § 37.

Want of knowledge of breach of trust as preventing accrual of action therefor, see post § 74.

Pleading the fraud and concealment in avoidance of bar, see post § 107.

Evidence as to fraud and concealment, see post § 111.

Want of knowledge or notice as excusing delay in equity, see Equity §§ 55, 56.

Breach of trust in purchase for taxes as preventing running of limitations against owner, see also Taxes, XII, C.

Statutory provisions for two-year period after discovery of cause of action fraudulently concealed, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 12330.

¶ 120. The statute of limitations does not run against a cause of action fraudulently concealed, before the fraud is discovered.—Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470.

¶ 121. Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, chap. IX, § 20, providing that where a cause of action is fraudulently concealed an action may be brought within two years after discovery of the fraud, was intended not to curtail, but, when applicable, to enlarge, the six-year limit provided by § 13, and applies in an action at law only when it will in fact enlarge it, and consequently an action at law is barred in six years from the commission of the act complained of, unless the fraudulent concealment section can be invoked to extend the time, and even then, unless brought within two years from date of discovery of the cause of action.—Ramsey v. Child, Hulswit & Co., 198 Mich. 658.

¶ 122. Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, chap. IX, § 20, providing that when a cause of action is fraudulently concealed from the knowledge of the party entitled thereto, the action may be commenced at any time within two years after discovery of the fraud, applies both at law and in equity, even though the cause of action is based on original fraud.—Ramsey v. Child, Hulswit & Co., 198 Mich. 658.

¶ 123. The fraudulent concealment of a cause of action which, under How. St., § 8724, prevents the running of the statute of limitations may be a concealment of law as well as of fact.—Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470.

¶ 124. The "fraudulent concealment" which will take a claim out of the statute of limitations must be that of the person sought to be charged and not that of his clerk without the employer's fault.—Stevenson v. Robinson, 39 Mich. 160.

¶ 125. The payee in a certificate of deposit was induced, when non compos mentis, to transfer the certificate to a third party, who drew the money thereon. The payee died a week thereafter, without having regained her normal mental condition, and an administrator of her estate was at once appointed. A few days after the expiration of six years from the receipt by the transferee of the money, the administrator, from whom the transferee had fraudulently concealed the facts relating to the transfer, filed a bill to compel the payment to the estate of the money and interest thereon. Held, that the suit was within How. St., §§ 8718, 8724, and was not barred by the statute of limitations.—Stebbins v. Patterson, 108 Mich. 537.

¶ 126. Where a guardian has received pension money for the benefit of his ward and has appropriated it to his own use, concealing the fact of its receipt during his lifetime, and it remaining unknown during settlement of his estate, the statute does not begin to run against the ward's right to an accounting until his discovery of the fraud. How. St., § 8724 so provides.—Allen v. Conklin, 112 Mich. 74.

¶ 127. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9739, a cause of action is not barred by the statute of limitations, if the defendant fraudulently concealed the existence of the claim or unless the plaintiff knew, or should have known, of the claim.—Wolkins v. Knight, 134 Mich. 347.

¶ 128. When the basis of an action is some wrong other than a fraud, the fraudulent concealment of the cause of action which will work a postponement of the statute of limitations must be a concealment by affirmative acts or misrepresentations, unless the parties stand in a fiduciary relation.—Dowse v. Gaynor, 155 Mich. 38.

¶ 129. Comp. L. 1897, § 9739 suspending the statute of limitations in cases of fraudulent concealment was not designated to help those who negligently refrain from prosecuting inquiries plainly suggested by facts known, and one must be held chargeable with knowledge of the facts, which, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, it ought to have discovered.—First Nat. Bank of Ovid v. Steel, 146 Mich. 308.

¶ 130. Section 9739, Comp. L. 1897, providing that the running of the statute of limitations shall be suspended where defendant has fraudulently concealed the cause of action from plaintiff's knowledge, was not designed to help those who negligently refrain from prosecuting inquiries plainly suggested by facts known; and the plaintiff is chargeable with knowledge of facts which he ought, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, to have discovered.—Dowse v. Gaynor, 155 Mich. 38.

¶ 131. How. St., § 8724, which allows suit within two years after the discovery of a cause of action which has been fraudulently concealed from the knowledge of the party suing, does not apply where plaintiff was put upon inquiry by a statement that the bonds were "good," but on coupons being dishonored, was told they were "poor" and defendant did not seek to prevent him from obtaining information.—Purdon v. Seligman, 78 Mich. 132.

¶ 132. There can be no "fraudulent concealment," within the meaning of the statute of limitations, of matters that are of record and of which plaintiff must be presumed to have knowledge.—Robert v. Morrin's Estate, 27 Mich. 306; Mecosta County Sup'rs v. Vincent, 65 Mich. 503.

¶ 133. Where one who sues to recover moneys which he claims he was induced to invest in stock by the false representations of the company's officers as to dividends having been paid, has had ample opportunity to examine the books, it cannot be said there was such a concealment of fraud as excuses delay for seventeen years in bringing suit.—McEacheran v. Western Transp. & Coal Co., 97 Mich. 479.

¶ 134. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9739, which provides that a cause of action shall not be barred by the statute of limitations if the person liable, fraudulently conceals it from the plaintiff's knowledge, an administratrix is not charged with knowledge of her husband's failure to collect in full for a crop of apples sold, where the husband kept no books and the defendant purchaser informed her that he had paid the husband in full.—Wolkins v. Knight, 134 Mich. 347.

¶ 135. It was sufficient to have put the plaintiff on inquiry so as to prevent the application of the statute suspending the statute of limitations in cases of fraudulent representations and concealment where it appeared that ten days after it had discounted notes of a corporation and accepted as collateral stock thereof, the corporation having been represented as solvent, it executed mortgages in favor of its creditors upon all of its assets, and two days later a receiver was appointed, and on foreclosure there was not realized enough to pay the debts, the plaintiff having notice of these latter proceedings.—First Nat. Bank of Ovid v. Steel, 146 Mich. 308.

¶ 136. Where a purchaser of bonds from a bond house does not receive interest on her coupons at the time they are due and is afterwards informed that the enterprises are in serious financial straits, and the organization of bondholders' protective associations is urged, and the associations are perfected and she otherwise receives information which should have put her on inquiry, there is no fraudulent concealment of a cause of action of fraud in the sale of the bonds so as to make available the provisions of Pub. Acts 1915, Act No. 314, chap. IX, § 20, relating to the commencement of an action, the cause of which is fraudulently concealed, at any time within two years after the discovery of the fraud, since the statute was not designed to help those who negligently refrain from prosecuting inquiries plainly suggested by the facts known.—Ramsey v. Child, Hulswit & Co., 198 Mich. 658.

¶ 137. The fact that the relation of trust and confidence exists between an officer of a bond house and a purchaser of bonds cannot impair the legal effect of notice of fraud in the sale which should have put her on inquiry so as to render available the provisions of Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, chap. IX, § 20, relating to the commencement of an action of fraud at any time within two years after discovery of the cause of action.—Ramsey v. Child, Hulswit & Co., 198 Mich. 658.

¶ 138. Where the owner of sheep intrusts them to the care of another under an arrangement whereby they are to be let out to a certain person to double in four years, and, upon the return of double the number of sheep at the expiration of the term, such agent then converts and appropriates them to his own use, concealing the fact from the owner, and deceives the owner into believing that he has let out the increased flock for a similar period and on similar terms the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the owner learns of the conversion, and it is immaterial that the second time the agent let some of his own sheep, instead of all of those of such owner, if the owner was kept in ignorance of such fact and was deceived into believing that they were all hers.—Miller v. Young, 196 Mich. 276.

¶ 139. An action by a private person as for continuing injury in keeping a railway track in the street near his premises is subject to the six-year limitation, if defendant relies on permission given longer ago, and plaintiff seeks to show by such evidence as remains that his permission was obtained by fraud.—Krueger v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 51 Mich. 142.

¶ 140. A man and his wife entered into a land contract with defendant, by the terms of which they conveyed to him certain property, and gave their note for $1,000, and in consideration thereof defendant promised to convey to them certain lots, at the same time executing a mortgage back to the man and wife upon part of the property conveyed to him to secure performance of the contract on his part. Upon the man's death, defendant persuaded the widow to release the mortgage she held, assuring her that he would convey to her the lots contracted for, which he never did, since a mortgage on such lots had been previously foreclosed, the woman having been served with subpoena in the foreclosure proceedings. In a suit by her eight years later, against defendant for fraud and deceit, the defense of the statute of limitations is set up as a defense. The evidence shows that at the time when plaintiff was served with the subpoena, and for six or seven years thereafter, plaintiff suffered severely from nervous prostration, and further that she relied on defendant as a trustworthy man and friend, and her faith in him was never shaken until he flatly refused to convey the land to her, and that she was ignorant of the import of the foreclosure proceedings. Held, that since defendant knew that plaintiff was ignorant of the fact that the foreclosure proceedings concerned her, and obtained the discharge of the mortgage because of such ignorance, he cannot now make the very ignorance which enabled him to perpetrate the fraud the basis of his defense.—Comfort v. Robinson, 155 Mich. 143.

§ 31. Possession as tolling limitations against possessor's action.

Effect of quiescence by possessor as estoppel on him to plead statute when sued, see post ¶ 387.

Possession of land as tolling limitations in favor of possessor, see also Equity ¶ 193.

Exemption of possessor to sue to annul void tax title, see Taxes, XII, C.

¶ 141. A defendant in possession is not estopped from taking advantage of the statute of limitations by any neglect to speed the cause.—Dubois v. Campau, 87 Mich. 248.

§ 32. Tacking disabilities and suspensions.

Death occurring during year allowed for bringing new action, see post ¶ 380.

Provisions as to extension in case of death of person under disability and against any further extensions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 12317.

¶ 142. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9728, How. 2nd Ed., § 14135, the period of the running of the statute of limitations on a promissory note under a foreign statute may not be tacked to the period of the running of the statute of limitations of Michigan.—Millar v. Hilton, 189 Mich. 635.

B. INFANCY, COVERTURE AND INCOMPETENCY.

§ 33. Infancy of plaintiff.

Rule as to tacking several disabilities one on another, see ante § 32.

Time when running on guardian's bond begins, see post ¶ 284.

Effect of appointment of next friend and of commencement and discontinuance of action by him, see post ¶ 284.

Burden of proving time and duration of infancy, see post § 110.

Bar of infant's claim against estate by delay in presentment, see Estates of Decedents § 174.

Application to infants of limitation of time within which to present claim or demand against municipal corporations, see Municipal Corporations, XIV.

Provision for extension of time for real actions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12315.

Statutory provision for extension of time for personal actions in case of infancy, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12325.

¶ 143. Where a statute of limitations contains no saving clause exempting infants from its operation they are put on the same footing with adults as to the time within which actions must be brought.—Davidson v. City of Muskegon, 111 Mich. 454.

¶ 144. How. St., § 8718, which bars an action on the case unless commenced within six years after the cause of action accrues, does not commence to run as against an infant until he attains his majority.—Keating v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 94 Mich. 219.

¶ 145. An infant's right of action for seduction is not barred by the statute of limitations until after she has reached her majority, if the circumstances are such that she has to bring suit in her own name and not by another (How. St., § 7779).—Watson v. Watson, 53 Mich. 168.

§ 34. Coverture of plaintiff.

[Note. For the precedents on the right of married women to sue or be sued as sole parties under the various statutes, see Husband and Wife, VI.]

¶ 146. As married women are relieved by the act of 1855 (How. St., § 6295) from all disabilities of bringing suit, the statute of limitations runs against them as if they were unmarried.—Douglass v. Douglass, 72 Mich. 86.

¶ 147. The Married Women's Act of 1855 (How. St., § 6295), removing the disability of coverture and permitting a wife to bring suit for her sole property, impliedly repealed the exception created in her favor by R. S. 1846 (Comp. L. 1857, § 5354).—King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194; Curbay v. Bellemer, 70 Mich. 106.

¶ 148. The exception of married women from the operation of the statute of limitations (Rev. St. 1846) repealed by the Married Women's Act of 1855 was not continued in force by the amendment of 1863 to the statute of limitations (Comp. L. 1857, § 5354; How. St., § 8702), which was not intended to do more than to introduce the clause relating to the suspension of the running of the statute "unless within one of the British provinces of North America."—Curbay v. Bellemer, 70 Mich. 106.

¶ 149. Whether the statute of limitations runs against a wife in favor of her husband, quære.—Wilcox v. Wilcox, 139 Mich. 365.

§ 35. Insanity of plaintiff.

Confinement in insane asylum as "imprisonment" of inmate, see post ¶ 167.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to lawfulness of detention in asylum, see post § 109.

Insanity or incompetency of party to sue or defend, see Insane Persons § 35; Incompetents.

Provision for extension of time for real actions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12315.

Statutory extension of time for personal actions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12325.

C. ABSENCE OR NONRESIDENCE OR IMPRISONMENT.

§ 36. Absence or nonresidence of defendant.

Effect of assumption of residence by nonresident debtor, see post § 37.

Effect of personal service on nonresident, see post § 38.

Absence or nonresidence of plaintiff, see post § 39.

Burden of showing nonresidence, see post § 110.

Burden of showing sufficient residence within state, see post ¶ 420.

Residence as court or jury question, see post § 118.

Sufficiency of finding of absence, see post ¶ 455.

What constitutes legal domicile or residence, see Domicile.

Provisions for suspension of running during absence of defendant from state, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 12327.

¶ 150. The purpose of How. St., § 8721, providing for the suspension of the running of the statute of limitations by reason of defendant's absence from and residence out of the state after cause of action accrued, is to secure to the plaintiff the same time, and only the same time, in which to commence his action against an absent or nonresident defendant, that he would have if the defendant were an actual resident of the state.—Gray v. Jones, 80 Mich. 504.

¶ 151. The statute of limitations adopted by the governor and judges, May 15, 1820, continued in force as adopted until repealed in 1838; and its provisions ran against the claims of persons who were, at the time the cause of action accrued, out of this state, but not without the United States, and who had not, from the time of the accruing of said cause of action, come within the state.—Hulburt v. Merriam, 3 Mich. 144; Pease v. Peck, 18 How. (59 U. S.) 595, 15 L. ed. 518, affirming 5 McLean 486, Fed. Cas. No. 10894.

¶ 152. The provision (R. S. 1846, chap. 140, § 9) for a deduction from the period of limitation of the time the debtor is absent from and resides out of the state applies to every cause of action mentioned in the chapter, which includes debtors by judgment recovered in courts of record as well as those recovered in courts not of record, and Sess. L. 1869, p. 155, amendatory of section 24, was not intended to operate independently of the other provisions of the same chapter.—Conrad v. Nall, 24 Mich. 275.

¶ 153. The term "persons beyond seas," in the statute of 1820 (code of 1833, p. 569), meant persons out of the state.—Hulburt v. Merriam, 3 Mich. 144; Pease v. Peck, 18 How. (59 U. S.) 595, 15 L. ed. 518, affirming 5 McLean 486, Fed. Cas. No. 10894.

intends to return.—Campbell v. White, 22 Mich. 178.

¶ 155. Neither absence from the state nor residence out of it will alone suspend the running of the statute of limitations within the meaning of Comp. L. 1857, § 5369, How. St., § 8721; both must exist to take the case out of the statute. Where the absence has not been continuous, the different occasions when a debtor has been within the state—if his presence was sufficiently notorious, or lasted long enough, to fairly enable the creditor, by exercising reasonable diligence, to subject him to service of process—may be reckoned together, and the statute will run during the period thus computed, it being the legislative intent that the operation of the exception should be concurrent with the existence of the obstacle which prevents a service upon the debtor.—Campbell v. White, 22 Mich. 178.

¶ 156. Under How. St., § 9507, deducting from the period of limitation the time "during which the party charged was not usually and publicly a resident within the state," not mere absence from the state is referred to, but such absence as destroys residence.—People v. McCausey, 65 Mich. 72.

¶ 157. Under Comp. L. 1857, § 5366, a cause of action which accrued in Canada upon a promissory note in favor of a Canadian resident who had never been within the United States was not barred by the defendant's residing more than ten years in Michigan; the disability of absence from the United States applied to such a case and prevented the limitation from running.—Erskine v. Messicar, 27 Mich. 84.

¶ 158. The statute of limitations does not run on a promissory note during the time the defendant maker resides out of the state of his own free will and accord.—Hoffman v. Estate of Pope, 74 Mich. 235.

¶ 159. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9736, providing that the period of absence from the state of a party against whom an action shall have accrued, shall not be taken as any part of the time limited for the commencement of the action, the saving clause applies to the period in which a husband and wife, who were respectively maker and payee of a note, were both absent from the state.—Blackburn v. Blackburn's Estate, 124 Mich. 190.

¶ 160. The statute of limitations will be construed as applying to a cause of action which accrues without the state between nonresidents; and so applied includes the saving clause where the debtor is absent from state.—Belden v. Blackman, 118 Mich. 448.

¶ 161. Comp. L. 1897, § 9736, providing that the time of the absence of a debtor shall not be taken as any part of the limitation against an action, applies to the 10-year limitation provided by section 9731 against judgments.—Newlove v. Pennock, 123 Mich. 260.

¶ 162. How. St., § 8721, which excepts from the period limited for the commencement of personal actions the time during which the debtor shall, after the cause of action has accrued, be absent from and reside out of the state, is applicable to the ten-year limitation imposed upon the right of complainant in foreclosure to take out an execution for a deficiency arising upon a sale of the mortgaged premises.—Shelden v. Barlow, 108 Mich. 375.

¶ 163. The proceeding for execution for deficiency on foreclosure, being essentially a new one, substituted service of the application upon the person liable for such deficiency cannot be given extra-territorial effect, and a neglect to resort to that method of service during the period of his absence from the state does not constitute such laches as will bar a proceeding taken on personal service.—Shelden v. Barlow, 108 Mich. 375.

§ 37. ——Effect of assumption of domestic residence.

Removal of debtor to Michigan without knowledge of foreign resident plaintiff, see also post ¶ 166.

¶ 164. The fact that the obligor in a bond executed in another state removes to Michigan and subjects himself to suit without the knowledge of the obligee does not operate to suspend the running of the statute in the former's favor until such time as the latter ascertains his whereabouts.—Home Life Ins. Co. v. Elwell, 111 Mich. 689.

§ 38. ——Effect of personal service on nonresident.

Inefficacy of service in foreign state, see Process, II, A.

¶ 165. Where suit has been commenced by personal service upon defendant, the fact that such defendant is a nonresident does not affect the running or suspension of the statute of limitations as provided for in How. St., § 8721; and while such suit is pending no new suit can be commenced for the same cause of action, nor afterwards, if the limitation of time has elapsed during the pendency of the suit.—Gray v. Jones, 80 Mich. 504.

§ 39. Nonresidence or absence of plaintiff.

¶ 166. No provision of the statute of limitations relieves a foreign plaintiff from the force of the statute because he is ignorant that the defendant has removed to this state; it is only when defendant is absent from the state that the statute is arrested.—Dowse v. Gaynor, 155 Mich. 38.

§ 40. Imprisonment of party.

Provision for extension of time for real actions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 12315.

Statutory extension of time for personal actions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 12325.

¶ 167. An insane asylum within the state is not the "state prison," within Comp. L. 1897, § 9733, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 14140, providing that if any person entitled to bring an action for false imprisonment shall, at the time when the cause of action accrues, be within the age of twenty-one years, insane or imprisoned in the state prison, such action may be brought within the statutory time after the disability is removed.—Alexander v. Thompson, 195 Fed. 31.

IV. MATURITY AND ACCRUAL OF CAUSE.

When damage accrues or is determinable, time for measurement, see Damages, II, III.

§ 41. Accrual or devolution of title or right to plaintiff.

[Note. The question when the right of action accrues and is complete and suable is primarily a question of substantive law depending on the elements of the cause and the maturity and existence of them. Topics dealing with the particular causes of action may therefore be consulted as supplementary to this one.]

Accrual and maturity of various rights of action, see post §§ 45-74.

Accrual to predecessor or person represented by plaintiff, see post § 42.

Accrual to infant plaintiff's predecessor or representative, see post § 43.

Accrual of right to sue on one promise which is collateral to another promise, see post § 50.

Commencement of action as time when set-off may be made, see post § 78.

Suspension of running because of infancy or other disability to sue at time of accrual, see ante §§ 33-35.

Suspension of running because of obstacle to suit or lack of parties at time of accrual, see ante §§ 25-30, 36-40.

Disability to sue or want of party as extending time, see ante III.

Presumptions, burden of proof, and evidence as to time of accrual and maturity of cause, see post § 109 et seq.

Accrual of right to sue as instituting adverse possession, see Adverse Possession, § 8.

¶ 168. Since 1846 a conveyance by an excluded owner of lands held adversely would carry what title he had, and his grantee, like himself, could sue within the statutory period of limitation.—Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274.

§ 42. ——Plaintiff as successor in right to another.

Suit by administrator of stockholder brought in right of corporation, see also ante ¶ 114.

Receiver of corporation suing for misappropriated assets, see post ¶ 248.

Reckoning of period from accrual to ancestor or predecessor, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12312.

Reckoning of time from accrual to one who succeeds another in title, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 12313.

¶ 169. The statute bars assumpsit by an administrator to recover, for the benefit of a sole creditor of the estate whose claims matured six years before the debtor's death, for property fraudulently conveyed by debtor to defendant.—Bresnahan v. Nugent, 92 Mich. 76; Morse, C. J., concurring specially, urged that as to notes on which another was liable and a necessary party, the bar was not complete because of the death of such party within the six years, until time for administration and suit.

¶ 170. Where a member of a mutual-benefit society died while residing in Michigan, leaving three beneficiaries, one a resident of Ohio, another of Michigan, and the third of Germany, the last of whom dwelt in Germany until her death, ten years after the member's decease, it was held, that as to the right of the two survivors, who inherited the share of the third, to recover such share from the society, the statute of limitations did not begin to run until after the death of the nonresident beneficiary.—Wolf v. District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., 102 Mich. 23.

§ 43. ——Infant as successor to representative.

Limitation on action for seduction of infant where suable by another for her, see also ante ¶ 145.

¶ 171. Where nearly fifteen years have elapsed since the right accrued to a guardian to receive the proceeds realized from the sale of real estate by the administrator of the estate of the ward's father, before the ward became of full age, an action by the ward to recover the money from the estate of the deceased guardian is barred by the statute of limitations.—Dodson v. McKelvey, 93 Mich. 263.

¶ 172. An infant's right of action for seduction is not barred until six years after her majority, if no one sued for her during minority (How. St., § 8713).—Watson v. Watson, 53 Mich. 168.

§ 44. Appointment of administrator or representative to sue or defend.

Provision for two-year extension from and after appointment of personal representative, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 12328.

¶ 173. Until an administrator is appointed, the statute of limitations will not begin to run for the conversion of an intestate's personalty.—Parks v. Norris, 101 Mich. 71.

¶ 174. Under How. St., chap. 282, § 12, in relation to the voluntary dissolution of corporations and the appointment of receivers therefor, providing that, if there shall be any sum remaining due upon any share of stock subscribed in such corporation, the receiver "shall immediately proceed and recover the same," the statute of limitations begins to run as against such right of action immediately upon the dissolution of the corporation and the appointment of a receiver. —Webber v. Hovey, 108 Mich. 49.

§ 45. Right of entry; recovery of land.

Period applicable to real actions, see ante § 9.
Foreclosure of mortgages, see post § 78.
Enforcement of trusts, see post § 74.
Right of entry or action under conveyance of lands held adversely, see ante ¶ 168.
Rights of forfeiture for breach of condition, see Deeds § 88 et seq.; Life Estates, II.
What amounts to disseisin or adverse possession giving right to sue, see Adverse Possession.
Rights of life tenants and remaindermen towards third persons, see Life Estates, III.
Rights to possession under contracts for purchase of lands, see Vendors and Purchasers, VIII.
Burden of proof of time of ouster, see post § 109.
Provisions of statute as to time when accrual shall be deemed to have occurred, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 12313.
What deemed to be a possession consequent on entry, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 12318.

¶ 175. A land contract provided for seven annual payments, the first to fall due in 1857. It gave the vendee possession, a breach of condition to work forfeiture. The vendee failed to pay the instalment due in 1860, and left the premises, and in the same year parties who had been occupying under him attorned to an adverse claimant. Held, that under How. St. § 8700, subd. 4, the vendor's right of entry accrued in 1860, or, at the latest, in 1863, and that a suit begun by him in 1884 was barred.—Cook v. Hopkins, 68 Mich. 514.

¶ 176. Land was conveyed to a village upon the condition subsequent that the same should be cleared and ornamented for a public walk or promenade within ten years, title to revert on breach, etc. Held, that under How. St. § 8700, providing that when any one claims under a title arising from forfeiture or breach of condition his right should be deemed to have accrued when the forfeiture was incurred or the condition was broken, proceedings begun more than twenty-five years after said rights had so accrued were barred.—Hatch v. St. Joseph Common Council, 68 Mich. 220.

¶ 177. Ejectment will not lie at the instance of a landowner against government engineers who have been in actual, continued, notorious and hostile possession of the land for over twenty years, where the executive and legislative branches of the federal government uniformly repudiated his claim and denied its justice, and he has failed to bring his action within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations.—Heiss v. Adams, 149 Mich. 645.

§ 46. Actions to recover legacies or to enforce wills.

Actions to enforce trusts, see also post § 74.
Agreements to provide or make payment by will, see also post ¶ 215.

¶ 178. A legatee's right to follow devised land for the payment of his legacy is not barred by the statute of limitations though six years have elapsed, where there has been no settlement by the executor, and where the will does not contemplate the closing of the estate in six years.—In re Moores' Appeal, 84 Mich. 474.

§ 47. Actions on judgments and decrees.

Suspension of running as to absent debtors, see ante ¶¶ 152, 161.
Exclusion of day of entry in computing time, see post ¶ 292.
Computation of time to enforce lien of instalment decree, see post ¶ 294.
Statute and period applicable to judgments, see ante § 13.

¶ 179. On a decree which is a continuing obligation for the payment of money yearly the statute does not run as against an entirety, but runs against each installment as if falls due.—Field v. Loveridge, 114 Mich. 220.

§ 48. Contracts in general; necessity of demand and tender.

[Note. The existence of a cause of action for breach or nonperformance of contract often depends on a tender of payment or performance by plaintiff and a demand by him on the other party to fix a breach or default. For cases on what constitutes such a cause of action, see Contracts, VII; Sales, V, VII; Vendors and Purchasers, VI.]

Actions on accounts open or stated, see post §§ 51, 52.
Actions on bills and notes and contracts for payment of money, see post §§ 53-56.
Actions on implied contracts, see post § 57.
Actions for work and labor over extended period, see post § 58.
Actions on contracts of sale of chattels, see post § 59.
Actions on sealed contracts, covenants, and bonds, see post §§ 60-62.

Actions against agents, bailees, and partners, see post §§ 63, 64.
Liquidation or measurement to mature right of action, see post § 49.
Necessity of demand on agent or bailee, see post § 63.
Repudiation of trust or equitable right as starting running, see post §§ 71, 74.
Different contracts collateral to each other giving rise to causes of action at different times, see post § 50.
Statute and period applicable to contract actions, see ante §§ 13, 14.

¶ 180. A cause of action accrues to set the statute of limitations in motion, at least where no delay is contemplated, as soon as the creditor, by his own act and in spite of the debtor, can make his demand payable.—Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487.

¶ 181. Where a demand is a necessary preliminary to an action, it is barred unless made within the period of the statute of limitations, and the right of action falls with it.—Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487.

¶ 182. Where logs of like quality are to be returned on demand, the demand should be made within a reasonable time, and will be presumed to have been made, in the absence of testimony as to its date, at the expiration of six years from the time the logs were received, at which time the statute of limitations will commence to run against the claim.—Smith v. Smith's Estate, 91 Mich. 7.

¶ 183. The statute of limitations begins to run on a vendor's agreement to repurchase shares of corporate stock sold at any time on thirty days' notice, thirty days after notice by the vendee of an election to enforce such option, and not from the actual tender of the certificate.—Weaver v. Collins, 182 Mich. 255.

¶ 184. Plaintiff from time to time let defendant have sums of money, with the understanding that defendant was at plaintiff's request to repay the same, a reasonable time being allowed defendant to get the money together. A writing recited the several sums and the total and stated that interest was not yet paid. Held, the transactions amounted to loans in sequence payable on demand, so that lacking any demand, recovery was barred by the running of the statute of limitations seven years after the last loan.—Volli v. Wirth, 164 Mich. 21.

§ 49. ——Necessity of liquidation or measurement.

¶ 185. Where, under a contract to cut and haul timber, it is agreed that the quantity of logs cut shall be determined by measuring at the time of shipment the lumber sawed therefrom, the statute of limitations does not begin to run as to over-payments upon the contract until such measurement.—Busch v. Jones, 94 Mich. 228.

§ 50. ——Effect of collateral agreements or rights.

Trust to apply proceeds collateral to note, see also post ¶ 278.

¶ 186. If B. borrows from A. to lend to C., the running of the statute of limitations on C.'s debt to B. is not postponed to the date of the enforcement of B.'s liability to A.—Howard v. First Presbyterian Church & Society of Pontiac, 51 Mich. 125.

¶ 187. Where the maker of notes agreed to send to the payee at a designated place certain goods, the payee "to pay the freight on the same and indorse $50 on the notes," the indorsement was to be made when the goods were received; and the statute of limitations began to run on the notes at that time; moreover, the goods having been accepted and the indorsement made, the time of the indorsement was not affected by the fact that the goods sent varied from those described in the contract.—Sutton v. Lamb, 72 Mich. 340.

¶ 188. Where a husband in a separation agreement conveyed to his wife certain property as a home reserving to himself a life estate in certain events, and there was a mortgage on the premises which he agreed he would pay within two years, but if in the meantime the wife should make any payments of principal or interest she should be subrogated to the right of the mortgagee or have a lien corresponding to the amount paid as security and to assure the final payment of the principal and interest in full "by the party of the first part" (the husband), there was created a personal liability to pay the mortgage, which matured at the expiration of two years.—Clinton v. Clinton's Estate, 148 Mich. 496.

¶ 189. A suit brought on a written guaranty, which included notes in settlement of accounts, is not barred when suit is brought more than six years after date of an account, but within six years after maturity of the note.—American Steel & Wire Co. v. Richardson, 191 Mich. 549.

§ 51. On open or running accounts.

Running of time on account stated, see post § 52.
Action on guaranty of notes given in settlement of account, see also ante ¶ 189.
Continuous rendition of services, see post § 58.
Evidence as to character of account, see also post ¶ 428.
Court and jury questions as to character of account, see post § 118.
Necessity and propriety of instructions, see post § 118.
Instruction on effect of payment to continue account, see post ¶ 458.
Accrual of action for several balances reported against public officer, see also Account Stated ¶ 32.

Statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 14; Comp. L. 1915, § 12324.

¶ 190. On a running account the time of limitations only begins when there is a special occasion for making a new departure.—Tripp v. Curtenius, 36 Mich. 494.

¶ 191. There is no account current or mutual account within the statute unless there are accounts on both sides. A credit given by one to the other without the concurrence of the other is not sufficient.—Kimball v. Kimball, 16 Mich. 211.

¶ 192. A "mutual and open account current" means a course of dealing where each party furnishes credit to the other on the reliance that upon settlement the accounts will be allowed, so that one will reduce the balance due on the other.—In re Hiscock's Estate, 79 Mich. 536.

¶ 193. A payment made upon the same day with the last of a series of charges will render the whole account open and mutual, so as to take previous charges out of the statute of limitations.—Hollywood v. Reed, 55 Mich. 308.

¶ 194. Payments upon an account are sufficient to render it such an open and mutual account as to prevent the statute of limitations from barring the remedy thereon.—Payne v. Walker, 26 Mich. 60.

¶ 195. If an attorney's services are minuted in his register and other proper memorandum books, it is sufficient for the purpose of an account current; there is no requirement that the books upon which entries are made shall be of any particular kind, or the entries of any particular form, and the fact that the amount of the charges was not entered is immaterial.—Payne v. Walker, 26 Mich. 60.

¶ 196. Where, for mutual convenience, credit is given in the course of a running account for an article that has been returned without being paid for, the transaction is complete in itself and gives neither party a right to make it a matter of account within the statute of limitations. But if cash had been paid for it, which the vendor was allowed to retain, it is a proper item on the credit side, and sufficient to convert the account into a mutual one.—White v. Campbell, 25 Mich. 463.

¶ 197. Items of credit to defendant, entered on plaintiff's books for goods or money "returned," have no tendency to prove the existence of a mutual and open account between the plaintiff and defendant, within the meaning of Comp. L. 1857, § 5361, How. St. § 8717. Such entries denote merely that the transactions to which they relate are stricken out of the account entirely.—Campbell v. White, 22 Mich. 178.

¶ 198. One who defends against a claim originating in 1869, with items of set-off arising in 1865, 1868 and 1869, cannot show as an additional offset that the plaintiff boarded with him in 1858 and before, in the absence of any showing that there were mutual accounts between them in the meantime; the claim for such board is barred by the statute of limitations and the case cannot be treated as one of mutual accounts renewed after a suspension for a period.—Mandigo v. Mandigo, 26 Mich. 349.

¶ 199. A claimant against an estate sought to free an open account from the bar of the statute of limitations by showing that within the statutory period the decedent had orally admitted that the price of a bull bought from a firm of which he was a member was properly credited to him individually; also that by his oral consent an order drawn by the claimant on another firm of which he was a member was carried to his individual credit. But there was testimony that no one had accounted for the price of the bull, and there was nothing to show decedent's right to apply the price of it as a set-off to any account held by the claimant against him, and the defense also claimed that decedent had not assumed to apply to his benefit the credit arising from the payment of the order. The jury found against the claimant. Held, that the account was not released from the bar of the statute.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353.

¶ 200. Testimony by a third party that he had heard a decedent orally admit having bought certain property and become a debtor therefor at some previous time not specified, but which the witness inferred was comparatively recent, did not avail to release from the bar of the statute of limitations a claim against his estate upon an open account.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353.

¶ 201. A claim against a decedent's estate based on an account, the last item of which was made more than nine years before his death, on which claim the only credit items are a small credit for wood eight years after the last debit, and two unexplained credits of cash made more than six years before the death, is not such a "mutual and open account current" as to be excepted under How. St. § 8717, from the operation of the statute of limitations.—In re Hiscock's Estate, 79 Mich. 536.

¶ 202. While it may be sufficient to constitute a mutual account to show that the account is credited with items in good faith, it cannot be held that there are mutual accounts where one party has always denied liability and credit is given with full knowledge that it is contrary to his intention.—Bay City Iron Co. v. Emery, 128 Mich. 506.

¶ 203. Where defendant, who has purchased several carloads of lumber from plaintiff sends him a check with a statement and letter explaining that the check is in full settlement of the balance due, and plaintiff returns the check, claiming a larger amount due, the statement and check are not such an acknowledgment of a continuing contract as will prevent the bar of the statute of limitations.—Hebinger v. Ross, 175 Mich. 241.

§ 52. On accounts stated.

Running of time on open accounts, see ante § 51.

Evidence as to statement of account, see post ¶ 428.

What constitutes statement of an account, see Account Stated, §§ 1-3.

¶ 204. Limitation runs from the time an account was orally settled, since an account stated need not be in writing.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353; Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357.

¶ 205. Where a defendant relies on the statute of limitations on the ground that the claim has been by his assent converted into an account stated, he must show that such assent was expressed by some unequivocal word or act; it is not sufficient that after the exhibition of the account to him he remained passive.—White v. Campbell, 25 Mich. 463; Payne v. Walker, 26 Mich. 60.

¶ 206. An account stated may be worked out without any written undertaking or acknowledgment, and may be proved by unsigned writings; but it cannot overcome the bar of the statute of limitations unless it is supported by evidence of some writing signed by the party to be charged.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353.

§ 53. Negotiable paper and liabilities thereon.

On demand or sight paper, see post § 54.

On paper due on specified contingency, see post § 55.

On paper due at death of person, see post § 56.

On guaranty of note in settlement of account, see ante ¶ 189.

Accrual of right to sue on notes payable in goods where goods were not as represented, see ante ¶ 187.

Suspension of running because of nonresidence, see ante § 36.

Existence and maturity of cause of action on bills and notes, see Negotiable Instruments.

¶ 206a. The drawer of a check payable ninety days after date has the whole of the day of its maturity to make payment, and an action cannot be commenced on that day; therefore the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the day after maturity.—Jocque v. McRae, 142 Mich. 370.

¶ 207. The statute of limitations is inapplicable in an action on a note, where such note is dated April 21, 1897, is drawn without interest, and no payments are due thereon until 1903, when a sum sufficient to cover payments due for six years is paid, and in 1909 the payment due in such year is paid and an action is commenced on such note within the statutory period after the first unpaid payment falls due in 1910.—Reese v. Dyer, 199 Mich. 204.

¶ 208. The date of delivery of an antedated note payable one day after date determines the time at which the statute of limitations begins to run.—Webber v. Webber, 146 Mich. 31.

§ 54. Demand or sight paper.

Court or jury question as to time for repayment, see post ¶ 443.

¶ 209. Upon certificates of deposit, and obligations payable on demand, when not excepted by Comp. L. 1871, § 7151, How. St., the time runs from the date thereof.—Tripp v. Curtenius, 36 Mich. 494.

¶ 210. The statute runs from delivery of a note payable on demand; and in the case of a note payable thirty days after demand it runs from the expiration of thirty days after delivery.—Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487.

¶ 211. Where six years have elapsed since the issue of township orders for work and labor performed, and payment was refused nearly that long ago, they cannot be enforced.—Owen v. Lincoln Township Board, 41 Mich. 415.

¶ 212. On a note payable on demand after date, but antedated, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until delivery of the note.—Webber v. Webber, 146 Mich. 31.

§ 55. Demands due on specified contingency.

Time from which statute of limitations runs against action to collect insurance assessment, see also Insurance § 90, ¶¶ 374, 375.

¶ 213. The statute of limitations does not begin to run on a deposit note given by a member of a mutual fire insurance company whereby he agrees to pay a sum certain, or any part thereof, when required, and which by its terms is part of the absolute funds of the company, until an assessment is made.—Wardle v. Hudson, 96 Mich. 432.

¶ 214. An action by the receiver of a mutual fire insurance company against a member thereof to recover an assessment made by order of court to liquidate the company's liability is barred six years after the assessment falls due.—Wardle v. Hudson, 96 Mich. 432.

§ 56. Agreements and demands due on death of person.

Time from which statute of limitations runs on contracts which are to be paid out of estate after death, see also Estates of Decedents ¶ 655.

¶ 215. Where an agreement to provide for one by will is binding on an estate the statute of limitations does not begin to run until after the death of the person executing it, and under Comp. L. 1871, § 7157, How. St., § 8722 the period of limitation, in case of the death of the party liable, is extended thirty days beyond the six years otherwise allowed. —Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 216. Where personal services are performed under an agreement to pay therefor out of her estate the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the death of the promisor.—In re McNamara's Estate, 148 Mich. 346.

§ 57. Implied contract rights.

Work and labor over extended period, see post § 58.

Right to recover overpayments, necessity of measurement of goods, see ante ¶ 185.

Existence of implied contracts, see Implied Contracts.

¶ 217. An administrator's claim for moneys paid by him to redeem lands for the estate dates from the payment, and the statute begins to run at that time.—Goodrich v. Leland, 18 Mich. 110.

¶ 218. Action on an implied assumpsit to pay for services performed by plaintiff while living in a relation's house is barred by a lapse of six years after performance ceased. —In re Robinson's Claim v. McAfee's Estate, 59 Mich. 375.

¶ 219. Under contracts for cutting timber and sawing it into lumber it was held that a cause of action for overpayments made on saw-bills did not arise, so as to set the statute of limitations in motion, prior to the furnishing of a certain statement of the lumber by which the amount was known.—Busch v. Wilcox, 106 Mich. 514.

¶ 220. Where a contract for the sale and cutting of timber provided that the amount of logs cut should be determined by the saw-bills, and where by the contract for sawing a specified part of the price per thousand was to be paid upon monthly estimates and the rest as the lumber was shipped, unless the owner should decide to leave lumber on the dock until the following spring, in which case final payment was to be made when the job was finished, measurements to be made by a competent person agreed upon by the parties, and to be conclusive, the sawing was finished September 23, and no measurement was made of the lumber left upon the dock, but November 1 an estimate of it was furnished and payment was made accordingly. When, subsequently, the lumber was shipped, it was found to overrun the previous estimate, and the excess was paid for. Held, that a cause of action for overpayments claimed to have been made for the logs did not arise in any event before the statement rendered November 1, so as to set the statute of limitations in motion against the claim.—Busch v. Wilcox, 106 Mich. 514.

¶ 221. Where a mortgagee's attorney illegally includes an attorney's fee in the amount for which mortgaged premises are sold to the mortgagee on statutory foreclosure, and where the owner of the equity of redemption redeems by giving his note to the attorney, who remits to the mortgagee the amount of the note less the attorney's fee, which he retains in payment for his services, and then sells the note to a purchaser whose recovery in suit upon the note is confined to the amount due less the attorney's fee and interest thereon, one who succeeds to the attorney's estate and pays to the note's purchaser the amount thus deducted therefrom can recover the amount so paid upon the mortgagee's estate, and the statute of limitations does not commence to run against the claim until the making of such payment.—Owen v. Baxter's Estate, 97 Mich. 539.

¶ 222. Where territory is detached from one township and organized into another, the statute of limitations does not begin to run against the right of the old township to enforce the proportionate liability of the new upon bonds issued by the former township prior to the division, which are valid in the hands of bona fide holders only, until the liability of the old township thereon has been established by judgment.—Township of Grant v. Reno, 107 Mich. 409.

§ 58. Work and labor over extended period.

Running of statute on implied contracts for services, see ante § 57.

¶ 223. Where a person goes into the service of another upon an indefinite promise of payment, and no price and no period is fixed, the bargain and service are alike continuous, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run against the claim until the service is concluded; the right of action at the close of the service is an entire right and applies to the entire service, and the employee is entitled to claim for the whole amount of all unpaid wages for all the service rendered under the agreement.—Carter v. Carter, 36 Mich. 207.

¶ 224. A claim against an estate for labor and services extending over a period of ten years, with no evidence of an open mutual account, is barred by the statute of limitations at the end of six years from the termination of such services.—Rodgers v. Lamb's Estate, 137 Mich. 241.

¶ 225. A contract for cutting logs and sawing them into lumber and shingles had been in force for several years. There had been payments ostensibly according to quantity and agreeable to the contract, and there was evidence also that the parties in the last year of cutting figured up their account for the whole period. Held, in an action for the balance due on the contract in view of jury findings of an entire contract, that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the last item of the account for that year.—Burch v. Woodworth, 68 Mich. 519.

§ 59. Breach of sale or warranty of chattels.

Time when sale or warranty is deemed to have been broken, see Sales, IV-VII.

¶ 226. Where a contract for the sale of machinery contemplates that it shall be tested and put in running order, a cause of action does not arise upon the warranty therein until a reasonable time has been allowed for the necessary tests; and the time taken by the parties in trying to make the machinery fulfil the conditions of the contract is a proper criterion as to what is reasonable.—Felt v. Reynolds Rotary Fruit Evaporating Co., 52 Mich. 602.

§ 60. Breach of contracts under seal and covenants for title to land.

On fiduciary and statutory bonds and undertakings, see post §§ 61, 62.

Effect of agreement to arrest running of statute against covenant of warranty, see post ¶ 333.

Rights of action on bonds, see Bonds; Indemnity, III.

Time of breach and accrual of right of action on covenants of seisin and against incumbrances, see also Covenants for Title, III.

When right of action for breach of covenant of warranty accrues, see also Covenants for Title § 19.

Rights of action on contracts for purchase of land, see Vendors and Purchasers, VIII et seq.

¶ 227. The statute of limitations runs against an action on the covenants of a deed from the date of the deed, where the covenants are broken as soon as the deed is given; as where the grantor has no title.—Matteson v. Vaughn, 38 Mich. 373; Vaughn v. Matteson, 39 Mich. 758.

¶ 228. Assumpsit on a covenant of seisin is barred within six years from the time the covenant was made if the grantor had no title.—Sherwood v. Landon, 57 Mich. 219.

¶ 229. A right of action in assumpsit upon a covenant against encumbrances is barred in six years.—Guerin v. Smith, 62 Mich. 369.

¶ 230. The statute of limitations against an action for breach of warranty in a deed of lands in Wisconsin, based on the existence of certain tax liens on the land pursuant to which the land was subsequently sold, begins to run from the date upon which the tax deed is recorded, since, under the laws of Wisconsin, the recording of a tax deed gives the grantees therein constructive possession and amounts to an eviction.—Bray v. Fletcher, 132 Mich. 272.

§ 61. Actions on fiduciary bonds.

Statute and period applicable to actions on bonds, see ante § 15.

Existence and maturity of liability on bonds of personal representatives and guardians, see Estates of Decedents, XIV; Guardianship, VII.

Time within which action may be brought against sureties as determined by time of guardian's discharge, see Guardianship ¶ 90.

¶ 231. Where the probate court has neglected to decree payment of debts and distribution of assets four years and a half after issuing letters of administration in accordance with How. St., §§ 5925, 5926, the right of action on the administrator's bond begins to run at that time, and in due course is barred by the statute of limitations.—Biddle v. Wendell, 37 Mich. 452.

¶ 232. Against an action on an administrator's bond for refusal to pay claims as ordered by the probate court, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the expiration of the time limited in the order.—Avery v. Miller, 81 Mich. 85.

¶ 233. Under Comp. L., § 4840 (How. St., § 6332), actions against the sureties on a guardian's bond are barred four years after he ceases, from any cause, to be guardian (saving personal disabilities to sue), and not four years from any other period or transaction.—Tate v. Stevenson, 55 Mich. 320.

¶ 234. How. St., § 6332, limiting the liability of sureties upon guardians' bonds to actions commenced within four years from the discharge of the guardian, has no application to conditional orders for such discharge; and if at the time of the discharge the ward is an infant, the four years begin to run with his majority.—Landon v. Comet, 62 Mich. 80.

§ 62. Actions on appeal, supersedeas and indemnity bonds.

¶ 235. A right of action accrues on a supersedeas bond upon the rendition of judgment of affirmance in the supreme court, or, at the latest, at the earliest date when costs may be taxed.—Busch v. Wilcox, 106 Mich. 514.

§ 63. Demands against agents and bailees.

See also post ¶ 276.

Bailment as a trust, see also post ¶ 270.

Trust suits and what constitute trusts within limitation laws, see post § 74.

Burden of proving time and continuance of bailment, see post ¶ 424.

¶ 236. The relation between a principal and his agent whose duty it is to collect money due the principal and remit it to him, is not such trust relation as will suspend the running of the statute of limitations.—Jewell v. Jewell's Estate, 139 Mich. 578.

¶ 237. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a claim for money in the hands of an agent until a demand is made by the principal or his representatives. —Ewers v. White's Estate, 114 Mich. 266.

¶ 238. As against a receipt of notes for collection, the statute does not begin to run until an accounting has been called for.—Kimball v. Kimball, 16 Mich. 211.

¶ 239. Receipt for money and personal property to be accounted for. Held that, as to the personal property, the statute did not begin to run until after demand, but the money was to be considered due immediately. Kimball v. Kimball, 16 Mich. 211.

¶ 240. Receipt for money to be paid on a demand held by another. Suit brought thereon fourteen years after its date. Held, that the receiptor was bound to pay over the money within a reasonable time, and in the absence of all explanation the reasonable time must be deemed to have elapsed more than six years before suit, and therefore the action was barred.—Kimball v. Kimball, 16 Mich. 211.

¶ 241. A right of action accrues to a principal against his agent who collects his money and whose duty it is to remit it without any accounting, at the time the money is received by the agent, and the statute of limitations begins to run at that time.—Jewell v. Jewell's Estate, 139 Mich. 578.

¶ 242. Where, by agreement between grantor and grantee money raised by the grantee's mortgaging the land to a third person is to be retained by the agent who made the loan, and is to be used by him in paying a prior mortgage when due or whenever the mortgagee will receive it, the surplus, if any, to be applied upon the purchase-price, and where, upon the grantee's selling the land subject to the mortgages, it is agreed between him, his grantor, the agent, and the purchaser, that the arrangement under which the money was deposited shall continue, the purchaser is not entitled to the money until he has paid the mortgage himself or has demanded an accounting from the agent, and therefore the statute of limitations does not begin to run until such demand.—Havens v. Church, 104 Mich. 135.

¶ 243. The statute of limitations held not to bar an action for the recovery of sheep which were not redelivered to the owner, but were retained by a bailee after the expiration of the term of bailment.—In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

¶ 244. Where money is received by a husband from his wife to be paid to the latter's son upon her death, a cause of action for refusal of payment arises at the time of the death of the mother.—Pitcher v. Rogers' Estate, 199 Mich. 114.

¶ 245. Where wheat had been stored in an elevator subject to the owner's order of sale on or before a certain date the statute of limitations will be deemed to have run where the demand for the wheat was not made until eleven years after the date fixed in the receipt, and suit was not commenced for five years and eleven months after the demand.—Freeman v. Ingerson, 143 Mich. 7.

¶ 246. In an action to recover for certain drills, the defense being the statute of limitations, a letter stating that "I want those drills" written within six years of the time the action is begun in response to a demand for settlement is sufficient to toll the statute, the drills being in defendant's possession under a contract whereby title remained in plaintiff, since he had a right to retain them only upon paying the contract price.—DeKruif v. Flieman, 130 Mich. 12.

§ 64. Actions against liquidating partners.

Accounting suits between partners, see post § 72.

¶ 247. Where a surviving partner collects a partnership debt while the deceased partner's estate is being administered, a cause of action in favor of the administrator against such surviving partner accrues when the money is collected, unless there is a concealment of the cause of action; and after six years recovery is barred.—Daniells v. Daniells, 92 Mich. 208.

§ 65. Misappropriation and waste of corporate assets and properties.

Accrual of action to receiver for unpaid subscriptions, see ante ¶ 174.

¶ 248. Where a bill is filed by the receiver of an insolvent corporation on behalf of creditors to compel defendants, preferred stockholders, to refund certain dividends claimed to have been illegally paid on such stock, the action must be commenced within the period of limitations and the statute begins to run from the time the dividends are paid and not from the time creditors became such or the receiver acquired the right to bring suit.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Goodrich, 175 Mich. 168.

§ 66. Causes of action for tort.

See also ante ¶ 248.

For false imprisonment in insane asylum, see ante ¶ 167.

Conversion, trespass, and waste, see post §§ 67-69.

Statutory liabilities, see post § 70.
Nonrevivableness of tort causes, see post § 85.

¶ 249. The statutory limitation of an action for false imprisonment by one unlawfully imprisoned by a sheriff and physician and taken to an insane asylum begins to run when, if ever, a lawful restraint by the asylum authorities becomes substituted for that previously exercised or claimed by defendants.—Alexander v. Thompson, 195 Fed. 31.

¶ 250. Where it was not shown that the detention of a person in an insane asylum, after she had been brought back by a deputy sheriff, on the expiration of a period of probation, was unlawful, the statute of limitations against an action against the sheriff and a physician for damages for false imprisonment began to run from the time of the patient's re-entry into the hospital.—Alexander v. Thompson, 195 Fed. 31.

¶ 251. A cause of action in assumpsit, brought under Comp. L. 1897, § 10421, to recover for fraud and deceit whereby plaintiff was induced to discount certain notes and receive as collateral security certain corporate stock, accrues as soon as the notes are discounted and the shares of stock are accepted, even though it was provided that if the notes were not paid when due the assignee should have the right to sell the stock, the cause of action not being contingent on the nonpayment of the notes.—First Nat. Bank of Ovid v. Steel, 146 Mich. 308.

¶ 252. Whether How. St., § 8714, limiting actions for slanderous words to two years after the cause of action accrues, applies to an action for defamation of title by the execution of a deed and inserting therein a statement that the plaintiff had fraudulently obtained possession of the land, etc., quære. But if so, the continued claim of rights under the deed, which were settled adversely to defendants in a suit to remove the cloud thereby created less than two years prior to the commencement of suit, will save the action from the operation of the statute.—Chesebro v. Powers, 78 Mich. 472.

§ 67. ——Conversion of personalty.

Action for stored grain, see also ante ¶ 245.
Action by administrator for conversion of goods of decedent, see ante ¶ 173.
What deemed to be a conversion and when complete, see Conversion, I.
Laying conversion on one of successive or continuous acts, see also Conversion § 12.

¶ 253. The statute of limitations runs in favor of one who converts property from the time of the conversion, although another afterwards intermeddles with the property in such a way as to make him a joint wrongdoer with the person guilty of the original conversion.—Knisely v. Stein, 52 Mich. 380.

§ 68. ——Continuing trespasses and injuries.

¶ 254. Where one mining company has broken through the partition wall of an adjoining mine, the flow of water through the opening after the right of action for the original breaking has been barred cannot be connected therewith so as to defeat the running of the statute of limitations (How. St., § 8714).—National Copper Co. v. Minnesota Min. Co., 57 Mich. 83.

¶ 255. Where a mining company has broken through the wall between its mine and an adjoining one, going beyond the boundary in doing so, the mere continuance of the opening is not a continuous damage giving a new cause of action so as to prevent the running of the statute of limitations upon the original trespass, and to permit a recovery for injury caused by the flow of water through the opening two years after the breach was made.—National Copper Co. v. Minnesota Min. Co., 57 Mich. 83.

¶ 256. Breaking through the partition wall of an adjoining mine is not necessarily a trespass if not incident to an encroachment upon the latter's premises; and even if there were such encroachment the flow of water through the opening, after the right of action for the original trespass has been barred by lapse of time, cannot be connected with such trespass so as to defeat the operation of the statute of limitations. The mere continuance of the breach is no injury in itself, and as the right of action for the original trespass would have covered the cost of repairing the breach, the bar of the statute destroys that remedy. And a subsequent flooding will sustain no right of action if it only resulted from the exercise, by either mining company, of its right to discontinue operations, or to go on after the other has discontinued.—National Copper Co. v. Minnesota Min. Co., 57 Mich. 83.

¶ 257. A suit for a mandatory injunction to abate and restrain a continuing trespass is not barred until the trespasser has extinguished the easement claimed by adverse possession fifteen years.—Longton v. Stedman, 196 Mich. 543.

¶ 258. Action for damages for depreciation of rental value of abutting property caused by a bridge in a street, over a railroad track, is not barred by the statute of limitations, though action for the erection of the bridge is barred, this being a continuous wrong.—Phelps v. City of Detroit, 120 Mich. 447.

§ 69. ——Waste.

¶ 259. Where the owner of land upon which there were first and second mortgages, which were of record, sold the timber standing thereon to a company which at once began the removal thereof, the owner of the second mortgage has had his security impaired and suffered a present injury thereby, so as to start limitations against his right of action, and it cannot be said that he has suffered no legal injury until after his mortgage has matured.—Jenks v. Hart Cedar & Lumber Co., 143 Mich. 449.

§ 70. Statutory liabilities.

¶ 260. The statute of limitations begins to run in favor of school officers who, by reason of their failure to require the statutory bond of a contractor for the erection of a school building, incur a statutory liability (How. St., § 8411a), to material men, as to each instalment of material furnished, immediately upon payment becoming due from the contractor for such instalment, and his default in such payment.—Staffon v. Lyon, 110 Mich. 260.

¶ 261. The statutory period of limitations on an action for sidewalk injury occurring before the passage of the act did not begin to run until the council took action upon the claim as decided in Springer v. City of Detroit, 118 Mich. 69, being distinguished from Klass v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 35, where it occurred after passage of the act.—Brown v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 588.

Period of limitation of action for wrongful death as determined by time of death or from appointment of administrator, see note, 12 N. C. C. A. 49-63.

§ 71. Equities and equitable rights.

Applicability of statute of limitations in equity, see ante § 4.
Accounting suits, see post § 72.
Foreclosure of mortgages, see post § 73.
Trust cases, see post § 74.
Bar of debt as barring suit to set aside conveyance in fraud of debt, see also ante ¶ 169.
Action to enforce charge of legacy on land, see also ante ¶ 178.

¶ 262. The owner of an equitable title is under no obligation to assert the same until after the repudiation of his rights, and limitations do not begin to run against him until such repudiation.—Stonehouse v. Stonehouse, 156 Mich. 43.

§ 72. Accounting suits.

Actions and suits to enforce trusts or call trustees to account, see post § 74.

¶ 263. The statute of limitations, if it runs at all against a partner's right to an accounting, is barred by dealings in the shape of a showing of balances.—Near v. Lowe, 49 Mich. 482.

§ 73. Default and foreclosure of mortgages.

Payments and indorsements to toll the statute, see post § 92.
What constitutes default and time for foreclosure suits, see Foreclosure § 3 et seq., § 12.
Reckoning of time for foreclosure suits, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 12322.

¶ 264. Laws of 1879, Act No. 204 (How. St., § 8709), barring mortgage foreclosures at law or in equity unless commenced within fifteen years from and after the maturity of the mortgage debt, or within a like period after the last payment was made thereon, does not apply to a mortgage upon which the last payment was made less than fifteen years after the passage of the act.—McKisson v. Davenport, 83 Mich. 211.

¶ 265. Under How. St., § 8709, barring foreclosure suit not begun within fifteen years after the mortgage became due or after the last payment thereon, but providing that the act should not apply to mortgages which became due or on which the last payment was made fifteen years before its passage, and that in such case suit should not be brought unless within five years after the act took effect, foreclosure of a mortgage that fell due more than fifteen years before the act's passage is barred in five years after the act took effect, notwithstanding a certificate of the amount due indorsed on the mortgage by the mortgagor; such certificate not operating as a renewal but merely as an estoppel to deny the amount thereof during the life of the mortgage.—Highstone v. Franks, 93 Mich. 52.

§ 74. Express, implied and constructive trusts.

Actions on bonds of fiduciaries and trustees, see ante § 61.
Action against state as trustee of express trust, see ante ¶ 107.
Demand against agent as trust demand, see also ante ¶ 236.

¶ 266. Where an express trust is created by a contract to hold lands and to dispose of them and account for the proceeds, the statute of limitations against the trustee begins to run from the time when his repudiation of the trust and the claim in his own right came to the beneficiary's knowledge.—Van Buren v. Stocking, 86 Mich. 246.

¶ 267. The statute of limitations does not run in favor of a trustee of an express trust, unless he repudiates the trust and assumes an adverse position with notice to the cestui que trust.—Thorne v. Foley, 137 Mich. 649.

¶ 268. The statute of limitations operates against an implied trust.—In re Sellman's Estate, 175 Mich. 700.

¶ 269. As to an express trust, the statute of limitations does not run as between trustee and cestui que trust.—Hatt v. Green, 180 Mich. 383.

¶ 270. Since the mere retention of chattels by a bailee, however long continued, will not of itself work a change of ownership, the statute of limitations does not run in his favor until he sets up and asserts an adverse claim against the bailor.—In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

¶ 271. As a general rule, the statute of limitations has no application in case of an express trust, and, as against an express or continuing trust, the statute does not run until repudiation by the trustee and knowledge thereof is brought home to the cestui que trust.—Pitcher v. Rogers' Estate, 199 Mich. 114.

¶ 272. The fact that a trustee of an express trust for the payment of money to one person after death of the former's wife uses the money on his own property, for his own use, as contemplated, instead of making investments in the usual securities for trust funds, does not constitute such repudiation by the trustee as to set the statute of limitations in motion.—Pitcher v. Rogers' Estate, 199 Mich. 114.

¶ 273. The running of the statute on a note and indorsements is not affected by the nonapplication of the proceeds of collaterals held by one of the indorsers, such proceeds being realized in 1892 and 1893, where such indorser received them as an attorney for collection for benefit of the holder, but later received other money on other collaterals and reported an application of it so as to imply a new promise as of such later time. Such circumstances would not show an undeclared voluntary trust in the proceeds received and a want of notice of it, so as to keep the statute running.—Myers v. Muskegon Improvement Co., 193 Mich. 697.

¶ 274. Where a suit is brought by the descendants of brothers and sisters of two brothers who occupied land, which had been occupied by the father under a concession from the French government, against the descendants of the two brothers and purchasers from them under a patent from the United States procured by one of the brothers occupying the land, claiming a tenancy in common, and the two brothers and those claiming under them have been in possession for 62 years the case depends upon the establishment of an implied trust to be raised by the evidence, and hence falls within the class of cases in which courts of equity follow the courts of law in applying the statute of limitations.—Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 190, 16 L. ed. 484.

¶ 275. In the case of an express trust, the statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of the trustee until the trust is repudiated by him, and notice of that fact is brought home to the cestui que trust.—Frank v. Morley's Estate, 106 Mich. 635; Shepherd v. Shepherd's Estate, 108 Mich. 82.

¶ 276. Where a general managing agent keeps in his own possession notes executed by him to his principal, with the mutual understanding that they shall enter into the accounting finally to be had between the parties, who stood in a relation of trust, the statute of limitations does not begin to run as against the right to recover the amount represented by said notes until an accounting has been demanded.—Shepherd v. Shepherd's Estate, 108 Mich. 82.

¶ 277. The statute of limitations does not prevent recovery of money retained by a trustee under a will and not accounted for by claimants who have attained their majority, on the ground that the trust was terminated when the age of majority was reached, as the mere fact that money due a cestui que trust is allowed by him to remain in the hands of the trustee does not change the nature of the debt, and until an accounting is had or demanded the statute of limitations does not run.—Jones v. Home Sav. Bank, 118 Mich. 155.

V. COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION AND COMPUTATION OF ELAPSED TIME.

§ 75. Necessity and sufficiency of commencement of action.

Inefficacy of disability or suspensive cause arising after running commences to toll statute, see ante § 24.

Interruption of action after commencement, see post § 76.

Effect of amendments to make new cause or abide by original declaration, see post § 77.

Computation and deductions of time, see post § 79.

Computation of time against set-offs, see post § 78.

Of commencement of new action under provision for extension for year after abatement or reversal, see post § 102.

Burden of proof of timely commencement, see post § 109.

Burden of showing error in date of unserved writ, see post ¶ 422.

Time of commencement as court or jury question, see post § 118.

Time when right to sue is deemed complete so as to set statute running, see ante IV.

As to what constitutes commencement of action, see also Actions § 6.

Sufficiency of service, see Process, II.

¶ 278. A suit is not begun for the purpose of the statute of limitations, merely by filling out a summons and leaving it in the justice's office until the return day, or by retaining it in plaintiff's custody; it must be issued with the intent that, if practicable, it shall be served.—Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472.

¶ 279. A suit begun by declaration under How. St., § 7291, is not duly commenced until copy of declaration with notice of rule to plead has been personally served upon defendant.—Detroit Free Press Co. v. Bagg, 78 Mich. 650.

¶ 280. An action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace commenced by declaration will not bar the plea of the statute of limitations until the declaration is served.—Galbraith v. Bostwick, How. N. P. 143.

¶ 281. An action on an account was barred before the commencement of the action, where the date of the lost item of the account was March 25, 1875, and the declaration filed March 23, 1881, but not served until March 29, 1881.—Messenger v. Gustin, How. N. P. 142.

¶ 281a. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9985, making personal service of a copy of the declaration essential to the commencement of a suit by declaration, an action for personal injuries against a city is barred by the statute of limitations where service on the city comptroller was set aside and proper service obtained after the running of the year provided in Local Acts 1895, No. 463, § 46.—Wilton v. City of Detroit, 138 Mich. 67.

¶ 281c. Where a plaintiff in a claim for damages against the city, serves the declaration upon the chief clerk in the office of the corporation counsel, and not until after the statutory period does she serve the proper officer, the city clerk, the service upon the former is void, and the latter suit is barred by the statute.—Boyle v. City of Detroit, 152 Mich. 248.

§ 76. Continuity or interruption of action.

Rule as to disabilities arising after running commences and rule as to tacking disabilities, see ante §§ 24, 32.

Writ of error as continuation of original action, see Appeal § 7.

¶ 282. Where the continuity of an action is interrupted by an interval between the return day of one writ of summons and the issue of an alias writ, the institution of the action will not bar the operation of the statute of limitations.—Johnson v. Mead, 58 Mich. 67.

¶ 283. Comp. L. 1871, § 5263, How. St. § 6828, provides that a plaintiff who has taken out an alias summons that has been returned not personally served "may, in further continuation of the suit, have an attachment against the defendant" on which property may be taken. Held, that this is an alternative remedy, and that instead of resorting to it the plaintiff may take out successive writs of summons for the purpose of keeping a suit alive under the statute of limitations.—Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472.

¶ 284. The suspension of the statute for infancy will not be raised by the appointment of a next friend for an infant plaintiff, or the actual commencement by him of an action subsequently discontinued.—Keating v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 94 Mich. 219.

§ 77. Amendments and changes after commencement.

Impropriety of allowing amendments to introduce statute barred causes, see Pleading, VI.

Provision for applicability of law existing when right accrued, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 12319.

¶ 285. An amendment bringing in a new cause of action which has become barred since the action was originally begun will not relate back.—Gorman v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 27 Mich. 138; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 35 Mich. 227.

¶ 286. Where an amendment does not introduce a new cause of action, the running of the statute of limitations is arrested from the date of the institution of the suit.—Pratt v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 499.

¶ 286a. An amendment in an action for the negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate, a railroad fireman, on an interstate railroad by which the declaration was changed from one on the state law to one under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, relates back to the filing of the original declaration, it having been filed in time, and thus saves the bar of limitations.—Jorgensen v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 189 Mich. 537.

¶ 287. An amendment to a bill is barred by the statute of limitations only where a new and different cause of action is introduced by the amendment, and not when it can fairly be said to be the same cause of action as that originally set up.—Belden v. Blackman, 124 Mich. 667.

¶ 288. Where a demurrer to a declaration for libel has been sustained because several publications, each constituting a distinct cause of action, were set out in one count, counts of an amended declaration that sets out each cause of action in a separate count pursuant to leave to amend are not to be stricken out because based on articles which were published more than two years before leave to amend was given, but which were not barred when the original declaration was filed; the filing of the amended declaration is a continuation of the original suit without introducing a new cause of action.—Randall v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 96 Mich. 284.

¶ 289. A plea in bar that the cause of action did not accrue within six years before filing amended declaration is void.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

§ 78. Set-offs and recoupments.

Questions of law and fact as to bar, see post § 113.

Provision for reckoning time for bar of set-off, see Jud. Act. chap. IX, § 27; Comp. L. 1915, § 12337.

¶ 290. Under How. St., § 8731, a debt alleged by way of set-off is not barred by the statute of limitations unless the statutory period had run against it before the accruing of the claim upon which suit is brought.—Busch v. Wilcox, 106 Mich. 514.

§ 79. Computation of time and deductions.

From what day time is deemed to run, see ante IV.

Extensions by death, infancy, other disability, absence, fraud, or obstacle to suing, see ante III.

Deductions of time for existence of state of war or for absence of defendant from state, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, §§ 16, 17; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12326, 12327.

Statutory rule as to computation of time since accrual to predecessor in title to land, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 12312.

¶ 291. To determine whether a claim against an estate for sums payable annually or any part of it is barred by limitations, the time which has elapsed since the right of action arose for each sum must be computed, deducting suspensions caused by deaths.—Stringer v. Stevens' Estate, 146 Mich. 181.

¶ 292. In computing the ten years within which an action upon a judgment must be brought to avoid the statute of limitations, the day of entering the judgment is excluded.—Warren v. Slade, 23 Mich. 1.

¶ 293. The two periods of limitation fixed for the recovery of land by R. S. 1838, pt. 3, tit. 6, chap. I, § 1, p. 573, cannot be blended, but stand by themselves for different classes of cases. Right of action against an independent intruder must date back only to the origin of his possession, while if one succeeds to another by transfer of title or claim, the right of action goes back to the first occupant in the chain of adverse possession, and action must be brought within twenty-five years after disseisin. Every action shall be brought within twenty years from the time it accrued.—Riopelle v. Gilman, 23 Mich. 33.

¶ 294. By a foreclosure decree, based on a conveyance and bond for support, secured by a mortgage, lands were charged with the payment of $200 a year during life to the wife of the original grantor. She died March 4, 1891. Letters of administration were granted Aug. 11, 1898, on her estate and a bill to enforce the lien was filed by the administrator Nov. 20, 1894, the instalments being in default since 1872. How. St., § 8722, suspends limitations, as against an administrator, until two years after the granting of letters, and How. St., § 8736, limits to ten years the right to recover on a decree. Held, that complainant could recover the instalments falling due within ten years prior to the date of the grantor's death, but no prior ones.—Field v. Loveridge, 114 Mich. 220.

¶ 295. A claimant against a decedent's estate must present his claim, before the the statute of limitations including the two-year period for administration has run upon it, else his remedy will be barred; hence a claim on a note is barred where not presented for ten years after the debtor's death.—First Nat. Bank v. Sherman's Estate, 117 Mich. 602.

VI. EXTENSION OF TIME, REVIVAL OF CAUSE, AND WAIVER AND ESTOPPEL.

A. ACKNOWLEDGMENT AND NEW PROMISE, AND WAIVER.

Suspension and arrest of statute to prevent its commencing to run by reason of disability to sue or obstacle to suit, see ante III.

§ 80. In general.

Acknowledgment that account is an open and running one, see ante § 51.

New promises and acknowledgments of debts, see post §§ 81-84.

Revivableness of tort causes, see post § 85.

Waiver of the statute and agreements and estoppels to claim bar, see post §§ 86-88.

Effect of agreement or negotiation for settlement or reimbursement, see post § 88.

Part payment as acknowledgment extending time or reviving cause, see post VI, B.

Statutory year to bring new action after failure of action commenced in time, see post VI, C.

Nonrevival of barred rights by commencement of partition proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXI, § 78; Comp. L. 1915, § 13335.

¶ 296. Where an action for the recovery of chattels is barred by the statute of limitations, admissions of the defendant that he held them as bailee is not an acknowledgment or new promise which §§ 9740, 9744, Comp. L 1897, §§ 14147, 14151, How.

St., 2nd Ed., requires to be in writing, but is evidence tending to show that the defendant did not hold the chattels adversely. —In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

¶ 297. A debt barred by the statute of limitations cannot be revived by a subsequent transaction having no relation to the former debt.—McCarron v. Wheeler, 151 Mich. 222.

§ 81. Sufficiency of acknowledgment or new promise; necessity of writing.

Qualified or conditional promises or acknowledgments, see post § 82.
Indorsements of payments on instruments, see post § 91 et seq.
Part payment as an implied new promise or acknowledgment, see post § 89.
Effect of warrantor's agreement to pay cost of clearing title, see post ¶ 333.
New promise by one of several debtors, see post § 83.
Questions of law and fact and instructions, see post § 114.
Consideration for promise tolling statute, see post § 84.
Validity of new promises as contracts to pay barred debts and consideration for same, see Contracts § 127.
New promises to pay debts discharged in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy § 24.
Statutory requirement of writing to evidence new promise or acknowledgment, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 21; Comp. L. 1915, § 12331.

¶ 298. An oral promise made since, to pay a simple contract debt barred by the statute of limitations before R. S. 1838 took effect, will not revive the cause of action, but such promise must be in writing as required by R. S. 1838, p. 578, § 13.—Joy v. Thompson, 1 D. 373.

¶ 299. The statutory requirement of a writing to evidence a new promise tolling the statute does not violate the obligation of contracts.—Joy v. Thompson, 1 D. 373.

¶ 300. How. St., § 8725, which operates to exclude the efficiency of a mere oral acknowledgment to renew a liability barred by the general statute of limitations, applies only to those cases within the provisions of such statute, the cases not within its provisions being governed by the common-law rule.—Perkins v. Cheney, 114 Mich. 567.

¶ 301. The oral promise of a surety on a guardian's bond that he will pay whatever is found due from the guardian is sufficient to remove the bar of the statute.—Perkins v. Cheney, 114 Mich. 567.

¶ 302. An oral promise to pay an old debt does not renew it so as to take it out of the statute of limitations, if it is not kept open by mutual dealings.—Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 40 Mich. 646.

¶ 303. A verbal promise by an employer, after the termination of the employment, to deed the employee certain land in payment, does not prevent the statute of limitations from running against the claim.—Rodgers v. Lamb's Estate, 137 Mich. 241.

§ 82. ——Certainty and freedom from conditions.

¶ 304. Where a new promise is set up it ought to be proved in a clear and explicit manner, either expressly or by such an unqualified acknowledgment as authorizes its implication.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40.

¶ 305. The acknowledgment should contain an unqualified and direct admission of a present subsisting debt, which the party is liable and willing to pay, and be unaccompanied by circumstances or declarations which repel the presumption of a promise or intention to pay.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40.

¶ 306. A new promise, to remove the bar of the statute of limitations, must contain an unqualified and direct admission of a present and subsisting debt which the party is liable and willing to pay and be unaccompanied by any circumstances or declarations which repel the presumption of a promise or intention to pay. Such an acknowledgment may be inferred from facts without words, and no set form of words is requisite.—Throop v. Russell, 145 Mich. 482.

¶ 307. A stipulation between the parties in a chancery suit brought to restrain proceedings on an execution under a judgment, that the injunction be dissolved, the execution be set aside, and a reference be taken to state an account, etc., was held not to be such an acknowledgment of debt as to warrant the implication of a new promise. —Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40.

¶ 308. In order to avoid suit and to gain time to procure evidence of set-off, a debtor signed this writing in her creditor's book: "I extend this book account four months from April 30, 1886." Held a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to take it out of the operation of the statute.—Crane v. Abel, 67 Mich. 242.

¶ 309. The mortgagor's certificate that at a certain date there is a certain sum due upon the mortgage will not operate to renew the mortgage or to interrupt the running of the statute of limitations against it.—Highstone v. Franks, 93 Mich. 52.

¶ 310. A statement by the maker of a note that a certain party has her note is not evidence tending to show that she has made a payment thereon, nor is it a promise to pay the note which will interrupt the running of the statute of limitations.—Fowles v. Joslyn, 130 Mich. 272.

¶ 311. An indorsement, "the within note shall not be outlawed," signed by the maker of the note just before it would otherwise have been barred by the statute of limitations, is a sufficient renewal by new promise.—In re King's Estate, 94 Mich. 411.

¶ 312. A signed letter written by the debtor before certain notes were outlawed stating that "Every cent I owe you will be paid" will prevent the running of the statute of limitations against all of the notes for six years from the date of the letter.—Rumsey v. Settle's Estate, 120 Mich. 372.

¶ 313. A signed letter from a debtor to his creditor stating that "I owe you" and "I want to fix your matter up," is a sufficient acknowledgment in writing under How. St. § 8725 to extend the time of all notes owing to the creditor and not already outlawed for six years from its date.—Rumsey v. Settle's Estate, 120 Mich. 372.

¶ 314. A promissory note barred by the statute of limitations is not revived under Comp. L. 1897, § 9740, requiring acknowledgment in writing and signed by the party, by a letter from the maker in which he says, "it will be impossible for me to do anything on that account this spring. I will pay something on it as soon as I can, but cannot say just when," as such a promise is conditional.—Halladay v. Weeks, 127 Mich. 363.

¶ 315. A letter from the mortgagor accepting the proposal of the mortgagee and promising to pay a certain amount to settle a mortgage debt does not operate as an acknowledgment of the debt nearly ten times as large so as to take it out of the bar of the statute.—Carr v. Carr, 138 Mich. 396.

¶ 316. A letter by an agent who has collected money belonging to his principal which he has not remitted, stating that "I have used the money and I want to turn out my property to make you all right," is a sufficient acknowledgment in writing of the debt to interrupt the running of the statute of limitations, under Comp. L. 1897, § 9740.—Jewell v. Jewell's Estate, 139 Mich. 578.

¶ 317. A letter of inquiry to ascertain if the mortgagee would discharge the mortgage as to part of the land if the mortgagor would make part payment of the mortgage is not sufficient to operate to suspend the statute of limitations.—Rodgers v. Robson, 147 Mich. 656.

¶ 318. An acknowledgment of indebtedness and a promise to pay cannot be inferred, in an action to recover on certain promissory notes, barred by the statute of limitations, from letters between plaintiff and defendant which make no direct mention of the notes in question; even though in such correspondence plaintiff urges defendant to pay him money by a certain date in answer to which defendant states that he is doing all he can to raise such money.—Throop v. Russell, 145 Mich. 482.

¶ 319. An acknowledgment of indebtedness and a promise to pay, so as to bar the statute of limitations, cannot be inferred, in an action to recover on certain notes, from a letter from the maker to the holder of such notes, in which he states that the fact that the notes are outlawed need not enter into the matter; and in which he offers a certain sum less than the face of the notes if the holder will surrender them to him; and further offers to furnish the holder money in the future if he should need it; and also states: "I am not backing up or repudiating anything"; and such proposition of the defendant must be construed as conditional, and not a waiver of his right to rely upon the defense of the statute.—Throop v. Russell, 145 Mich. 482.

§ 83. New promise by one of several obligors.

Statutory provision saving defense of limitations to one joint party notwithstanding other's new promise, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 12332.

¶ 320. An oral representation by a joint maker of an outstanding note that the note is "all right," etc., and that he will pay it, will not take it out of the statute of limitations.—Black v. Miller, 75 Mich. 323.

¶ 321. The oral promise of a surety on a guardian's bond that he will pay whatever is found due from the guardian is sufficient to remove the bar of the statute, and the surety's moral obligation is sufficient consideration for such promise.—Perkins v. Cheney, 114 Mich. 567.

¶ 322. The giving of a new note by one joint maker without the authority of the other will not renew it as to the other or prevent the running of the statute of limitations as to him.—Koons v. Vauconsant, 129 Mich. 260.

¶ 323. A new promise is not made out so as to take the claim out of the operation of the statute of limitations by showing that the father gave a mortgage to secure a renewal note to replace a previous joint note barred by the statute of limitations upon which renewal note both parties believed the son to have forged the father's name as comaker.—Koons v. Vauconsant, 129 Mich. 260.

¶ 324. Letters written by a surety to his principal at the request of the payee urging him to make payments on the note and expressing his own desire that such payments be made, are not a sufficient acknowledgment in writing, under Comp. L. 1897, § 9740, to toll the running of the statute of limitations as to such surety.—Borden v. Fletcher's Estate, 131 Mich. 220.

§ 84. Consideration for new promise.

Consideration for new promise after complete bar, see Contracts § 127.

New promise as admission of consideration, see Contracts § 141.

¶ 325. The original consideration is sufficient, if recognized, to uphold a new promise to pay a debt barred by the statute.—Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 Mich. 40.

¶ 326. A new promise to pay a statute barred note is supported by sufficient consideration.—Koons v. Vauconsant, 129 Mich. 260.

¶ 327. The duty resting upon a surety to see that his principal performs the contract guaranteed subsists as a moral obligation after the statute has run against the right to enforce it, and will support a new promise by the surety to answer for the principal's default.—Perkins v. Cheney, 114 Mich. 567.

§ 85. Revival or extension as to tort causes.

¶ 328. An action of tort, once barred by the statute of limitations, cannot, like an action arising out of contract, be revived by either an express or implied agreement.—Holtham v. City of Detroit, 135 Mich. 17.

¶ 329. A slander once barred cannot be revived by admissions that it was made.—Vickers v. Stoneman, 73 Mich. 419.

¶ 330. Even if a common council, by directing a person injured on a sidewalk, to appear and produce witnesses, could have waived the statutory requirement for the giving of written notice of the injury to the city law department within three months of its happening, such cause of action could not have been revived after the expiration of the stated period.—Holtham v. City of Detroit, 136 Mich. 17.

§ 86. Waiver of the bar of the statute.

Effect of agreements and representations as estoppels, see post § 88.

Authority or disability of personal representatives or trustees to waive statute, see post § 87.

Necessity and mode of pleading the bar, see post § 103 et seq.

Waiver of question on error by failure to raise it on trial, see Saving Questions.

Waiver of plea by inconsistent plea or defense, see Pleading, XI.

Effect of appearance to waive plea of limitations, see Appearance § 10, ¶ 41.

Waiver of bar for failure to present claims against estate, see Estates of Decedents §§ 176-177.

§ 87. Authority and disability of representatives or trustees to revive or waive.

Right of person claiming under trustee to sue where trustee has delayed beyond period, see also Bankruptcy ¶ 82.

¶ 331. An administrator cannot waive the statute of limitations and thus charge the estate for a claim which the law presumes to have been paid.—McGee v. McDonald's Estate, 66 Mich. 628.

¶ 332. Payment of interest by an executor, regardless of the effect which it may have to preserve the lien of a mortgage, will not operate to revive the debt barred by the statute of limitations in favor of the estate.—Draper v. Brown, 153 Mich. 120.

§ 88. Agreements and estoppels.

Evidence of agreement preventing plea of limitations, see post ¶ 426.

¶ 333. The running of the statute of limitations against the right of action for breach of warranty in a deed is not suspended by the fact that the grantor authorized the grantee to commence suit to clear the title and agreed to pay the expense thereof, where the grantee settled the suit so begun, without grantor's consent, since such act terminated the agreement.—Bray v. Fletcher, 132 Mich. 272.

¶ 334. That verbal negotiations with the heirs for the reimbursement of a claim by the administratrix are going on will not prevent the running of the statute of limitations against her claim, nor can they have the effect of reviving the claim after the statute has run.—In re Young's Estate, 144 Mich. 663.

¶ 335. Within ten years from a deficiency decree in foreclosure, the complainant filed a petition for leave to have an execution issue. The defendant's attorney by conduct amounting to a fraud on the court procured leave to file a bill for review and an order staying the proceedings. The court was lulled into delaying action until limitations on the decree had run, when the petition for the bill for review was dismissed. Execution was then taken out and a bill filed in aid of such execution, which was demurred to on the ground that limitations had run. Held, the defendant was estopped from demurring on such ground, and it was immaterial that the complainant did not have knowledge of the stay order until limitations had run, or that the order did not prevent a suit at law upon the decree before the statute had run.—Albert v. Patterson, 172 Mich. 685.

¶ 336. Under Local Acts 1895, No. 463, § 46, providing that no action shall be brought against a city for negligent injuries unless it be commenced within one year, a city is not estopped to plead this statute of limitations by evidence that the injured plaintiff continued to treat with the council committee appointed to investigate his claim after said committee's report to the council denying liability had been accepted and adopted, where there is no showing that the city knew that the plaintiffs were in ignorance concerning the council's action and no evidence of forbearance to sue because of the subsequent negotiations.—Klass v. City of Detroit, 129 Mich. 35.

¶ 337. The defendant, being the possessor, need not become the moving party, and unless he obtains delay by fraud is not answerable for disadvantages resulting to plaintiff from any neglect to speed the cause. He is not estopped by such neglect from taking advantage of the statute of limitations against the plaintiff.—Dubois v. Campau, 37 Mich. 248.

B. PART PAYMENT.

§ 89. In general; effect as acknowledgment of debt.

Effect of payment to make account an open one, see ante ¶¶ 193, 194.
Payments accompanied by disavowal or denial, see post § 90.
Indorsements of payment on instruments, see post §§ 91, 92.
Credits or payments applied without consent or knowledge of debtor, see post § 94.
Credits made under illegal agreement, see post § 98.
Payments by, to, or through agents, see post § 95.
Payments by codebtors or co-obligors or secondary obligors, see post §§ 96-98.
Payments applied to debt by person other than debtor, see post § 94.
Evidence as to making of payments, see post § 112.
Questions of law and fact and instructions as to part payment, see post § 114.
Statutory provisions as to effect of part payments, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 12335.

¶ 338. The theory upon which a part payment arrests the running of the statute of limitations is that it implies a new promise to pay, and a payment made under circumstances inconsistent with such an inference is ineffective.—Borden v. Fletcher's Estate, 131 Mich. 220.

¶ 339. Part payment of a demand, though neither a contract nor in itself a promise (How. St. § 8725), is an acknowledgment of the continued existence of the demand, and waives the right to plead the statute of limitations upon such lapse of time as may have preceded the payment. (How. St., § 8729.) And it renews from its date whatever right of action existed before.—Miner v. Lorman, 56 Mich. 212.

¶ 340. Where payments are made on a barred claim, there need be no written promise to make further payments.—Miner v. Lorman, 59 Mich. 480.

¶ 341. Payments on a judgment take it out of the statute of limitations although a judgment debtor made them because as a policeman he was required to pay his debts. —Neilands v. Wright, 134 Mich. 77.

¶ 342. The statute of limitations on a judgment is tolled by payments made notwithstanding the judgment was obtained by breach of faith and without the knowledge of the defendant where there is nothing to repel the presumption that by the payments the defendant recognized his obligation to pay it.—Neilands v. Wright, 134 Mich. 77.

§ 90. Payment accompanied by disavowal or denial.

Instruction on effect of denial, see post ¶ 452.

¶ 343. If the acknowledgment of a debt, or a partial payment of it, is accompanied by declarations or circumstances which rebut the implication of a promise to pay, or that the debtor, by the partial payment, admitted his obligation to pay the residue, the demand is not revived.—Jewett v. Petit, 4 Mich. 508.

¶ 344. A payment of a part of a debt, accompanied by acts or declarations showing that the debtor does not intend to pay more, will not revive the unpaid balance of a debt upon which the statute of limitations has taken effect.—Lester v. Thompson, 91 Mich. 245.

§ 91. Indorsements of payments.

Indorsement by party to be charged as evidence, see post ¶ 432.
Instructions on authority to make indorsement, see post ¶ 451.
Authorization of indorsement by debtor as jury question, see post ¶ 114.
Provision as to proof of part payment, insufficiency of indorsement made by payee, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 12335.

¶ 345. It is the part payment in addition to the indorsement, and not the indorsement of an alleged part payment, that takes a promissory note out of the statute of limitations, Comp. L. 1897, § 9744, How. 2nd Ed., § 14151.—Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416.

¶ 346. Comp. L. 1897, § 9744, How. 2nd Ed., § 14151, providing that part payments written on a promissory note by or on behalf of the party to whom payment is to be made shall be deemed sufficient proof of payment so as to take the case out of the operation of the statute refers only to indorsements by or on behalf of the party to whom the payment is to be made, and not to the party making the payment.—Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416.

§ 347. Unexplained indorsements and indorsements written by or for the payee are not sufficient proof of payment as against the debtor to take a case out of the statute of limitations.—Michigan Ins. Co. of Detroit v. Brown, 11 Mich. 265; Rogers v. Anderson, 40 Mich. 290.

¶ 348. An indorsement of a payment made on the back of a note by the holder, not in the presence of the maker, is not sufficient evidence of payment thereon to interrupt the running of the statute of limitations.—Fowles v. Joslyn, 130 Mich. 272.

§ 92. Payments and indorsements on mortgage debts.

Payment by grantee taking subject to mortgage, see post ¶ 375.

¶ 349. The indorsement by a mortgagee of a second mortgage, executed by the mortgagor and another, as a payment upon the first mortgage, under an agreement that it should be so treated, comes within the provisions of How. St., § 8729, and saves the debt from the operation of the statute of limitations.—Blair v. Carpenter, 75 Mich. 167.

¶ 350. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9725, providing that no foreclosure proceedings shall be maintained unless commenced within 15 years after the mortgage became due or within 15 years after the last payment made thereon, the mere indorsement of part payment on the mortgage note without consideration cannot prevent the running of the statute of limitations, inasmuch as such a transaction cannot be said to be a payment under the statute.—Rodgers v. Robson, 147 Mich. 656.

¶ 352. Comp. L. 1897, § 9745, limiting the effect of the payment by one of two joint debtors as to the running of the statute of limitations is limited in its terms to cases arising under chapter 268 and does not keep alive a mortgage debt that has outlawed from the fact that one of two joint mortgagors has made a payment thereon within the period of limitations.—Brown v. Hayes, 146 Mich. 474.

¶ 353. A payment by one joint mortgagor before the statute of limitations has begun to run keeps the debt alive, both as against the payor and his co-obligor or surety, inasmuch as Comp. L. 1897, § 9725, regarding the limitations as to mortgage foreclosures makes no provision to the contrary.—Brown v. Hayes, 146 Mich. 474.

¶ 354. The statute of limitations is not tolled as against the wife by a payment of $5.00 made by the husband where both husband and wife are parties to a mortgage covering lands owned by each and the husband is not shown to be the agent of the wife and the payment was made without her knowledge (Comp. L. 1897, § 9745).—Curtiss v. Perry, 126 Mich. 600.

¶ 355. Promissory notes given in payment of a chattel and subsequently barred by the statute of limitations are not taken out of the operation of the statute by an endorsement by the payee on the notes of the amount received upon the sale of the chattel under a mortgage: since there is nothing to show any intent to revive under Comp. L. 1897, § 9744.—Westinghouse Co. v. Boyle, 126 Mich. 677.

§ 93. Credit applied under illegal agreement.

¶ 356. Application by the creditor of the value of labor furnished by the debtor cannot be allowed as a part payment where the right to so apply it depended on a contract made on Sunday with a third person.—Pillen v. Erickson, 125 Mich. 68.

§ 94. Payments applied without consent or intent of debtor.

¶ 357. An outlawed note cannot be revived by applying upon it a payment not intended to be made on it, nor supposed to be so by the parties.—Krone v. Krone, 38 Mich. 661.

¶ 358. A part payment by an assignee for the benefit of creditors does not operate to take a debt out of the statute of limitations.—Parsons v. Clark, 59 Mich. 414.

§ 95. Payments made by, to or through agents of parties.

Payments by codebtors or other obligors, see post §§ 96-98.

¶ 359. The running of the statute of limitations is not arrested by a payment made by an agent of the debtor a year and a half after receiving the money from the debtor with instructions to make the payment.—Sweet v. Ellis, 109 Mich. 460.

¶ 360. Defendant corporation signed a note which was indorsed individually by the other defendants, among them one Erwin who owned stock in the corporation. Erwin was attorney for the payee and after the latter's death for many years had custody of the notes and of other notes turned in as collateral security. Many years after the running of the statute of limitations on the note in question, payments were made to Erwin on the said collateral notes, which were turned over by Erwin to the estate of the payee of the note in question and applied thereon. Erwin had authority from the payee and the maker and indorser of the note to make substitution from time to time of collateral. Held, the said payments made on the note operated to renew the same and saved it from being barred by the statute.—Myers v. Muskegon Improvement Co., 169 Mich. 689.

¶ 361. Where the debt is due an estate, and the estate is closed without payment thereof, a subsequent part payment by the debtor to one of the distributees for the benefit of all, made for the express purpose of delaying the statute of limitations, is sufficient to accomplish such purpose.—Spring v. Perkins, 156 Mich. 327.

§ 96. Payment by codebtor or co-obligor.

Payments by, to, or through agents, see ante, § 95.
By guarantor, surety, or other secondary party, see post § 97.
Assent or knowledge of nonpaying co-obligors to payment, see post § 98.
On mortgage debt, see also ante ¶¶ 352, 353.
Effect of part payment made by one of two or more cocontractors or coexecutors or coadministrators, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 12336.

¶ 362. A payment by the estate of a joint and several promisor does not prevent another promisor from taking the benefit of the statute of limitations (Comp. L. 1871, § 7165, How. St., § 8730).—Holcomb v. Sloan, 39 Mich. 173.

¶ 363. One joint maker of a note does not lose the benefit of the statute of limitations by reason of payments made by another.—Rogers v. Anderson, 40 Mich. 290.

¶ 364. A payment or new promise by one of several joint debtors will not keep the obligation alive as to another who had no part or privity therein.—Tate v. Stevenson, 55 Mich. 320.

¶ 365. A partnership note is a joint contract within the meaning of Comp. L. 1871, § 7165 (How. St., § 8730), so that a payment thereon by one partner within the period of the statute of limitations will not bind the other if the firm had previously dissolved to the payee's knowledge.—Gates v. Fisk, 45 Mich. 522.

¶ 366. Where one partner in writing authorizes the other to make a separate composition with the firm creditors, and he does so, payments made by the latter on such composition will not keep alive the demand as to the other.—Sigler v. Platt, 16 Mich. 206.

¶ 367. A payment by one joint debtor from his own means, on the joint obligations, will not save the running of the statute as to the other debtor.—Littlefield v. Dingwall, 71 Mich. 223.

¶ 368. A promissory note barred by the statute of limitations cannot be revived as to all its indorsers by a payment made by one of them without the knowledge or consent of the others.—Myers v. Erwin, 180 Mich. 469.

¶ 369. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9745, payment by a joint debtor will not arrest the running of the statute of limitations in favor of his codebtor, and the fact that the debtors had been partners does not change the rule where the partnership had been terminated prior to the payment.—Borden v. Fletcher's Estate, 131 Mich. 220.

¶ 370. Letters written by a surety on a note to his principal urging that he make payments and expressing his personal desire that such payments be made, the letters being written at the request of the payee, is not sufficient to make the payments when made by the principal, arrest the running of the statute of limitations as to the surety.—Borden v. Fletcher's Estate, 131 Mich. 220.

¶ 371. At common law the payment by one jointly bound unless the statute established a contrary rule, sufficed to prevent the running of the statute of limitations.—Brown v. Hayes, 146 Mich. 474.

§ 97. ——By surety or guarantor or secondary obligor.

Part payments by principal as affecting bar against surety, see ante ¶ 370.

¶ 372. A payment made by a wife with her own means upon a note in which she is a surety for her husband, he having nothing to do with such payment, does not take the note out of the statute as to him; nor would it were she liable on the note as a joint debtor.—Littlefield v. Dingwall, 71 Mich. 223.

¶ 373. Where a debtor and his surety go to the creditor together for the express purpose of making a payment, and for that alone, and both apparently co-operate in the transaction, though the debtor alone handles the money, the creditor has a right to consider it a joint payment binding the surety under the statute of limitations, unless the surety notifies him that it is not so.—Mainzinger v. Mohr, 41 Mich. 685.

¶ 374. The stockholders of a corporation, who join in executing a promissory note for its accommodation, do not, even though it is understood that the corporation shall pay the note, thereby constitute it their agent to make payments upon the indebtedness, so that such payments will arrest the running of the statute of limitations in their favor.—Patterson v. Collier, 113 Mich. 12.

¶ 375. A payment made by a grantee of mortgaged premises, who took them subject to the mortgage, will not, in the absence of any showing that he was acting as agent of the mortgagor, or otherwise than for his own benefit, be deemed a payment by the mortgagor, in such sense as to arrest the running of the statute in the latter's favor.—Home Life Ins. Co. v. Elwell, 111 Mich. 689.

§ 98. ——Assent or knowledge of co-obligors.

See also ante ¶ 373.
Assent as jury question, see post § 114.

¶ 376. The mere presence of an accommodation indorser of a note when the interest thereon was paid by the maker is not sufficient to keep the demand alive so as to prevent the running of the statute of limitations as to such indorser.—Godde v. Marvin, 142 Mich. 518.

C. ABATEMENT OR FAILURE OF TIMELY ACTION.

§ 99. In general; discontinuance, dismissal or reversal for defects.

Right to bring new action, see post § 101.
Provision for bringing new personal action within year after timely action has failed or become abated, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 12329.
Provision as to new action for real property within year after abatement, etc., see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 12320.

¶ 377. Suit being commenced in justice's court, the plaintiff employed an attorney to appear and prosecute the suit for him on the return day. The attorney was prevented from attending to the suit on that day, and requested another to appear, who did so, but his authority being required he was not able to prove it, and the action failed. It was held that these facts did not make out a case within R. S. 1838, part 3, tit. 6, chap. II, § 11, How. St. § 8723, allowing a new action within one year where "in any action duly commenced," etc., "the suit shall fail of a sufficient return, by any unavoidable accident, or by any neglect or default of the officer to whom it is committed, or if the writ shall be abated, or the action otherwise avoided or defeated, by the death of any party thereto, or for any matter of form; or if, after verdict for the plaintiff, the judgment shall be arrested, or if a judgment for the plaintiff shall be reversed on writ or error."—Spier v. M'Queen, 1 Mich. 252.

¶ 378. The erroneous dismissal by the circuit court of a regular appeal from a justice is an avoidance of the action "for matter of form," and a new suit may be brought within one year from such dismissal.—Pattridge v. Lott, 15 Mich. 251.

¶ 379. In assumpsit brought within six years service was not obtained on one of the defendants until after the six years; and after judgment for plaintiffs had been reversed because the continuity of the action was interrupted by the interval between successive summons issued for that defendant, the action was by consent discontinued as to the other defendant. Held, that a new action commenced within one year against both defendants was not within How. St., § 8723, and was barred.—Johnson v. Mead, 73 Mich. 326.

¶ 380. How. St., § 8723, allowing a "new action" to be commenced within one year after abatement or reversal, etc., gives no further delay on account of plaintiff's death in the interval, but requires the personal representative, no mattter when appointed or qualified, to sue in the same year.—Foote v. Pfeiffer, 70 Mich. 581.

¶ 381. Comp. L. 1871, § 7158 (How. St. § 8723), whereby on reversal of a judgment on writ of error after the statute of limitations has run, a new action will lie at any time within a year, applies to reversals on writs of certiorari.—McOmber v. Chapman, 42 Mich. 117.

§ 100. Death of party and vacancy in administration.

Death of party during year after failure of action, see ante ¶ 380.
Right to bring new action, see post § 101.

¶¶ 382, 383. The death of the defendant in ejectment abates the suit; but the statute of limitations does not run during the pendency of the suit, and under How. St., § 8707, plaintiff may bring an action for the same cause at any time within one year after the suit is thus abated.—McKenzie v. Cook Co., 113 Mich. 452.

§ 101. Right to bring new action within year.

Death, or other abating cause or technical defects within meaning of statutory extension, see ante §§ 99, 100.
Timeliness and sufficiency of new action, see post § 102.
In case of personal service on nonresident and completion of period thereafter, see also ante ¶ 165.
Right to bring new ejectment within year after abatement, see also Abatement ¶ 60.

¶ 384. Under the statute of limitations (Comp. L. 1897, § 9738), which provides that where an action has been defeated for any matter of form, a new action may be brought within one year thereafter, where an action, brought in assumpsit for fraud in the sale of real estate, has been defeated because plaintiff had mistaken her form of remedy, an action in tort for the same cause may be brought within one year after the final termination of the former action.—McMillan v. Reaume, 137 Mich. 1.

§ 102. Timeliness and sufficiency of new action.

Sufficiency of commencement of original suit, see ante § 75.

¶ 385. How. St., § 8723, providing that in the case of an action "duly commenced within the time limited by the statute of limitations," if the judgment is reversed on a writ of error the plaintiff may begin a new action within one year after reversal, a suit begun by declaration is not begun until a copy of the declaration with notice of rule to plead has been personally served upon the defendant.—Detroit Free Press Co. v. Bagg, 78 Mich. 650.

¶ 386. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9738, providing that if in any action duly commenced within the time limited, the writ or declaration shall fail of a sufficient service by default or neglect of the officer to whom it is committed, the plaintiff may commence a new suit within one year after the abatement of the original suit; the neglect of the sheriff in permitting 47 days to elapse between the return day of the original summons and the issuance of an alias, operated as an abatement of the original suit, and the service of the alias summons was the commencement of a new suit within one year after the abatement of the first action. —Ricaby v. Gentle, 122 Mich. 336.

VII. PLEADING, URGING AND PROVING OR AVOIDING THE STATUTORY BAR.

Pleading and proof as to adverse possession, see Adverse Possession, V.

§ 103. In general; necessity of plea or notice.

Mode of pleading, demurrer or plea, see post § 104.
Sufficiency of plea, answer, or notice, see post § 105.
Pleading limitations to set-off, see post § 106.
Pleading fraud or concealment to avoid bar, see post § 107.
Issues on the pleas and variances of proof from plea, see post § 108.
Completion of adverse possession as bar to original claim either by action or by defense, set ante ¶ 32.
Insufficiency of general issue to present limitation, see post § 105.
General law of pleading defenses in equity, see Equity, VII, C.
General law as to pleading defenses, see Pleading, III.
Propriety of leave to amend to plead limitations, see Pleading, VI.
Plea of limitations as waiver of objections to form of action, see Pleading, XI.

¶ 387. Notice of the statute of limitations must be added to the plea of the general issue to enable the defendant to avail himself of such defense.—Whitworth v. Pelton, 81 Mich. 98.

¶ 388. The statute of limitations is not available as a defense unless notice thereof is given with the plea.—Shank v. Woodworth, 111 Mich. 642.

¶ 389. Refusing on the trial to allow defendant to interpose the statute of limitations is not error.—Marx v. Hilsendegen, 46 Mich. 336.

¶ 390. It is too late on a motion for new trial to make the defense of limitations.—Moden v. Superintendents of Poor, 183 Mich. 120; Bennett v. Denton, 194 Mich. 610.

¶ 391. The upper court will not reverse a judgment on a claim barred by the statute of limitations, where notice of the defense was not served and it was not raised in the lower court.—Conger v. Hall, 158 Mich. 447.

¶ 392. Where, in an action on a note, the statute of limitations is not pleaded, a judgment thereon cannot be attacked though the fact of outlawry appears on the face of the note.—Whitworth v. Pelton, 81 Mich. 98.

¶ 393. While equity will follow the law in the application of statutes of limitation, it will not apply such statutes unless they are pleaded.—Harper v. Corcoran, 166 Mich. 474.

¶ 394. When a case stands on appeal from the allowance of a claim against an estate, it is not necessary to frame an issue to try a plea of limitations but the evidence is receivable without it, being within the issues on presentation of the claim.—McGee v. McDonald's Estate, 66 Mich. 628.

§ 104. Mode of pleading, demurrer or plea or answer.

Mode of pleading to writ of error that it is barred by time, see Appeal § 144.
Mode of pleading laches to bill, see Equity § 104.
When and how to urge bar of statute of limitation as to claim against estate, see Estates of Decedents ¶¶ 600, 601.
Leave to plead over demurrer where otherwise cause would be barred, see also Equity ¶ 835.

¶ 395. The defense of the statute of limitations must be pleaded in an action at law, and cannot be raised by demurrer.—Renackowsky v. Board of Water Com'rs of Detroit, 122 Mich. 613.

¶ 396. A defense that a right of action set up in the declaration is barred by the statute of limitations cannot be raised by demurrer, but must be pleaded.—Township of Forest v. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore, 180 Mich. 90.

¶ 397. The bar of the statute of limitations (How. St., § 8709) may be raised by answer as well as by demurrer.—Highstone v. Franks, 93 Mich. 52.

¶ 398. Limitations may be raised by demurrer to a bill.—Campau v. Chene, 1 Mich. 400; McLean v. Barton, H. 279.

¶ 399. The answer may raise the defense that relief is barred by the statute of limitations.—Highstone v. Franks, 93 Mich. 52.

§ 105. Sufficiency of pleas, answers and notices.

¶ 400. The statute of limitations is not available under the general issue.—Board Sup'rs of Chippewa County v. Bennett, 185 Mich. 544.

¶ 401. The statute of limitations for actions for trespass on land, etc. (Comp. L. 1897, § 9729), cannot be taken advantage of under a plea of the general issue.—Bellows v. Butler, 127 Mich. 100.

¶ 402. The defense of the statute of limitations must, under Circuit Court Rule 7b, be specially pleaded.—Board Sup'rs of Chippewa County v. Bennett, 185 Mich. 544.

¶ 403. A plea of the statute of limitations, that the plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue within six years next before the filing of the plaintiff's amended declaration, is bad.—Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 Mich. 165.

¶ 404. A notice under the general issue in justice's court, apprising plaintiffs that defendant relies on the statute of limitations, is sufficient; and where he pleaded non assumpsit within six years, instead of actio non accrevit, he should have been allowed the benefit of the defense, with or without amendment.—Snyder v. Winsor, 44 Mich. 140.

¶ 405. A bill in aid of execution, setting out the dates of the judgments and levies, was filed more than one year and four months after the levies. Defendants stated in their answer that "on account of the time which is elapsed since the prosecution of the said judgments, the issuing of said execution, and levying of said real estate, the complainants are debarred and estopped from pursuing this remedy." Held, the answer was sufficient to raise the defense of the statute of limitations.—Rohrbacher v. Walsh, 170 Mich. 59.

¶ 406. Failure of defendant to plead exclusive possession in a plea of the statute of limitations, is cured where complainant in his bill distinctly avers exclusion for the whole time from the premises.—Butcher v. Butcher, 137 Mich. 390.

¶ 407. An answer in a bill to quiet title, setting up facts sustaining the defendant's claim of possession under How. § 8698, subd. 1, barring a right of entry after five years as against one occuying under a deed of a ministerial officer of a court of competent jurisdiction within this state, entitled such defendant to the benefit of the act without pleading it.—Potter v. Martin, 122 Mich. 542.

§ 106. Urging bar of claim pleaded as set-off.

¶ 408. The rule, that if relied upon, the statute of limitations must be pleaded, does not prevent a plaintiff without pleading it from having advantage of the statute against a demand sought to be set off by the defendant, of which notice was given at the time of filing of his plea, and which was barred by the statute.—Kincade v. Peck, 193 Mich. 207.

§ 107. Pleading fraud or concealment to avoid bar.

Anticipating defense of limitations by averments in bill, see Equity § 89.
General rules for pleading fraud, see Fraud, III.

¶ 409. To avoid the statute of limitations on the ground of a fraud of the defendants in concealing the cause of action, the pleading should set out the particular acts of fraud or concealment and the time when discovered.—Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 190, 16 L. ed. 484.

¶ 410. A bill by the descendants of brothers and sisters of two brothers, who had occupied land which their father had formerly occupied under a concession from the French government, against descendants of the two brothers and purchasers from them under a patent from the United States procured by one of the brothers occupying the land, claiming a tenancy in common, and averring that plaintiff, until the last few years had believed that the two brothers and their legal representatives were acting in good faith but that some fifty years after exclusive possession was taken they had discovered by information, after inquiry, that the brothers and their legal representatives intended to cheat and defraud them and those under whom they claimed of their just rights in the premises, was too general and indefinite in its allegations of fraud and concealment to avoid the operation of the statutes of limitation, act of May 15, 1820, limiting the right of action to 20 years after the same has accrued, and act of November 15, 1829, limiting the right of entry to 10 years, if the cause of action has then accrued.—Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 190, 16 L. Ed. 484.

§ 108. Issues and variances.

Insufficiency of general issue to present bar, see ante § 105.
Issues made and admissions involved by plea of limitations, see also Pleading, IX.

¶ 411. The issue of limitations is not presented if the period was not complete when the suit was begun.—Parkinson v. Woulds, 125 Mich. 325.

¶ 413. Where an entry on land under color of a tax deed was followed by possession for ten years, the period prescribed by § 9714, Comp. L. 1897, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 14119, as sufficient to ripen into title, possession for fifteen years, the time limited by the general statute of limitations for actions to recover land, may be shown, and the question whether title has been acquired under either statute be left to the jury.—Merritt v. Westerman, 180 Mich. 449.

§ 109. Presumptions and burden of proving bar or avoidance.

To prove account to be open and running or stated, see ante §§ 51, 52.

As to time of bar of lost instrument, see also post ¶ 440.

Presumption as to time of making demand to mature right of action, see also ante ¶ 182.

General law of presumptions and burden of proof, see Evidence, II.

Presumption as to possession accompanying title to land, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 12314.

¶ 414. Under a plea of the statute of limitations plaintiff has the burden of showing that suit was commenced within the statutory period.—Ayres v. Hubbard, 71 Mich. 594.

¶ 415. Prima facie outlawry of a note does not prevent its introduction in evidence under a declaration on the common counts with copy served.—Michael v. Tuttle, 37 Mich. 502.

¶ 416. The fact that a claim is apparently outlawed does not necessarily exclude evidence thereon; the question whether or not it is barred is one to be dealt with when the testimony is all in.—Cotherman v. Cotherman's Estate, 58 Mich. 465.

¶ 417. Where the parties in ejectment, being cotenants, rely upon an ouster, and defendant claims title by adverse possession, plaintiff has the burden of showing that he was ousted within the period of the statute of limitations, and the defendant of showing that he had ousted the adverse claimant so long before that the period of limitation had run since.—Highstone v. Burdette, 54 Mich. 329.

¶ 418. The detention of a patient in an insane asylum after the expiration of a period of probation and her re-entry into the asylum and until her discharge was presumptively lawful so as to cast the burden of proof upon plaintiff of proving the unlawfulness of her restraint so as to cause the running of the statute of limitations from the time of the return, in an action against a sheriff and physician for false imprisonment, where the patient was originally confined in the asylum by her relatives as a private patient and with her consent and she was released upon probation by the asylum officials and was taken back to the asylum just before the expiration of the probation period by a deputy sheriff and was required by the asylum officials, who acted in good faith, to remain in the asylum until she was, at a later time, taken from the asylum by relatives against the advice of such officials.—Alexander v. Thompson, 195 Fed. 31.

¶ 419. In an action for damages for false imprisonment against a sheriff and a physician for unlawfully taking plaintiff into custody and delivering her into the custody of the officials of an insane asylum, if an imprisonment originally unlawful is shown the burden is normally upon defendants to show the running of the statute of limitations by proving the termination of the unlawful imprisonment, but it is not necessary that proof to that effect be introduced by defendants, it being sufficient if the fact is shown by plaintiff's evidence.—Alexander v. Thompson, 195 Fed. 31.

¶ 420. Where a defendant who relies on the statute of limitations had resided a part of the time in a foreign country, the burden is upon him to show that the sum of the times of his presence within the jurisdiction was sufficient to satisfy the statute.—White v. Campbell, 25 Mich. 463.

¶ 421. In assumpsit counting on a note made in another state where it was admitted that no payments had been made on it and where no proof was offered to take it out of the bar of the statute which apparently had run against it, there could be no recovery.—Howard v. Coon, 93 Mich. 442.

§ 110. ——As to tolling or extension.

As to legal inference of residence from proven residence of debtor's family, see also post ¶ 439.

Questions for jury and instructions, see post § 114.

¶ 422. The date of an unserved writ is prima facie evidence of the time of its actual issue, and defendant has the burden of proving on a plea of limitations that it was not then issued.—Howell v. Shepard, 48 Mich. 472.

¶ 423. Where one who has been under guardianship as a minor brings ejectment to test the validity of a sale made by his guardian, he has the burden of proving the continuance of his infancy to a date not more than five years before he began suit.—Stewart v. Ashley, 34 Mich. 188.

¶ 424. A bailor seeking to recover property retained by a bailee for many years after the expiration of the term of bailment, has the burden of proving a continuance of the bailment in order to prevent the running of the statute of limitations.—In re Parsell's Estate, 184 Mich. 522.

¶ 425. The burden of showing that the nonresident of the defendant in a bill avoided the running of the statute of limitations otherwise apparent on the face of the bill is upon the complainant.—Belden v. Blackman, 124 Mich. 667.

§ 111. Evidence as to bar or matters avoiding or suspending it.

Evidence and indicia of open account, or of statement of account, see ante §§ 51, 52.
Burden of proof and presumptions, see ante § 109.
As to new promise or part payment, see post § 112.
Admission of bailee that he is such as evidence against adverse claim, see ante ¶ 296.
Necessity of writing to prove new promise, see ante § 81.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
Declarations admissible as showing nature of delay, whether indulgence or extension, see also Evidence ¶ 1867.
Testimony excluded as being equally within knowledge of deceased predecessor of party, see Witnesses, IV.
Evidence as to foreign domicile or residence, see Domicile § 7.

¶ 426. A plaintiff in a personal injury suit was permitted to meet the defense of the statute of limitations by showing that, before the time fixed by statute for the bar, the defendant by its course of conduct in promising to give him full pay as long as he was disabled and in actually making payments from time to time and then after the statute had run, declining to make further payments, had led him to believe that a suit to enforce his rights would be unnecessary, and had thereby lulled him into a feeling of security.—Renackowsky v. Board of Water Com'rs of Detroit, 122 Mich. 613.

¶ 427. Evidence in trover for a trespass on lands and the cutting of logs that defendant settled with a third person for a similar trespass on adjacent lands at the same time and by the same employee, which time was not beyond the period of limitations, is admissible to show that plaintiff's claim is not barred.—Ayres v. Hubbard, 71 Mich. 594.

¶ 428. A claim was made against an estate for a balance due on an open account, but an amendment to the demand claimed a balance struck on an adjustment of mutual accounts by the decedent's oral admission of a specific balance. But the jury found the open account barred by limitations and against the claim that it had passed into an account stated within the period. Held, that it was not saved from the bar.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353.

¶ 429. In an appeal in the circuit court on a claim on a promissory note, unenforceable under the statute of limitations unless certain payments were made, evidence that payments were made upon a note held by the claimant with no evidence that he held any other note and testimony that he did not, is sufficient to support a verdict for the claimant.—Ocobock v. Myers' Estate, 127 Mich. 181.

¶ 430. Undisputed evidence held to show that the defendant guardian did not fraudulently conceal the cause of action growing out of his final settlement so as to prevent the running of the statute of limitations, the ward having waited over 20 years before suing.—Ferguson v. Frink, 134 Mich. 375.

§ 112. ——As to new promise or part payment.

Payment as an issue and proof of payment as a fact, see Payment, V.

¶ 431. A promise to pay the balance of a barred debt cannot be implied as an inference of law from the mere fact of part payment; that fact is merely evidence of such a promise, and the inference that such a promise was made or intended must be found as a fact on the trial.—Parsons v. Clark, 59 Mich. 414.

¶ 432. The indorsement of a partial payment upon a promissory note, written by the party to be charged thereby, is competent evidence of such payment to take the case out of the statute.—Chandler v. Lawrence, 3 Mich. 261.

¶ 433. Although the statute requires a new promise to be in writing, the fact of payment may be proved by the admission of defendant or by other competent parol evidence.—Chandler v. Lawrence, 3 Mich. 261.

¶ 434. Testimony of an oral admission of a payment of interest on a note was competent to take the case out of the statute of limitations.—Fowles v. Joslyn, 135 Mich. 333.

¶ 435. In a suit upon an open account, against which the statute of limitations had run unless a payment had been made as testified by plaintiff, a letter written by defendant to plaintiff about two years after the time the payment is claimed to have been made, asking for a statement of defendant's account, and stating that plaintiff knew that defendant had paid some on it, is admissible as bearing upon the question of such payment.—Floersheim v. Vosburgh, 99 Mich. 11.

¶ 436. A note purporting on its face to be eight years overdue had upon it two indorsements, dated within six years of the time of bringing suit upon it. The only proof offered by the plaintiff in the case was that no other payments than those indorsed had been made. Held, that this did not prove or tend to prove the indorsed payments.—Snyder v. Winsor, 44 Mich. 140.

¶ 437. A payment on a mortgage debt subsequent to 1881 is not shown by evidence in depositions of the mortgagee and his wife that in letters the mortgagor often acknowledged the debt and that "about 14 years before the deposition" (which would make it about 1889) but at a time not stated a payment of $100 by draft was made, as against positive proof of a payment of that sum by draft in 1881 and letters subsequent thereto by deponent upbraiding the mortgagor for not having paid "anything" for 12 or 13 years, one such letter being dated in 1892, and in view of the nonproduction of the acknowleding letters and a claim that they were destroyed.—Carr v. Carr, 138 Mich. 396.

¶ 438. In an action on a promissory note claimed to be barred by the statute of limitations, proof of the existence of the note and an indorsement of part payment thereon in the handwriting of the maker is sufficient to establish a prima facie case of partial payment so as to prevent the operation of the statute of limitations.—Stretch v. Stretch, 191 Mich. 416.

§ 113. Questions of law and fact and instructions.

As to new promises and part payments, see post § 114.

Direction of verdict on opening statement showing complete bar, see Directing Verdict ¶ 98.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 439. Where the statute of limitations is pleaded to an action of debt on a judgment, it cannot be held that the residence of defendant's family can, by itself, as matter of law, determine the place of his own residence.—Conrad v. Nall, 24 Mich. 275.

¶ 440. Where both the mortgage and the records have been destroyed it cannot be said in the absence of any proofs as to when the mortgage matured, that the statute of limitations has run against it on a bill to foreclose.—McCrath v. Myers, 126 Mich. 204.

¶ 441. The question whether the statute of limitations had run against the right of action on a note, is properly left to the jury where it depends upon what time the summons was delivered to the sheriff for service, upon which question the testimony is conflicting.—Newman v. Meddaugh, 131 Mich. 595.

¶ 442. It is a question of fact for the jury as to whether an actor who travels from place to place during the theatrical season and who contracted a debt while residing in another state acquired and had a home within the state which was so notorious as to be discoverable by a creditor residing within the state for a period sufficient to bar recovery where the evidence is conflicting.—Sproat v. Hall, 189 Mich. 28.

¶ 443. In an action by a wife involving a claim against her husband's estate for money furnished him, it is error to direct a verdict in favor of the estate on the ground that the statute of limitations had run against the claim, though the money was advanced to him 8 or 9 years before his death where at the time the money was advanced, he was poor and had nothing with which to repay but both expected that he would repay it at some future time, and he recognized the obligation for two years, and also two weeks before his death, since in such case it is not a fair inference that the money was to be repaid at once.—Wilcox v. Wilcox, 139 Mich. 365.

¶ 444. In an action for services performed and moneys expended for an incompetent, the item for services in handling the defendant's property need not be considered by itself but where the defendant guardian has examined the plaintiff's account and promised settlement it may be included in the general balance although the amount of compensation has never been agreed upon and no book entry made of it; and the question of whether it was mutual and whether the statute of limitations has run is for the jury.—Stoner v. Riggs, 128 Mich. 129.

¶ 445. In an action on a promissory note, evidence held to show that the defendant's counterclaim was barred by the statute of limitations, and that the court should so have instructed the jury.—Kincade v. Peck, 193 Mich. 207.

¶ 446. The question of whether an account sued upon was an open, mutual account current under the statute may be said to have been fairly submitted to the jury, if the trial court in submitting it drew the jury's attention to the tests under the statutory requirements.—Lester v. Thompson, 91 Mich. 245.

¶ 447. It was proper to refuse to charge that an item for royalties on a patent prior to a certain date beyond six years were barred, where there was evidence from which the jury might have found that the item was part of a running account.—Brazel v. Thompson Smith's Sons, 141 Mich. 628.

§ 114. ——As to new promise or part payment.

Burden of proof, presumptions, and evidence as to tolling or extension, see ante §§ 110, 112.

¶ 448. Whether a payment by one of the several indorsers of a promissory note was made with the knowledge and consent of the others, so as to remove the bar of the statute of limitations as to them, when resting on disputed testimony, is a question for the jury.—Myers v. Erwin, 180 Mich. 469.

¶ 449. On issue as to a particular payment on a note relied on to take the case out of the statute of limitations, a charge permitting the jury to take into consideration numerous circumstances was deemed not to have been misleading, where the charge otherwise limited the jury's inquiry to the particular payment.—Fowles v. Joslyn, 135 Mich. 333.

¶ 450. Where the question was whether an indorsement of payment on a promissory note was authorized by the maker of the note so as to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations, an instruction that the jury should take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding the case, as well as the letters which passed between the parties relative to making indorsements of credit, was held correct.—Brockett v. Sagendorph, 116 Mich. 643.

¶ 451. On the question whether an indorsement on a note tolling limitations was authorized by the debtor, an instruction that if plaintiff notified defendant of the indorsement having been made the jury might take that fact into consideration with other circumstances in determining whether defendant authorized the indorsement was held to be warranted by the evidence and proper.—Brockett v. Sagendorph, 116 Mich. 643.

¶ 452. In an action on account alleged to have been taken out of the operation of the statute of limitations by a payment in which the defendant claims to have always denied liability, a reference in the charge to the reasons for the defendant's denial of liability is not prejudicial error.—Bay City Iron Co. v. Emery, 128 Mich. 506.

¶ 453. In an action on an account, it is not prejudicial error to instruct that unless a payment has been made within the last six years there can be no recovery where taken in connection with the circumstances of the case payment must be held to include a credit for the use of property.—Bay City Iron Co. v. Emery, 128 Mich. 506.

¶ 454. A judge's omission, while calling attention to the conflict in testimony as to a disputed payment, to state what effect the truth of either statement would have in respect to the operation of the statute of limitations, was error warranting reversal, if he had been properly requested to charge that the items of plaintiff's claim were barred, unless renewed by the payment.—Hollywood v. Reed, 55 Mich. 308.

§ 115. Findings and decision.

Necessary findings as to part payment tolling the statute, see ante ¶ 431.

Provision for judgment against part of joint defendants when bar is complete as to others, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 23; Comp. L. 1915, § 12333.

¶ 455. A finding that defendant with his family moved to Joliet, Illinois, in 1873, "and at that place resided up to the time of the commencement of this suit," is equivalent to a finding that during the intervening period he was absent from Michigan, and brings the case within the exception to the statute of limitations.—McKenzie v. Boylan, 40 Mich. 329.

LIS PENDENS.

TREATS of the effect of pending suits on transfers of property affected by such suits and of statutory and common law notices to charge transferors.

Lien of attachment by levy, see Attachment, VIII.
Effect of creditors' bill as lis pendens, see Creditors' Suits § 31.
Bringing in parties on revival, see Abatement §§ 19, 20.

¶ 1. An action of ejectment is not notice to any one but the parties of its pendency.—Powers v. Scholtens, 79 Mich. 299.

¶ 2. The mortgagee, having proceeded to foreclose for an instalment, which foreclosure the owner of the equity of redemption then sued in equity to annul, was subject to the pending suit in equity in respect of an attempted foreclosure for the principal brought thereafter.—Louder v. Burch, 47 Mich. 109.

¶ 3. Rights in property which are acquired subsequent to the attaching of a mortgage lien are extinguished by the foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property, since there is no privity of contract between the holder of the rights subsequently acquired and the purchaser.—Detroit, T. & I. R. Co. v. Western U. Tel. Co., 200 Mich. 2.

¶ 4. A franchise to maintain and operate a street railway in a street is an interest in land, and therefore a purchaser of such interest pending litigation to declare the franchise invalid, in the absence of proof of actual notice, is not bound by a decree in favor of the complainants, where notice of the pendency of the suit was not filed for record under Comp. L. 1897, § 441, requiring the filing of such notice to any purchaser of real estate, thus practically abolishing the doctrine of lis pendens as to real estate.—Detroit Citizens' St. Ry. Co. v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 449.

§ 2. Statutory notices and filings.

Filing and record of affidavit to attach lien for contribution on bill by owner of land sold with others on execution, see Jud. Act, chap. XXIII, §§ 134, 135; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12949, 12950.

¶ 5. Lis pendens may be filed as soon as the bill is filed in the suit.—Gordon v. Tyler, 58 Mich. 629.

¶ 6. A notice of lis pendens for partition sufficiently states its object if it states that it is "for the purpose of partitioning and setting apart, either by division or by sale, and a division of the proceeds among the complainant and defendants, of the hereinafter described lands and premises according to their respective titles and interests therein; the complainant's interest being now claimed as an undivided fifth part thereof."—Alterauge v. Christiansen, 48 Mich. 60.

¶ 7. A notice of lis pendens in a foreclosure suit, referring to the mortgage by record, suffices to identify the land with the paper title thereof, even if the description [in the bill?] was incorrect, where the mistake laid in a division of a parcel by the common grantor who deeded the several parcels intending them to coincide but failed to describe them properly.—Taber v. Shattuck, 55 Mich. 370.

¶ 8. Where the notice of pendency of an attachment suit, in addition to what was required by statute, erroneously stated that the writ was returnable in November next, instead of November instant, it was held that the mistake did not vitiate the proceedings.—Drew v. Dequindre, 2 D. 93.

§ 3. Operation and effect of notice or filing.

Effect of want of notice, see also ante ¶ 4.
Items of claim protected by notice, see post § 4.
Effect of recordation under recording acts, see Notice and Record of Title, II.
Priority of lien of lis pendens, see Liens § 11.
Intervention, parties entitled, see Parties.

¶ 9. A notice lis pendens affects those only who afterwards and pending suit seek to obtain interests, as purchasers or encumbrancers, in the property it refers to; and one who has begun suit to establish an equitable lien thereon upon the basis of previous dealings with defendant does not himself become thereby a purchaser or encumbrancer within the protection of the recording laws as against any rights acquired before the notice is filed.—Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 398.

¶ 10. A lis pendens need not be filed to bind one who has actual notice. It is required, in the absence of actual notice, to charge a party with constructive notice.—Baker v. Pierson, 5 Mich. 456.

¶ 11. The chief purpose of the notice lis pendens required by statute in mechanics' lien cases is to bind subsequent interests, and such notice seems unnecessary as against the original parties to the bill.—Sheridan v. Cameron, 65 Mich. 680.

¶ 12. The purpose of a notice lis pendens (How. St., § 6619) is to prevent defendant from so alienating the property in dispute as to affect complainant's rights and to bind it wherever it may be when decree is entered.—Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 398.

¶ 13. The object of the notice lis pendens in chancery proceedings against real estate is to enable persons interested to ascertain from it the persons and property affected by the bill, together with the general nature of the matters in controversy. But they are left to examine the court record for details and particulars, and are bound by what appears in the bill and proceedings thereon.—Alterauge v. Christiansen, 48 Mich. 60.

¶ 14. Filing a notice lis pendens in a suit to correct a deed is notice to the world that defendant is liable to be divested of any title claimed by him; and any subsequent purchaser of a mortgage given by defendant takes it with constructive notice of that fact, even though he never knew of the lis pendens or though it had without his fault been lost from the files and not been entered on the file-book.—Heim v. Ellis, 49 Mich. 241.

¶ 15. The operation of a lis pendens as notice lasts, if the suit is not abandoned, until it is closed by final decree, provided it is prosecuted with reasonable diligence and in good faith; otherwise a purchaser who has no actual notice is not affected by it.—Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 398.

¶ 16. A suit is abandoned if before its completion another seeking the same relief is instituted and carried to decree in its place; and the effect of a lis pendens filed on the institution of the first suit is not transferred to the other.—Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 398.

¶ 17. A notice lis pendens is ineffective as against a mortgagee whose mortgage antedated the notice though it was not recorded until after the notice was filed.—Hammond v. Paxton, 58 Mich. 398.

¶ 18. A suit and cross-suit constitute one cause, and notice of the suit is notice of the cross-bill also. So held in the case of a lis pendens filed in an original foreclosure suit, but not in a cross-suit for foreclosure; it was constructive notice to all the defendants.—Hall Lumber Co. v. Gustin, 54 Mich. 624.

¶ 19. A lis pendens, under How. St., § 6619, is effectual from the date of filing as notice of the claims made in the bill, irrespective of whether service upon all of the defendants therein is at the time complete.—Lockwood v. Noble, 113 Mich. 418.

¶ 20. A chattel mortgage of the crops growing or to be grown on land owned in common, given by the tenant in possession subsequent to the commencement of foreclosure proceedings against the interest of his co-tenant, and after lis pendens filed, in no way affects the rights of the complainant; and the purchaser at the foreclosure sale is entitled to his undivided interest in the crops, free from the lien of the mortgage.—Moreland v. Strong, 115 Mich. 211.

¶ 21. A bill was filed to foreclose two mortgages, one given to secure all obligations which the mortgagee might become liable for as indorser within a stipulated time, at the mortgagor's request, and the other, all indorsements theretofore or subsequently made for his benefit. The mortgagee paid certain notes under the erroneous supposition that they were covered by the mortgages, and, in his bill, claimed the amounts so paid as due thereon, but did not set forth in support of such claim an agreement of the parties, made after a settlement between them, which provided that said claims should be treated as a part of the mortgage debt, but which omission was supplied by amending the bill on the hearing to cover the proofs made in that regard. Held, that the lis pendens filed with the original bill was sufficient notice to a subsequent encumbrancer, who became such without actual notice of said agreement, of complainant's rights thereunder.—Burt v. Gamble, 98 Mich. 402.

¶ 22. Where, pending a suit for partnership accounting brought by one member of a firm formed to deal in lands against the other member, defendant sells to a third person certain lands which the bill alleged were held by defendant for the firm's benefit, such third person cannot maintain a bill against the two partners to discharge as a cloud upon his title the lis pendens filed in the suit for an accounting and covering the lands bought by him.—Hesselbacher v. Sprague, 104 Mich. 197.

¶ 23. Defendant contracted to sell, and give clear title to plaintiff, premises which were incumbered by a mortgage when defendant bought them. A previous owner of the mortgage brought a bill to cancel the transfers of the mortgage, and to have a lien on the premises declared in her favor. Held, a notice of lis pendens filed in this suit was constructive notice to defendant of the suit.—Cossett v. O'Riley, 160 Mich. 101.

§ 4. Extent and items of claim.

¶ 24. A lis pendens notice duly filed is notice of the right to costs as an incident of the judgment which may be recovered in a chancery suit, e. g., a partition suit. Barbour v. Patterson, 145 Mich. 459.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS AND ASSESSMENTS.

TREATS of public improvements, chiefly such as street work, sewers and gutters, sidewalks, and pavements, and of the modes and proceedings by which the improvement is authorized and the cost ascertained and assessed against the properties locally benefited. The general law of Municipal Corporations and of Highways is treated in topics bearing those names respectively. Condemnation proceedings incident to the making of improvements or the opening of streets are treated in Eminent Domain and in Highways, II. The general law of taxation and of tax collection and sales for taxes is treated in Taxes.

§ 2. Power to grade, pave and improve streets.

Power and right of property owners to propose or oppose improvement, see post ¶¶ 21, 22.

Power of municipal council to delegate to committee power to grade street, see Municipal Corporations, VIII.

Power to establish and change grades, see Highways § 118.

Paving in fourth class cities, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 3094-3096.

Provisions for improvement of rural highways by local assessment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4671 et seq.

¶ 1. The authority to pave streets in a city is a continuing power, and does not cease on being once exercised.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 2. The city of Detroit has authority to repave streets at the expense of adjacent property, when there is a necessity for repaving, and the method of procedure is the same as in other paving.—Wilkins v. City of Detroit, 46 Mich. 120.

¶ 3. The common council of a city may pave those portions of a street used as sidewalks and thus indirectly abolish the sidewalks. There is no rule of law requiring a portion of a street to be set apart for foot-passengers.—Brevoort v. City of Detroit, 24 Mich. 322.

§ 3. Power to lay or repair sidewalks.

Power to require property owner to lay or repair sidewalk, see post ¶ 14.

Duty of city or abutter to construct sidewalks, see also Highways § 107.

Provisions for construction of sidewalks along rural highways, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4571 et seq.

¶ 4. The provision for "repairing" sidewalks at the expense of the city in section 193 of the charter of the city of Detroit, was not intended to include an entire reconstruction when necessary, but relates to those ordinary repairs, which, without changing the character of the walk or amounting to substitution of one for another, are needed to keep the existing walk in a serviceable and safe condition.—Walker v. City of Detroit, 143 Mich. 427.

§ 4. Power to lay or enlarge sewers.

Power of highway commissioners to lay sewer in unincorporated village, see Townships.

¶ 5. The city of Grand Rapids has the power to construct a storm sewer in connection with the construction of a street where the sewer is constructed for surface water only and is necessary for the preservation of the street.—Gates v. City of Grand Rapids, 134 Mich. 96.

¶ 6. The fact that a sewer has been constructed for some distance in a city street does not prevent its extension and enlargement as the necessities of property farther out on the street require, or as the public health may demand.—Kuick v. City of Grand Rapids, 200 Mich. 582.

§ 5. Power and duty of municipal council and other officers or boards.

Power to determine materials, see post § 6.
General powers of municipal officers, see Municipal Corporations, XV; Officers.
Administrative and ministerial functions of municipal corporations in general, see Municipal Corporations, VIII.
Powers and functions of municipal corporations in general, see Municipal Corporations, III.
Authority of officers to make contracts for improvements binding on city, see Municipal Corporations § 186.

¶ 7. A city council has power to suspend or defer, and afterwards to resume, an improvement which it has declared to be a public necessity, and for which bids have been received; and the exercise of such power is entirely within its discretion, without reference to the reason for postponement.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

¶ 8. Under the charter of the city of Grand Rapids while the common council should avail itself of whatever knowledge or information the board of public works possesses in determining the general character of a public work, the authority for the expenditures necessary to its construction must originate with the common council, and includes the right to determine the question of cost, dimensions, and general character.—The Common Council of Grand Rapids v. Board of Public Works of Grand Rapids, 87 Mich. 113.

¶ 9. The provision of the charter of Detroit (compiler's section 314) that all sewers, water pipes, gas pipes, and all connections be made and completed at least one year before a street be paved, is, so far as it relates to water pipes and gas pipes, and their connections, inconsistent with the proper exercise of the general powers respecting street improvements conferred upon the common council, and is void; the matter of laying water pipes being entirely in the hands of the water board, and the laying of gas pipes being solely under the control of private corporations.—Goodwillie v. City of Detroit, 103 Mich. 283; Moore v. City of Detroit, 103 Mich. 292.

§ 6. ——Power to determine materials.

¶ 10. The board of public works of Grand Rapids under Laws 1873, Act No. 321, § 8, authorizing it to determine the kind or quantity of materials to be used in constructing any public work declared by the common council to be a necessary improvement, cannot adopt a different kind of material from that described in the resolution declaring the necessity.—Common Council of Grand Rapids v. Board of Public Works of Grand Rapids, 99 Mich. 392.

¶ 11. The authority given to the board of public works of the city of Grand Rapids by the charter to determine as to the particular kind and quality of materials to be used in the construction of any public work the construction of which the common council has declared to be a necessary improvement, has reference to the details and not to the general character of the work.—Common Council of Grand Rapids v. Board of Public Works of Grand Rapids, 87 Mich. 113.

¶ 12. A bill to set aside a sidewalk assessment was dismissed, where after complainants had been notified to build a sidewalk pursuant to certain specifications and had begun work on a tar walk, they were ordered to desist by the city attorney and subsequently continued the work with the alleged consent of the city engineer and an alderman, and where before the completion of the work an ordinance was passed extending the stone walk district to include complainant's property, and a resolution was also passed requiring complainants to build a stone walk, and where upon a notice of the passing of such resolution having been served upon complainants they stopped work, and, upon their refusal to build the stone walk, the city built it.—Scribner v. City of Grand Rapids, 119 Mich. 188.

§ 7. Power to require property owner to make improvement.

Permission to abutter to improve street, see post § 8.
Rebates for walks or other improvements privately made, see post § 13.
Procedure necessary for imposing liability on abutting owner to make improvement, see post § 31.
Duty of city or abutter to construct sidewalks, see also Highways § 107.
Power of municipal corporations in general, see Municipal Corporations, III.

¶ 13. A municipal ordinance is void for unreasonableness which requires a lot owner to build a sidewalk within five days after notice or be required to pay for its construction by the city.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 129 Mich. 541.

¶ 14. The Detroit board of public works has no authority, except upon resolution of the common council, to notify a lot-owner to construct or repair a sidewalk.—Lynch v. Hubbard, 101 Mich. 43.

¶ 15. A notice to a property owner to repair a sidewalk, served upon him by an inspector of the board of public works, who serves such notice without referring the matter to the board, and stamps on the notice the signature of the president of the board, is not a sufficient compliance with the Revised Ordinances of 1895, c. 56, § 13, of the City of Detroit, since under said ordinances the board itself is required to exercise its judgment in ordering said repairs.—Brady v. City of Detroit, 166 Mich. 252.

¶ 16. A city whose charter conferred upon the common council the control of its streets, had power to include a locality in a stone-walk district, and to compel an owner who had commenced to build a tar sidewalk, to change the material to stone.—In re O'Brien, 119 Mich. 540.

¶ 17. Section 57 of chap. 7 of the Charter of the City of Detroit, as amended (Local Acts 1901, No. 472), being section 198 of the Charter Comp. 1904, empowering the common council to require the owners or occupants of any land in the city to build when necessary, all sidewalks in the city in front of the property of such owner, is broad enough to include reconstruction when necessary.—Walker v. City of Detroit, 143 Mich. 427.

§ 8. ——Permission to abutter to improve street.

Rebates for walks or other improvements privately made, see post § 13.

¶ 18. The Detroit common council was not required by the act of April 13, 1841, to permit persons to pave the street in front of the lots owned or occupied by them, but was merely authorized so to do when it should deem it for the interest of the city. And the city ordinances contemplated the paving by lot owners or occupants only in case of special permission to do so from the council.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

§ 9. Combining dissimilar improvements in one proceeding.

Illegal or defective proceedings, see post VII.
Multiplicity of proceedings under one resolution, see post § 22.

¶ 19. Under the charter and local laws defining the powers of the Board of Public Works of the City of Grand Rapids and mentioning separately the making of "streets" and the construction of "sewers," the city cannot construct a sewer under a resolution providing for the grading and graveling of a street.—Peck v. City of Grand Rapids, 125 Mich. 416.

¶ 20. A city council having adopted a resolution for the grading and graveling of a street with curbing, bridges, culverts, catch-basins, approaches, and cesspools, could thereafter on reconsideration and as a substitute adopt a resolution adding to the foregoing storm water sewers, though it is contended and shown by evidence that no such improvement was necessary on account of the sandiness of the soil; since the court must assume that it was done as a legislative action of the city council regardless whether done on the recommendation of the city engineer or not.—Parsons v. City of Grand Rapids, 141 Mich. 467.

§ 10. Power and right of property owners to propose or oppose improvement.

¶ 21. Sections 3180, 3181, 3194, 3195 and 3196, Comp. Laws 1897, give to city common councils the power to initiate street improvements, to lay out assessment districts, and to determine what part of the cost shall be paid out of the general funds. They also provide for a system of giving notices to property owners, and the filing of plans and specifications of proposed improvements. Amendatory Act No. 136, Pub. Acts 1899, provided that when a majority of property owners subject to special assessment should petition for an improvement, the council should grant it. Held, this amendment did not give the owners the right to control a proposed paving improvement so as to dictate the kind of materials to be used.—Irish v. Common Council of City of Mt. Clemens, 156 Mich. 588.

¶ 22. Whether permission from the common council to lot owners on one side of an alley to grade the alley at their own expense and under their own management would give such owners the right to do anything in the way of grading except with the assent of the respective owners to be affected by the work, quære. Simple consent by a lot owner to the grading of the alley without charge to him by owners opposite, without proof of usage or custom to control or explain the meaning of this license, and in the absence of any evidence that, on being called upon, he had refused to allow or assign to the contractor employed by such lot owners any convenient place to deposit the gravel, would not authorize the contractor to carry it off beyond the alley, leaving the alley itself ungraded.—Cuming v. Prang, 24 Mich. 514.

II. LIABILITY FOR COSTS, AND FUNDS, APPROPRIATIONS AND PROVISIONS TO MEET SAME.

§ 11. Liability for expense and cost in general.

Apportioning cost between local assessment and general fund, see post § 12.
Rebates for walks or other improvements privately made, see post § 13.
Funds, appropriations and provisions for cost, see post § 14.
Repaving or replacement funds, see post § 15.
Persons, property and districts assessable, see post VI, B.
Amount to be assessed and items to be included, see post VI, C.

Valuing and apportioning assessments, see post VI, D.
Levying and making assessments, see post VI.
Illegal or excessive assessments and relief from same, see post VII.

¶ 23. Plaintiff contracted to construct a sidewalk and crossings for a village. The village gave defendant, an owner of real estate abutting on these walks, no notice that it sought to charge him or his real estate with the cost of their construction, and no proceedings were taken by the village authorities to assess the same. Defendant had no understanding with plaintiff to build the sidewalks for him, but knew they were in the process of construction. The village was incorporated under the general law for the incorporation of villages, which gave the village power to construct sidewalks and required the lots benefited to bear the expense or to require the owners to build and pay for them. Held, plaintiff could not recover of defendant for material, work and labor for the construction of the sidewalk in front of defendant's lots on the theory of an implied contract.—Labadie v. Perry, 170 Mich. 344.

¶ 24. A resolution for the opening of a street can properly require an apportionment of the damages among the premises benefited only in those cases in which such apportionment can be made under the charter, and not where the charter expressly provides that the damages shall be payable out of the city treasury, and the means therefor raised with the general city taxes.—Campau v. City of Detroit, 14 Mich. 276.

¶ 24a. Improvements in the city of Lansing, for which special assessments are authorized, are not chargeable on the city as ordinary corporate debts, and there is no liability to pay for them except through assessments made for that specific purpose.—Second Nat. Bank v. City of Lansing, 25 Mich. 207.

§ 12. Apportioning cost between local assessment and general fund.

See also post ¶ 307.

¶ 25. While it is true that a street to which every one has access, and which every person is as free to use as the abutting land-owners, must be maintained at public, and not a private, expense, except only to the extent that its improvement plainly and palpably benefits the property assessed in excess of the general benefit that all property derives from the improvement, the determination of the question of the benefit to be derived is vested in the municipal authorities, which determination is final in the absence of fraud.—Shimmons v. City of Saginaw, 104 Mich. 511.

¶ 26. It cannot be said that a special assessment for the construction of a sewer is fraudulent because the sewer as laid was for the benefit of the health of the city at large and to avoid polluting the waters of Flint River. It does not follow because of the necessity of carrying the sewer to a point where turning it into the river the public health would be as little harmed as possible that the sewer was built for the public health and should therefore become a general public charge.—W. F. Stewart Co. v. City of Flint, 147 Mich. 697.

¶ 27. As the legislature cannot fix an arbitrary percentage of the cost of a public improvement to be imposed upon a local assessment district without regard to the benefits received, Local Acts of 1895, No. 467, requiring at least half of the amount awarded as compensation to be assessed upon the district fixed by the common council, is unconstitutional.—City of Detroit v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 112 Mich. 588.

¶ 28. The legislature has no power to fix an arbitrary percentage of the cost of a public improvement to be imposed upon a local assessment district, regardless of the benefits received. Local Acts of 1895, No. 467, authorizing the City of Detroit to take private property for public use, and requiring at least one-half of the amount awarded as compensation to be assessed upon the district fixed by the common council, is therefore unconstitutional.—City of Detroit v. Judge of Recorder's Court, 112 Mich. 588.

§ 13. Rebates for walks or other improvements privately made.

Power to require property owner to make improvement, see ante § 7.

¶ 29. Where a city ordinance provides that if property owners build sidewalks according to a certain prescribed standard the city will reimburse the owners for a part of the cost, if for several years the city has permitted the owners to assign their claims for rebates to sidewalk contractors and has paid them, a sidewalk contractor may as assignee sue the city for a rebate assigned to him by a property owner.—Rice v. City of Pontiac, 173 Mich. 41.

¶ 30. Where a city ordinance requires that sidewalk contractors shall file a bond guarantying the work, a contractor who built a walk for a property owner under an ordinance entitling the owner to be reimbursed by the city for a part of the cost, and who filed a bond that was not officially accepted, may recover from the city on an assignment of the owner's claim if the jury believe that a commissioner of public streets informed him that his bond was all right and that he built the walk in question with the knowledge and consent of the commissioner.—Rice v. City of Pontiac, 173 Mich. 41.

¶ 31. Where a city ordinance provides that if property owners build sidewalks according to a certain prescribed standard the city will reimburse them for a part of the cost, a sidewalk contractor suing the city as assignee of the owner's claim has the burden of proving that the quality of the work and material in constructing the walk conformed to the ordinance.—Rice v. City of Pontiac, 173 Mich. 41.

¶ 32. Where a city ordinance provides that if property owners build sidewalks according to a certain prescribed standard the city will reimburse them for a part of the cost, on a sidewalk contractor's suit against the city as assignee of the owner's claim, if the testimony is conflicting as to the quality of the work and material, the plaintiff may recover if the jury believe there has been a substantial compliance with the provisions of the ordinance.—Rice v. City of Pontiac, 173 Mich. 41.

Municipal debt making limits applicable to debts for local improvements, see also Municipal Corporations § 122.

¶ 33. The action of a city council in incurring expenditures for an improvement without providing funds for such improvements and to meet the obligations of the contracts, as required by the city charter, is invalid.—Bay City Traction & Electric Co. v. City of Bay City, 155 Mich. 393.

¶ 34. Charter of Grand Rapids tit. 10, § 3 (Local Acts 1877, No. 282), which provides that whenever there shall be found in the city treasury any sum of money not otherwise appropriated, or whenever any city fund shall contain a balance after all legal demands against it shall have been satisfied, the same shall be transferred by the city treasurer to the general fund under the direction of the common council, is not applicable to special improvement funds.—Thayer v. City of Grand Rapids, 82 Mich. 298.

¶ 35. A loan by the common council for a special improvement in anticipation of a special assessment, but not to exceed the amount of such assessment, is authorized by Comp. L. 1897, § 2872, and hence such loan is valid though the assessment was irregular because levied wholly against the property in excess of the per cent permitted by statute and a new assessment was required.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 132 Mich. 152.

¶ 36. Where the proportion of the cost of the construction of a sewer to be paid by a city, as determined by the council, exceeded by $180 the sum appropriated in the annual appropriation bill for that purpose, which excess was appropriated from the general sewer fund, land-owners who seek to enjoin the collection of special assessments upon their property for the construction of such sewer connot complain because of non-submission of the question of the appropriation of the $180 to the electors, as required by the charter, they not being injured thereby.—Townsend v. City of Manistee, 88 Mich. 408.

¶ 37. As taxes which the Laws 1869, Act No. 477 permits to be assessed against vacant lots in front of which water pipes are laid are not devoted to any specific purpose, they must go into the general fund; and as the statute does not apply them to expenses or constructions on the street or in any district within which they are raised, nor proportion them to the cost of the improvement, they cannot be classed as local assessments.—Jones v. Detroit Water Com'rs, 34 Mich. 273.

¶ 38. Plaintiff's proportion of deficiency in fund of one public improvement cannot be set off in his suit for share of surplus above expenses of another improvement.—Thayer v. City of Grand Rapids, 82 Mich. 298.

§ 15. Repaving or replacement funds.

Levying and making assessments for replacement or reconstruction work, see post § 45.

¶ 39. An improvement of a city street 200 feet wide, of which 40 feet in width in the center was originally paved, consisting of a driveway of asphalt 25 feet wide on each side of a strip 100 feet wide left in the middle of the street for park purposes, constitutes a repavement, where there is nothing to show that the original pavement was inadequate, within a provision in the charter requiring the cost of all "repaving" to be paid out of the repaving fund, instead of by the abutting lot owners.—Dickinson v. City of Detroit, 111 Mich. 480.

III. PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS FOR IMPROVEMENT.

§ 16. Petition for improvement.

Sufficiency of petition, see also post ¶ 95.
Effect of petitioning for improvement on right to object or question assessment, see post § 112.
Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack, see post § 32.
Levying and making assessments, see post VI.
Proposals, contracts and bonds, see post IV.
Preliminary procedure for improvement by abutting owners, see post § 31.
Effect of petitioning for improvement on right to recover excessive or illegal assessment involuntarily paid, see post ¶ 443.
Estoppel to claim damages by joining in petition for improvement, see post § 42, ¶¶ 123, 124.
Petition and proceedings for construction and repair of highways, see also Highways § 112.
Application and proceedings thereon to lay out and establish drains, see Drains, II, A.

¶ 40. Under a statute providing that street improvements may be made by the town board "upon petition of a majority of the resident property holders upon such highway or street," names upon a petition which was laid on the table and never used cannot be counted towards the majority requisite to authorize the ordering of the improvement upon a second petition.—Aplin, Auditor-General v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128.

¶ 41. To determine the frontage of the real estate abutting a pavement under a petition for paving a street, it is necessary to measure the pavement and then deduct the width of the intersecting streets and alleys from the length thereof.—Brady v. City of Detroit, 166 Mich. 252.

§ 17. ——Persons entitled or qualified to petition.

Persons entitled to require reassessment, see post § 92.
Persons entitled to object or question improvement, see post § 110.
Sufficiency of signature of one spouse on petition for local improvement where property held by the entireties, see Husband and Wife ¶ 69.

¶ 42. The fact that jurors in condemnation proceedings must be males as well as freeholders does not support the conclusion that a female freeholder may not exercise the rights of a property owner, and join with other property owners in procuring public improvements.—Patterson v. Mead, 148 Mich. 659.

¶ 42a. Church societies owning lands fronting upon a street must, it seems, be regarded as "resident property holders," the signatures of a majority of whom are required upon a petition for the improvement of such street.—Aplin, Auditor-General v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128.

§ 18. Preliminary inquest of necessity and benefits.

Relation of benefits to assessments, see post § 68.
[Note. In so far as the preliminary proceedings are condemnatory in their nature and object they have been treated ante in Eminent Domain and Highways, II, B, 5 respectively. For cases on "necessity of taking," see those topics.]
Condemnation and compensation incident to establishment of drains, see Drains §§ 27 et seq., 55, 56.

Public uses and necessities for purposes of condemnation, see Eminent Domain, II.
Condemnation proceedings in general, see Eminent Domain, V.
Necessity and measure of compensation for appropriated property, see Eminent Domain, IV.

¶ 43. The owner of property taken for a public improvement is entitled to full compensation, and when the damages are to be charged on property according to its benefits, no property can lawfully be charged with more than its benefits, and if the aggregate benefits do not equal the cost, that disproves the necessity of taking it and ends the inquiry.—Paul v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 108.

¶ 44. Act 124 of 1883, regulating assessments of local benefits, as amended by act 48 of 1887 (How. St. §§ 3064a-3064y) requires the jury to consider how much benefit the public generally will receive from the proposed improvement, and makes it unnecessary for the jury to consider the local benefits.—City of Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454.

¶ 45. It would seem that in street opening proceedings, the question of the necessity of the improvement and the valuation of the property may be determined by different juries.—Boussneur v. City of Detroit, 153 Mich. 585.

¶ 46. Laws 1883, Act No. 124, for taking land for streets (How. St., pp. 1295-1300), is not clearly open to the objection that it does not require the necessity of the improvement to be determined by a jury. And if the provisions for special taxation districts are invalid, they do not invalidate the entire act, since a general tax is also contemplated.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

§ 19. Preliminary resolution or declaration of necessity.

Sufficiency of resolution, see post § 20.
Successive resolutions on one improvement, see post § 21.
Unity or multiplicity of proceedings under one resolution, see post § 22.
Resolution to determine manner of meeting costs, see post § 23.

Relief against invalid resolutions of municipal corporations, see Municipal Corporations, VII.

¶ 47. The resolution of a council as to the necessity for an improvement is jurisdictional.—German Luth. Church Soc. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 179 Mich. 35.

¶ 48. A preliminary resolution declaring that a public improvement is deemed a necessity is jurisdictional only if required by statute or municipal charter, when a failure to comply with such requirement will vitiate all subsequent proceedings.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 681.

¶ 49. Where a city charter provides that when the council shall decide an improvement to be necessary they shall so declare by resolution, such declaration of the necessity is a distinct preliminary act, indispensable to give jurisdiction of future proceedings.—Hoyt v. City of East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39.

¶ 50. The charter of the city of Saginaw, title 6, § 1 which makes the declaration by the common council of the necessity of public improvements, the cost, or any portion of the cost of which is to be assessed upon the locality of the improvement, essential as preliminary to the making of the same, does not contemplate that, before a tax shall be levied or bonds issued to provide the fund out of which the proportion of the cost to be borne by the city is to be paid, such necessity shall be first declared.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 51. Under Port Huron Charter, ch. 7, § 15 (Loc. Acts 1895, No. 381), which provides that no resolution imposing taxes, or incurring any indebtedness in excess of $50, and no ordinance, shall be passed at the same meeting as introduced, if objection is made thereto, "and no ordinance shall be passed except by a two-thirds vote of the aldermen elect," a resolution or proceeding imposing a special assessment does not require a two-thirds vote, such provision applying to the passage of ordinances alone.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 52. Under Act 268, P. A. 1909, amendatory of the Grade Separation Law (secs. 4229 to 4261, C. L. 1897), postponing the institution of judicial proceedings for the determination of the public necessity for making an improvement and the assessment of damages therefor until after the completion of the work, and providing that the petition, as the commencement of judicial proceedings, might be filed within one year after the completion of the work of separating the grades, the provision providing that a resolution of necessity must be passed and attached to the agreement and filed with the city attorney, as a condition precedent, is construed to conform to the amendment, and the resolution need not be passed until after the work is completed, but in time to be filed with the city attorney previously to the institution of the judicial proceedings.—Mead v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 174 Mich. 521.

¶ 53. Where a city council after ordering a public improvement adopted a resolution deferring the letting of the contract, and where the bids which had been advertised for were returned unopened, the council could afterwards, without another declaration of public necessity, let a contract for making such improvement.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

§ 20. ——Sufficiency of resolution.

Relief against invalid municipal resolutions, see Municipal Corporations, VII.

¶ 54. The declaration of the necessity of a public improvement does not necessarily involve an enumeration of details, but, although general in character, covers the doing of whatever is deemed or found to be necessary in the course of an improvement of the character designated.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

¶ 55. A resolution declaring that a public improvement is "deemed advisable" is sufficient where neither statute nor municipal charter requires it to be declared a "public necessity."—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 681.

¶ 56. The determination by the common council of Detroit to pave a street with stone is sufficiently declared by an order directing a contract for the work to be made.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 57. The jurisdictional step of declaring a proposed improvement of a sewer system a public necessity must be deemed to have been taken, although it is necessary to use larger pipe and dig a deeper trench and to extend the sewer, where the resolution provides for the "lowering" of the existing main and laterals and the construction of an extension on the same street.—Kuick v. City of Grand Rapids, 200 Mich. 582.

¶ 58. A statute (East Saginaw charter—Laws 1859, Act. No. 246; Sess. L. 1859, p. 997, § 2) requiring the resolution of a city council ordering a public improvement to "describe the contemplated improvement" is substantially complied with when the order for the paving of a street described the improvement as "the paving of a street with the Nicholson pavement," and for the purpose of the act this description will include such incidental work as the removal of the earth for paving and the setting of curb-stones. —Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

¶ 59. A resolution of a common council declaring the necessity of a street improvement is not invalidated by including "the necessary bridges, culverts," etc., without specifying what was necessary, especially if it does not appear that anything was necessary beyond the improvement of the street; the resolution does not delegate authority to decide upon the necessity, as details may afterwards be settled by the council.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 60. A resolution of the common council of a city, declaring the paving of a street to be a necessary public improvement, was silent as to the width of the roadway. Held, that this fact did not vitiate the proceedings. —Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 105 Mich. 529.

§ 21. ——Successive resolutions on one improvement.

Conclusiveness of proceedings in general, see post § 32.

¶ 61. The council has power to reconsider a resolution fixing an assessment district, and to enlarge the district by subsequent action. —Trowbridge v. City of Detroit, 99 Mich. 443.

¶ 62. The superintendent of public works of a city submitted plans and specifications for a proposed paving improvement with estimates for six kinds of pavements. The council adopted his recommendations by resolution. Later they passed a second resolution selecting the particular kind of pavement decided upon. Held, the second resolution did not vacate the first so as to make the proceedings void for irregularity.—Auditor General v. Wellman, 160 Mich. 512.

§ 22. ——Unity or multiplicity of proceedings under one resolution.

Combining dissimilar improvements in one proceeding, see ante § 9.

¶ 63. The common council of a city may provide by resolution for the improvement of a part of a street at a time, when only a part needs improving at the time or in the way provided; but to lay several assessments at the same time for improving different parts of the same street in the same way must often be highly inexpedient.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 64. The fact that a single street has different names for different parts of it does not preclude the whole of it being paved under a single resolution of the common council. The unity of the work must determine the right to deal with it as a whole and not the diversity of names that may be given to its various parts.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

§ 23. Resolution to determine manner of meeting cost.

Estimate of cost and action thereon, see post § 24.

Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack, see post § 32.

Preliminary resolution as to necessity, see ante § 19.

Relief against invalid municipal resolution, see Municipal Corporations, VII.

¶ 65. Where, after the completion of an improvement, the common council of Saginaw passed a resolution reciting the improvement, the amount of its total cost, the apportionment of the cost among the parties interested, and the amount to be assessed on the lands benefited, such action was in full compliance with the charter (Local Acts 1885, No. 355, tit. 6, § 7).—Auditor-General v. Maier, 95 Mich. 127.

¶ 66. By a joint construction of the city charter of Saginaw, tit. 6, §§ 6, 7, it was held that a declaration by the common council that the expense of a public improvement shall be defrayed by the property owners benefited need not be made before the work is begun, but may be made after the improvement is completed.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

¶ 67. Laws 1883, Act No. 124, provides that an assessment for benefits where a city has taken land for public use, shall be levied and collected as is provided in the charter for collecting the expense of a public improvement when a street is graded. Held, that there was no merit in the objection that a resolution of the city council directing the assessment to be made omitted the words "where a street is graded."—Beecher v. City of Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

¶ 68. A resolution passed by the common council of Kalamazoo, authorizing and directing city assessors to make a special assessment roll for a street improvement held a sufficient compliance with § 7, chap. 23, of the City Charter, Local Act of 1897, No. 475, requiring a statement of the method of assessment.—City of Kalamazoo v. Ferris, 194 Mich. 484.

§ 24. Estimate of cost and action on same.
Sufficiency of estimates in gross, see post § 25.
Sufficiency of plat, plan and specifications, see post § 26.

¶ 69. Comp. L. 1897, § 2868, requiring an estimate of the expenses to be made before any money shall be borrowed, raised, or expended for the purchase or construction of water works in any village, is not sufficiently complied with by a tentative estimate made by engineers, which was accompanied by written instructions and suggestions whereby it could be reduced in amount, when there was no official action upon the acceptance or adoption of such estimate.—Richardi v. Village of Bellaire, 152 Mich. 560.

¶ 70. A provision that the board of public works shall estimate the cost of a proposed public improvement and report it to the common council before an assessment is made therefor is sufficiently observed if the board adopts, approves and reports to the council an estimate made by the city surveyor, it being proper for the board to make use of the surveyor's services in preparing the estimate.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 71. Charter of the City of Detroit, chap. 15, § 12, providing that when any public improvement is proposed, the common council shall refer the matter to the board of public works, which upon examination shall report to the council, giving detailed estimates of the cost of the improvement and make recommendations, is not violated where the board assumes the initiative and sends a recommendation to the council that a street should be paved, accompanied by a detailed estimate of the cost, and the council then approved it.—Cass Farm Co. v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 433, aff'd 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

¶ 72. The estimate of the board of public works, previously made and submitted to the council, specified a roadway 38 feet wide, being the width of the roadway as then in use. Before the contract for paving the street was entered into, the plans and specifications were filed, showing the roadway to be 42 feet wide, and bids were solicited on such plans and specifications, which had been adopted by the board of public works and council, and the contract was let accordingly. Held, that the change in the width of the roadway did not vitiate the proceedings.—Fuller v. City of Grand Rapids, 105 Mich. 529.

¶ 73. The action of a city council in incurring expenditures for an improvement without submitting the question to and procuring an approval of the contracts by the board of estimates is invalid.—Bay City Traction & Electric Co. v. City of Bay City, 135 Mich. 388.

¶ 74. The public works act of Detroit requires proposed public improvements to be submitted to the board of public works for estimates and recommendations. Held that bids for paving contracts could not properly be invited until such reference and report.—Butler v. City of Detroit, 43 Mich. 552.

§ 25. ——Sufficiency of estimates in gross.

¶ 75. Whether an assessment for a public improvement is invalid because the estimate of its cost was submitted in gross and not in detail, and whether, if the estimate was adopted, any question can afterwards be raised, quære.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 76. Where the common council of a city, pursuant to the charter, has declared what proportion of the expense of making a public improvement shall be defrayed by an assessment upon the lands benefited thereby, and the board of public works has reported to the council an estimate in detail of the probable cost and expense of the improvement, a further provision (Local Laws 1891, title 6, § 5, p. 491) requiring said board, after the improvement has been completed, to certify to the council "a detail statement of the cost of such improvement, showing the amount to be assessed upon the property benefited," is sufficiently complied with by the submission of a tabular statement showing the amounts in gross to be paid by the city and by the property owners, respectively, by reason of the improvement.—Duffy v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 385.

¶ 77. The charter of Detroit requires the common council to secure in advance from the board of public works a detailed estimate of the cost of a proposed improvement. Where the council called upon the board for such an estimate and the board reported the estimated cost in gross, upon which the paving was ordered, it was held in a suit to enjoin collection of an assessment for such paving that as no further particulars had been asked for it must be assumed that the information received was sufficiently specific to enable the council to act intelligently.—Goodwillie v. City of Detroit, 108 Mich. 283.

§ 26. ——Sufficiency of plat, plan and specifications.

See also post ¶ 180.

¶ 78. The provision in the revised charter of Grand Rapids of 1883, p. 129, § 8, that the board of public works, when the common council decides that the construction of any public work is a necessary improvement, shall determine as to the kind and quantity of materials to be used, and estimate the probable cost and expense of the work, and of the materials to be used in detail, and cause the necessary plans and specifications to be prepared, was held substantially complied with, where, on receiving a resolution for the construction of a sewer, the board of public works directed the city surveyor to prepare the necessary plans and specifications, and where he at once presented plans already prepared by him under the direction of the board, which contained a profile of the proposed sewer, and showed in detail the manner of construction, the size and shape, and the kind and quantity of materials to be used, the cost of construction and of material not being carried out in detail, but being susceptible of computation from the data furnished, and which plans, etc., were examined and approved by the board at the same meeting.—Baisch v. Grand Rapids, 84 Mich. 666.

¶ 79. The plans and specifications required to accompany the report of the superintendant of public works on a petition for a paving improvement could not be found in the files of the city clerk. The council in adopting the superintendent's recommendation to order the improvement had referred in its resolution to these plans and specifications, and adopted them. Held, the evidence was sufficient that the said plans were before the city council when it made the resolution.—Auditor General v. Wellman, 160 Mich. 512.

§ 27. Rescission or revocation of approval or action taken.

Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack, see post § 32.

¶ 80. The recommendation of the board of public works to the city council that the building of a sidewalk be deferred for one year was not a rescission by implication of action previously taken by such board in establishing the grade for such walk, under the direction of such council; since the action recommended was delay, merely, and the council did not acquiesce.—Cuming v. Gleason, 140 Mich. 195.

§ 28. Notice of improvement and hearing of objections.

Sufficiency of service or publication, see post § 29.
New notice on change of plans, see post § 30.
Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack, see post § 32.
Failure to give notice as material defect, see post ¶ 336.
Abortive attempt to cure want of notice by resolution ordering reassessment, see post ¶ 306.

¶ 81. Notice to property owners of city's intent to make special assessments for improvements is not necessary in the absence of statute.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 152 Mich. 59.

¶ 82. In a proposed paving improvement under Act No. 542, Local Acts 1903, c. 17, abutting owners are not entitled to notice outside of the general publication specified by the statute.—Auditor General v. Wellman, 160 Mich. 512.

¶ 83. Where, in the levy of a special assessment for a sewer system, the city charter requires notice of the proposed improvement and of the district to be assessed to be published in the official newspaper of the city, such notice is fatally defective if it fails to give the approximate location of the proposed improvement and the property to be assessed therefor.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 152 Mich. 59.

¶ 84. Where notice of the making and filing of the map or plat showing the district included in a special assessment district is given according to law, notice to one owning land within such district must be presumed.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich 282.

§ 29. ——Sufficiency of service or publication.

¶ 85. An ordinance requiring that notice of a proposed public improvement shall be served upon a land-owner personally, or by leaving it at his place of residence, is not complied with by leaving such notice on the table in his business office during his absence therefrom.—Mills v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 422.

¶ 86. Under the charter of Detroit, where the common council makes a contract for a sewer without an estimate of the cost thereof from the board of public works, and where notice of the improvement is not served upon the owner of the land to be assessed as directed by the ordinance, and where it does not appear that such notice was published as the ordinance directs, the proceedings are void, and the collection of a tax levied to pay for the sewer is properly enjoined.—Mills v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 422.

¶ 87. Publication of notice of hearing of objections to a proposed improvement by the city clerk under the instructions of the common council, was a sufficient compliance with Comp. L. 1897, § 3195, requiring the council to give notice of such hearing.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

¶ 88. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3195 requiring the giving of notice of a proposed improvement, a publication of notice of hearing objections made by the clerk under the instruction of the common council, was a sufficient compliance with the requirement that such council give notice of such hearing.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

¶ 89. Where a notice is required to be published for five successive days, inserting it in a paper for three successive days, and on the fifth and sixth days, is not sufficient, it appearing that the paper was published on the omitted day, which was Sunday.—Mills v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 422.

¶ 90. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3195, requiring the common council to publish notice for at least two weeks, of a proposed improvement the cost of which is to be defrayed by special assessment, publication upon Thursday of one week and upon Thursday of the following week, of a notice that the board would meet to hear objections upon Friday of the second week, was not a compliance with the statute.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

§ 30. New notice on change of plans.

¶ 91. A city council on August 20, 1906, voted a special assessment for a sewer system, and set September 17, 1906, as a day to hear objections. On September 17, 1906, instead of hearing objections, it ordered the sewer plans to be amended. On October 8, 1906, it adopted the modified plans by resolution, and provided therein for the special assessments. Held, the resolution of October 8 was independent of that of August 20, and any irregularities as to notice in proceeding upon the resolution of October 8 were not cured by the acts done pursuant to the resolution of August 20.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 152 Mich. 59.

§ 31. Preliminary procedure for improvement by abutting owners.

Power to require abutting owner to make improvement, see ante § 7.

¶ 92. Where, by the provisions of a city charter, before a person can be required to build a sidewalk, the council must pass an ordinance prescribing the kind of walk to be built, its dimensions, and the material to be used therein, as well as the time within which it must be constructed, the enactment of such ordinance is a condition precedent to any liability for the penalty prescribed for failing to build said sidewalk.—City of Port Huron v. Jenkinson, 77 Mich. 414.

§ 32. Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack.

See also post ¶ 376.

Relief from illegal or excessive assessments, see post VII.

Review of assessment on certiorari, see post § 115.

¶ 93. The action of municipal officers with reference to public improvements, when within the powers conferred upon them, is final, in the absence of fraud. Whether the courts have jurisdiction to interfere even where fraudulent conduct is shown, quære.—Nelson v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 659.

¶ 94. Where the power exists to repave a street once improved, the question of necessity must be determined by the body in whom such power is vested, and is not open to review or attack collaterally, except in a clear case of fraud.—Shimmons v. City of Saginaw, 104 Mich. 511.

¶ 95. A petition for paving a street recited that it was signed by the owners of a majority of the property on both sides thereof. The department of public works, to whom the petition was referred, reported back to the common council that the petitioners were owners of the greater number of feet frontage of real estate abutting on the avenue proposed to be improved, and recommended the pavement. The common council accepted the report and ordered the street to be paved. Held, the finding of the council that the owners of a majority of the frontage joined in the petition was conclusive until the contrary was shown by a complainant seeking to enjoin the collection of an assessment, and the burden of proving the contrary was on said complainant.—Brady v. City of Detroit, 166 Mich. 252.

¶ 96. Whether a majority of the property-holders have signed a petition for a street improvement is not conclusively determined by the town board, but, in the absense of statutory provision to the contrary, may be inquired into collaterally; and the want of such majority may be shown as a defense in an action to collect the assessment.—Aplin, Auditor General v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128.

Liability of abutters, private persons and corporations to indemnify or exonerate the public, see Highways, XII, G, 2.

¶ 97. No contract for paving can be made until the common council has submitted the matter to the board of public works for estimates and recommendations and received from that board the reports and information provided for in the public works act. But an assessment will not be held void when this has been done substantially in accordance with the purposes of that act but in an irregular manner.—Wilkins v. City of Detroit, 46 Mich. 120.

¶ 98. Under the charter of Grand Rapids, conferring on the council the power to require and make street improvements, allowing it to proceed therewith and anticipate collection of assessments and taxes, and providing for notice to the taxpayers after the assessments and in relation thereto, and requiring no other notice, it is not necessary to give them any notice before letting the contract and approving the bond for such work.—Parsons v. City of Grand Rapids, 141 Mich. 467.

§ 34. Advertisements, bids, and letting of contracts.

Necessity of letting contract to lowest bidder, see post § 35.
Extra work and change agreements and new or additional contracts, see post § 36.
Effect of defective advertisement, see post ¶ 338.
Bids and letting of public contracts in general, see Public Contracts, II.

¶ 99. Notices to bidders must contain the substantial requisites of specifications, so that bidders can from such notices obtain the information necessary to enable them to prepare their bids.—Wilkins v. City of Detroit, 46 Mich. 120.

¶ 100. Under a municipal charter which requires contracts to be publicly let to the lowest responsible bidder it is not necessary, in advertising for proposals to pave a street, that the kind of pavement should be specified. The charter provision aims, for the public benefit, to secure competition among contractors for public works and supplies, and necessarily leaves something to the discretion of the city authorities, who must determine in each case what competition the nature of the case will admit of, and the best method to secure it.—Attorney General ex rel. Cook v. City of Detroit, 26 Mich. 263.

¶ 101. A city charter (Local Laws 1889, title 13, § 3, p. 945) provided that, when the making of a public improvement should have been determined upon, the board of public works should advertise for proposals for furnishing the material and for the performance of the work. No time was fixed for which the publication should continue. An improvement having been ordered by the council, the board instructed its clerk to "advertise for proposals" until a certain date, but the first publication was not made until three days after such direction had been given. Held, that the board, by receiving bids at the time specified, would be presumed to have ratified the action of the clerk, and determined that the advertisement was for a sufficient period.—Duffy v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 335.

¶ 102. Where a statute required that the board of public works should advertise for paving bids, an advertisement was held sufficient that purported to issue from the office of the board, signed with the name of its president, and stating that bidders must file with the board a satisfactory bond, and which was afterward acted upon by that body.—Beniteau v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 116.

¶ 103. A street-paving bid is not defective in not distinguishing between the portions of the improvement chargeable to the lots fronting on the street, and the portion chargeable to the city, where the relative proportions have already been fixed.—Beniteau v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 116.

¶ 104. Whether, where work to be done under a municipal contract involves operations the difficulty and cost of which cannot be accurately foreseen, there can be any flexibility in the terms of the contract and any scope for a choice among bids, quære.—McBrian v. City of Grand Rapids, 56 Mich. 95.

¶ 105. Under a charter which requires that contracts be let to the lowest bidder, the city council has no power to release the lowest bidder from his offer, claimed to be a mistake, without advertising again, and allowing the other bidders to revise their bids; and an assessment based upon such proceedings is void.—Twiss v. City of Port Huron, 63 Mich. 528.

¶ 106. Complainant made a bid to defendant village on a paving job and the bid was accepted by resolution of the village council. Defendant expected to raise the funds to meet the contract by special assessment. It later learned that its taxing power was not adequate to do this and rescinded its former action, no written contract having been executed. There was evidence that complainant and defendant at the time of the acceptance of complainant's bid expected a formal written contract would be entered into. Held, no valid contract resulted.—Central Bitulithic Paving Co. v. Village of Highland Park, 164 Mich. 223.

§ 35. ——Necessity of letting contract to lowest bidder.

See also post ¶¶ 118, 119.

¶ 107. In passing upon bids the city authorities may give regard to the relative value of the kinds of paving for which there are bids made; and the rejection of the kind for which the lowest bid is made is not, therefore, necessarily erroneous.—Attorney General ex rel. Cook v. City of Detroit, 26 Mich. 263.

¶ 108. Whether, where there are two bidders upon the same kind of patented pavement, the common council may reject the lowest bid on the ground that those who make it, having no right under the patent to lay the pavement, are not responsible bidders, notwithstanding they have filed a bond of indemnity as required by resolution of the council, and to contract with the next higher bidders who own the patent, quære.—Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 Mich. 263.

¶ 109. An assessment by a village council of a tax to pay for paving, which by ordinance should be let by contract to the lowest bidder, is void, where it appears that no bid was accepted, but there was a writing not purporting to be a bid responsive to the call and not appearing to be the lowest.—Whitney v. Hudson Common Council, 69 Mich. 189.

§ 36. ——Extra work and change agreements and new or additional contracts.

¶ 110. Where a city charter requires contracts for improvements in any streets to be let by advertisement to the lowest bidder, a contract with the successful bidder to do extra work in raising the grade of a street not included in the original specifications, is a contract for "improvements" within the meaning of the charter.—Peterson v. City of Ionia, 152 Mich. 678.

¶ 111. The charter of Grand Rapids, title 6, § 15, provides that the plans and specifications of the work for the payment of which an assessment is ordered to be made may be changed, and the work added to or diminished, at any time before the completion of the assessment roll therefor. Held, that this does not enable the council to add to a contract for grading a street another contract for paving the gutters in such street, thus materially increasing the cost of the work over the estimate of the board of public works, and over the contract price, without again seeking competitive bids and letting the contract to the lowest bidder as required by the charter.—Ely v. City of Grand Rapids, 84 Mich. 336.

¶ 113. Local Acts 1897, No. 448, § 120 (Charter of Bay City), provides by implication for the letting of contracts on bids to the lowest bidder, and section 134, authorizing "changes," was not intended to confer the power to dispense with the formalities of a new contract after the original plan had been changed.—Auditor General v. Stoddard, 147 Mich. 329.

¶ 114. A special assessment levied on a resolution of the common council of Bay City which changed a contract regularly let for the construction of street pavements so as to widen the pavement, after work had been commenced under the original plan and contract is invalid; the charter provision authorizing changes in a contract (Local Acts 1897, No. 448, § 134) was not intended to confer the power to dispense with the formalities of a new contract after an original plan has been changed; and the facts that only a mathematical calculation is required to determine the cost of the additional work, that the original contract provided that changes could be made when necessary, or when deemed advisable by the city engineer, and that the right was reserved without incurring any increased liability as to price to increase or diminish the amount of work or material within limits deemed advisable by the common council did not authorize the council to make the change in the contract by resolution after work had been commenced.—Auditor General v. Stoddard, 147 Mich. 329.

¶ 115. Under an authority in the charter to provide funds for the construction of pavements, the contracts for pavement may be made to include grading, curb-stones, gutters and cross-walks.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 116. Plaintiff contracted with the defendant city to build a sewer between certain designated points, according to plans on file, for a specified price "per lineal foot." From the plans it appeared that part of the sewer was to consist of a single cylinder, 9 feet in diameter, and the remainder, of two parallel cylinders, each 6 feet, 8 inches, in diameter, with concrete between. The word "sewer," however, was used throughout to indicate the structure in all its parts. Held, that each cylinder should not be treated as a separate sewer in determining the amount to which plaintiff was entitled, but that payment should be limited to the number of lineal feet of the entire structure.—Campau v. City of Detroit, 106 Mich. 414.

§ 38. ——Stipulations as to hours or working conditions.

¶ 117. A city, which is required by its charter to let contracts in excess of two hundred dollars to the lowest responsible bidder, cannot by ordinance impose a condition upon contract work as to the number of hours work per day which a contractor may require of his workmen.—Attorney General ex rel. Hudson v. City of Detroit, 153 Mich. 525.

§ 39. Contracts specifying patented or monopolised materials.

¶ 118. The fact that an article is patented does not necessarily prevent any person but the patentee from contracting to supply it; others may do so, taking the risk of being able to obtain the patentee's license. Therefore the fact that the charter provides that contracts by the city shall be made with the lowest bidder, after advertisement for proposals, does not prevent the city letting a contract for paving a street with a patented pavement, notwithstanding the only bidder is the owner of the patent.—Hobart v. City of Detroit, 17 Mich. 246; Motz v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

¶ 119. Under a charter provision providing that paving shall be done upon contracts and specifications prepared by the board of public works which shall advertise for proposals and which may contract with the lowest bidder, a city is not precluded from specifying, as the material to be used, some article which by reason of patent or of circumstances is in the hands or under the control of a single dealer.—Holmes v. Common Council of Detroit, 120 Mich. 226.

§ 40. Letting work without formal competitive contract.

See also ante ¶ 106.

¶ 120. The commissioner of public works, with the approval of the common council of Detroit, contracted with certain parties to build certain sidewalk intersections. The work did not proceed satisfactorily, and the commissioner, with the approval of the board, contracted with the relator to put in specific intersections. The council did not approve this contract until after relator had completed the work. Held, the contract with relator was invalid under § 240 of the city charter, requiring consent of the council to such contracts, and that the subsequent approval of the council was not a valid ratification.—Garner v. Doremus, 154 Mich. 323.

¶ 121. In grading a street neither the contractor nor the city has a right to deposit earth outside of the lines of the street, without the consent of the owner, for the purpose of supporting the embankment made by filling in the street.—Davies v. City of East Saginaw, 66 Mich. 37.

¶ 122. The act of depositing earth on an abutter's lot in paving a roadway in the street, being unnecessary, was not the natural result of making the improvement, and the trespass was one, therefore, for which the contractor, and not the city, was liable.—Fuller v. City of Grand Rapids, 105 Mich. 529.

§ 42. Waiver or estoppel to assert claim.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 123. By joining in a petition for grading a street, and by allowing, without objection, work to be completed according to the actual grade with which he is familiar, a lot-owner estops himself from claiming damages resulting from the grading.—Collins v. City of Grand Rapids, 95 Mich. 286.

¶ 124. A lot-owner who, with full knowledge of the situation, joins in a petition to the common council of a city to establish the grade of and improve a street upon which his lots abut, and who makes no objections on the review of the assessment roll for said improvement, upon which he is assessed a certain sum as benefits, which he voluntarily pays, has had his day in court, and cannot afterwards be heard in an independent proceeding to recover damages for the stoppage of water and the temporary flowage of his land caused by such improvement, he having failed to exercise his right to appear before the city council and urge his claim for such damages.—Hembling v. City of Big Rapids, 89 Mich. 1.

VI. LEVYING AND MAKING ASSESSMENTS.

Assessments distinguished from taxes, see Taxes, I.
Provisions for improvement of rural highways by local assessment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4671 et seq.

¶ 125. The whole theory of a legal assessment depends upon a uniform rule of charges within some defined district, and resting on some intelligible principle.—Clay v. City of Grand Rapids, 60 Mich. 451.

¶ 126. The theory sustaining levies for sewer improvements is that the party assessed is locally and pecuniarily benefited over and above the ordinary benefit which as one of the community he receives in all public improvements to the precise extent of the assessment.—Kuick v. City of Grand Rapids, 200 Mich. 582.

¶ 127. The sole ground for imposing a part or all of the cost of a public improvement upon a part of a municipality is that the part burdened with the cost receives corresponding benefits which the general public does not receive.—German Luth. Church Soc. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 179 Mich. 35.

¶ 128. Assessments or taxes for local special improvements are sustained on the theory that the premises are bettered by the improvement.—Woodmere Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Detroit, 192 Mich. 553. (Brooke, J., dissenting.)

¶ 129. Assessments or taxes for local special improvements are not "taxes," within the proper meaning of that word, but represent a value or betterment added to the land itself.—Woodmere Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Detroit, 192 Mich. 553. (Brooke, J., dissenting.)

¶ 130. An assessment for a public improvement must deal with the entire expense.—City of Manistee v. Harley, 79 Mich. 238.

¶ 131. An assessment for a public improvement must act upon all persons and property concerned. It cannot be made by separate action for each person or each piece of land.—City of Manistee v. Harley, 79 Mich. 238.

§ 44. Beneficial character of work or improvement.

See also ante ¶ 127.

Relation of benefits to assessment, see post § 68.

¶ 132. A law permitting a city to assess abutting owners for the cost of sprinkling the streets is unconstitutional, since the sprinkling does not add to the value of the land.—City of Kalamazoo v. Crawford, 154 Mich. 58. (Montgomery, Blair and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 133. A statute authorizing a municipal corporation to pass an ordinance requiring the cost of street sprinkling to be assessed upon the abutting land in proportion to frontage, is void, on the ground that a local assessment can only rest upon a substantial enhancement of value in the land assessed.—Stevens v. City of Port Huron, 149 Mich. 536. (Moore, Blair and Montgomery, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 45. Replacement or reconstruction work.

Repaving and replacement funds, see ante § 15.

¶ 134. In an action by a city to recover from an abutting property owner a special assessment for the repavement of a street, held that the city by its election, when the street was originally paved, to charge the entire cost thereof to the city at large, did not thereby estop itself from assessing the cost of the repavement against the abutting property owners, as such a conclusion would not only be unreasonable but contrary to a section of the city charter providing that the city should have power to pave and repave streets, etc., and to cause the expense thereof, or any part thereof, to be paid by the city or assessed on adjacent property owners.—City of Kalamazoo v. Perrin, 194 Mich. 484.

¶ 135. Under a charter provision that where a street has been graded and paved at the expense of the abutting owners, such owners shall not be liable for any assessment occasioned by any subsequent change of grade in such pavement unless petitioned for by a majority of the owners, an assessment may be levied without such petition for the cost of changing a cobblestone pavement which had been laid at the expense of the abutting owners, to an asphalt pavement, though the change may also necessitate a slight change in the grave of the pavement since in such case the assessment cannot be said to be occasioned by a change of grade.—Auditor General v. Chase, 132 Mich. 630.

¶ 135a. Where abutting owners have been assessed for grading and paving a street, they cannot, under a charter which provides that "the cost of all repaving of streets shall be paid out of the repairing fund," be again assessed for repaving the old roadway and extension thereof caused by widening the roadway so as to include 15 feet on each side previously occupied by grass and trees.—Wreford v. City of Detroit, 132 Mich. 348.

§ 46. Power and authority to make assessments.

Proper body, board or officer to make assessments, see post § 47.

Power and authority to establish size and limits of district, see post § 62.

Power to exempt from assessment by contract, see post § 59.

Power and authority to levy reassessments, see post § 89.

Power and authority to make assessments without opportunity for hearing, see also post ¶ 280.

Mandamus to compel levy of assessments in general, see Mandamus § 87.

Local assessments for laying out private road, see Highways § 417.

Power of municipal corporations in general, see Municipal Corporations, III.

¶ 136. A valid assessment by municipal authorities requires a valid statutory provision to warrant it.—Motz v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

¶ 137. Grants of power to make local assessments are strictly construed and must be strictly followed.—Whitney v. Hudson Common Council, 69 Mich. 189.

¶ 138. A village has no power to extend a sewer assessment over a number of years in the absence of any statute conferring such power.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 132 Mich. 152.

¶ 139. Laws 1883, Act No. 124, which provides that if the common council believes that a portion of the city in the vicinity of the proposed improvement will be benefited thereby, it may determine that the whole or any just proportion of the compensation awarded by the jury shall be assessed upon the owners or occupants of real estate deemed to be benefited, and that they shall thereupon by resolution fix the district benefited, and specify the amount to be assessed, is not invalid as conferring arbitrary power upon the council.—Beecher v. City of Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

§ 47. Proper board, body, or officer to make assessments.

Proper body or officer to change or revise assessment, see also post § 85.

¶ 140. When a charter (East Saginaw charter—Act 246 of 1859; Sess. L. 1859, p. 1011, § 38) gives the common council the power, upon ordering a public improvement, of "designating and directing three resident freeholders * * * to make an assessment upon all the owners, etc., of the amount of expense in proportion, as nearly as may be, to the advantage which each shall be deemed to acquire by the making of such improvements," it does not authorize the council to

does not require the necessity of the improvement to be determined by a jury. And if the provisions for special taxation districts are invalid, they do not invalidate the entire act, since a general tax is also contemplated.—Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 Mich. 641.

§ 19. Preliminary resolution or declaration of necessity.

Sufficiency of resolution, see post § 20.
Successive resolutions on one improvement, see post § 21.
Unity or multiplicity of proceedings under one resolution, see post § 22.
Resolution to determine manner of meeting costs, see post § 23.
Preliminary procedure for improvement by abutting owners, see post § 31.
Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack, see post § 32.

Proceedings for construction and repair of highways, see also Highways § 112.
Proceedings to lay out and establish drains, see Drains, II, A.
Relief against invalid resolutions of municipal corporations, see Municipal Corporations, VII.

¶ 47. The resolution of a council as to the necessity for an improvement is jurisdictional.—German Luth. Church Soc. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 179 Mich. 35.

¶ 48. A preliminary resolution declaring that a public improvement is deemed a necessity is jurisdictional only if required by statute or municipal charter, when a failure to comply with such requirement will vitiate all subsequent proceedings.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 681.

¶ 49. Where a city charter provides that when the council shall decide an improvement to be necessary they shall so declare by resolution, such declaration of the necessity is a distinct preliminary act, indispensable to give jurisdiction of future proceedings.—Hoyt v. City of East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39.

¶ 50. The charter of the city of Saginaw, title 6, § 1 which makes the declaration by the common council of the necessity of public improvements, the cost, or any portion of the cost of which is to be assessed upon the locality of the improvement, essential as preliminary to the making of the same, does not contemplate that, before a tax shall be levied or bonds issued to provide the fund out of which the proportion of the cost to be borne by the city is to be paid, such necessity shall be first declared.—Naegely v. City of Saginaw, 101 Mich. 532.

¶ 51. Under Port Huron Charter, ch. 7, § 15 (Loc. Acts 1895, No. 381), which provides that no resolution imposing taxes, or incurring any indebtedness in excess of $50, and no ordinance, shall be passed at the same meeting as introduced, if objection is made thereto, "and no ordinance shall be passed except by a two-thirds vote of the aldermen elect," a resolution or proceeding imposing a special assessment does not require a two-thirds vote, such provision applying to the passage of ordinances alone.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 52. Under Act 268, P. A. 1909, amendatory of the Grade Separation Law (secs. 4229 to 4261, C. L. 1897), postponing the institution of judicial proceedings for the determination of the public necessity for making an improvement and the assessment of damages therefor until after the completion of the work, and providing that the petition, as the commencement of judicial proceedings, might be filed within one year after the completion of the work of separating the grades, the provision providing that a resolution of necessity must be passed and attached to the agreement and filed with the city attorney, as a condition precedent, is construed to conform to the amendment, and the resolution need not be passed until after the work is completed, but in time to be filed with the city attorney previously to the institution of the judicial proceedings.—Mead v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 174 Mich. 521.

¶ 53. Where a city council after ordering a public improvement adopted a resolution deferring the letting of the contract, and where the bids which had been advertised for were returned unopened, the council could afterwards, without another declaration of public necessity, let a contract for making such improvement.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

§ 20. ——Sufficiency of resolution.

See also ante ¶ 24, and post ¶ 178.
Relief against invalid municipal resolutions, see Municipal Corporations, VII.

¶ 54. The declaration of the necessity of a public improvement does not necessarily involve an enumeration of details, but, although general in character, covers the doing of whatever is deemed or found to be necessary in the course of an improvement of the character designated.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

¶ 55. A resolution declaring that a public improvement is "deemed advisable" is sufficient where neither statute nor municipal charter requires it to be declared a "public necessity."—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 184 Mich. 681.

¶ 56. The determination by the common council of Detroit to pave a street with stone is sufficiently declared by an order directing a contract for the work to be made.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 57. The jurisdictional step of declaring a proposed improvement of a sewer system a public necessity must be deemed to have been taken, although it is necessary to use larger pipe and dig a deeper trench and to extend the sewer, where the resolution provides for the "lowering" of the existing main and laterals and the construction of an extension on the same street.—Kuick v. City of Grand Rapids, 200 Mich. 582.

¶ 58. A statute (East Saginaw charter—Laws 1859, Act. No. 246; Sess. L. 1859, p. 997, § 2) requiring the resolution of a city council ordering a public improvement to "describe the contemplated improvement" is substantially complied with when the order for the paving of a street described the improvement as "the paving of a street with the Nicholson pavement," and for the purpose of the act this description will include such incidental work as the removal of the earth for paving and the setting of curb-stones.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

¶ 59. A resolution of a common council declaring the necessity of a street improvement is not invalidated by including "the necessary bridges, culverts," etc., without specifying what was necessary, especially if it does not appear that anything was necessary beyond the improvement of the street; the resolution does not delegate authority to decide upon the necessity, as details may afterwards be settled by the council.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 60. A resolution of the common council of a city, declaring the paving of a street to be a necessary public improvement, was silent as to the width of the roadway. Held, that this fact did not vitiate the proceedings.—Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 105 Mich. 529.

§ 21. ——Successive resolutions on one improvement.

Conclusiveness of proceedings in general, see post § 32.

¶ 61. The council has power to reconsider a resolution fixing an assessment district, and to enlarge the district by subsequent action.—Trowbridge v. City of Detroit, 99 Mich. 443.

¶ 62. The superintendent of public works of a city submitted plans and specifications for a proposed paving improvement with estimates for six kinds of pavements. The council adopted his recommendations by resolution. Later they passed a second resolution selecting the particular kind of pavement decided upon. Held, the second resolution did not vacate the first so as to make the proceedings void for irregularity.—Auditor General v. Wellman, 160 Mich. 512.

§ 22. ——Unity or multiplicity of proceedings under one resolution.

Combining dissimilar improvements in one proceeding, see ante § 9.

¶ 63. The common council of a city may provide by resolution for the improvement of a part of a street at a time, when only a part needs improving at the time or in the way provided; but to lay several assessments at the same time for improving different parts of the same street in the same way must often be highly inexpedient.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 64. The fact that a single street has different names for different parts of it does not preclude the whole of it being paved under a single resolution of the common council. The unity of the work must determine the right to deal with it as a whole and not the diversity of names that may be given to its various parts.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

§ 23. Resolution to determine manner of meeting cost.

Estimate of cost and action thereon, see post § 24.

Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack, see post § 32.

Preliminary resolution as to necessity, see ante § 19.

Relief against invalid municipal resolution, see Municipal Corporations, VII.

¶ 65. Where, after the completion of an improvement, the common council of Saginaw passed a resolution reciting the improvement, the amount of its total cost, the apportionment of the cost among the parties interested, and the amount to be assessed on the lands benefited, such action was in full compliance with the charter (Local Acts 1885, No. 355, tit. 6, § 7).—Auditor-General v. Maier, 95 Mich. 127.

¶ 66. By a joint construction of the city charter of Saginaw, tit. 6, §§ 6, 7, it was held that a declaration by the common council that the expense of a public improvement shall be defrayed by the property owners benefited need not be made before the work is begun, but may be made after the improvement is completed.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

¶ 67. Laws 1883, Act No. 124, provides that an assessment for benefits where a city has taken land for public use, shall be levied and collected as is provided in the charter for collecting the expense of a public improvement when a street is graded. Held, that there was no merit in the objection that a resolution of the city council directing the assessment to be made omitted the words "where a street is graded."—Beecher v. City of Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

¶ 68. A resolution passed by the common council of Kalamazoo, authorizing and directing city assessors to make a special assessment roll for a street improvement held a sufficient compliance with § 7, chap. 23, of the City Charter, Local Act of 1897, No. 475, requiring a statement of the method of assessment.—City of Kalamazoo v. Perrin, 194 Mich. 484.

§ 24. Estimate of cost and action on same.

Sufficiency of estimates in gross, see post § 25.

Sufficiency of plat, plan and specifications, see post § 26.

¶ 69. Comp. L. 1897, § 2893, requiring an estimate of the expenses to be made before any money shall be borrowed, raised, or expended for the purchase or construction of water works in any village, is not sufficiently complied with by a tentative estimate made by engineers, which was accompanied by written instructions and suggestions whereby it could be reduced in amount, when there was no official action upon the acceptance or adoption of such estimate.—Richardi v. Village of Bellaire, 158 Mich. 560.

¶ 70. A provision that the board of public works shall estimate the cost of a proposed public improvement and report it to the common council before an assessment is made therefor is sufficiently observed if the board adopts, approves and reports to the council an estimate made by the city surveyor, it being proper for the board to make use of the surveyor's services in preparing the estimate.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 71. Charter of the City of Detroit, chap. 15, § 12, providing that when any public improvement is proposed, the common council shall refer the matter to the board of public works, which upon examination shall report to the council, giving detailed estimates of the cost of the improvement and make recommendations, is not violated where the board assumes the initiative and sends a recommendation to the council that a street should be paved, accompanied by a detailed estimate of the cost, and the council then approved it.—Cass Farm Co. v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 433, aff'd 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

¶ 72. The estimate of the board of public works, previously made and submitted to the council, specified a roadway 38 feet wide, being the width of the roadway as then in use. Before the contract for paving the street was entered into, the plans and specifications were filed, showing the roadway to be 42 feet wide, and bids were solicited on such plans and specifications, which had been adopted by the board of public works and council, and the contract was let accordingly. Held, that the change in the width of the roadway did not vitiate the proceedings.—Fuller v. City of Grand Rapids, 105 Mich. 529.

¶ 73. The action of a city council in incurring expenditures for an improvement without submitting the question to and procuring an approval of the contracts by the board of estimates is invalid.—Bay City Traction & Electric Co. v. City of Bay City, 155 Mich. 393.

¶ 74. The public works act of Detroit requires proposed public improvements to be submitted to the board of public works for estimates and recommendations. Held that bids for paving contracts could not properly be invited until such reference and report.—Butler v. City of Detroit, 43 Mich. 552.

§ 25. ——Sufficiency of estimates in gross.

¶ 75. Whether an assessment for a public improvement is invalid because the estimate of its cost was submitted in gross and not in detail, and whether, if the estimate was adopted, any question can afterwards be raised, quære.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 76. Where the common council of a city, pursuant to the charter, has declared what proportion of the expense of making a public improvement shall be defrayed by an assessment upon the lands benefited thereby, and the board of public works has reported to the council an estimate in detail of the probable cost and expense of the improvement, a further provision (Local Laws 1891, title 6, § 5, p. 401) requiring said board, after the improvement has been completed, to certify to the council "a detail statement of the cost of such improvement, showing the amount to be assessed upon the property benefited," is sufficiently complied with by the submission of a tabular statement showing the amounts in gross to be paid by the city and by the property owners, respectively, by reason of the improvement.—Duffy v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 335.

¶ 77. The charter of Detroit requires the common council to secure in advance from the board of public works a detailed estimate of the cost of a proposed improvement. Where the council called upon the board for such an estimate and the board reported the estimated cost in gross, upon which the paving was ordered, it was held in a suit to enjoin collection of an assessment for such paving that as no further particulars had been asked for it must be assumed that the information received was sufficiently specific to enable the council to act intelligently.—Goodwillie v. City of Detroit, 108 Mich. 283.

§ 26. ——Sufficiency of plat, plan and specifications.

See also post ¶ 180.

¶ 78. The provision in the revised charter of Grand Rapids of 1883, p. 129, § 8, that the board of public works, when the common council decides that the construction of any public work is a necessary improvement, shall determine as to the kind and quantity of materials to be used, and estimate the probable cost and expense of the work, and of the materials to be used in detail, and cause the necessary plans and specifications to be prepared, was held substantially complied with, where, on receiving a resolution for the construction of a sewer, the board of public works directed the city surveyor to prepare the necessary plans and specifications, and where he at once presented plans already prepared by him under the direction of the board, which contained a profile of the proposed sewer, and showed in detail the manner of construction, the size and shape, and the kind and quantity of materials to be used, the cost of construction and of material not being carried out in detail, but being susceptible of computation from the data furnished, and which plans, etc., were examined and approved by the board at the same meeting.—Baisch v. Grand Rapids, 84 Mich. 666.

¶ 79. The plans and specifications required to accompany the report of the superintendant of public works on a petition for a paving improvement could not be found in the files of the city clerk. The council in adopting the superintendent's recommendation to order the improvement had referred in its resolution to these plans and specifications, and adopted them. Held, the evidence was sufficient that the said plans were before the city council when it made the resolution.—Auditor General v. Wellman, 160 Mich. 512.

§ 27. Rescission or revocation of approval or action taken.

Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack, see post § 32.

¶ 80. The recommendation of the board of public works to the city council that the building of a sidewalk be deferred for one year was not a rescission by implication of action previously taken by such board in establishing the grade for such walk, under the direction of such council; since the action recommended was delay, merely, and the council did not acquiesce.—Cuming v. Gleason, 140 Mich. 195.

§ 28. Notice of improvement and hearing of objections.

Sufficiency of service or publication, see post § 29.
New notice on change of plans, see post § 30.
Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack, see post § 32.
Failure to give notice as material defect, see post ¶ 336.
Abortive attempt to cure want of notice by resolution ordering reassessment, see post ¶ 306.

¶ 81. Notice to property owners of city's intent to make special assessments for improvements is not necessary in the absence of statute.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 152 Mich. 59.

¶ 82. In a proposed paving improvement under Act No. 542, Local Acts 1903, c. 17, abutting owners are not entitled to notice outside of the general publication specified by the statute.—Auditor General v. Wellman, 160 Mich. 512.

¶ 83. Where, in the levy of a special assessment for a sewer system, the city charter requires notice of the proposed improvement and of the district to be assessed to be published in the official newspaper of the city, such notice is fatally defective if it fails to give the approximate location of the proposed improvement and the property to be assessed therefor.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 152 Mich. 59.

¶ 84. Where notice of the making and filing of the map or plat showing the district included in a special assessment district is given according to law, notice to one owning land within such district must be presumed.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich 282.

§ 29. ——Sufficiency of service or publication.

¶ 85. An ordinance requiring that notice of a proposed public improvement shall be served upon a land-owner personally, or by leaving it at his place of residence, is not complied with by leaving such notice on the table in his business office during his absence therefrom.—Mills v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 422.

¶ 86. Under the charter of Detroit, where the common council makes a contract for a sewer without an estimate of the cost thereof from the board of public works, and where notice of the improvement is not served upon the owner of the land to be assessed as directed by the ordinance, and where it does not appear that such notice was published as the ordinance directs, the proceedings are void, and the collection of a tax levied to pay for the sewer is properly enjoined.—Mills v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 422.

¶ 87. Publication of notice of hearing of objections to a proposed improvement by the city clerk under the instructions of the common council, was a sufficient compliance with Comp. L. 1897, § 3195, requiring the council to give notice of such hearing.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

¶ 88. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3195 requiring the giving of notice of a proposed improvement, a publication of notice of hearing objections made by the clerk under the instruction of the common council, was a sufficient compliance with the requirement that such council give notice of such hearing.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

¶ 89. Where a notice is required to be published for five successive days, inserting it in a paper for three successive days, and on the fifth and sixth days, is not sufficient, it appearing that the paper was published on the omitted day, which was Sunday.—Mills v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 422.

¶ 90. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3195, requiring the common council to publish notice for at least two weeks, of a proposed improvement the cost of which is to be defrayed by special assessment, publication upon Thursday of one week and upon Thursday of the following week, of a notice that the board would meet to hear objections upon Friday of the second week, was not a compliance with the statute.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

§ 30. New notice on change of plans.

¶ 91. A city council on August 20, 1906, voted a special assessment for a sewer system, and set September 17, 1906, as a day to hear objections. On September 17, 1906, instead of hearing objections, it ordered the sewer plans to be amended. On October 8, 1906, it adopted the modified plans by resolution, and provided therein for the special assessments. Held, the resolution of October 8 was independent of that of August 20, and any irregularities as to notice in proceeding upon the resolution of October 8 were not cured by the acts done pursuant to the resolution of August 20.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 152 Mich. 59.

§ 31. Preliminary procedure for improvement by abutting owners.

Power to require abutting owner to make improvement, see ante § 7.

¶ 92. Where, by the provisions of a city charter, before a person can be required to build a sidewalk, the council must pass an ordinance prescribing the kind of walk to be built, its dimensions, and the material to be used therein, as well as the time within which it must be constructed, the enactment of such ordinance is a condition precedent to any liability for the penalty prescribed for failing to build said sidewalk.—City of Port Huron v. Jenkinson, 77 Mich. 414.

§ 32. Conclusiveness of proceedings and right to review or attack.

See also post ¶ 376.

Relief from illegal or excessive assessments, see post VII.

Review of assessment on certiorari, see post § 115.

¶ 93. The action of municipal officers with reference to public improvements, when within the powers conferred upon them, is final, in the absence of fraud. Whether the courts have jurisdiction to interfere even where fraudulent conduct is shown, quære.—Nelson v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 659.

¶ 94. Where the power exists to repave a street once improved, the question of necessity must be determined by the body in whom such power is vested, and is not open to review or attack collaterally, except in a clear case of fraud.—Shimmons v. City of Saginaw, 104 Mich. 511.

¶ 95. A petition for paving a street recited that it was signed by the owners of a majority of the property on both sides thereof. The department of public works, to whom the petition was referred, reported back to the common council that the petitioners were owners of the greater number of feet frontage of real estate abutting on the avenue proposed to be improved, and recommended the pavement. The common council accepted the report and ordered the street to be paved. Held, the finding of the council that the owners of a majority of the frontage joined in the petition was conclusive until the contrary was shown by a complainant seeking to enjoin the collection of an assessment, and the burden of proving the contrary was on said complainant.—Brady v. City of Detroit, 166 Mich. 252.

¶ 96. Whether a majority of the property-holders have signed a petition for a street improvement is not conclusively determined by the town board, but, in the absense of statutory provision to the contrary, may be inquired into collaterally; and the want of such majority may be shown as a defense in an action to collect the assessment.—Aplin, Auditor General v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128.

IV. PROPOSALS, CONTRACTS AND BONDS.

Liability of abutters, private persons and corporations to indemnify or exonerate the public, see Highways, XII, G, 2.

¶ 97. No contract for paving can be made until the common council has submitted the matter to the board of public works for estimates and recommendations and received from that board the reports and information provided for in the public works act. But an assessment will not be held void when this has been done substantially in accordance with the purposes of that act but in an irregular manner.—Wilkins v. City of Detroit, 46 Mich. 120.

¶ 98. Under the charter of Grand Rapids, conferring on the council the power to require and make street improvements, allowing it to proceed therewith and anticipate collection of assessments and taxes, and providing for notice to the taxpayers after the assessments and in relation thereto, and requiring no other notice, it is not necessary to give them any notice before letting the contract and approving the bond for such work.—Parsons v. City of Grand Rapids, 141 Mich. 467.

§ 34. Advertisements, bids, and letting of contracts.

Necessity of letting contract to lowest bidder, see post § 35.
Extra work and change agreements and new or additional contracts, see post § 36.
Effect of defective advertisement, see post ¶ 338.
Bids and letting of public contracts in general, see Public Contracts, II.

¶ 99. Notices to bidders must contain the substantial requisites of specifications, so that bidders can from such notices obtain the information necessary to enable them to prepare their bids.—Wilkins v. City of Detroit, 46 Mich. 120.

¶ 100. Under a municipal charter which requires contracts to be publicly let to the lowest responsible bidder it is not necessary, in advertising for proposals to pave a street, that the kind of pavement should be specified. The charter provision aims, for the public benefit, to secure competition among contractors for public works and supplies, and necessarily leaves something to the discretion of the city authorities, who must determine in each case what competition the nature of the case will admit of, and the best method to secure it.—Attorney General ex rel. Cook v. City of Detroit, 26 Mich. 263.

¶ 101. A city charter (Local Laws 1889, title 13, § 3, p. 945) provided that, when the making of a public improvement should have been determined upon, the board of public works should advertise for proposals for furnishing the material and for the performance of the work. No time was fixed for which the publication should continue. An improvement having been ordered by the council, the board instructed its clerk to "advertise for proposals" until a certain date, but the first publication was not made until three days after such direction had been given. Held, that the board, by receiving bids at the time specified, would be presumed to have ratified the action of the clerk, and determined that the advertisement was for a sufficient period.—Duffy v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 335.

¶ 102. Where a statute required that the board of public works should advertise for paving bids, an advertisement was held sufficient that purported to issue from the office of the board, signed with the name of its president, and stating that bidders must file with the board a satisfactory bond, and which was afterward acted upon by that body.—Beniteau v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 116.

¶ 103. A street-paving bid is not defective in not distinguishing between the portions of the improvement chargeable to the lots fronting on the street, and the portion chargeable to the city, where the relative proportions have already been fixed.—Beniteau v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 116.

¶ 104. Whether, where work to be done under a municipal contract involves operations the difficulty and cost of which cannot be accurately foreseen, there can be any flexibility in the terms of the contract and any scope for a choice among bids, quære.—McBrian v. City of Grand Rapids, 56 Mich. 95.

¶ 105. Under a charter which requires that contracts be let to the lowest bidder, the city council has no power to release the lowest bidder from his offer, claimed to be a mistake, without advertising again, and allowing the other bidders to revise their bids; and an assessment based upon such proceedings is void.—Twiss v. City of Port Huron, 63 Mich. 528.

¶ 106. Complainant made a bid to defendant village on a paving job and the bid was accepted by resolution of the village council. Defendant expected to raise the funds to meet the contract by special assessment. It later learned that its taxing power was not adequate to do this and rescinded its former action, no written contract having been executed. There was evidence that complainant and defendant at the time of the acceptance of complainant's bid expected a formal written contract would be entered into. Held, no valid contract resulted.—Central Bitulithic Paving Co. v. Village of Highland Park, 164 Mich. 223.

§ 35. ——Necessity of letting contract to lowest bidder.

See also post ¶¶ 118, 119.

¶ 107. In passing upon bids the city authorities may give regard to the relative value of the kinds of paving for which there are bids made; and the rejection of the kind for which the lowest bid is made is not, therefore, necessarily erroneous.—Attorney General ex rel. Cook v. City of Detroit, 26 Mich. 263.

¶ 108. Whether, where there are two bidders upon the same kind of patented pavement, the common council may reject the lowest bid on the ground that those who make it, having no right under the patent to lay the pavement, are not responsible bidders, notwithstanding they have filed a bond of indemnity as required by resolution of the council, and to contract with the next higher bidders who own the patent, quære.—Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 Mich. 263.

¶ 109. An assessment by a village council of a tax to pay for paving, which by ordinance should be let by contract to the lowest bidder, is void, where it appears that no bid was accepted, but there was a writing not purporting to be a bid responsive to the call and not appearing to be the lowest.—Whitney v. Hudson Common Council, 69 Mich. 189.

¶ 110. Where a city charter requires contracts for improvements in any streets to be let by advertisement to the lowest bidder, a contract with the successful bidder to do extra work in raising the grade of a street not included in the original specifications, is a contract for "improvements" within the meaning of the charter.—Peterson v. City of Ionia, 152 Mich. 678.

¶ 111. The charter of Grand Rapids, title 6, § 15, provides that the plans and specifications of the work for the payment of which an assessment is ordered to be made may be changed, and the work added to or diminished, at any time before the completion of the assessment roll therefor. Held, that this does not enable the council to add to a contract for grading a street another contract for paving the gutters in such street, thus materially increasing the cost of the work over the estimate of the board of public works, and over the contract price, without again seeking competitive bids and letting the contract to the lowest bidder as required by the charter.—Ely v. City of Grand Rapids, 84 Mich. 336.

¶ 113. Local Acts 1897, No. 448, § 120 (Charter of Bay City), provides by implication for the letting of contracts on bids to the lowest bidder, and section 134, authorizing "changes," was not intended to confer the power to dispense with the formalities of a new contract after the original plan had been changed.—Auditor General v. Stoddard, 147 Mich. 329.

¶ 114. A special assessment levied on a resolution of the common council of Bay City which changed a contract regularly let for the construction of street pavements so as to widen the pavement, after work had been commenced under the original plan and contract is invalid; the charter provision authorizing changes in a contract (Local Acts 1897, No. 448, § 134) was not intended to confer the power to dispense with the formalities of a new contract after an original plan has been changed; and the facts that only a mathematical calculation is required to determine the cost of the additional work, that the original contract provided that changes could be made when necessary, or when deemed advisable by the city engineer, and that the right was reserved without incurring any increased liability as to price to increase or diminish the amount of work or material within limits deemed advisable by the common council did not authorize the council to make the change in the contract by resolution after work had been commenced.—Auditor General v. Stoddard, 147 Mich. 329.

§ 37. Requisites, validity, interpretation, and effect of contracts.

¶ 115. Under an authority in the charter to provide funds for the construction of pavements, the contracts for pavement may be made to include grading, curb-stones, gutters and cross-walks.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 116. Plaintiff contracted with the defendant city to build a sewer between certain designated points, according to plans on file, for a specified price "per lineal foot." From the plans it appeared that part of the sewer was to consist of a single cylinder, 9 feet in diameter, and the remainder, of two parallel cylinders, each 6 feet, 8 inches, in diameter, with concrete between. The word "sewer," however, was used throughout to indicate the structure in all its parts. Held, that each cylinder should not be treated as a separate sewer in determining the amount to which plaintiff was entitled, but that payment should be limited to the number of lineal feet of the entire structure.—Campau v. City of Detroit, 106 Mich. 414.

§ 38. ——Stipulations as to hours or working conditions.

¶ 117. A city, which is required by its charter to let contracts in excess of two hundred dollars to the lowest responsible bidder, cannot by ordinance impose a condition upon contract work as to the number of hours work per day which a contractor may require of his workmen.—Attorney General ex rel. Hudson v. City of Detroit, 153 Mich. 525.

§ 39. Contracts specifying patented or monopolized materials.

¶ 118. The fact that an article is patented does not necessarily prevent any person but the patentee from contracting to supply it; others may do so, taking the risk of being able to obtain the patentee's license. Therefore the fact that the charter provides that contracts by the city shall be made with the lowest bidder, after advertisement for proposals, does not prevent the city letting a contract for paving a street with a patented pavement, notwithstanding the only bidder is the owner of the patent.—Hobart v. City of Detroit, 17 Mich. 246; Motz v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

¶ 119. Under a charter provision providing that paving shall be done upon contracts and specifications prepared by the board of public works which shall advertise for proposals and which may contract with the lowest bidder, a city is not precluded from specifying, as the material to be used, some article which by reason of patent or of circumstances is in the hands or under the control of a single dealer.—Holmes v. Common Council of Detroit, 120 Mich. 226.

§ 40. Letting work without formal competitive contract.

See also ante ¶ 106.

¶ 120. The commissioner of public works, with the approval of the common council of Detroit, contracted with certain parties to build certain sidewalk intersections. The work did not proceed satisfactorily, and the commissioner, with the approval of the board, contracted with the relator to put in specific intersections. The council did not approve this contract until after relator had completed the work. Held, the contract with relator was invalid under § 240 of the city charter, requiring consent of the council to such contracts, and that the subsequent approval of the council was not a valid ratification.—Garner v. Doremus, 154 Mich. 323.

¶ 121. In grading a street neither the contractor nor the city has a right to deposit earth outside of the lines of the street, without the consent of the owner, for the purpose of supporting the embankment made by filling in the street.—Davies v. City of East Saginaw, 66 Mich. 37.

¶ 122. The act of depositing earth on an abutter's lot in paving a roadway in the street, being unnecessary, was not the natural result of making the improvement, and the trespass was one, therefore, for which the contractor, and not the city, was liable.—Fuller v. City of Grand Rapids, 105 Mich. 529.

§ 42. Waiver or estoppel to assert claim.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 123. By joining in a petition for grading a street, and by allowing, without objection, work to be completed according to the actual grade with which he is familiar, a lot-owner

estops himself from claiming damages resulting from the grading.—Collins v. City of Grand Rapids, 95 Mich. 286.

¶ 124. A lot-owner who, with full knowledge of the situation, joins in a petition to the common council of a city to establish the grade of and improve a street upon which his lots abut, and who makes no objections on the review of the assessment roll for said improvement, upon which he is assessed a certain sum as benefits, which he voluntarily pays, has had his day in court, and cannot afterwards be heard in an independent proceeding to recover damages for the stoppage of water and the temporary flowage of his land caused by such improvement, he having failed to exercise his right to appear before the city council and urge his claim for such damages.—Hembling v. City of Big Rapids, 89 Mich. 1.

VI. LEVYING AND MAKING ASSESSMENTS.

A. IN GENERAL.

Assessments distinguished from taxes, see Taxes, I.
Provisions for improvement of rural highways by local assessment, see Comp. L. 1915, § 4671 et seq.

¶ 125. The whole theory of a legal assessment depends upon a uniform rule of charges within some defined district, and resting on some intelligible principle.—Clay v. City of Grand Rapids, 60 Mich. 451.

¶ 126. The theory sustaining levies for sewer improvements is that the party assessed is locally and pecuniarily benefited over and above the ordinary benefit which as one of the community he receives in all public improvements to the precise extent of the assessment.—Kuick v. City of Grand Rapids, 200 Mich. 582.

¶ 127. The sole ground for imposing a part or all of the cost of a public improvement upon a part of a municipality is that the part burdened with the cost receives corresponding benefits which the general public does not receive.—German Luth. Church Soc. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 179 Mich. 35.

¶ 128. Assessments or taxes for local special improvements are sustained on the theory that the premises are bettered by the improvement.—Woodmere Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Detroit, 192 Mich. 553. (Brooke, J., dissenting.)

¶ 129. Assessments or taxes for local special improvements are not "taxes," within the proper meaning of that word, but represent a value or betterment added to the land itself.—Woodmere Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Detroit, 192 Mich. 553. (Brooke, J., dissenting.)

¶ 130. An assessment for a public improvement must deal with the entire expense.—City of Manistee v. Harley, 79 Mich. 238.

¶ 131. An assessment for a public improvement must act upon all persons and property concerned. It cannot be made by separate action for each person or each piece of land.—City of Manistee v. Harley, 79 Mich. 238.

§ 44. Beneficial character of work or improvement.

See also ante ¶ 127.

Relation of benefits to assessment, see post § 68.

¶ 132. A law permitting a city to assess abutting owners for the cost of sprinkling the streets is unconstitutional, since the sprinkling does not add to the value of the land.—City of Kalamazoo v. Crawford, 154 Mich. 58. (Montgomery, Blair and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 133. A statute authorizing a municipal corporation to pass an ordinance requiring the cost of street sprinkling to be assessed upon the abutting land in proportion to frontage, is void, on the ground that a local assessment can only rest upon a substantial enhancement of value in the land assessed.—Stevens v. City of Port Huron, 149 Mich. 536. (Moore, Blair and Montgomery, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 45. Replacement or reconstruction work.

Repaving and replacement funds, see ante § 15.

¶ 134. In an action by a city to recover from an abutting property owner a special assessment for the repavement of a street, held that the city by its election, when the street was originally paved, to charge the entire cost thereof to the city at large, did not thereby estop itself from assessing the cost of the repavement against the abutting property owners, as such a conclusion would not only be unreasonable but contrary to a section of the city charter providing that the city should have power to pave and repave streets, etc., and to cause the expense thereof, or any part thereof, to be paid by the city or assessed on adjacent property owners.—City of Kalamazoo v. Perrin, 194 Mich. 484.

¶ 135. Under a charter provision that where a street has been graded and paved at the expense of the abutting owners, such owners shall not be liable for any assessment occasioned by any subsequent change of grade in such pavement unless petitioned for by a majority of the owners, an assessment may be levied without such petition for the cost of changing a cobblestone pavement which had been laid at the expense of the abutting owners, to an asphalt pavement, though the change may also necessitate a slight change in the grave of the pavement since in such case the assessment cannot be said to be occasioned by a change of grade.—Auditor General v. Chase, 132 Mich. 630.

¶ 135a. Where abutting owners have been assessed for grading and paving a street, they cannot, under a charter which provides that "the cost of all repaving of streets shall be paid out of the repairing fund," be again assessed for repaving the old roadway and extension thereof caused by widening the roadway so as to include 15 feet on each side previously occupied by grass and trees.—Wreford v. City of Detroit, 132 Mich. 348.

§ 46. Power and authority to make assessments.

Proper body, board or officer to make assessments, see post § 47.

Power and authority to establish size and limits of district, see post § 62.

Power to exempt from assessment by contract, see post § 59.

Power and authority to levy reassessments, see post § 89.

Power and authority to make assessments without opportunity for hearing, see also post ¶ 280.

Mandamus to compel levy of assessments in general, see Mandamus § 87.

Local assessments for laying out private road, see Highways § 417.

Power of municipal corporations in general, see Municipal Corporations, III.

¶ 136. A valid assessment by municipal authorities requires a valid statutory provision to warrant it.—Motz v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

¶ 137. Grants of power to make local assessments are strictly construed and must be strictly followed.—Whitney v. Hudson Common Council, 69 Mich. 189.

¶ 138. A village has no power to extend a sewer assessment over a number of years in the absence of any statute conferring such power.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 132 Mich. 152.

¶ 139. Laws 1883, Act No. 124, which provides that if the common council believes that a portion of the city in the vicinity of the proposed improvement will be benefited thereby, it may determine that the whole or any just proportion of the compensation awarded by the jury shall be assessed upon the owners or occupants of real estate deemed to be benefited, and that they shall thereupon by resolution fix the district benefited, and specify the amount to be assessed, is not invalid as conferring arbitrary power upon the council.—Beecher v. City of Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

§ 47. Proper board, body, or officer to make assessments.

Proper body or officer to change or revise assessment, see also post § 85.

¶ 140. When a charter (East Saginaw charter—Act 246 of 1859; Sess. L. 1859, p. 1011, § 38) gives the common council the power, upon ordering a public improvement, of "designating and directing three resident freeholders * * * to make an assessment upon all the owners, etc., of the amount of expense in proportion, as nearly as may be, to the advantage which each shall be deemed to acquire by the making of such improvements," it does not authorize the council to give directions to the commissioners which shall govern them in making the assessment. It is the judgment of the commissioners and not of the common council which is to determine this.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

§ 48. Predetermination of district to be assessed.

Assessment districts and relation to area of benefit, see post §§ 60-62.

¶ 141. Where the tax is not general, the proper, if not the necessary, course is to define the taxing district in advance; but where such a course could not be resorted to in harmony with the general purposes of the statute, without placing the assessment of damages and of benefits from the proposed improvement in different hands, to be managed separately, it would not be practicable to adopt it.—Powers' Appeal, 29 Mich. 504.

§ 49. Information, data and details on which to base assessment.

Items, expenses and charges to be included in the assessment, see post § 66.

¶ 142. The validity of a special assessment does not depend upon the fact whether or not the members of the council have viewed the property assessed, or the assessment district, with reference to that particular action. Aldermen are expected to have a general knowledge of the geography as well as the topography of their own city, and to know the location and condition of its streets, and to act upon information furnished by committees whose duty it is to collect data and arrange details.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

¶ 143. The validity of a special assessment is not affected by the fact that the assessor or city engineer furnished the information or data upon which the council acted, or because the officers actually outlined the assessment district, provided their action was adopted, approved and confirmed by the council.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

§ 50. Presumption as to validity of assessment.

Invalid assessments and relief therefrom, see post VII.

¶ 144. The presumption is in favor of the validity of a special assessment.—Auditor General v. Maier, 95 Mich. 127.

¶ 145. There is a presumption in favor of proper, as distinguished from improper, official action, and taxpayers have the right to assume that sewer improvements will be made by a city and the cost thereof levied and collected as provided by law.—Kuick v. City of Grand Rapids, 200 Mich. 582.

¶ 146. It will not be presumed, in the absence of clear proof, that there has been an intentional violation of their official oaths by officers making assessments for the expense of a public improvement.—Shimmons v. City of Saginaw, 104 Mich. 511.

¶ 147. Where in paving a street occupied by a street-car company the company was assessed only for the paving between its tracks, it is presumed on a record silent as to those facts that the ordinance under which the company operates only requires it to pay for improvements between its tracks, and not according to benefits, where otherwise the assessment might have been invalid.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

B. PERSONS, PROPERTY AND DISTRICTS ASSESSABLE.

§ 51. Persons assessable in general.

Property liable to or exempt from assessment, see post §§ 52-59.
Assessment districts and relation to area of benefit, see post §§ 60-63.
Relation of benefits to assessments in general, see post § 68.
Apportioning cost between local assessment and general fund, see ante § 12.
Liability for costs and funds, appropriations and provisions to meet same, see ante II.
Nonbeneficial taxes in general, see Taxes, II, A.
Procedure to levy and spread assessments for drains, see Drains, II, C.
Persons, objects and interests taxable in general, see Taxes, II.

¶ 148. The common council cannot, by calling a sewer a street improvement, throw the cost of building it upon the few fronting owners who would be called upon to pay for a simple repair of the street.—Clay v. City of Grand Rapids, 60 Mich. 451.

¶¶ 149, 150. Under the charter of Grand Rapids requiring unoccupied lots belonging to a resident of the city to be assessed to him, an assessment in the name of the owner's wife is void.—Hiel v. Warrell, 87 Mich. 135.

§ 52. Property liable to or exempt from assessment.

Beneficial proximity or abuttal on place improvement, see post § 53.
Property awarded damages for injury from improvement, see post § 54.
Public property or property in public use, see post § 55.
Railroads and public service properties, see post § 56.
Cemetery property, see post § 57.
Lands sold for delinquent taxes, see post § 58.
Contracts exempting or relieving from assessment, see post § 59.
Assessment districts and relation to area of benefit, see post §§ 60-63.
Apportioning cost between local assessment and general fund, see ante § 12.

Disability to levy assessment on whole tract where only one lot thereof is within assessment district, see also post ¶ 183.
Amount to be assessed and items to be included, see post VI, C.
Tax exemptions in general, see Taxes, III.
Exemption of houses of public worship from taxation and extension of exemption to local assessments, see Taxes, III.
Construction and effect of tax exemptions to include or exclude exemption from local assessments, see Taxes, III.

¶ 151. It is within the power of the legislature to say that real estate alone shall be subject to special assessment for local improvements, since the benefits therefrom almost always accrue exclusively to lands.—City of Detroit v. Weil, 180 Mich. 593.

¶ 152. The right to assess land for a local improvement does not depend upon the use to which the owner may choose to put such land, or whether he may see fit to put it to any use.—Powers v. City of Grand Rapids, 98 Mich. 393.

§ 53. ——Beneficial proximity or abuttal on place improved.

¶ 153. The legislature may confer power on municipal corporations to determine over what territory the benefits accruing from local improvements are diffused so as to permit a special assessment therefor to be spread on all the lands within the city limits.—City of Detroit v. Weil, 180 Mich. 593.

¶ 154. The fact that a parcel of land is separated from a street by a narrow strip does not necessarily make it exempt from assessment for street improvements; where it adjoined on land which does abut and the two parcels are used as one.—Parsons v. City of Grand Rapids, 141 Mich. 467.

¶ 155. Complainant is the owner of the river front on each side of the western terminus of Bridge street bridge (which spans Grand river in the city of Grand Rapids, and connects east and west Bridge streets), and has constructed, and maintained for some time, between the dock line and the original river bank, a canal, which is used to furnish power to factories in the vicinity. Over the east bank of the canal, on the south side of and facing the bridge, complainant has erected a brick building, and upon his application the common council caused the removal of the south rail of the bridge, thus giving access to the building from the southerly footway of the bridge, such building being also accessible from West Bridge street via an intersecting street, and a private bridge erected by the complainant over the canal in the rear of said building. The land in question was assessed on account of the expense of paving West Bridge street, and complainant objects to the assessment on the ground that the land is in the bed of the river, and does not abut upon and is not accessible from said street. Held, the objection is untenable.—Powers v. City of Grand Rapids, 98 Mich. 393.

§ 54. ——Property awarded damages for injury from improvement.

Relation of damages to assessment, see post § 69.

¶ 156. An award of damages for injury to property from opening a street is not a bar to an assessment against the same land for benefits arising from such improvement.—Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 92 Mich. 564.

§ 55. ——Public property or property in public use.

¶ 157. Being one of the political subdivisions of the state, a county is impliedly exempt from taxation not only under the general law but for assessments for sewers, etc.—City of Big Rapids v. Mecosta County Sup'rs, 99 Mich. 351.

¶ 158. A city cannot assess a county's public property, such as a court house and jail, and the land they lie upon, for a local improvement such as a sewer.—City of Big Rapids v. Mecosta County Sup'rs, 99 Mich. 351.

¶ 159. The charter of Detroit provides that for paving public streets, the lots fronting thereon shall be assessed according to frontage. A public park constituted about one-fourth of the frontage of a street ordered to be paved. Held, such park was not exempted from its share of the special tax.—Newberry v. City of Detroit, 164 Mich. 410.

¶ 160. Real estate, consisting of vacant unimproved lots, owned by the regents of the state university, but not being used for governmental purposes of the university, is subject to a special assessment for local improvements.—Auditor General v. MacKinnon Boiler & Machine Co., 199 Mich. 489. (Ostrander and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

§ 56. ——Railroads and public service properties.

¶ 161. A railroad company is not liable to assessment for paving a street because its track is located therein, and abuts upon the section of the street so improved, although the assessment is made according to frontage.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

¶ 162. Property of a railroad company, consisting of a freight house and a portion of its road-bed and right of way, cannot be sold for nonpayment of assessments thereon for local improvements on the theory that being a terminal the sale would not affect the rights of the public.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 102 Mich. 374.

¶ 163. A section of the right of way of a railroad company, occupied by its tracks and used for no other purpose, cannot be assessed for the expense of improving a street which crosses it, under a city charter requiring such assessments to be made according to benefits received.—Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 106 Mich. 13.

§ 57. ——Cemetery property.

¶ 164. Under an act constituting the charter of a rural cemetery association (Comp. L. 1915, § 11160 et seq.) and providing that the land is "wholly exempt from taxation of any kind whatsoever" and in view of the policy of the state towards cemeteries and the inalienability of the lands from cemetery uses, such land in a cemetery in the city of Detroit by reason of extension of the city limits is not subject to local assessment.—Woodmere Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Detroit, 192 Mich. 553 (equal division of court, four justices holding that such lands were subject though inalienable by sale for delinquent assessments).

¶ 165. Dictum, that the legislature has undoubted power to exempt cemetery lands from assessments.—Woodmere Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Detroit, 192 Mich. 553, per Ostrander, J.

§ 58. ——Lands sold for delinquent taxes.

¶ 166. Special assessments for local improvements are not within § 130 of Act No. 206 of Pub. Acts 1893 as amended by Act No. 107 of Pub. Acts 1899 and Act No. 211 of Pub. Acts 1905, How. 2nd Ed., § 1901, providing that all taxes charged against lands sold for delinquent taxes in the office of the auditor-general at the time they are deeded to the state shall be canceled and such lands omitted and canceled from the assessment rolls and not be liable for any assessment until again sold and deeded by the state.—Case v. City of Saginaw, 196 Mich. 687. (Equally divided court.)

§ 59. ——Contracts exempting or relieving from assessment.

Parol evidence that boulevard was given to public on consideration of exemption from local assessments, see Evidence § 161, ¶ 853.

Invalidity of condition in deed to city that other lands should be exempt from assessments, see Deeds ¶ 302.

¶ 167. A city has no power to contract that certain land shall be exempt from special assessments for public improvements, since the statutes require it to establish assessment districts which must include all lands benefited.—Leggett v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 247.

¶ 168. A grantor in conveying a strip of land to the City of Detroit for a public boulevard, stated in the deed that the conveyance was made as contemplated by Act No. 374, Local Acts 1879, which provided that improvements should be made in the boulevard by general taxation. The board of public works in accepting the grant agreed that the abutting land should not be subject to taxation for improvements. Act No. 374 was repealed. Held, there was a binding contract on the city that the grantor should not be liable for a sidewalk assessment.—Scovel v. City of Detroit, 159 Mich. 95.

¶ 169. Where the construction of a storm-water sewer was necessitated in part by the act of a property owner, and a common council enters into an agreement with such owner within a district assessed for cost of the sewer construction whereby the property owner is virtually relieved of his proportionate share of the cost, such proceedings should be had as will cause such owner to bear his share of the cost of the improvement.—Berston v. City of Flint, 176 Mich. 266.

§ 60. Assessment districts and relation to area of benefit.

Division of parcels or inclusion in more than one district, see post § 61.

Power and authority to establish size and limits of district, see post § 62.

Conclusiveness of action as to property benefited, see post § 63.

Predetermination of district to be assessed, see ante § 48.

Apportioning cost between local assessment and general fund, see ante § 12.

Place or district for taxation, see Taxes, IV.

¶ 170. To every legal assessment there must be an assessing district, and this must be designated before the assessment can be apportioned and the burden imposed.—Kinnie v. Bare, 68 Mich. 625.

¶ 171. It is illegal to make a private property of small extent assume the name of an assessment district.—Clay v. City of Grand Rapids, 60 Mich. 451.

¶ 172. A taxing district cannot be fixed so that it has no public character, and so as to make a purely private charge under pretense of setting it off.—City of Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503.

¶ 173. Where a common council in fixing the boundaries of a special assessment district for the construction of a sewer, includes therein land not draining into the sewer and excludes therefrom land which must drain into it, thus ignoring known or ascertainable facts, its action is invalid.—Lawrence v. City of Grand Rapids, 166 Mich. 134.

¶ 174. Although natural drainage should be taken into account in fixing the limits of a special assessment district and in the apportionment of benefits where the sewers serve the purpose for which storm drains separate from sewers are sometimes constructed, property benefited otherwise than by surface drainage should be considered as enjoying an additional benefit and advantage on account of said sewers.—Lawrence v. City of Grand Rapids, 166 Mich. 134.

¶ 175. The designation of a taxing district by its street frontage between certain terminal points, a railroad and a bridge, where that method of assessment is to be followed, is a sufficient compliance with a charter provision (Local Acts 1885, No. 318, chap. 22, § 7) requiring the common council, in cases of special assessments, to "describe or designate the lots and premises or locality to be assessed."—City of Kalamazoo v. Francoise, 115 Mich. 554.

¶ 176. The carving out of a special assessment district in a city is a practical matter, depending wholly upon the facts, and if the improvement is a sewer, it cannot be supposed that the governing body can fix the boundaries of the district precisely in accordance with the boundaries of property benefited by the improvement.—Lawrence v. City of Grand Rapids, 166 Mich. 134.

¶ 177. An assessment made under How. St. § 3064o providing that if the common council believe that a portion of the city in the vicinity of a proposed improvement will be benefited thereby, they may assess owners or occupants deemed to be thus benefited, and shall fix the district to be benefited, does not limit the assessment district to lots fronting on a proposed street opening and extension.—Goodrich v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 559, aff'd in 184 U. S. 432, 46 L. ed. 627, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

¶ 178. The charter of the village of Hudson (Laws 1867, Act No. 266, § 38) provides that the council may levy a tax for paving streets upon such premises as in their opinion are benefited thereby. Held, that a resolution to pave a part of a street, constituting "the real estate abutting or adjoining said street the taxation district" for such purpose, is illegal as not specifying a definite taxing district.—Whitney v. Hudson Common Council, 69 Mich. 189.

¶ 179. Where under proceedings to pave a street, instituted by a city incorporated under the general law (How. St., ch. 80), a plat and diagram of the proposed improvement has been filed with the city clerk, in compliance with section 2645, which includes all the parcels of land abutting on the portion of the street that is to be paved, and gives the relative location of each lot or parcel, the lot numbers, the names of the various plats in cases where the land has been platted, the frontage and boundary lines of each parcel, and the name of the owner of each, a resolution of the council designating the district to be assessed as "all the lots, premises, and parcels of land fronting upon" such portion of the street, "as shown by a map of the proposed district on file in the office of the city clerk," sufficiently defines the assessment district.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

¶ 180. The passing of a resolution instructing the city surveyor to make a plat including the property liable for special assessments for a proposed improvement, followed by the making of such plat showing the location of each lot, the numbers and the frontage of each parcel, and the filing of the plat in the city clerk's office, was a sufficient designation of the district to be assessed within Comp. L. 1897, § 3198.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

§ 61. ——Division of parcels or inclusion in more than one district.

¶ 181. Where the paving for which the assessment is made terminates in the middle of a block, it is no valid objection to such assessment that the assessment district divides a block. The amended Detroit charter (Laws of 1869, Act No. 486, ch. 7, § 39; Sess. Laws 1869, p. 1724) did not require that paving shall be extended further than the public needs require in order to make a cross-street its terminus.—Brevoort v. City of Detroit, 24 Mich. 322.

¶ 182. Corner lots abutting on two streets may be included as an entire parcel in two assessment districts where both intersecting streets are being paved.—Nowlen v. City of Benton Harbor, 134 Mich. 401.

¶ 183. Where only one lot of a parcel of land owned by complainant is within a special assessment district, it is improper to spread an assessment on the entire parcel, which becomes a lien thereon, as complainant's share of the cost of the improvement.—Grand Haven Basket Factory v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 279.

§ 62. ——Power and authority to establish size and limits of district.

Power of council to reconsider resolution fixing assessment district and change bounds of same, see also ante ¶ 61.

¶ 184. The legislature may empower the common council to determine what property is specially benefited by the improvement, and to define the taxing district accordingly.—Hoyt v. City of East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39.

¶ 185. The charter of Detroit provides that for street-paving purposes the lots fronting on the street shall constitute one local assessment district unless the common council shall subdivide it. Held, that if a resolution of the council declaring that the lots shall constitute one district is necessary at all, it is not fatally defective in not excepting the cost of paving the intersections of the streets from the purposes of the assessment, since the charter also provides that that shall be done by the city.—Beniteau v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 116.

¶ 186. The provisions of the charter of Grand Haven as to the authority of the common council for sanitary purposes to open ditches and drain swamps, marshes and other low-lands, and as to fixing the taxing district for the expense of such improvements, do not apply to sewers, the necessity for the construction of which stands on different considerations from those which pertain to the drainage of the natural surface; the council can designate a local taxing district for the construction of a sewer on the basis of the increase in value of premises benefited.—Warren v. City of Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24.

¶ 187. After the institution of proceedings to pave a street under a charter empowering the city council to fix the assessment district, the charter was so amended as to vest said power in the board of public works. Two days after the amendment had taken effect, the council, in ignorance of the change in the charter, adopted a resolution fixing the assessment district. On learning of the amendment, the council, by resolution, referred the assessment district as fixed to the board of public works, and that body approved the same, but specifically negatived, in a certificate attached to the roll prepared by the city engineer, any claim that the board considered itself bound to limit the assessment for benefits to the district fixed by the council. Held, that the assessment made by the board was valid, though the limits of the district were the same as those fixed by the council.—Shimmons v. City of Saginaw, 104 Mich. 511.

§ 63. ——Conclusiveness of action as to property benefited.

Power of council to reconsider resolution fixing assessment district, see ante ¶ 61.

¶ 188. Where the charter leaves it to the council to fix an assessment district to pay for a street opening, its judgment as to the lands benefited is conclusive.—Brown v. City of Saginaw, 107 Mich. 643.

¶ 189. Where a common council has in good faith, with reference to ascertainable facts, defined a special assessment district, its conclusion is final.—Lawrence v. City of Grand Rapids, 166 Mich. 134.

¶ 190. The fact that a resolution of the common council, providing for the submission to the electors of a proposition to bond the city for the expense of paving a certain part of a street, states that the owners of property abutting on such portion are to pay a specified percentage of the cost of the improvement, will not invalidate the assessment thereafter made, on the ground that it was left to the people to define the assessment district, where such district was afterwards established by the council, in accordance with How. St. § 2644.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

¶ 191. Under Act No. 136, Pub. Acts 1899, the statute leaves it to the council, and not to the courts, to establish and fix special assessment districts for such improvements, and to assess, if they so determine, the whole of the compensation awarded upon the owners of the property included in the district; and in the absence of fraud or bad faith, their judgment is conclusive.—Roberts v. City of Sandusky, 158 Mich. 521.

¶ 192. Where the charter of the city of Flint, as amended by Local Acts 1907, Act No. 554, provides that the cost of constructing a trunkline intercepting sewer "or of such part thereof as shall be designed primarily for the benefit of the health of the whole city" shall be borne absolutely by the city, and the common council determines the special assessment district benefited thereby, it will be presumed that it acted in good faith, where mistake or abuse of discretion is not manifest or demonstrable.—Berston v. City of Flint, 176 Mich. 266.

¶ 193. The determination of a city council of the territory benefited by a local improvement is final and conclusive in the absence of fraud, or unless the absence of benefit makes it manifest that the burden amounts to spoliation and not taxation.—City of Detroit v. Weil, 180 Mich. 593.

¶ 194. The determination of the common council in establishing an assessment district in proceedings for the opening of a street, will not be set aside as an abuse of discretion, in the absence of a showing of fraud, bad faith, or demonstrable abuse, though the district established was 300 feet on each side of the whole length of the street as opened, and complainants claimed that because of the peculiar position of the street, large areas outside of the district were substantially benefited.—Power v. City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 30.

C. AMOUNT TO BE ASSESSED AND ITEMS INCLUDED.

§ 64. In general; limitations on amount or rate.

Cost of improvement as limit, see post § 65.
Items, expenses and charges to be included, see post § 66.
Liability for costs and funds, appropriations and provisions to meet same, see ante II.
Procedure to levy and spread assessments for drains, see Drains, II, C.
Injunction against assessment because of excessive rate, see post ¶ 402.

¶ 195. Comp. L. 1897, § 3196, limiting special assessments to 25 per cent of the valuation as set in the last preceding ward tax roll refers to the assessment contained in the last completed roll upon which, state, county and school taxes have been spread, rather than to the roll of the current year.—Nowlen v. City of Benton Harbor, 134 Mich. 401.

¶ 196. A paving assessment which is divided into five annual instalments, under How. St., § 2658, none of which exceeds five per cent of the assessed valuation of the property within the assessment district, is not in violation of section 2699, limiting the amount to be raised in any one year, in any special assessment district, to five per cent of the assessed valuation of the property included therein.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

¶ 197. Pub. Acts 1899, No. 39, requiring special assessment rolls to pay for street pavings in villages to be made in five parts with an election to pay by installments, did not repeal Comp. L. 1897, § 2856, providing that a village council could raise by special assessment upon lands the cost and expense of grading and paving streets and for making other local improvements, but limiting such assessments in any one year not to exceed five per cent of the assessed valuation of the property in the district chargeable with such expense.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 146 Mich. 597.

¶ 198. A special paving assessment made by a village incorporated under the general village act under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 39, made in five parts payable one each year is but a single assessment, and where made for a larger amount than the five per cent of the assessed valuation of the property in the district chargeable with the expense as provided for by Comp. L. 1897, § 2856, is illegal and invalid as to the designated excess.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 146 Mich. 597.

¶ 199. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3196, the annual tax for paving two intersecting streets as assessed against a corner lot included as an entire parcel in two assessment districts, must be restricted to five per cent of the assessed value.—Nowlen v. City of Benton Harbor, 134 Mich. 401.

¶ 201. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2856, providing that assessments in sewer districts, etc., shall not exceed, in any one year, five per cent of the assessed value of the property, and section 2835 providing that in no case shall the whole amount levied by special assessment exceed 25 per cent of the value of the property, and any cost exceeding that per cent shall be paid from the funds of the village, an assessment of 12½ per cent in one year against a lot is void as to the excess over 5 per cent, the balance being assessable against the general funds.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 132 Mich. 152.

§ 65. Cost of improvement as limit.

¶ 202. Under Local Acts 1907, No. 546, City of Mt. Clemens has no right to assess abutting property for a greater sum than the cost of the construction of a sewer.—German Luth. Church Soc. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 179 Mich. 35.

¶ 203. Special assessments on abutting property benefited by the construction of a sewer must conform to the cost of the improvement, and an assessment for a sum in excess of the cost cannot be collected.—German Luth. Church Soc. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 179 Mich. 35.

§ 66. Items, expenses, and charges to be included.

Information, data and details on which to base assessment, see ante § 49.

¶ 204. A city may impose on abutting property as a part of a special assessment for the construction of a pavement, a charge for its maintenance for the ensuing ten years.—Newberry v. City of Detroit, 184 Mich. 188.

¶ 205. A city may not impose as a part of a special assessment for the construction of a pavement, a profit charge for the benefit of the general road fund of the municipality.—Newberry v. City of Detroit, 184 Mich. 188.

¶ 206. The cost of engineering and printing are legitimate expenses incident to a public improvement, and are properly included in the assessment therefor.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 207. Cost of advertising for bids, superintendence, etc., is properly included in an assessment for street paving.—Beniteau v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 116.

¶ 208. The expenses of the board of review, the cost of making the estimates, plans and assessments, of printing, abstracts of title, and books for making the assessment rolls, are required to be included in the expense of a public improvement in Grand Rapids under its charter, title 6, § 3 (Local Acts 1883, No. 258).—Thayer v. City of Grand Rapids, 82 Mich. 298.

¶ 209. There is no constitutional objection to adding a percentage of the estimated cost of a public improvement to cover contingent expenses as provided under Comp. L. 1897, § 4354.—Auditor General v. Melze, 124 Mich. 285.

¶ 210. The measure of the benefit, if any, acquired by a parcel of land by a public improvement is, under the charter of the city of Grand Rapids, for the common council, and board of review and equalization, who are by the charter constituted commissioners to make the assessment, to determine.—Powers v. City of Grand Rapids, 98 Mich. 393.

¶ 211. Where by a city charter the common council is to determine the proportion of the expense of an improvement which is to be assessed upon the owners of the premises benefited, they cannot delegate this authority to commissioners.—Scofield v. City of Lansing, 17 Mich. 437.

¶ 212. The apportionment of a sewer tax among individuals or between lots with reference to benefits may, under the charter of Grand Haven, be lawfully devolved upon one or more assessors chosen by the council; such a duty, requiring for its proper performance an examination of the several premises in detail, and involving merely administrative functions, does not properly belong to the council.—Warren v. City of Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24.

¶ 213. The legislature may authorize the apportionment of the tax, after the district benefited has been defined by the common council of the municipality, to be made by commissioners.—Hoyt v. City of East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39.

¶ 214. A resolution of the Detroit Common Council that the property within an assessment district is benefited by a proposed street opening, followed by a direction that there should be levied upon the lands included in the assessment, the amount of the benefit in proportion to the advantage to each parcel, and a direction to the assessors in making the roll, to assess and levy the amount in question, each lot to be assessed in ratable proportion; was a substantial compliance with the statute requiring a determination by the proper authority of the actual benefit received.—Goodrich v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 559. Affirmed in 184 U. S. 432, 46 L. ed. 627, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

¶ 215. The City of Port Huron directed its city engineer to make out a special assessment roll for a sewer improvement. The engineer in his certificate stated that he had apportioned the amounts assessed against each parcel of land according to benefits, etc., and in so doing had taken into account the area of the same. The council confirmed the roll submitted by the engineer. Held, that, leaving out of consideration the question of the validity of an assessment levied according to area, the steps taken were sufficient to exclude the objection that the engineer, and not the council, had made the assessment of benefits.—Auditor General v. Bishop, 161 Mich. 117.

¶ 216. An assessment for sewer improvements cannot exceed the benefit to be derived from the improvements.—Kuick v. City of Grand Rapids, 200 Mich. 582.

¶ 217. The benefit accruing to an owner of property when a sewer is constructed in the street upon which the property abuts does not necessarily depend upon the use to which the property is devoted, and an owner of vacant property is benefited, perhaps quite as much as the owner of an apartment housing a large number of people, since with the sewer once laid his property may be devoted to a like purpose.—Lawrence v. City of Grand Rapids, 166 Mich. 134.

¶ 218. On a bill to enjoin a special assessment to pay the cost of a sewer, it was held that the assessment was not improper on the ground that it was in excess of the jurisdiction of the Board of Assessors as conferring no benefit upon plaintiff's property different from benefits conferred upon other property in the community; that plaintiff's property was not benefited in such a special and peculiar way as to warrant its inclusion in a special assessment district, and that the fact that the property was within the drainage area of the sewer, did not warrant the imposition of a special assessment so long as the drainage area of the property was not improved and so long as actual connection with the sewer was not furnished.—Graham v. City of Grand Rapids, 179 Mich. 378.

¶ 219. In rural highway improvement assessment proceedings under Pub. Acts 1915, No. 59, it must be presumed, in absence of proof, that the benefits to be received by those who pay for them, both individuals and townships, equal the costs assessed against them.—Loomis v. Rogers, 197 Mich. 265.

¶ 220. The matter of the award of damages for the taking cannot be considered in making the assessment for benefits of a street opening.—Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 92 Mich. 564.

¶ 221. Where the assessment in street opening proceedings upon an owner by a city council for benefits from improvements is made equal to the damages awarded to such owner for land taken, this assessment, though manifestly unfair, will not of itself constitute fraud so as to make it reviewable by the courts.—Roberts v. City of Sandusky, 158 Mich. 521.

¶ 222. It is necessary that there be separate finding of damages and benefits.—City of Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503; City of Detroit v. Chaffee, 68 Mich. 635; City of Detroit v. Beecher, 69 Mich. 15; City of Detroit v. Sauer, 69 Mich. 164.

¶ 223. Assessments, whether based on benefits from the opening of a public way or on any other legal burden, must be spread over the taxing district according to some uniformly applied rule, and in such a way as to show a compliance with that rule.—City of Detroit v. Daly, 68 Mich. 503.

¶ 224. Under How. St. § 3064o, the apportionment of street opening benefits cannot be made upon any uniform rule, but should be in proportion to the benefits resulting to each parcel; and not values alone, but needs, necessities and advantages, must be considered.—Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 92 Mich. 564.

¶ 225. The legislature cannot authorize the governing body of a municipality to fix an arbitrary basis for an assessment to be imposed upon property without regard to benefits.—German Luth. Church Soc. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 179 Mich. 35.

¶ 226. Local Acts of 1899, No. 408, § 6, assessing the cost of laying a water pipe in front of each lot, the proportion to be ascertained "by finding the ratio which the narrowest frontage of said lot bears to the entire frontage on both sides of the street or alley in the block," is void.—Blades v. Board of Water Com'rs of Detroit, 122 Mich. 366.

¶ 227. Comp. L. 1897, § 3406, providing that "the amount of the benefit (from a street opening) thus ascertained shall be assessed" upon the owners "in proportion as nearly as may be to the advantage" derived from the improvement, impliedly limits the assessment to the amount of benefits.—Voight v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 547. Affirmed in 184 U. S. 115, 46 L. ed. 459, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337.

¶ 228. In apportioning benefits of a street opening there need not be a separate finding of the increased values of all the pieces of property in the assessed district.—Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 92 Mich. 564.

¶ 229. The fact that a lot was inclosed and was part of an orchard does not make it occupied land if the owner or his agent did not gather fruit from it; and the land must be assessed as vacant.—Hill v. Warrell, 87 Mich. 185.

§ 71. ——On basis of superficial area of property.

¶ 230. A statute authorizing an assessment, according to superficial area, upon such lots as the common council shall determine are increased in market value by a municipal improvement, whether such lots are contiguous or not, or whether city lots or outlots, is unconstitutional.—Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155.

¶ 231. Assessments for sewers levied according to the superficial area of lots, without regard to actual or probable benefits, are unlawful; and though the legislature can prescribe the rule for apportioning benefits in levying such assessments, the rule must at least be one which it is legally possible may be just and equal as between the parties assessed.—Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155.

¶ 232. Assessments for sewers cannot be levied according to the superficial area of lots, without regard to actual or probable benefits.—Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155.

¶ 233. An apportionment of benefits in levying a special assessment for a sewer should not be based solely on area of property.—Lawrence v. City of Grand Rapids, 166 Mich. 134.

¶ 234. Where from the record itself it appears that an assessment upon city lots for a sewer improvement has been made upon a flat rate according to area, instead of according to benefits, the assessment is invalid.—Auditor General v. Bishop, 161 Mich. 117.

¶ 235. In an action to contest a tax assessed for the construction of a sewer, the cost being assessed upon the basis of square feet, the assessment of all the lots in a certain block the same amount per square foot, the lots being along one side of the block, is not an equal assessment in proportion to the benefits derived, even though the sewer was intended to take the surface water from the entire block; nevertheless, the sewer was also designed to furnish and does furnish drainage for the lots fronting the street and as necessary to those lots as to contestant's lot, while none of the lots on the opposite side of the street can be drained into the sewer.—Auditor General v. O'Neill, 143 Mich. 343.

§ 72. ——On basis of foot frontage.

Method of determining frontage of abutting real estate, see ante ¶ 41.

¶ 236. It is competent for the legislature to authorize the cost of paving a street to be assessed upon the abutting property according to frontage.—City of Kalamazoo v. Francoise, 115 Mich. 554.

¶ 237. For local improvements, such as street paving, assessments may be apportioned according to frontage under legislation which permits that method to be followed.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Mots v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495; Hoyt v. City of East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39; Sheley v. City of Detroit, 45 Mich. 431.

¶ 238. By section 5, c. 17 of the Charter of Port Huron, paving assessments based on frontage may be validly levied on abutting owners.—Auditor General v. Wellman, 160 Mich. 512.

¶ 239. A paving assessment based upon lot frontage is valid.—Palmer v. City of Port Huron, 139 Mich. 471.

¶ 240. Special paving assessments according to street frontage are constitutional.—Cote v. Village of Highland Park, 173 Mich. 201.

¶ 241. Where a special assessment, purporting to be levied according to frontage, puts a greater proportionate burden on improved property than on adjoining unimproved property by reason of the former having a greater assessed value on account of buildings thereon and reduces the estimated foot front tax on the latter because it exceeds twenty-five per cent of the assessed valuation, such assessment is invalid.—Cote v. Village of Highland Park, 173 Mich. 201.

¶ 242. The uniform frontage rule in special assessment proceedings contemplates a uniform system of improvement within the assessment district, and if the municipal authorities decide it expedient to build pavements of materially different width or quality in different localities they should provide different assessment rolls in different assessment districts therefor, such a proceeding being authorized by Comp. L. 1897, § 2786, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 6005.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 180 Mich. 208.

¶ 243. Where a pavement several thousand feet in length varied in width at different points from sixty feet to forty-six feet, a property owner whose land abutted upon the narrowest portion cannot be assessed at the same rate per front foot as owners abutting upon widest portion, and where so assessed is entitled to recover payments made under protest.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 180 Mich. 208.

¶ 244. Assessments may be apportioned according to frontage in respect to local improvements such as repaving.—Sheley v. City of Detroit, 45 Mich. 431.

¶ 245. Water-pipe assessments on vacant lots must be uniform and are not apportionable by frontage.—Jones v. Detroit Water Com'rs, 84 Mich. 273.

§ 73. ——On basis of land values.

Assessment of inclosed orchard as vacant land, see also ante ¶ 229.

¶ 246. A local improvement assessment made on a basis of the value of land exclusive of improvements erected thereon is void and unauthorized where the statute (Local Acts 1895, No. 313, § 2) provides for a levy by foot frontage according to benefits, or by land values.—Walker v. City of Ann Arbor, 118 Mich. 251.

§ 74. Assessment in parcels or in gross.

Apportioning cost between local assessment and general fund, see ante § 12.

¶ 247. It is no objection to an assessment for street improvements that land was assessed as one parcel, though the owner in fact held different estates in two parcels occupied as one, one of which abutted on the street.—Parsons v. City of Grand Rapids, 141 Mich. 467.

§ 75. Computation of amount and method of valuing lands.

Apportioning cost between local assessment and general fund, see ante § 12.

¶ 248. In a suit to restrain the collection of a paving tax, the complainant seeking equitable relief will be compelled to do equity; and an assessed value of $3,000 for two lots will be enforced notwithstanding three lots were assessed at $2,500 in the last preceding ward tax roll, and one lot was since sold off for $1,800, where the testimony shows $3,000 to be a fair assessment for the two remaining lots.—Nowlen v. City of Benton Harbor, 134 Mich. 401.

¶ 249. A computation of the value of the part of a parcel of land which is within a special assessment district may be presumed to be just to the city where the value is computed from the assessed value of the parcel according to the area though the part is vacant and the portion outside the district is improved.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 282.

¶ 250. Where an assessment for the opening of a street is made without deducting from the cost the amount received from the sale of a building on the land taken as required by Comp. L. 1897, § 3414, the assessment is not void but such amount may be deducted pro rata from the assessment as made.—Power v. City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 30.

§ 76. Dividing and combining parcels.

¶ 251. Under How. St. § 2649, requiring the board of assessors to enter upon a special assessment roll the valuation of each parcel within the district (as shown by the last preceding general assessment roll), the valuation of a parcel lying partly within and partly without the district may be apportioned, where it was assessed as one tract upon the general roll.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

¶ 252. It was not material in 1852, under the charter of Detroit, that the assessment roll did not distinguish those who were residents from those who were not, as no rights were thereby affected.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 253. An assessment upon "St. Peter's and St. Paul's Cathedral," the roll neither describing the lots nor naming the owners or occupants, was held void under the charter and ordinances of Detroit.—Lefevre v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 586.

¶ 254. Where a charter (East Saginaw—Laws 1861, Act No. 56) requires commissioners who are appointed to assess the expenses of public improvements to "make out an assessment roll in which shall be entered the names of the persons assessed, the value of the property for which they are assessed, the amount assessed," etc., the provision must be regarded as mandatory, and an assessment roll which omits to state the value of the property assessed cannot be sustained.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

¶ 255. A paving assessment under the Muskegon charter (Local Laws of 1875, Act

No. 298, § 139) is void if the assessment roll does not show the valuation of the property assessed.—Beidler Mfg. Co. v. City of Muskgeon, 63 Mich. 44.

¶ 256. A special assessment roll was not defective as failing to state either the width of the intersections, the length of the pavement nor how the amount chargeable against the city was arrived at, where the entire frontage appeared upon the roll itself and was easy of computation.—Walker v. City of Detroit, 136 Mich. 6.

¶ 257. Section 17 of the charter of Bay City requires that the lots and premises specially benefited by the construction of a sewer or sidewalk shall be assessed according to the benefits derived from such improvements, while section 50 of the charter requires that the comptroller shall set down in the tax-roll the description of all the lands and premises he deems to be specially benefited by the proposed work, the amount assessed against each description, which shall include the contract price of construction and the amount, as estimated by the board of public works, for surveying, superintending, construction and advertising. Held, that if the assessing officer should, under the two sections, assess the whole cost of the work as commanded by section 50, and yet show that such assessment did not exceed the whole amount of benefits derived by the property assessed from the improvement, there would be no conflict between the two sections.—Adams v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 211.

§ 78. ——Showing as to benefit equaling assessment.

¶ 258. Under a charter providing that the lots and premises specially benefited thereby shall be assessed according to the benefits derived from the construction of any sewer or sidewalk, the roll must show expressly that the assessment was made on the basis fixed by the charter, and it should also appear of record somewhere that the benefits to the whole property included in the taxing district will equal the whole cost of the proposed work.—Adams v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 211.

¶ 259. Under a charter provision requiring the board of public works to certify upon an assessment roll for the cost of a public improvement that each parcel of land so assessed "is benefited specially by such improvement to the amount of the assessment thereon," a certificate showing the entire amount assessed, the amount assessed on each lot deemed to be benefited by the improvement, that the lots upon the roll are all that are benefited, and that the assessment is made in proportion to the benefits deemed to have been received, is sufficient.—Nelson v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 659.

¶ 260. It is unnecessary that there be a specific indorsement upon the assessment roll of the City of Sault Ste. Marie that the tax only equals the amount of the improvement where every charter requirement is fulfilled by the council, board of public works, assessor and board of review, and where the city assessor and board of review have by certificates duly approved the roll in compliance with the city charter, chap. 21, § 6.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 65.

§ 79. ——Effect of clerical errors.

¶ 261. Clerical errors in a benefit assessment roll, such as placing figures in the wrong column and omitting a small piece of land belonging to complainant, are not prejudicial.—Beecher v. City of Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

§ 80. ——Certificate of board or officer making assessment.

See also ante ¶ 259.
Effect and conclusiveness of certificate, see post § 81.

¶ 262. Where, in pursuance of an ordinance requiring the assessments to be in proportion to the benefits, a resolution of the common council of Grand Haven directed a tax for the construction of a sewer to be assessed against the owners or occupants of the premises whose value was increased thereby, a recital in the assessor's certificate merely that he had made the assessment roll "pursuant to the resolution" was insufficient; such a certificate is ambiguous, and does not necessarily import anything more than that he has made assessment in obedience to the resolution; it is not equivalent to a distinct statement that he has levied the tax upon the basis established by the ordinance. Being a jurisdictional document in proceedings under which titles may be divested, the certificate must not speak in doubtful terms, and the reasons requiring it to be distinct are even more imperative with special and exceptional than with general taxes. Where thus ambiguous, it was held that the fact that the tax had been laid apparently without regard to the value or use of the property, but strictly in proportion to the frontage on the street, raised a strong inference that the requirements of the ordinance had not been observed.—Warren v. City of Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24.

¶ 263. An assessor's certificate which contained no reference to the contract under which the work was done, nor to the plat of the assessment district prepared by the city engineer, did not render the assessment void.—Walker v. City of Detroit, 136 Mich. 6.

¶ 264. A defect, if any existed, in the certificate of the special assessors on the assessment roll required by Comp. L. 1897, § 3200, was not a fatal defect rendering the assessment void.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

¶ 265. In a suit brought ten years after sale for taxes, a special assessment will not be set aside on the ground that the board of assessors returned the roll to the common council without a certificate showing the assessment was made in accordance with the provisions of the charter.—Tuller v. City of Detroit, 126 Mich. 605.

The certificate of the city engineer who apportioned the benefits to the effect that he has included in the assessment roll all the real estate in the assessment district as fixed and determined by the common council the just proportion of the amount directed according to the benefits resulting to each of said lots is subject to review and is not conclusive as to the benefits where it actually appears that the apportionment does not correspond to the benefits.—Auditor General v. O'Neill, 143 Mich. 343.

¶ 267. The city engineer's certificate attached to the assessment roll stating that an assessment for a sewer is made in proportion to the benefits derived by the several lots is conclusive upon the question of whether the assessments were laid according to area only or according to area and benefits.—Walker v. City of Detroit, 138 Mich. 639.

Cure of defective notice by reassessment, see post ¶ 304.

¶ 268. Under the Detroit charter in 1852 notice of making the assessment was not required to be given personally, but was sufficient if published in a city paper as required by the ordinances.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 269. Where notice of the time and place fixed for the hearing of appeals from assessments for street improvements is given by publication as required by the city charter, such notice must be held sufficient.—Brown v. City of Grand Rapids, 83 Mich. 101.

¶ 270. Under the charter of Detroit, ch. 11, § 37, providing that when a special assessment roll is completed the board of assessors shall give notice that the roll is completed and will remain for inspection, etc., it cannot be claimed that those taxed have no opportunity to be heard where such notice and time were given.—Beecher v. City of Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

¶ 271. A notice for property holders to appear and present objections to a proposed street improvement does not invalidate the proceedings by reason that the date of the hearing therein fixed happens, by inadvertence of the clerk, to fall on Sunday, if the persons affected waive the point by taking extensions for payment or paying their assessments voluntarily.—Louden v. East Saginaw, 41 Mich. 18.

¶ 272. Under a charter provision that the city engineer shall give notice that a paving assessment has been completed and will remain in his office for ten days from the first publication for inspection, a notice by publication addressed to "all owners and other persons interested" in the described lands, is sufficient, it not being required to address the notice to named individual owners.—Palmer v. City of Port Huron, 139 Mich. 471.

¶ 273. Where notice according to law is given to an owner of several lots that only one thereof was placed within an assessment district, such owner has a right to assume that in making the assessment roll such lot only will be taxed.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 282.

¶ 274. How. St. § 3064o, which provides that an assessment for street opening benefits shall be made in the same manner as is provided in the municipal charter for assessing the expenses of street grading, sufficiently prescribes the notice of assessment, where the charter provides for notice in such latter case.—Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 92 Mich. 564.

¶ 275. A charter provision for notice of special assessments by two weeks' publication in the official newspaper of the city and giving two weeks from the first publication for filing objections, is sufficient as providing reasonable notice and adequate hearing to persons affected by the assessment.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

§ 83. ——Evidence or proof of service.

¶ 276. A city treasurer's certificate attached to an assessment roll that "personal notice has been served on all persons named in the within roll as required" by the charter, citing the particular section and title prescribing the manner of such notice, is evidence of proper service of such notice.—Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 92 Mich. 564.

¶ 277. Under a provision of a city charter that "all of the proceedings of the common council (in the matter of the making of public improvements) shall be matters of record in its proceedings, and shall not fail on account of any technical or clerical error made by any officer of the city, nor because of any act not being done at the time or in the manner required, unless the party complaining of such failure shall show affirmatively that he has been injured thereby," a failure to have before the council, at the time of its confirmation of the assessment roll, proof of the publication of notice of the hearing of objections to said roll, will not operate to defeat the assessment, where the proof shows that such notice was in fact given.—Shimmons v. City of Saginaw, 104 Mich. 511.

¶ 278. Where a charter provides that the common council shall review a special assessment roll and consider objections, it is competent for the legislature to leave to the council to determine when and where objections will be heard.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 279. The action of a majority of a city board of equalization and review in making an assessment for the improvement of a street is legal if all the members of the board were notified of the meeting at which it was taken under Comp. L. 1871, § 2.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

¶ 280. A municipal corporation does not possess the power to decide that a landowner is benefited by an improvement, without giving him an opportunity to be heard upon the question of benefits, unless such power be granted in clear and unmistakable terms by the legislature.—Stevens v. City of Port Huron, 149 Mich. 536. (Separate opinion of Carpenter, J.)

¶ 281. Parties whose property is to be taken by summary tax proceedings for sewer assessment are entitled as of right to be heard at some stage of the proceedings before the tax becomes an established charge against them or their property.—Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155.

§ 85. Change or revision of assessment roll.

Change or variation on reassessment, see post § 90.

¶ 282. On a special assessment roll for paving a street, submitted by the board of special assessors to a city council, the assessment figures demanded by one of the said assessors were placed under the head of "Remarks." The city council in passing upon same ordered the city clerk to enter in the assessment column the figures suggested by said dissenting assessor in place of the figures submitted by the majority of the board. Held, under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 3193, 3198, 3200, 3205, the city council exceeded its powers since a revision of the roll or a new roll must be made by the board of assessors, and the provisions relating to revision and annulment of the roll limited the council to the corrections of mathematical errors in computing amounts of errors in the description of property.—Johnson v. City of Escanaba, 168 Mich. 276.

Conclusiveness of confirmation, see post § 88.

¶ 283. The objections made to the confirmation of a special assessment roll for a street opening having been read before the council, the matter was referred to a committee, to afford the parties an opportunity to be heard. After hearing the parties, the committee reported in favor of the confirmation of the roll, and it was thereupon confirmed by the council. Held, that the action of the committee, when adopted, became the action of the council.—Brown v. City of Saginaw, 107 Mich. 643.

¶ 284. Under a charter provision requiring that the common council shall review a special assessment roll and when satisfied with same shall by resolution confirm the same, a resolution that an assessment roll "be and the same is hereby accepted and adopted" is sufficient as confirmation thereof.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 285. Under a provision of the Detroit Charter of 1893, chap. 11, § 37, that in cases of street improvements the board of assessors should, after correcting the assessment roll, "sign the same and report it to the common council," which body might then confirm it, the council had no authority to confirm an unsigned roll.—Thompson v. City of Detroit, 114 Mich. 502.

§ 87. Presumptions and evidence of confirmation.

Conclusiveness of confirmation, see post § 88.

¶ 286. Where a city charter requires that a common council, before confirmation of an assessment roll, shall review and examine it, and it appears by the records that it was confirmed, it will be presumed that the council did its duty and reviewed the roll as required.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 287. Approval of a special assessment roll by the board of review of the City of Sault Ste. Marie is established where the certificate of the assessor required by the city charter, chap. 21, § 6 that the roll was so approved is attached thereto.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 65.

¶ 288. A certificate of the board of review of the City of Sault Ste. Marie appointed by the council to review a special assessment roll which states that the board having been appointed by the city council to review the assessment roll at a regular meeting for such purpose certify that they have reviewed such roll, as assessed by the city assessor, and that the assessments therein are according to benefits and in accordance with a resolution of the council, constitutes an approval of the roll.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 65.

¶ 289. The fact that the evidence shows that there are unpaid assessments against land for which it has not been sold is sufficient reason for denying the certificate provided for in Local Acts 1901, No. 472, as to the payment of city taxes and assessments, unless the land is not liable to the assessments.—Galinski v. City of Detroit, 193 Mich. 184.

§ 88. Conclusiveness of confirmation.

¶ 290. The apportionment of benefits for a street opening by the assessing officers is not subject to attack after the roll has been confirmed by the council pursuant to the charter.—Brown v. City of Saginaw, 107 Mich. 643.

¶ 291. The resolution of a city council fixing an assessment and declaring the amount to be assessed thereon for a special improvement is a legal determination that the benefits conferred upon said district are equal to such amount; and by confirming the assessment roll the council determines how much each parcel of land is benefited; and in the absence of fraud or mistake these determinations are conclusive.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

¶ 292. The facts that the certificate of the assessors recites that an assessment for a sewer in accordance with benefits was made and that the city council finally confirmed the roll, are not conclusive.—Lawrence v. City of Grand Rapids, 166 Mich. 134.

¶ 293. Confirmation by council of any special assessment roll which in its application to proposed improvements violates the fundamental principles of the statute upon which its validity depends, is not final and conclusive upon that question under Comp. L. 1897, § 2840, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 6061.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 180 Mich. 208.

¶ 294. Under the charter of the city of Flint, as amended by Local Acts 1907, Act No. 554, which provides that the cost of constructing a trunkline intercepting sewer "or of such part thereof as shall be designed primarily for the benefit of the health of the whole city" shall be borne absolutely by the city, the common council is vested with a discretion to determine what part thereof is so designed, and its exercise of discretion, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, cannot be reviewed.—Berston v. City of Flint, 176 Mich. 266.

F. REASSESSMENTS AND ADDITIONAL ASSESSMENTS.

§ 89. In general; power to levy.

Variation from original plans, see post § 90.
Defects in original assessment curable by reassessment, see post § 91.
Persons entitled to require or object to reassessment, see post § 92.
Equalizing and adjustment of former assessments and payments, see post § 93.
Authority for reassessment after assessment declared void, see post ¶ 341.
Reassessment of drain taxes, see Drains § 76.
Procedure to levy and spread assessments for drains, see Drains, II, C.

¶ 295. The legislature can authorize a reassessment of a paving tax to pay for work done in good faith where a previous assessment therefor has been held void.—Byram v. City of Detroit, 50 Mich. 56.

¶ 296. Where an assessment for paving has failed because no apportionment was provided for by the act under which it was made, the legislature may authorize a reassessment.—Brevoort v. City of Detroit, 24 Mich. 322.

¶ 297. Under a city charter providing that whenever a special assessment shall be deemed invalid by the common council by reason of any irregularity or informality in the proceedings, or if it shall be adjudged illegal by any competent court, the council may make a new assessment, a reassessment may be made where the assessment is judicially declared illegal on jurisdictional grounds as well as when it is so declared for mere irregularity or informality.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 157 Mich. 424.

¶ 298. The levy of a special assessment for the construction of a sewer, under the provisions of a city charter permitting a reassessment where a former assessment has been declared invalid, is not void for failure to provide for plans and diagrams of the sewer district, or estimates of cost, where these were properly defined in the original assessment, to which reference is made.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 157 Mich. 424.

¶ 299. A clause in a city charter provided that whenever any special assessment shall for certain specified reasons be invalid, the council shall, whether the improvement has been made or not, have power to cause a new assessment to be made. Held, that a reassessment thereunder was not invalid because the resolution of the council failed to state that it was a reassessment, reference being made to the former proceedings, nor because the improvement for which the assessment was made had been partially completed under the former resolution.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 157 Mich. 424.

¶ 300. The authority of the common council of Lansing under the revised charter (3 Sess. L. 1869, p. 1359, § 26) to levy a second assessment upon the setting aside as invalid of the original assessment to pay valid claims under a grading contract is sustained; and the proviso in such charter that nothing therein shall be construed to repeal or in any manner interfere with the provisions of a special act (3 Sess. L. 1869, p. 680) for a reassessment on the basis of a new survey and estimate to be made of the amount of work done under such grading contract does not affect this authority as to obligations arising out of said contract which had become fixed before such special act was passed, and to which, therefore, it could have no application.—People ex rel. French v. Lansing, 30 Mich. 378.

¶ 301. Laws 1869, Act No. 486 of 1869 (3 Sess. L. 1869, p. 1689), amending the charter of Detroit, and providing for a new assessment in certain cases where a former assessment has been vacated or held invalid, requires the reassessment to be made in accordance with the law in force at the time, without reference to the law as it stood when the original assessment was made. The act confers a continuing power, which is not exhausted by a single reassessment, nor until an assessment is made which can be enforced. A reassessment under this act, varying from the original assessment only to avoid the former errors, but whose purpose is the same, will not be held void for variations which are purely technical. The case of a reassessment under this act stands on its own reasons, and is not within the intent of the provision of chapter 7, § 39 of the amended charter (Laws 1869, Act No. 486; 3 Sess. L. 1869, p. 1724), prohibiting the making of a new assessment district after the bids for paving are received. The want of an assessment district originally might have been the very difficulty requiring new proceedings.—Brevoort v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 322.

¶ 302. The charter of Lansing provided that, when more money had been expended upon a public contract than was estimated in making the assessment for it, a further assessment to supply the deficiency might be made; also, that new assessments might be made in lieu of invalid ones. Where, therefore, the work contracted for had been done, and the orders issued on the estimates remained unpaid because the assessment was declared invalid, it was held that Laws 1869, Act No. 338, authorizing a reassessment to pay for the specific work under a resurvey and re-estimate, and not providing for paying the amount of the orders or estimates already made, could not conclude the contractor, who did not assent to the new estimate, which was less than the old one. Such a statute would be authority for the new assessment, but as no legislation is valid which impairs the obligation of a contract, it could not cut off the right to further payment if it before existed.—People ex rel. Whitly v. Lansing Common Council, 27 Mich. 131.

§ 90. Variations from original plans.

Revision of assessment roll in general, see ante § 85.

¶ 303. On a reassessment made after a former assessment has been declared void, relatively unimportant changes as to plans and specifications of the work are immaterial.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 157 Mich. 424.

§ 91. Defects in original assessment curable by reassessment.

¶ 304. Where a special assessment is set aside by a city council and the taxes reassessed upon the same district, the landowners cannot, in a suit to enjoin the collection of the reassessed taxes, complain of a want of notice of the original assessment.—Townsend v. City of Manistee, 88 Mich. 408.

¶ 305. The fact that an assessment in street opening proceedings had been declared invalid for the want of a sufficient resolution, does not preclude the common council from adopting a new resolution similar to the first but including the matter previously omitted and making a new assessment thereunder as prescribed by Detroit Charter, ch. 7, sec. 61, as amended by Loc. Acts 1895, No. 463, providing for a new assessment when any special assessment shall be held invalid.—Smith v. City of Detroit, 120 Mich. 572.

¶ 306. A village, prior to its annexation to the City of Detroit, took steps to construct certain lateral sewers, but failed to give notice of its purpose in accordance with Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2795, 2833. Subsequent to the annexation the City Council of Detroit passed a resolution ordering a reassessment. Held, said resolution did not cure the defects in the village proceedings, since said failure to give notice was a jurisdictional defect vitiating the entire proceedings.—Crawford v. City of Detroit, 169 Mich. 293.

¶ 307. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 2833 authorizing the council to determine what proportion of the cost of a sewer shall be levied as special assessment and what shall be paid from the general funds, and section 2543 authorizing the council, where a special assessment is invalid because of irregularity in the proceedings, or because illegal, to make a new assessment, the council has power to correct the irregularity where it has levied a sewer assessment of 12½ per cent against property, by assessing 5 per cent against the property as limited by statute and the balance against the general funds.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 132 Mich. 152.

¶ 307a. A village, before its annexation, took steps to construct certain sewers. It failed to give notice of its purpose as required by Comp. L. 1897, §§ 2795, 2833. A bill for injunction being filed by a property holder, the circuit court sustained the same on the ground that said failure to give notice constituted a jurisdictional defect in said proceedings. No appeal was taken from said decision. Subsequent to the annexation to Detroit, the council of said city passed a resolution for a reassessment of said sewers. Held, no appeal having been taken from the decision of the circuit court, the decree of said court was final.—Crawford v. City of Detroit, 169 Mich. 293.

§ 92. Persons entitled to require or object to reassessment.

¶ 308. Where a sewer has been constructed under an assessment improperly levied, and the council has power to correct the error and levy a new assessment, it will be required to do so at the instance of one who has furnished the money for the improvement.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 132 Mich. 152.

¶ 309. Property owners cannot complain that a reassessment of property reduced the amount of the original assessment.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 157 Mich. 590.

§ 93. Equalizing and adjustment of former assessments and payments.

¶ 310. Where a sewer assessment, made upon the basis that the property benefited should pay one-half of the expense and the city half, which it paid, was declared invalid, a subsequent assessment made on a two-thirds basis, and exempting those who had fully paid their former assessment, is unequal and void.—White v. City of Saginaw, 67 Mich. 33.

G. OBLIGATION, LIEN AND ENFORCEMENT OF ASSESSMENTS.

§ 94. Nature of obligation and time and manner of payment.

Lien or charge in general, see post § 95.
Extinguishment, merger or loss, see post §§ 96, 97.
Collection and enforcement of assessment, see post § 98.
Property subject to sale for assessments, see post § 99.
Enforcement against personalty, see post § 100.
Defenses, bar or reductions of amount due, see post § 101.
Costs and expenses of collection, see post § 102.
Liability for expenses of illegal assessment, see post § 103.
Adjustment of payments under original assessment where reassessment has been made, see ante § 93.
Apportioning cost between local assessment and general fund, see ante § 12.
Liability for costs and funds, appropriations and provisions to meet same, see ante II.
Lien and obligation of taxes in general, see Taxes, IX.
Assessments as incumbrances on land, see also Covenants for Title § 18.
Procedure to levy and spread assessments for drains, see Drains, II, C.

¶ 311. Act No. 489, Local Acts 1887, provided that special paving assessments should be payable in four parts and at such times as the city council should provide by ordinance. Held, that an ordinance specifying the times for the payments did not apply to assessments made previous to its enactment where it did not expressly so stipulate.—City of Detroit v. Weber, 158 Mich. 590.

¶ 311a. Act No. 489, Local Acts 1887, provided that special paving assessments should be payable in four parts and at such times as the city council should provide by ordinance. Held, this provision in the local act was not self-executing and an assessment made under it before said ordinance had been passed was invalid.—City of Detroit v. Weber, 158 Mich. 590.

¶ 312. An assessment for the opening of a street in the City of Detroit is properly made payable in one sum though Comp. L. 1897, § 3406, governing the opening of streets, provides that the assessments shall be levied and collected in the same manner as for street grading, and Loc. Acts 1887, No. 489, sec. 44, provides that assessments for street grading shall be made in four parts running through four years, since the charter provides that in street grading proceedings bonds shall be issued payable in one, two, three, and four years, while in street opening proceedings there is no such provision —Power v. City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 30.

§ 95. Lien or charge in general.

Interest on unpaid drain assessments, see Drains § 77.

Lien and obligation of taxes, see Taxes IX.

¶ 313. Laws 1883, Act No. 124, providing for the taking of private property by a city for public use, the assessment for benefits, being made a lien on the premises, is not to be regarded as imposing a personal tax, but a tax upon the land.—Beecher v. City of Detroit, 92 Mich. 268.

§ 96. Extinguishment, merger or loss.

Effect of adverse possession and limitations, see post § 97.

¶ 314. Where a city buys at the tax sale land sold for special assessments, such purchase extinguishes both the lien and liability. —Klatt v. City of Detroit, 162 Mich. 186.

¶ 315. The purchase by the City of Detroit of land sold for special assessments gives it a title in which the lien is merged, although no deed and possibly no certificate of sale is issued.—Klatt v. City of Detroit, 162 Mich. 186.

§ 97. ——Effect of adverse possession and limitations.

Adverse possession against city buying in for assessments, see Adverse Possession § 3, ¶ 10.

¶ 316. Act No. 383, Local Acts 1899, provides that the statute of limitations shall not run against a debt for unpaid special assessments. Held, this act does not prevent the statute from running so as to keep a party from ridding himself of the lien by adverse possession, where the city has bought the land at tax sale.—Klatt v. City of Detroit, 162 Mich. 186.

¶ 317. Where land is sold to a city for an unpaid special assessment, it is not necessary that the city have color of title to enable a party to devest the tax lien by adverse possession.—Klatt v. City of Detroit, 162 Mich. 186.

§ 98. Collection and enforcement of assessment.

Injunction against collection of assessment, see post § 121.

¶ 318. Both the Saginaw city charter (Local Acts 1885, No. 355, tit. 6, § 26) and the General Tax Law of 1889 contemplate that collection of special city assessments may be enforced in the circuit court in chancery at the instance of the state "in the same manner as the annual taxes of said city."—Auditor General v. Maier, 95 Mich. 127.

¶ 319. Under the charter of Grand Rapids the city marshal is not entitled to the collection fees upon local assessments, when, after the expiration of the tax-warrants attached to the assessment rolls, he has returned the rolls to the city clerk as uncollected, and the clerk has himself collected the assessments together with the "marshal's fee for collection prescribed in the warrant." —Lyon v. City of Grand Rapids, 30 Mich. 258.

¶ 320. Inasmuch as Comp. L. 1897, § 2841 provides that all special assessments shall from the date of the confirmation thereof constitute a lien upon the respective lots or lands assessed, where several such assessments have been made, the total of which exceeds the limits fixed by the statutes, payment must be made and is enforceable on that assessment which was first confirmed because that became the prior lien.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 146 Mich. 597.

§ 99. Property subject to sale for assessments.

¶ 321. An assessment for benefits upon a part of the right of way and road-bed of complainant's road, including a freight house on said right of way, occasioned by the paving of the street upon which said assessed property abuts, otherwise valid will not be set aside because the property cannot be sold to pay the assessment, but the sale of the property to satisfy said assessment may be set aside, without prejudice to the city's right to proceed to the enforcement of the assessment in such mode as it should deem best.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 102 Mich. 374.

¶ 322. Property of a railroad company that is necessary to the enjoyment of its franchise, such as a part of the road-bed, cannot be sold under proceedings to collect an assessment levied thereon for a municipal improvement.—Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. City of Grand Rapids, 106 Mich. 13.

§ 100. Enforcement against personalty.

Effect of personalty on jurisdiction of equity to enjoin assessment, see post ¶ 396.

¶ 323. Under Local Acts 1889, No. 374, § 9, requiring the treasurer to return a special assessment, together with a statement of lands upon which the assessments have not been paid and Local Acts 1891, No. 346, § 13, providing for the assessment of both general taxes and delinquent special assessments and the adding together of all taxes and assessments and that they shall become a debt to the city from the person to whom they are assessed and section 14 of the same act authorizing a levy by distress, the treasurer is authorized by his warrant to seize personal property for the collection of both general taxes and special assessments, and this notwithstanding the present owner did not own the lands at the time of the original assessment.—Michigan Lake Superior Power Co. v. Atwood, 126 Mich. 651.

§ 101. Defenses, bar or reductions of amount due.

Defenses and bar to recovery of excessive or improper payment, see post § 132.
Defect in petition as defense in action to collect assessment, see also ante ¶ 96.
Estoppel to collect interest after settlement remitting interest, see Taxes, VIII.

¶ 324. It is no defense to the enforcement of an assessment for a public improvement that the work and material were not such as the contract called for; e. g., that the construction of a pavement was grossly defective.—Dixon v. City of Detroit, 86 Mich. 516.

¶ 325. In an action by a city to recover from a property owner a special assessment for repaving a street, held that the defendant was not injured by the failure of the city council to require a street car company to at once repave a space between its tracks, in accordance with its contract to do so whenever required by the city council, where there was a verbal agreement between the city and the company that it should do so soon.—City of Kalamazoo v. Perrin, 194 Mich. 484.

¶ 326. A lot owner who refuses to pay an assessment for a street opening is liable for the penalties provided by statute and for interest on the amount found due, though the assessment was reduced because of failure to deduct therefrom the amount received for a building on the land taken for the street.—Power v. City of Detroit, 139 Mich. 30.

¶ 327. The clause of a contract letting paving work, providing for a penalty for delay in completing the work, has no relation whatever to the assessment, and abutting owners cannot object to the assessment on the ground that they did not receive the benefit of a deduction for the penalty in question, and that the board had no power to waive it.—Cass Farm Co. v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 433, aff'd in 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

§ 102. Costs and expenses of collection.

¶ 328. Where an assessment was made for the construction of a sewer, an objection that the warrant attached to the tax-roll permitted the collector to add two per cent for his services was held to be without force; the cost of collection is a necessary part of the expense, and may be either included in the original sum ordered to be levied, or, perhaps, added afterward.—Warren v. City of Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24.

¶ 329. Under the Detroit city charter, as in force in 1852, the warrant issued for the collection of a street assessment might lawfully authorize the marshal to collect five per cent in addition for his fees.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

§ 103. Liability for expenses of illegal assessment.

¶ 330. After an assessment for a public sewer has been set aside as illegal, the city cannot maintain a suit against a property owner for his share of the expense, even though a provision of the city charter authorizes the court, in case an assessment on which a suit is brought proves to be irregular or informal, to render judgment against defendant or the premises for the amount of the expense incurred properly chargeable.—City of Manistee v. Harley, 79 Mich. 288.

¶ 331. Proceedings to condemn private lands for a public highway are to be considered as an entirety, and if as to any of the parties the street laid was not valid for want of proper notice to any of the landowners, it cannot be regarded as lawfully established as against those who were properly served, so as to compel them to pay assessments laid upon them for benefits from its establishment.—Brush v. City of Detroit, 32 Mich. 43.

¶ 332. An assessment of damages in proceedings to condemn lands for street opening is void if the land is not lawfully condemned.—Detroit, M. & T. R. Co. v. City of Detroit, 49 Mich. 47.

¶ 333. One of the jurors impaneled and sworn in a street opening case failed to appear on the adjourned day, whereupon counsel representing the city and the owners of the property sought to be condemned stipulated to proceed with the eleven remaining jurors, who found that a public necessity existed for opening the street, and fixed the amount of compensation to be paid to the property owners. A bill was filed by several taxpayers, whose lands had been assessed to pay the compensation awarded, to restrain the collection of the tax, their contention being that the condemnation proceedings were void because less than twelve jurors sat in the case, and determined the questions of public necessity and the amount of damages to be awarded. Held, that complainants were not prejudiced by the action complained of, and that it did not invalidate the tax levy.—Borgman v. City of Detroit, 102 Mich. 261.

¶ 334. Where a city council has declared the paving of a street to be a necessary public improvement, the assessment therefor is not invalidated by a subsequent change in the plan thereof, as by ordering tile drains put under the curbs.—Davies v. City of Saginaw, 87 Mich. 439.

¶ 335. The omission to appoint an officer to superintend the paving of a street in Detroit, as provided by the city ordinances, would not invalidate an assessment for the paving, when the paving was done under a contract which the common council had a right to make.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 336. Failure to give the notice of a proposed public improvement, required by Comp. L. 1897, § 3195, is a defect of substance within section 3922, providing that no tax shall be invalidated for irregularities or informalities in any proceeding not prejudicial to the property rights of the taxpayer.—Auditor General v. Calkins, 136 Mich. 1.

§ 105. Irregularities in bids and contracts.

See also ante ¶ 105.

Necessity for letting contract to lowest bidder, see ante § 35.

Proposals and contracts in general, see ante IV.

¶ 337. An assessment upon a city lot for the expense of paving the street is not invalid from the paving having been contracted for before the assessment was made.—Le Fevre v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 586.

¶ 338. A paving assessment will not be set aside on the ground that the advertisement for bids failed to comply with the ordinance requiring the time for the opening of the bids to be fixed in the advertisement, where it appears that the paving is entirely completed, that the owners have been benefited, that no one has been harmed, and that the bids were opened in the office of the board of public works in the presence of those who tendered bids, at the time mentioned in the advertisement, as the time up to which bids would be received.—Cass Farm Co. v. City of Detroit, 124 Mich. 433. Affirmed in 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

§ 106. Vices in the assessments themselves.

Assessments exceeding cost of improvement, see ante § 65.

Power to make assessments, see ante § 46.

Interest of persons making or officiating in assessment, see post § 107.

Invalidity of assessment made on basis of superficial area of property, see ante § 71.

Inclusion in assessment of improper items, see ante ¶ 205.

Invalidity of assessment from illegal or excessive rate, see ante ¶¶ 198, 201.

¶ 339. Special assessments requiring discrimination between properties of persons taxed cannot be sustained.—White v. City of Saginaw, 67 Mich. 33.

¶ 340. A special assessment for grading and graveling a street will be set aside where it includes the cost of a sewer constructed without authority.—Peck v. City of Grand Rapids, 125 Mich. 416.

¶ 341. Where in levying a special assessment under Comp. L. 1897, § 2837, the assessors failed to make a valuation of complainant's property, the assessment must be declared void, with leave to make a proper reassessment.—Weber v. City of Detroit, 158 Mich. 149.

¶ 342. Where a part of a parcel of land owned by complainant lies within a special assessment district, but the value of such part is not computed and an assessment is spread against the whole parcel, such assessment is illegal.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 282.

§ 107. ——Interest of persons making or officiating in assessment.

¶ 343. A sewer assessment is not void because two of the members of the council own land within the assessment district and their votes were necessary to make the two-thirds vote required under Comp. L. 1897, § 2752, to impose such assessment.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 132 Mich. 152.

¶ 344. The objection to an assessment of benefits for a public improvement (a street opening) that the members of the council which determined the assessment district were taxpayers within the city, and were therefore interested, has no force.—Brown v. City of Saginaw, 107 Mich. 643.

¶ 344a. That the members of a common council which determined the assessment district were taxpayers in the city and therefore interested, was held no objection to an assessment of benefits for a public improvement.—Brown v. City of Saginaw, 107 Mich. 643.

§ 108. Irregularities in assessment roll or return and in proceedings thereon.

See also ante ¶¶ 253, 277.

Effect of clerical errors on assessment roll, see ante § 79.

Effect of setting hearing on assessment for Sunday, see also ante ¶ 271.

Invalidity of assessment where roll does not show valuation of property assessed, see also ante ¶ 255.

Assessment roll and return in general, see ante VI, E.

¶ 345. Under the charter of Grand Rapids, providing that assessments upon any unoccupied lot of a non-resident owner shall be made in his name and entered in a list of non-resident owners, etc., an assessment made and entered on the resident owners' list is void as against such non-resident.—Hill v. Warrell, 87 Mich. 135.

¶ 346. Where the record shows that lands alone have been assessed for the benefits of a public improvement, and that no personal assessments have been made, it is immaterial that some of those whose names appear on the roll as owners were not in fact owners.—Auditor General v. Maier, 95 Mich. 127.

¶ 347. The objection that the certificate of the assessor does not show the basis on which the assessment was made does not invalidate it where the council has acted on it and approved it.—Gregory v. City of Ann Arbor, 127 Mich. 454.

§ 109. Cure of defects.

Legislative power to cure defective proceedings or assessments, see Constitutional Law § 250.

¶ 348. The several ordinances established by the common council of Detroit, prescribing the several steps to be taken to perfect assessments and enforce their collection, are binding upon the common council and its officers, as well as upon individuals. When the provisions of those ordinances affecting the substantial rights of individuals are not complied with, the common council have no authority to cure the irregularity by resolution.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

§ 110. Persons entitled to question or object.

Persons entitled to petition for improvement, see ante § 17.

Persons entitled to object to reassessment, see ante § 92.

Conclusiveness of confirmation, see ante § 88.

Right of person assessed for cost of street opening to attack proceedings collaterally, see Highways ¶ 305.

Right of bidder on contract for local improvement to enjoin making of contract by city, see Public Contracts, VI.

Estoppel of person establishing invalidity of assessment to enforce payment of warrant issued in payment for improvement, see also Mandamus ¶ 64.

¶ 349. An assessment for benefits in street opening proceedings is not invalidated by irregularities not shown to be prejudicial to those objecting.—Boussneur v. City of Detroit, 153 Mich. 585.

¶ 350. The fact that a part of a complaining party's land was also assessed to another party will not avoid the assessment to the owner where the other party paid without objection.—Gregory v. City of Ann Arbor, 127 Mich. 454.

¶ 351. One whose property is assessed for benefits in street opening proceedings is not entitled to object to the proceedings upon the ground that the necessity of the opening was determined by one jury and the valuation of property taken by another, where the city and those whose property was taken had not objected.—Boussneur v. City of Detroit, 153 Mich. 585. (Grant, C. J., and Blair, J., dissenting.)

¶ 352. Where a small portion of an assessment district for the construction of a sewer had also been included in an assessment for pavement, but the owners of such portion made no objection, the amount of such pavement assessment need not be deducted in arriving at the total amount of assessment permitted in the year, where the question is raised by an owner whose land was not included in the paving assessment.—Corliss v. Village of Highland Park, 132 Mich. 152.

¶ 353. A city charter provided that the board of public works should annually report to the common council such public sewers as they should deem necessary to be built during the ensuing year, and that the council should determine what sewers of those so reported should be built. Held, that a sewer assessment would not be set aside on the ground that the construction of the sewer was not embraced within such report, at the suit of one who did not avail himself of the right to be heard thereon before the common council, which by the charter was constituted a board of review, with power to correct, set aside, or confirm the assessment.—Nelson v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 659.

§ 111. Estoppel, waiver and bar of objections.

Effect of petitioning for improvement, see post § 112.

Knowledge of progress or completion of work without objection, see post § 113.

Conclusiveness of confirmation, see ante § 88.

Effect on right to equitable relief of delay until improvement completed, see post § 119.

Estoppel to assert claim for damages arising from improvement, see ante § 42.

General principles of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 354. Where irregularities in the taking of property for a street have been waived by the act of the owners of such property in accepting the award made to them, such waiver will prevent the urging of the irregularities in defense to an assessment upon other persons, even though made after a suit has been instituted by such persons to enjoin the collection of the assessment.—Boussneur v. City of Detroit, 153 Mich. 585.

¶ 355. Interested parties appearing and objecting in writing to the proceedings for other reasons going to the merits waive any irregularities in the service of notice of the session of the board of review to consider the special assessment roll.—Gregory v. City of Ann Arbor, 127 Mich. 454.

¶ 356. A property owner who has made no objections to a special assessment is in no position to complain of provisions as to time and place for hearing such objections.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 357. One is estopped from objecting in equity to an assessment substantially authorized by and made in reliance upon his own agreement.—Jackson v. City of Detroit, 10 Mich. 248.

¶ 358. The citizen has a right to assume that the law is being obeyed, instead of violated, by the public authorities, and is not bound at his peril to take notice of illegal action on their part; he is therefore not estopped from complaining of illegalities in the proceedings by which they have authorized a work of public improvement, and in the absence of any evidence of previous knowledge on his part of their unlawful action, he is in time with his protest when they proceed to deprive him of his rights under such proceedings.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

¶ 359. Where a sewer-tax was assessed against one who was a member of the common council at the time the proceedings for levying it were taken, but is not shown to have done anything toward recognizing the tax-roll as valid or to have participated in any action on it other than to move that a certain day be assigned for hearing appeals upon objections to it, he was held not estopped from taking exceptions to the assessment-roll.—Warren v. City of Grand Haven, 30 Mich. 24.

¶ 360. The failure of property owners to object to proceedings to build a street and storm sewer and to assess for their cost will preclude their setting aside the proceedings after the improvement is completed.—Gates v. City of Grand Rapids, 134 Mich. 96.

¶ 361. Where, in proceedings to enjoin an assessment for benefits in street opening proceedings, it is contended that irregularities in the taking of property for such street were consented to and waived by the parties interested therein, it is immaterial that a payment and acceptance of the award for the property taken occur after suit was instituted since that would not affect their waiver.—Boussneur v. City of Detroit, 153 Mich. 585.

§ 112. ——Effect of petitioning for improvement.

Effect of petitioning for improvement on right to recover excessive or illegal assessment involuntarily paid, see post ¶ 443.

¶ 362. Petitioners for a public improvement are estopped in equity from denying power to grant their petition and assess them therefor.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104; Byram v. City of Detroit, 50 Mich. 56.

¶ 363. Petitioners for public improvements are not estopped from objecting that the proceedings upon their petition have been conducted in disregard of law.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104; Taylor v. Burnap, 39 Mich. 739.

¶ 364. Parties who petition for a local improvement that is provided for by the city charter and ordinances must be understood as requesting that it be done under such charter and ordinances, and if these turn out to be invalid the petitioners cannot set up such invalidity as a basis for equitable relief against the action which they have requested.—Motz v. City of Detroit, 18 Mich. 495.

¶ 365. Property owners who petition for a pavement are not estopped by reason of having made such petition from questioning a special assessment made under a law which has been declared unconstitutional. —Auditor General v. Johns, 190 Mich. 601.

¶ 366. The signing of a petition for a street improvement by a property owner does not estop his grantee from questioning the jurisdiction of the common council to make the improvement and levy the tax because of the fact that it is not signed by a majority of the owners of the frontage.—Auditor General v. Woodard, 191 Mich. 496.

§ 113. ——Knowledge of progress or completion of work without objection.

Effect on right to equitable relief of delay until improvement completed, see post § 119.

¶ 367. Knowledge of the progress of a work of public improvement in a city will not estop a party from complaining of illegalities in the proceedings by which the work was authorized.—Steckert v. City of East Saginaw, 22 Mich. 104.

¶ 368. An abutting owner though he remonstrates against a street improvement is nevertheless estopped to set up irregularities as defense to his liability for special assessments therefor where he has full knowledge of the irregularities and stands by and permits the improvement to be made and the city to obligate itself for the cost. —Stewart v. City of Detroit, 137 Mich. 381.

¶ 369. A court of equity will refuse to grant relief from the assessment to a complainant who has stood by and permitted a special improvement to be made, knowing that such improvement is to be compensated by a special assessment upon the district in which the property is located.—W. F. Stewart Co. v. City of Flint, 147 Mich. 697.

¶ 370. Those who stand by and knowingly permit public improvements to be made and money expended thereupon without raising objection will be estopped from asserting the invalidity of the proceedings.—Goodwillie v. City of Detroit, 103 Mich. 283; Atwell v. Barnes, 109 Mich. 10; Moore v. McIntyre, 110 Mich. 237; Baudistel v. Recorder and Common Council of City of Jackson, 110 Mich. 357; Smith v. Carlow, 114 Mich. 67; Lanning v. Palmer, 117 Mich. 529.

¶ 371. A property owner is estopped from questioning his liability for special assessment where he knows the work of paving the street is being done and makes no objection.—Nowlen v. City of Benton Harbor, 134 Mich. 401.

¶ 372. A taxpayer, who knows that a pavement is being laid and raises no protest or objection for four years, cannot then complain in objection to the tax that the petition did not specifically ask that the street be macadamized, where the charter does not require that such petition be signed by any specified number or class of inhabitants, nor expressly denies the council authority to collect special assessments except when made in pursuance of a petition.—Auditor General v. Hoffman, 132 Mich. 198.

¶ 373. Property owners who do not sign a petition for a pavement are not estopped from questioning a special assessment made under a law which has been declared unconstitutional because they stood by and saw the improvement made.—Auditor General v. Johns, 190 Mich. 601.

¶ 374. Where the statute permits an owner to resist an invalid assessment for a special improvement upon a proceeding for the sale of his land to pay the tax, he is not barred by laches from setting up such invalidity by the fact that he made no objection to the assessment and permitted the improvement to be constructed.—Auditor General v. Bishop, 161 Mich. 117.

¶ 375. Where the owner of property had full knowledge that improvements were being made he cannot after such improvements have been completed restrain the collection of the tax assessed therefor even though the common council may have disregarded and ignored many essential provisions of the charter, although he may have succeeded had he raised his objections while the work was in process of construction.—Shaw v. City of Ypsilanti, 146 Mich. 712.

B. APPEAL OR DIRECT JUDICIAL REVIEW.

§ 114. In general.

Review on certiorari, see post § 115.
Waiver or loss of right, see post § 116.
Review by assessing body, see ante § 84.
Power to review exercise of discretion of city council in determination as to part of cost of improvement to be borne by entire city, see ante ¶ 294.
Conclusiveness of proceedings preliminary to improvement, see ante § 32.
Costs in both courts on appeal from judgment based on illegal assessment, see Costs ¶¶ 412, 413.
Right of person assessed for cost of street opening to appeal from judgment therein, see Highways ¶ 313.
Judicial review of highway construction and improvement proceedings, see Highways § 114.

¶ 376. Municipal officers who are charged with the duty of determining the district benefited by a public improvement, and making the assessment thereon, will be presumed to have acted in good faith, and to have exercised correctly the discretion reposed in them; and, where mistake or abuse of discretion is not manifest or demonstrable, their determination is not reviewable by the courts.—Powers v. City of Grand Rapids, 98 Mich. 393.

¶ 377. With reference to the power of the courts to review the acts of a city council, the assessment of benefits for improvements in street opening proceedings is an entirely distinct matter from the awarding of damages for land taken.—Roberts v. City of Sandusky, 158 Mich. 521.

§ 115. Review on certiorari.

Right to review or attack preliminary proceedings for improvement, see ante § 32.
General law of certiorari, see Certiorari.
Delay as objection to certiorari, see Certiorari § 28.

¶ 378. Certiorari does not lie to review the validity of a village paving tax.—Hudson Common Council v. Whitney, 53 Mich. 158.

¶ 379. Certiorari will not lie to bring tax proceedings before the supreme court for review.—Whitbeck v. Village of Hudson, 50 Mich. 86.

§ 116. Waiver or loss of right.

¶ 380. Failure after due notice to appear before the board of review of street-improvement assessments (the city council in this case), and to ask therefrom the correction of an alleged error, precludes appeal to the courts in the absence of fraud or mistake.—Brown v. City of Grand Rapids, 83 Mich. 101; Baisch v. City of Grand Rapids, 84 Mich. 666.

C. RELIEF BY COLLATERAL SUIT OR ATTACK; INJUNCTION, VACATING OR QUIETING TITLE.

§ 117. Collateral attack or impeachment in general.

Persons entitled to equitable relief, see post §§ 118, 119.
Grounds and propriety of injunction against work or assessment, see post §§ 120-122.
Necessary and proper parties to injunction, see post § 123.
Pleading in injunction suits, see post § 124.
Cross-bill to enforce assessment or share of cost, see post § 125.
Suit in equity to set aside proceedings, see post §§ 126, 127.
Actions to quiet title, see post § 128.
Conclusiveness of proceedings preliminary to improvement, see ante § 32.
Recovery of excessive or improper payment, see post VII, D.
General law as to suits to quiet title, see Quieting Title.
Amount of assessment as test for jurisdiction of equity to entertain bill for relief or injunction, see Equity ¶ 78.
Actions by and against contractor, see Public Contracts, VI.
Remedies against improper collection of taxes, see Taxes, X, C.

¶ 381. An assessment for a street opening is not subject to collateral attack, for mere inaccuracies in the petition, by owners whose lands were not taken, but who were in the assessment district; such errors not being jurisdictional.—Goodrich v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 559, aff'd in 184 U. S. 432, 46 L. ed. 627, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

¶ 382. In a suit to quiet title by the owner of land against which an illegal special assessment is spread where it is alleged that the tax is in excess of the amount allowed by Comp. L. 1897, § 3196, providing that the amount levied on any lot for any one improvement shall not exceed 25 per cent of its value as valued and assessed for state and county taxation in the last preceding ward tax roll, the admission and consideration of oral testimony as to the value of the land is improper, since the statute prescribes the last tax roll as the criterion of value.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 282.

§ 118. Persons entitled to equitable relief.

Delay until improvement completed, see post § 119.
Necessary and proper parties to injunction, see post § 123.
Necessary and proper parties to suit in equity to set aside proceedings, see post § 127.

¶ 383. Equity will not interfere to relieve a party on the ground that assessments are irregular and unauthorized by the strict provisions of law, where they are substantially authorized and made in reliance upon his own express agreement.—Jackson v. City of Detroit, 10 Mich. 248.

¶ 384. The fact that property is improperly exempted from assessment in street opening proceedings will not entitle persons assessed to enjoin the collection of the assessment where the complainants did not tender their proportionate share of the taxes and point out the reduction to which they are entitled in case all of the property subject to the assessment should be assessed.—Boussneur v. City of Detroit, 153 Mich. 585.

¶ 385. A certificate attached to a special assessment roll required to be made by the board of public works was signed by the president, but not by members of the board, and attested by the secretary of the board, they being authorized thereto by resolution spread upon its records. Held, that, even if such a certification were insufficient under the charter (Local Laws 1891, title 6, § 6, p. 402), which provided that the board of public works should certify to the roll, equity would not, for this reason, enjoin the collection of the assessment, at the suit of one who made no objection to the subsequent confirmation of the roll by the common council, though afforded an opportunity by title 6, § 28 to be heard thereon.—Duffy v. City of Saginaw, 106 Mich. 335.

¶ 386. When a plank road company is authorized by its charter to take possession of a street in the city and construct a plank road thereon, and is required to keep the road in repair, and the road is constructed, a toll-gate erected and tolls exacted of travelers, the city is thereby divested only of so much of its power over the street as would conflict with the rights of the company; and if the city authorities proceed to tear up the plank and cause the street to be paved, the company alone can complain. A bill by one who is assessed for the paving, to restrain the assessment, cannot be sustained.—Bagg v. City of Detroit, 5 Mich. 336.

¶ 387. The objection that the oath prescribed for the jurors in street opening cases by How. St. § 3064g, was not taken, is open to defendants in the petition, but is not open to owners whose lands were not taken but who were in the assessment district, and who seek to restrain the collection of the assessment by injunction.—Goodrich v. City of Detroit, 123 Mich. 559, aff'd in 184 U. S. 432, 46 L. ed. 627, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

¶ 388. One who has full knowledge of the facts is presumed to know that an assessment laid under an unconstitutional statute cannot be made the basis of a sale that could create any cloud upon his title, and therefore that he cannot be injured by it.—City of Detroit v. Martin, 34 Mich. 170.

§ 119. ——Delay until improvement completed.

Estoppel or waiver of objections generally by knowledge of progress of work or completion of work without objection, see ante §§ 111-113.

¶ 389. One who, knowing that a street is to be paved and that his lands are to be assessed therefor, allows without objection the paving to be done and the contractor to be paid out of the proceeds of bonds issued by the city in anticipation of the collection of the assessment, will not be granted an injunction to restrain for irregularities the collection of the assessment.—Fitzhugh v. City of Bay City, 109 Mich. 581.

¶ 390. Injunction to restrain the collection of a paving tax will not issue where the parties seeking it have unreasonably delayed to ask relief, and are presumably benefited by the work done, and where a reassessment can be ordered, and a remedy exists at law against the tax if void.—Byram v. City of Detroit, 50 Mich. 56.

¶ 391. Complainants in a bill to enjoin the collection of a special assessment for a sewer are not estopped on account of their failure to act until after the sewer was completed where they do not own property abutting on the sewer, and where, though aware of its construction, they receive no notice of the special assessment district until after the completion of the improvement.—Lawrence v. City of Grand Rapids, 166 Mich. 134.

¶ 392. Relief will not be granted in equity to restrain the collection of a special paving assessment and to remove a cloud on title of property caused by the levying of such assessment where the property owner had failed to proceed until after the improvement had been made, and a statute legalizing the proceedings had been passed, and two of the five installments had already become due and payable.—Constantine v. City of Albion, 148 Mich. 403.

¶ 393. Complainants who have contented themselves with making protests, and then have stood by without bringing any proceedings to enjoin the work, while the city proceeded to make extensive and costly improvements, have estopped themselves to any remedy by injunction to compel the city to undo its work.—McKee v. City of Grand Rapids, 137 Mich. 200.

¶ 394. Before the letting of a contract for paving a city street some, at least, of the complainants filed with the common council a remonstrance against paving the street, objecting solely upon the ground of depression in business, and asking that the paving be deferred until the next season. Upon a bill subsequently filed to restrain the collection of an assessment for the paving, it was held that relief should be denied, upon the ground that all of the objections made in the bill were available when the remonstrance was filed, and that complainants, notwithstanding their knowledge of the fact that the council was proceeding in the matter, had stood by until the pavement was completed and the bills issued.—Goodwillie v. City of Detroit, 103 Mich. 283.

¶ 395. An owner whose property was benefited by the improvement in question, to the extent of the assessment, and who stood by and permitted the work being done, was denied relief in equity to restrain the collection of the tax, although he purchased his land after the completion of the proceedings, and after partial completion of the work, and though it was not shown that his grantor had knowledge of the proceedings, and the bill set up the jurisdictional objection that the petition presented to the council did not have a majority of the frontage, and that the contract was void.—Farr v. City of Detroit, 136 Mich. 200.

§ 120. Grounds and propriety of injunction against work or assessment.

Against collection of assessment, see post § 121.

Against payment of bonds for improvement, see post § 122.

Necessary and proper parties to injunction, see post § 123.
Pleading in injunction suits, see post § 124.
Cross-bill to enforce assessment or share of cost, see post § 125.
Occasions for injunction in general, see Injunction, II.
Injunction against tax sales, see Taxes, X, C.
Injunctions as remedy for illegal public improvements in general, see Municipal Corporations, XVI, A.

¶ 396. The jurisdiction of equity goes to enjoining assessments for local improvements in cities, without reference to the question whether there was or was not personalty from which collection might be made.—Scofield v. City of Lansing, 17 Mich. 437; Hoyt v. City of East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39.

¶ 397. In a suit by taxpayers to enjoin the construction of a public improvement, the mere fact that one of the contractors upon whom service of process may be made is absent from the state and cannot be served, neither prevents the issuance of the injunction nor is reason for its dissolution.—Village of River Rouge v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 147 Mich. 204.

§ 121. ——Against collection of assessment.

Collection and enforcement of assessment in general, see ante § 98.
Res adjudicata effect of a decree restraining the collection of a special assessment, see Former Adjudication ¶ 447.

¶ 398. The common council of Detroit having authority by law to make an assessment for paving streets, an injunction will not be granted to restrain the collection of such assessment by warrant against the goods and chattels of complainant; but he will be left to his remedy at law.—Williams v. City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 560.

¶ 399. The circuit court on an injunction bill to restrain the collection of a local assessment alleged to be void cannot review the assessments, that not being a judicial function and a claim of fraud not being sustained by the proofs.—Parsons v. City of Grand Rapids, 141 Mich. 467.

¶ 400. An injunction to restrain collection of assessments for repaving is unnecessary where the city has admitted the invalidity of such assessments and where a statute has been passed requiring reassessment.—Byram v. City of Detroit, 50 Mich. 56.

¶ 401. An assessment for the cost of opening a street under the general condemnation law applicable (How. St., chap. 83), being not collaterally assailable on the ground that the proceedings were improperly instituted because the judgment in condemnation settled that question, will not be enjoined at the suit of one who is assessed to pay the cost of such opening.—Scotten v. City of Detroit, 106 Mich. 564.

¶ 402. The collection of a special assessment exceeding five per cent of the value of the land on which it is levied, the limit fixed by law, will be enjoined.—Harris v. Village of Highland Park, 183 Mich. 573.

¶ 403. An injunction to enjoin the collection of a tax on a street assessment was denied where it was charged that the improvements were not performed according to the plans and specifications and that the construction of the pavement was grossly defective, such facts not being a defense to the enforcement of the assessment.—Dixon v. City of Detroit, 86 Mich. 516.

¶ 404. Where property owners, whose lands are liable to assessment for a public improvement, fail to agree with the contractor as to the quality of the work being done, and at their request examinations are made from time to time by order of the common council, which, after a final investigation, accepts and pays for the work, its action, in the absence of fraud, is final, and an assessment will not be enjoined.—Harper v. City of Grand Rapids, 105 Mich. 551.

§ 122. ——Against payment of bonds for improvement.

¶ 405. An abutting owner, assessed for the paving of a street, cannot maintain a bill to enjoin the payment of bonds issued by the city to defray its proportion of the expense of the improvement, pursuant to a vote of the electors, on the ground that the city in fact paid a larger percentage of the cost than was specified to be paid by it in the resolution submitting to the electors the question of issuing the paving bonds.—Boehme v. City of Monroe, 106 Mich. 401.

§ 123. Necessary and proper parties to injunction.

Parties to suit in equity to set aside proceedings, see post § 127.
Demurrability of bill by numerous assessment payers to invalidate assessment, see also Equity ¶ 374.

¶ 406. Parties owning distinct parcels of land fronting upon a street may join in a bill to restrain collection of a tax upon their several parcels for grading the street, if the illegality of the tax proceedings or other common cause is alleged as the ground of relief.—Scofield v. City of Lansing, 17 Mich. 437.

¶ 407. Where the objection to an assessment is that each parcel of land separately owned was assessed an aliquot part of a general charge instead of for the particular benefits conferred upon it, it seems that the different owners cannot, their interests being hostile, join in a bill to restrain collection.—Brunner v. City of Bay City, 46 Mich. 236.

¶ 408. The city is a necessary defendant to a bill to enjoin the collection of a sewer tax; but where this objection was not seasonably made to a bill filed against the city marshal alone, it was obviated by amendment at the hearing.—Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 155.

¶ 409. To a bill against a city to enjoin enforcement of a paving tax the contractor for the paving was held not a necessary party defendant.—Wilkins v. City of Detroit, 46 Mich. 120.

§ 124. Pleading in injunction suits.

Rules of pleading in general, see Pleading; Equity, VII.

General principles governing injunction, see Injunction.

Injunction against tax sales, see Taxes, X, C.

¶ 410. A bill to enjoin the paving of a street does not sufficiently show that the petition for paving same was not signed by the owners of a majority of the frontage, where it simply states the number of feet owned by the signers of the petition, but does not indicate the total length of the portion of the street to be paved or the number of feet to be deducted therefrom on account of intersecting streets and alleys.—Brady v. City of Detroit, 166 Mich. 252.

¶ 411. A bill seeking to have the collection of an assessment for improving a street restrained because the estimate of its cost as submitted to the council was in gross cannot be aided by any presumption against the correctness of official action, and should clearly negative the submission also of detailed information.—Cuming v. City of Grand Rapids, 46 Mich. 150.

§ 125. Cross-bill to enforce assessment or share of cost.

Pleading as to cross-bills in general, see Equity, VII.

¶ 412. In an action to restrain the collection of a special assessment for a sewer tax on the ground that the sewer was constructed in the interests of the public health of the entire community, and where the defendant filed a cross-bill for a decree for the amount of the assessment, where it appeared that the original contract, as let, was later modified, reducing the price because of making the sewer six feet less in depth, and the city council had failed to readvertise and let the contract as modified, the question of the actual lawful cost of the sewer is not susceptible of determination, and therefore the prayer of the cross-bill cannot be granted. The property affected is still subject to a new assessment, if there can be found or provided legislative authority for ascertaining the actual benefits to the property within the assessment district.—W. F. Stewart Co. v. City of Flint, 147 Mich. 697.

§ 126. Suit in equity to set aside proceedings.

Necessary and proper parties, see post § 127.

¶ 413. Where a complainant contends that he is assessed for a special improvement under void proceedings establishing the assessment, he need not wait until an actual levy to file his bill to set aside the proceedings, but he is bound to act with diligence or lose his rights.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 152 Mich. 59.

¶ 414. The council of defendant city directed the assessors to levy a special assessment for a sewer system. Plaintiff was assessed, and appealed to the board of review, contending that all the proceedings with reference to the construction of the sewer were void for failure to serve proper notice. Without waiting for a decision from the board of review, plaintiff instituted suit in equity to set aside the proceedings. Held, the suit was not premature, since the board of review had authority only to review the assessment, not to set aside the whole proceedings.—Thayer Lumber Co. v. City of Muskegon, 152 Mich. 59.

¶ 415. Even though property owners assessed for a sewer improvement have the right, in a suit to declare void the proceedings for the assessment and collection of taxes for such improvement and to enjoin further effort to collect the same, to contest the amount of the assessment, they must at least point out either that the method of assessment adopted was all wrong, or that, applying a proper method, a wrong result is apparent.—Kuick v. City of Grand Rapids, 200 Mich. 582.

§ 127. ——Necessary and proper parties.

Demurrability of bill by numerous assessment payers to invalidate assessment, see also Equity ¶ 374.

¶ 416. Where the objection underlying a bill to set aside a sewer assessment by the several owners of land in the district is that the assessment was not and could not lawfully be made upon any uniform and general system of apportionment, but that each lot should be assessed as benefited by the work, and not an aliquot part of a general charge, the complainants' interests are hostile, and there is no community of interest, and it is very doubtful whether they should have joined in the suit.—Brunner v. City of Bay City, 46 Mich. 236.

¶ 417. Parties complaining of tax proceedings that do not affect all alike must sue severally or not at all; so, where drain charges have become individual assessments on the roll for sale, owners of lands severally affected cannot join in a bill to set them aside.—Barker v. Township of Vernon, 68 Mich. 516.

¶ 418. In a suit against the auditor general and the county treasurer to set aside special assessments on certain property the city in which the assessment is made is a necessary party to the suit.—Maxwell v. Auditor General, 125 Mich. 621.

§ 128. Actions to quiet title.

General law as to quieting title, see Quieting Title.

¶ 419. The owner of land against which a special assessment is illegally spread is not guilty of laches though he failed to appear and object to the confirmation of the assessment roll where he seasonably filed his bill to quiet title before an attempt was made to enforce the tax.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 282.

¶ 420. Failure of the owner of land, part of which is outside a special assessment district, to appear before the board of review or to file objections to a special assessment against the whole parcel does not preclude him from seeking relief by bill to quiet title as provided by Comp. L. 1897, § 448, as amended by Act 256, P. A. 1909.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 282.

¶ 421. A decree should be granted as prayed by a bill to quiet title to realty by removing a cloud arising from a special assessment where it is undisputed that a special assessment was spread against an entire parcel of complainant's land and became a lien thereon, though only one lot thereof was within the assessment district and where liability for a tax of 25 per cent of the value of the lot within the district as allowed by statute is admitted.—Grand Haven Basket Factory v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 279.

¶ 422. On bill to quiet title to land against which a special assessment was illegally spread when only a part thereof was within the assessment district, all the land may be discharged from the tax lien on payment of the proper amount with interest.—Van Zanten v. City of Grand Haven, 174 Mich. 282.

D. RECOVERY OF EXCESSIVE OR IMPROPER PAYMENT.

§ 129. In general; actions for recovery.

Involuntary payment and protest as condition precedent, see post § 130.

Measure and amount of recovery, see post § 131.

Defenses and bar to recovery, see post §§ 132, 133.

Presumptions and evidence, see post § 134.

Recovery of illegal or mistaken payments in general, see Payment, VI.

Recovery of overpayment of taxes, see Taxes, VIII.

¶ 423. Action lies against a city to recover back illegal assessments paid under compulsion.—Nickodemus v. City of East Saginaw, 25 Mich. 456; People ex rel. Gebhart v. City of East Saginaw, 40 Mich. 336; Louden v. City of East Saginaw, 41 Mich. 18.

¶ 424. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 3212, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., § 5784, where a sum in excess of the amount required to pay for an improvement is collected from the abutting property owners benefited under a special assessment, such excess must be returned.—German Luth. Church Soc. v. City of Mt. Clemens, 179 Mich. 35.

¶ 425. The City of Detroit and the Village of Grosse Pointe Park are jointly liable to a property owner for the repayment of an excessive assessment paid under protest on an improvement initiated by the village of Fairview whose property they acquired.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 180 Mich. 208.

¶ 426. Where suit is brought to recover money involuntarily paid upon an assessment illegal for want of jurisdiction, it is of no importance that the warrant upon the assessment roll had expired when payment was made, and that the action of the common council in extending it was irregular; one may submit to the illegal exaction for the time being to avoid the seizure and sale of his property, and trust to a civil action to recover it back.—Nickodemus v. City of East Saginaw, 25 Mich. 456.

¶ 426a. Action sustained against a city for surplus above expenses of public improvement, which surplus charter requires to be apportioned and paid over to property owners assessed.—Thayer v. City of Grand Rapids, 82 Mich. 298.

§ 130. Involuntary payment and protest as condition precedent.

¶ 427. The provision of the general tax law Pub. Acts 1893, No. 206, § 53, concerning payment of taxes under protest, does not apply to assessments for local improvements.—Thompson v. City of Detroit, 114 Mich. 502.

¶ 428. Payment of an assessment under threat of the immediate seizure and sale of the property to satisfy the same is not voluntary.—Nickodemus v. City of East Saginaw, 25 Mich. 456; People ex rel. Gebhart v. City of East Saginaw, 40 Mich. 336.

¶ 429. The payment without protest of a special assessment, after it has become a lien on one's property, is not a voluntary payment but one made under legal duress.—Newberry v. City of Detroit, 184 Mich. 188.

¶ 430. To prevent threatened sale of his land which had been assessed—under a charter provision afterwards declared unconstitutional—for a street opening, the owner made payment under protest. Held, that sale would not have clouded the title, and that the payment was voluntary and not recoverable back.—City of Detroit v. Martin, 84 Mich. 170.

¶ 431. Where a taxpayer claims that the whole proceedings for the grading and paving of a street are void for want of jurisdiction, and on paying the taxes assessed against him on account of such improvement indorses on the receipt a statement that the payment is made under protest, to protect the property from being sold, and on account of taxes being illegal, the protest is sufficiently specific.—Whitney v. City of Port Huron, 88 Mich. 268.

¶ 432. While the Detroit Charter of 1893, chap. 11, § 37, provided that after confirmation an assessment for a street improvement should constitute a lien upon the realty until paid, and should be collected as authorized by law, such an assessment, though invalid for the assessor's failure to sign the roll before confirmation, was paid under protest after demand. Held, that such payment, being necessary to relieve the property from a prima facie lien, was recoverable as involuntary, though no proceedings to sell for the tax had been instituted.—Thompson v. City of Detroit, 114 Mich. 502.

§ 131. Measure and amount of recovery.

¶ 433. Where a special assessment in excess of the amount authorized by law to be collected is paid under protest, the plaintiff in assumpsit for money had and received can recover back only the excess and not the whole amount.—Long v. Village of Dundee, 159 Mich. 320.

¶ 434. A plaintiff was assessed for a special paving tax an amount in excess of the limit fixed by statute. He paid the tax under protest, and sued in assumpsit to recover back the same. Held, upon his failure to prove that the costs and expenses of the levy were actually turned over to the village by the collector, he could not recover these items in this suit.—Long v. Village of Dundee, 159 Mich. 320.

¶ 435. In an action by a property owner to recover an unjust assessment paid under protest, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover interest, penalties and fees paid by him where the assessment was not paid when it was due.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 180 Mich. 208.

¶ 436. In an action of assumpsit by a property owner to recover an unjust assessment paid under protest, the court may adjust the equities in plaintiff's favor by rendering judgment for the amount of the excess together with the penalties, interest and fees relating thereto collected.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 180 Mich. 208.

§ 132. Defenses and bar to recovery.

Estoppel, waiver or loss of right, see post § 133.

¶ 437. A city cannot escape liability for the amount of a tax illegally exacted for a street improvement, on the ground that the money was not to be used for municipal purposes.—City of Grand Rapids v. Blakely, 40 Mich. 367.

¶ 438. Plaintiff was assessed $22 as a first instalment on a special paving tax. Plaintiff paid the tax under protest. This tax was in excess of the five per cent limit fixed by law. The defendant village tendered back the excess before suit by the plaintiff in assumpsit for money had and received, to recover back the tax paid. Held, the plaintiff could recover nothing.—Long v. Village of Dundee, 159 Mich. 320.

§ 133. ——Estoppel, waiver or loss of right.

General law of estoppel, see Estoppel.

¶ 439. A property owner who consented to an improvement but objected to an unjust assessment is not estopped after receiving the benefit of the improvement to bring suit to defeat the assessment as to the amount in which the assessment was excessive and unjust.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 180 Mich. 208.

¶ 440. One is precluded from seeking to recover back the amount of a tax which as a member of the board of supervisors he voted to impose without objecting to its levy.—Wood v. Township of Norwood, 52 Mich. 32.

¶ 441. Where a strict improvement is undertaken after irregular proceedings looking thereto an owner of abutting property, assessable had the proceedings been regular, must protest at once; he cannot stand aloof, accept the benefit of the improvement, and then evade the assessment because of the irregularity.—Lundbom v. City of Manistee, 93 Mich. 170.

¶ 442. Appearance by a property owner before the board of assessors and council urging his objections to an assessment sufficiently protects his rights so as to enable him to recover an excessive assessment paid under protest.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 180 Mich. 208.

¶ 443. One is not equitably estopped from suing to recover money involuntarily paid upon an illegal assessment by the fact that he himself had petitioned for the improvement for which the assessment was laid, where it appears that the common council, in ordering the improvement, directed a larger part of the cost to be assessed upon the property benefited than was asked by the petition, and the work was unsatisfactorily performed.—Nickodemus v. City of East Saginaw, 25 Mich. 456.

§ 134. Presumptions and evidence.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 444. In an action brought to recover money involuntarily paid upon an assessment payment by the city marshal to the city treasurer, as required by law, of all moneys collected by him upon an assessment put into his hands for collection, will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary.—Nickodemus v. City of Saginaw, 25 Mich. 456.

¶ 465. In an action of assumpsit by the City of Sault Ste. Marie under its charter to recover the amount of a special assessment tax, where it is not claimed that the tax was paid or otherwise satisfied, evidence as to whether any delinquent return was made of the defendant's land is immaterial, as the charter authorizes suit after a special assessment has become payable.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 65.

¶ 446. Where the supreme court on appeal of an action by a taxpayer against a city to recover special assessments for paving purposes paid under protest determines that plaintiff has been overcharged in a certain sum, and remands the case to the trial court with instructions to compute the tax as indicated, and, when the matter comes on again in the circuit court, following the filing of a remittitur, a dispute arises between counsel as to the correct method of computation, and, after the supreme court denies an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the circuit judge to enter a judgment according to the contentions of plaintiff's counsel, the parties proceed to trial in the circuit court, evidence consisting of a resolution by a city council remitting the interest on such taxes for a certain period is admissible.—Corby v. City of Detroit, 191 Mich. 308.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS.

TREATS of the wrong of instituting a criminal or civil prosecution against another without probable cause and with malice, and of the wrong of abusing the process of courts for an ulterior and illegal purpose. It excludes the wrong of false imprisonment, which does not depend on the baselessness or maliciousness of the prosecution or on the existence of any prosecution (see False Imprisonment). The crimes of blackmail and threats to extort money are treated in Crimes, II; Indictment. Actionable defamation by means of legal proceedings is treated in Libel and Slander.

¶ 1. Action for malicious prosecution will not lie unless defendant acted from malicious motives and without probable cause.—Hamilton v. Smith, 89 Mich. 222; Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366.

¶ 2. Want of probable cause and malice must concur, to entitle the plaintiff to recover in a suit for the malicious prosecution of a writ of attachment.—Le Clear v. Perkins, 103 Mich. 131.

§ 2. Responsibility and participation in the wrong.

Liability of magistrate proceeding on defective papers, see also post ¶ 16.

Liability of assignor as responsible superior of assignee collecting debt, see also Assignments ¶ 80.

¶ 3. All concerned in originating and carrying on a malicious prosecution are jointly and severally responsible.—Cascarella v. National Grocer Co., 151 Mich. 15.

¶ 4. An action for malicious prosecution cannot be maintained against the complainant in a criminal proceeding who, after fully and fairly disclosing to the prosecuting officer everything within his knowledge which would tend to cause or to exclude belief in plaintiff's criminality, left him to determine on his sole responsibility whether the proceeding should be instituted, even though the case were not a proper one for prosecution.—Smith v. Austin, 49 Mich. 286.

¶ 5. A justice's mistake in filling out a complaint as one for assault and battery, when the actual complaint on which the warrant was issued was for an assault only, cannot in an action for malicious prosecution prejudice the person making the complaint.—Carter v. Sutherland, 52 Mich. 597.

¶ 6. Where a party goes before a magistrate to make a criminal complaint, accompanied by counsel, expecting to make complaint in writing, and that a warrant will issue in the usual way, and is in no manner at fault that it does not so issue, he cannot be held liable for the act of the magistrate in directing the arrest of respondent without a warrant.—Poupard v. Dumas, 105 Mich. 326.

¶ 7. Where a defendant citizen does nothing more than cause a sample of plaintiff milk dealers' milk to be secured and analyzed by the dairy inspector, and has no other connection with a prosecution for selling adulterated milk, he is not guilty of malicious prosecution, even though animated by spite.—Birdsall v. Smith, 158 Mich. 390.

¶ 8. Where a prosecuting attorney refuses to act on a complaint when first made, and makes an independent investigation for himself, the prosecuting witness, in signing such complaint after the investigation, is entitled to assume that the prosecutor is instituting the prosecution on behalf of the public.—Christy v. Rice, 152 Mich. 563.

Mandamus as remedy for abuse of process, see Mandamus ¶ 197.
Statutory liability for vexatious litigation, see Jud. Act, chap. XX, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 12740.

¶ 8a. Action for the abuse of process lies for the improper use of process after it has been issued, not for maliciously causing it to issue.—Spear v. Pendill, 164 Mich. 620.

¶ 8b. Two elements are necessary to an action for the malicious abuse of legal process: (1) the existence of an ulterior purpose; and, (2) an act in the use of the process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceeding.—Spear v. Pendill, 164 Mich. 620.

¶ 8c. Defendant in dealing with plaintiff, a bucket shop keeper, suffered a loss of seven hundred dollars. Defendant instituted a suit in assumpsit and by writ of garnishment impounded in a local bank $5,000 of money and securities belonging to plaintiff. Defendant swore out a criminal complaint against plaintiff who pleaded guilty and was fined five hundred dollars. Defendant did nothing but swear out the complaint and exercised no control over the warrant or the prosecution. In a suit for malicious abuse of process, held, defendant was not liable.—Spear v. Pendill, 164 Mich. 620.

¶ 8d. There is no abuse of process where no steps are taken under it which are not in accordance with the law.—Barlow v. Lincoln-Williams Twist Drill Co., 186 Mich. 46.

¶ 9. Obtaining a judgment by fraud and perjury without any valid demand to base it upon, and suing out an execution upon such judgment with knowledge of its false and fraudulent character, and extorting money under such execution, is an abuse of process for which an action will lie.—Antcliff v. June, 81 Mich. 477.

¶ 10. The wrong committed by extorting money from the owner by means of an abuse of criminal process is a tort not different in character from extorting by the same means any other property of his.—Marlatte v. Weickgenant, 147 Mich. 266.

¶ 11. A plaintiff may recover in a case of abuse of criminal process where the testimony showed a use of a warrant charging a criminal offense as a means, which, when accompanied by threats of an arrest under it, resulted in frightening the plaintiff into paying over to agents of the defendant a sum of money in excess of any demand of defendant.—Marlatte v. Weickgenant, 147 Mich. 266.

¶ 12. In an action for malicious prosecution of a criminal case for stealing an article from defendant's tenant which plaintiff claimed to own, where all that he did was, on the advice of the prosecuting attorney, to demand a return of the property which he and his tenants had bought and paid for and which he honestly believed belonged to them, and he did not attempt to extort any money from the defendant in the criminal case there was no abuse of criminal process.—Thomas v. Bush, 200 Mich. 224.

¶ 13. A judgment in justice's court, based upon the service of summons by a private person not properly designated for that purpose, was affirmed in the circuit court upon special appeal, but reversed in the supreme court, with costs to defendant, who, being unable to collect them, brought an action on the case against the person who had served the summons. Held, that the latter was not liable either for such costs or for having testified in justice's court knowing that there was no jurisdiction.—Stimer v. Bryant, 84 Mich. 466.

II. THE PROSECUTION.

§ 4. In general; prosecution for crime.

Civil proceedings and seizures regarded as "prosecutions," see post §§ 5, 6.

Presumptions, burden of proof, and evidence, see post §§ 21-34.

¶ 14. A proceeding under Comp. L. 1871, § 7826, How. St., ch. 331, to compel a person to find security to keep the peace, is a prosecution, though the magistrate fails to examine the complainant.—Sweet v. Negus, 30 Mich. 406.

¶ 15. Proceedings before a justice under Comp. L. 1871, § 1998, to enforce a penalty for keeping billiard-tables, cards or dice for gaming, were criminal in character. The judgment provided for, being for fine and security for good behavior, was an entirety. There could be no separate prosecution for the fine only. The judgment was of a class peculiar to criminal remedies, and not one which, under sections 5268 or 6843, could be recovered in a civil suit; and a complaint and warrant based upon said section 1998 were to be construed as preliminary steps in a criminal procedure, looking to an examination as provided by chapter 259, and not to a trial before a justice, and the intervention of the prosecuting attorney was not essential to their validity.—Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33.

¶ 16. On complaint under Comp. L. 1871, § 7826, How. St. § 9436, an examination in writing and on oath, subscribed by complainant, should be made by the magistrate before issuing the warrant; but whether a failure to make such complaint will deprive a magistrate of his jurisdiction, quære; it certainly is not an error that complainant can take advantage of.—Sweet v. Negus, 30 Mich. 406.

§ 5. Civil actions; attachments and seizures of property.

Necessity of arrest or seizure of property to make out tort, see post § 6.

Necessity and sufficiency of termination of civil action, see post § 15.

Effect of advice of counsel to commence suit at law, see post § 13.

Instructions, necessity and sufficiency, see post § 44.

¶ 17. If wrong and injury are done by a malicious suit, it is immaterial whether the court had jurisdiction or not to entertain such suit.—Antcliff v. June, 81 Mich. 477.

¶ 18. An action for malicious prosecution of a suit in chancery was entertained, apparently without question that such was actionable.—Pawlowski v. Jenks, 115 Mich. 275.

¶ 19. Plaintiff was on the point of holding an auction sale of personal property at his farm. Defendant filed a bill to enjoin such sale, acting maliciously and without setting out an equitable ground for the injunction. The writ was issued, served on the plaintiff, and the sale stopped. Held, plaintiff might recover in an action on the case for malicious prosecution of a civil action.—Krzyszke v. Kamin, 163 Mich. 290.

¶ 20. Whether the mere swearing out of a false attachment without probable cause is not actionable, if damage results, even though there is no service or seizure of the property, quære.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

§ 6. ——Actions without arrest or seizure.

¶ 21. An action on the case for malicious prosecution lies where plaintiff has been injured by a suit instituted against him maliciously and without probable cause, even though his person may not have been molested nor his property seized.—Antcliff v. June, 81 Mich. 477.

¶ 22. The plaintiff had been a defendant in a replevin suit for some sheep. The plaintiff, five days before the seizure of the sheep, had sold them and passed title, but not possession, to another. In a suit for the malicious prosecution of the replevin suit, held, the action would not lie where the only interference with property was the taking from plaintiff's possession of property belonging to another.—Powers v. Houghton, 159 Mich. 372.

III. WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE, ULTERIOR OBJECT, AND ADVICE OF COUNSEL.

§ 7. In general.

Necessity of concurrence of want of probable cause with other elements of the tort, see ante § 1.

Presumptions, burden of proof, and evidence, see post §§ 21-34.

Sufficiency of proofs of abuse of process of attachment, see post ¶ 187.

¶ 23. Good faith and honest motives, unless there is probable cause for making a criminal complaint, are not a defense to an action for malicious prosecution.—Wilson v. Bowen, 64 Mich. 133.

¶ 24. An action for malicious prosecution cannot be maintained against the complainant in a criminal proceeding for which there was probable cause, no matter how evil or malicious his motives may have been in making complaint.—Smith v. Austin, 49 Mich. 286.

¶ 25. The motive with which a prosecution is undertaken is wholly immaterial, if there was in fact probable cause.—Goode v. Eslow, 151 Mich. 48.

§ 8. Probability of cause and grounds of belief.

Appearances warranting belief and showing probable cause, see post § 9.
Advice of counsel, magistrate, or other officer as justification for instituting prosecution, see post § 10 et seq.
Noninference of want of probable cause from fact of malice, see post § 21.
Evidence as to probability, see post § 24.
Evidence to show honest belief, see post § 24.
Admissibility of documents as evidence, see post § 23.
Effect and conclusiveness of decision in the prosecution, see also post § 32.
Questions for court and jury, see post § 36.
Instruction on belief and probable cause, see post § 43.
Instructions in action for malicious civil prosecution, see post § 44.

¶ 26. "Probable cause" for prosecution depends on the circumstances of the case, and exists where the generality of business men of ordinary care, prudence and discretion would prosecute under the same conditions.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222; Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 27. The true inquiry upon the subject of probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution is, not what the actual facts were as to plaintiff's guilt or innocence, but what defendant had reason to believe and did believe they were.—Gallaway v. Burr, 32 Mich. 332.

¶ 28. Probable cause cannot rest on mere conjecture, nor on an unreasonable interpretation of appearances, especially if the accuser knew of facts that would have explained them, or knew that they were contrived by conspiracy, or other corrupt means, to give a colorable basis for prosecution, or to entrap the accused into admitting guilt of other offenses.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 29. To constitute probable cause for the arrest of a person there must be a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves, to warrant an ordinarily cautious person in believing that the person arrested was guilty of the offense charged.—Gilecki v. Dolemba, 189 Mich. 107. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 30. The mere belief of a person making a criminal complaint, that it is true, does not alone justify a prosecution thereunder; it must rest on reasonable grounds and on such facts as would lead a person of ordinary caution to honestly suspect the accused of guilt.—Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366; Wilson v. Bowen, 64 Mich. 133.

¶ 31. To sustain the good faith of a complaint for obtaining goods under false pretenses the plaintiff need not have actual personal knowledge of the facts, but may rely on such statements, received through the usual channels, as a business man of ordinary prudence would act upon, if he honestly believed them to be true.—Gallaway v. Burr, 32 Mich. 332.

§ 9. ——Existence or appearance of particular offenses.

Evidence as to probability of cause or appearance of crime, see also post § 24.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 31.
Sufficiency of evidence of incriminating behavior, see post § 31.
Sufficiency of showing for issuance of warrant for arrest, see Arrest § 9 et seq.
Necessary elements of the various crimes, see Crimes, II.

¶ 32. A husband who before the expiration of the time to obtain a reconveyance, removed doors, etc., from a house owned by his wife situate upon the property as to which a tax deed was outstanding, was not guilty of the crime of willfully and maliciously destroying or injuring a house, etc., under Comp. L. 1897, § 11584, as it was assumed that what the husband did was authorized by his wife, and the holder of the tax deed was not then the owner of the property, the period for redemption not having expired.—Adkin v. Pillen, 136 Mich. 682.

¶ 33. A threat to stop one with cold lead is a threat to shoot him, and will sustain proceedings to keep the peace on a charge of threatening to shoot.—Thurkettle v. Frost, 137 Mich. 115.

¶ 34. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 11424, a certificate from the dairy commissioner that a sample of milk submitted by plaintiff milk dealer for analysis is adulterated, justifies an employee in signing a complaint against the plaintiff.—Birdsall v. Smith, 158 Mich. 390.

§ 10. Advice of counsel or magistrate.

Independent action by officer founded on information, see also ante § 2.
Demand of possession of property on advice of prosecuting attorney as abuse of criminal process, see ante ¶ 12.
Sufficiency of the disclosure of the facts to counsel, see post § 11.
Nonliability of person submitting facts on which officer or another person institutes prosecution, see also ante ¶ 4.
Effect of malice to destroy effect of advice, see post § 12.
Advice to commence civil prosecution, see post § 13.
Evidence as to advice of counsel, see post § 25.
Immateriality of counsel's or magistrate's personal belief, see post § 25.

Unjustified or erroneous advice, see also post ¶ 158.
Questions for court and jury, see post § 37.
Propriety and sufficiency of instructions on advice of counsel, see post § 43.
Directing verdict on proof of advice of counsel, see post § 40.
Direction of verdict on advice given after independent investigation, see post ¶¶ 209, 210.
Advice of counsel as justification for false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment § 8.

¶ 35. The advice of counsel, given after a full statement of the facts, to the effect that his client has a meritorious case, in the absence of testimony impugning the good faith of the latter, establishes probable cause for instituting suit, and will defeat an action for malicious prosecution.—Pawlowski v. Jenks, 115 Mich. 275.

¶ 36. While the advice of counsel fully informed of the facts may justify honest action taken in accordance with it, that of one who is not a qualified lawyer is not of itself an answer to a charge of malicious prosecution.—Stanton v. Hart, 27 Mich. 539.

¶ 37. The complainant in a criminal prosecution cannot be held liable for malicious prosecution, where, before the commencement of the prosecution, he placed all the material facts in the possession of his own counsel and of the prosecuting attorney, and acted upon their advice.—Wakely v. Johnson, 115 Mich. 285.

¶ 38. Where, in a suit for malicious prosecution in causing the arrest of plaintiff on a criminal charge, it appears that defendant fairly submitted to his counsel all the facts that he knew were capable of proof, and acted bona fide on the advice given in making the complaint, he negatives the want of probable cause, and is not liable even though the facts did not clearly warrant the advice and prosecution. To charge that he would not be "absolutely exonerated" is error.—Poupard v. Dumas, 105 Mich. 326.

¶ 39. It is a complete defense to an action for malicious prosecution that, before preferring the charge on which plaintiff was arrested, defendant fairly laid all of the material facts connected with the affair before the acting prosecuting attorney, a lawyer of eighteen years' experience, and acted entirely upon his advice; and this, although such attorney was at the time the local attorney for defendant, a railroad company.—Fletcher v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 109 Mich. 368.

¶ 40. The advice of the prosecuting attorney followed in good faith after a full and fair statement of all the material facts in the case is a defense to an action for malicious prosecution of a criminal action.—Whittemore v. Walter, 193 Mich. 365.

¶ 41. There is a complete defense to an action for malicious prosecution when it appears that the defendant actually submitted to his counsel all the facts, and acted in good faith on the advice given, irrespective of probable cause and absence of malice.—Slater v. Walter, 148 Mich. 650.

¶ 42. The advice of an attorney who had an interest in the net proceeds of the venture in controversy in a suit for malicious prosecution, afforded no protection to the defendant.—Adkin v. Pillen, 136 Mich. 682.

¶ 43. Advice of counsel, though erroneous as a matter of law, is a good defense to an action of malicious prosecution, where acted upon by the defendant.—Fleckinger v. Taffee, 149 Mich. 678.

¶ 44. Where the examining magistrate or counsel advises one that it is doubtful if, upon the facts stated, a party is guilty of any crime, the party procuring a warrant proceeds at his own risk.—Cascarella v. National Grocer Co., 151 Mich. 15.

¶ 45. In an action for malicious prosecution under an ordinance against a city and certain citizens, the fact that the city attorney advised that the ordinance requiring a license for transient traders and punishing a violation by fine and imprisonment was void is not evidence of malice or want of probable cause, where other competent counsel advised it was valid.—James v. Sweet, 125 Mich. 132.

¶ 46. Citizens and officers of a municipality are justified in proceeding to have the validity of an ordinance requiring transient traders to pay license fees determined in the courts notwithstanding the advice of the city attorney that it is unconstitutional; and so long as no malice is shown there is no liability.—James v. Sweet, 125 Mich. 132.

¶ 47. Where an attorney and client conspire to institute a malicious prosecution the latter cannot justify himself by the other's advice.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

§ 11. ——Sufficiency of disclosure of facts.

Admissibility of facts learned independently as bearing on probable cause, see post § 24.
Evidence as to completeness of disclosure, see post § 25.
Questions for court and jury, see post § 37.
Directing verdict on sufficiency of disclosure, see post § 40.

¶ 48. In an action for malicious prosecution to make it a defense that defendant acted on the advice of counsel, the advice sought must have been acted upon in good faith and a full disclosure must have been made to counsel.—Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391.

¶ 49. Whether one is safe in acting upon the advice of the prosecuting attorney in making a criminal complaint, though he fails to acquaint him with every fact bearing upon the offense, quære.—Harris v. Woodford, 98 Mich. 147.

¶ 50. In an action for malicious prosecution where the prosecuting witness has in good faith fully and fairly stated all the material facts within his knowledge to the prosecuting officer and acted on his advice, proof of the fact establishes a case of probable cause.—Thomas v. Bush, 200 Mich. 224.

¶ 51. The defense that defendant acted under advice of counsel, in an action for malicious prosecution, is not available where the facts as stated to counsel were that plaintiff had stated to one of the defendants that a named person had agreed to certain matters whereas the evidence showed plaintiff's statement to be that plaintiff's brother had told him that this particular person had agreed to the matter.—Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391.

§ 12. ——Effect of malice to destroy protection.

¶ 52. The advice of counsel is no protection in an action for malicious prosecution if defendant's motive was malicious.—Gallaway v. Burr, 32 Mich. 332.

¶ 53. A client cannot justify himself by his counsel's advice where both conspire to institute a malicious prosecution.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 54. The malice of a party who fully and fairly states the facts bearing upon the charge to the prosecuting officer does not take away the defense of advice of counsel.—Huntington v. Gault, 81 Mich. 144.

§ 13. ——For civil prosecution or attachment.

¶ 55. In an action for the alleged malicious prosecution of an attachment, defendant may show that he acted under the advice of counsel, before whom he had placed all of the facts; and the jury may consider such advice in determining the questions of probable cause and malice. No distinction from criminal prosecutions exists in this respect.—Le Clear v. Perkins, 103 Mich. 131.

IV. MALICE.

§ 14. In general; express and implied malice.

Good faith and motive without probable cause, see also ante § 7.
Malice or bad motive with probable cause, see also ante § 7.
Necessity of concurrence of malice with other elements, see ante § 1.
Nonliability of informant actuated by spite, see also ante ¶ 7.
Effect of malice to destroy protection afforded by having taken advice of counsel, see ante § 12.
Presumptions, burden of proof, and evidence, see post §§ 21-34.
Inference of malice from want of probable cause, see post § 21.
Relevancy of evidence to show ill feeling or motive and provocation, see post § 22.
Evidence as to honesty of belief and good faith, see post § 24.
Necessity and sufficiency of proof of malice, see post § 33.
Questions for court and jury, see post § 38.
Instructions as to inference of malice, see post § 42.
Elements and indicia of malice in criminal cases, see Crimes, II; Indictment, VIII, B.

¶ 56. Malice, in cases of malicious prosecution, may lie only in its being wilful, wanton or reckless, or against the accuser's sense of duty, and for ends that he is bound to know are wrong and against public policy.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222; Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 57. On the question of whether a prosecution for an assault was malicious it is proper to make allowance for the prosecutor's state of excitement.—Carter v. Sutherland, 52 Mich. 597.

¶ 58. The fact that an act not declared unconstitutional, under which a prosecution is brought, is in fact so, cannot make the prosecution malicious in the absence of knowledge by the defendant of such unconstitutionality.—Birdsall v. Smith, 158 Mich. 390.

V. TERMINATION OF THE PROSECUTION IN FAVOR OF PLAINTIFF.

§ 15. In general; necessity and sufficiency of termination.

Favorableness of the termination to present plaintiff, see post §§ 16, 17.
Pleading the termination, see post § 19.
Mode of pleading termination of attachment action after suing for malicious attachment, see post ¶ 78.
Presumptions, burden of proof, and evidence, see post §§ 21-34.
Admissibility of files and records as proofs, see post § 23.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence of termination, see post § 30.
Immateriality of instruction on necessity for termination of civil prosecution, see post ¶ 246.

¶ 59. In an action for malicious prosecution of a criminal charge it appeared that through the negligence of the clerk of the court the judgment discharging plaintiff from arrest was not at once entered of record. Held, that an entry nunc pro tunc was admissible as evidence of plaintiff's discharge prior to the commencement of his action.—Holmes v. Horger, 96 Mich. 408.

¶ 60. Where, in an action for malicious prosecution, it appeared that after the information against plaintiff had been quashed the prosecuting attorney entered, by leave of court, a nolle prosequi before a writ of mandamus requiring the information to be reinstated had been formally served upon the circuit judge, it was held that plaintiff was not responsible for the nonservice of the writ, that the case could not again be revived, and that it could not be claimed that plaintiff had failed to show a determination thereof.—Thompson v. Price, 100 Mich. 558.

¶ 61. It seems that action for malicious prosecution may be allowed whenever the particular proceeding on which it is based has come to an end so that the prisoner can be no further pressed upon it.—Stanton v. Hart, 27 Mich. 539.

¶ 62. Whether an action for a malicious prosecution, based on an illegal civil arrest, must be postponed until judgment has been rendered in the proceedings on which it is founded, quære.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300.

¶ 63. As a general rule malicious prosecution cannot be grounded on the prosecution of a malicious civil suit until such suit has terminated in favor of the defendant therein; but this rule does not apply to the suing out of a false and malicious attachment.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 64. Action for maliciously suing out attachment lies before attachment suit ends, but not pending dissolution proceedings.—Cadwell v. Corey, 91 Mich. 335.

§ 16. Favorableness to present plaintiff.

Compromise and settlement as a favorable termination, see post § 17.

¶ 65. Dismissal of a criminal charge for the prosecuting attorney's nonappearance is not an acquittal, and is not, in an action for malicious prosecution against the person who made the charge, sufficient evidence of want of probable cause.—Wakely v. Johnson, 115 Mich. 285.

¶ 66. An action for malicious prosecution lies against one who has caused the arrest of another on a criminal charge, even when the latter, after much delay, and an unsuccessful endeavor to obtain a trial, has been discharged on a nolle prosequi.—Stanton v. Hart, 27 Mich. 539.

¶ 67. An action for malicious prosecution will not lie if plaintiff was convicted before a justice of the peace, but was discharged on appeal, unless the conviction was procured by fraud, perjury or subornation, or was otherwise exceptional. And if any exception is relied on the plaintiff must allege the facts which create it.—Phillips v. Village of Kalamazoo, 53 Mich. 33.

(5 Mich. Dig. 52)

¶ 68. Where an accusation of felony is withdrawn and respondent is convicted of a misdemeanor included in it, but is acquitted on appeal, the conviction is not such evidence of probable cause as will defeat an action for malicious prosecution based on the charge of felony.—Labar v. Crane, 49 Mich. 561.

§ 17. ——Compromises and settlements.

¶ 69. To sustain an action for malicious prosecution of a criminal proceeding there must be an acquittal, or such proceedings as determine the case in favor of the accused person without any settlement by him of the criminal charges, or any connivance on his part to obtain his discharge.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 70. An action for damages for falsely and maliciously bringing an attachment suit is not barred by settlement of suit by paying the indebtedness and costs.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

VI. PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND TRIAL.

General law of trials, verdicts, findings and judgments, see Judgments; Trial; Verdicts and Findings.

Impropriety of judge's remarks in course of trial, see Trial, II.

Limitation of actions, see Limitations.

Costs in malicious prosecution actions, see Costs.

Prohibition and disqualification of prosecuting attorney to appear in action for malicious prosecution growing out of prosecution by him, see Comp. L. 1915, § 2410.

§ 18. Nature and form of action.

Parties liable for participating in the tort, see ante § 2.

Denial of jurisdiction to justices of the peace, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVI, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 14169.

¶ 71. An action for malicious prosecution is now an action on the case; and, as matter of pleading a charge of conspiracy in the declaration is mere surplusage and is only matter of aggravation, conspiracy could be proved even if not charged.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 72. An action on the case will lie for redress of extortion of money by abuse of process; while the remedy most usually sought is assumpsit it is not an exclusive remedy.—Marlatte v. Weickgenant, 147 Mich. 266.

§ 19. Pleading the cause and defenses.

Necessary proofs made by the issues, see post § 20.

Defenses allowable under the general issue, see post § 20.

Variance of proofs from allegations, see post § 20.

General law of pleading, see Pleading.

¶ 73. A declaration for malicious prosecution is defective if it does not aver the termination of the suit in the last court to which it was carried. But the defect is formal, and would be cured by a verdict for plaintiff on the merits.—Sutton v. Van Akin, 51 Mich. 463.

¶ 74. A charge of conspiracy is mere surplusage in an action for malicious prosecution.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 75. A count stating that defendant maliciously and falsely, without probable cause, "charged the said plaintiff with having committed a certain offense punishable by law, to wit, uttering and publishing as true a certain false, forged and counterfeit promissory note for the payment of money, knowing said note to be false, forged and counterfeited, with the intent to defraud and injure as aforesaid," and that defendant maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, and without investigation or inquiry, caused plaintiff to be arrested and imprisoned for thirteen days, at the expiration of which time he "was duly discharged and fully acquitted," etc., is a charge of malicious prosecution, not of illegal arrest and false imprisonment.—Haskins v. Ralston, 69 Mich. 63.

¶ 76. In an action of tort, a count in the declaration charging malicious prosecution construed and held to state a cause of action. —McDonald v. Hall, 193 Mich. 50.

¶ 77. A declaration alleged that an attorney, with full knowledge of the invalidity of a claim of $50 made by a client against a resident of an adjoining county, took out a justice's summons directed to any constable of the county where issued, and caused it to be served upon the defendant in the county where he resided by a deputy-sheriff of that county, and on the return-day, defendant not appearing, took a judgment for $300, which he removed by transcript to the circuit court, and caused an execution to be issued thereon, which he placed in the hands of the sheriff of the county in which defendant resided, and by threats of a levy upon defendant's property secured from him $240 in settlement of such void judgment. Held to state a cause of action in trespass on the case for abuse of process.—Antcliff v. June, 81 Mich. 477.

¶ 78. In action for malicious attachment, which does not need to await the termination of the attachment proceeding, if a motion to dissolve be made pending the malicious prosecution action and dissolution be ordered, plaintiff may show it; while if dissolution be denied, defendant may change his plea interposed in the malicious prosecution suit and set up the dissolution.—Cadwell v. Corey, 91 Mich. 335.

§ 20. Issues, necessary proofs, and variance.

Proofs of conspiracy, see also ante ¶ 71.

General law as to issues and variance, see Pleading, IX, X.

¶ 79. In an action for malicious prosecution for a specific offense, the plaintiff may, if he chooses, show that he did not commit it, although he need show no more than that there was no probable cause for the proceeding against him.—Patterson v. Garlock, 39 Mich. 447.

¶ 80. In a suit for malicious prosecution, a plea for the general issue is sufficient to raise the issue of probable cause.—Birdsall v. Smith, 158 Mich. 390.

¶ 81. The defense of probable cause in malicious prosecution may be shown under a plea of the general issue where the declaration sets out fully the affidavit, warrant, and the records of the prosecution.—Steadman v. Keets, 129 Mich. 669.

¶ 82. Where the declaration in an action for maliciously suing out a writ of attachment alleges that "the defendant caused the affidavit to be filed in the office of the clerk of the court, and caused a writ of attachment to be issued" thereon, plaintiff cannot be heard to say that the affidavit was not made and filed prior to the issue of the writ in the face of this allegation in the declaration.—Wiesinger v. First National Bank, 106 Mich. 291.

¶ 83. Where a declaration charging malicious prosecution averred that the plaintiff had been "acquitted and discharged," but also showed facts indicating that there had been a discontinuance instead, and not a trial and acquittal, it was not held such a variance from proof of a nolle prosequi as to invalidate the declaration, the context showing that the words did not refer to an acquittal on a trial.—Stanton v. Hart, 27 Mich. 539.

¶ 84. There was no variance between a declaration for malicious prosecution, which alleged that the "jury, having heard and considered the evidence against this plaintiff touching and concerning the said supposed offense, * * * rendered a verdict of not guilty; and * * * the said justice caused this deponent to be discharged out of custody, fully acquitted and discharged of the said supposed offense," and the record offered in evidence to show the criminal prosecution of plaintiff, which showed that defendant's objection to the admission of any evidence in the case, on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction to try the offense charged in the warrant, was sustained, and the jury thereupon rendered a verdict of not guilty, and the defendant therein was discharged.—Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

¶ 84a. The variance was fatal in an action on the case for malicious prosecution, where the declaration alleged trespass without legal authority, and the proofs showed a seizure under a writ of replevin issued in due legal form, though without probable cause.—Harris v. Thomas, 140 Mich. 462.

§ 21. Burden of proof and presumptions.

Prima facie sufficiency of proofs, see post §§ 30-34.
Inferable malice, see post § 33.
Instructions as to burden and presumptions, see post § 42.
General presumptions and general rules as to burden of proof, see Evidence, II.
Presumption as to malice in action for wrongful attachment, see also Attachment ¶ 401.

¶ 85. The burden of proving the want of probable cause is on the plaintiff.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222; Harris v. Woodford, 98 Mich. 147; Rankin v. Crane, 104 Mich. 6; Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391.

¶ 86. In malicious prosecution of an attachment it is incumbent on plaintiff to prove want of probable cause for the attachment, as distinguished from the attachment suit itself where the burden is on the attachment plaintiff to prove grounds for the attachment.—LeClear v. Perkins, 103 Mich. 131.

¶ 87. To support an action for malicious prosecution, the general rule is, that the plaintiff must establish the fact of the alleged prosecution, and that it has come to a legal termination in the plaintiff's favor, that the defendant had not probable cause, and that he acted from malicious motives.—Antcliff v. June, 81 Mich. 477.

¶ 88. In a suit for malicious prosecution plaintiff must show that the prosecution terminated favorably to himself.—Coveney v. Phiscator, 132 Mich. 258.

¶ 89. On a warrant reciting that prior to its issuance the justice examined on oath a witness other than the complainant, it will not be presumed that there was no positive evidence justifying issuance of the warrant, though the complaint was on information and belief.—Curnow v. Kessler, 110 Mich. 10.

¶ 90. Malice may be inferred from the want of probable cause.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222; Carson v. Edgeworth, 43 Mich. 241; Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 91. Malice in suing out attachment may be inferred from want of probable cause.—LeClear v. Perkins, 103 Mich. 131.

¶ 92. Malice is not implied from an unfounded prosecution.—Carson v. Edgeworth, 43 Mich. 241.

¶ 93. Want of probable cause can never be inferred from malice.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 94. Where want of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the warrant, but only by evidence aliunde, the party arrested and prosecuted may, when acquitted, maintain an action for malicious prosecution on a showing that it was malicious, and without probable cause or good faith.—Sweet v. Negus, 30 Mich. 406.

§ 22. Admissibility of evidence.

Evidence permissible under the pleadings and variance, see ante § 20.
To show particular elements of the tort, see post §§ 28-29.

¶ 95. One who sued for malicious prosecution showed that defendant had called him meddlesome and troublesome. Defendant's offer to justify the epithets by showing that plaintiff was reputed to be quarrelsome, meddlesome and vindictive was properly overruled, since the epithets were important only as showing his own feelings.—Labar v. Crane, 56 Mich. 585.

¶ 96. It is irrelevant in an action for malicious prosecution by one arrested for obstructing an alleged highway, that the arrested person had an arrangement with witness to do hauling over it and to be paid by orders on defendant who disputed the existence of the highway.—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96.

¶ 97. In an action for malicious attachment subsequent attachments and a foreclosure may be shown, the jury being left to say whether they resulted from suing out the first writ.—Grimes v. Bowerman, 92 Mich. 258.

¶ 98. An unfounded prosecution cannot be justified, or the prosecutor's malice disproved, by evidence of offenses committed by the plaintiff other than those for which he was prosecuted by the defendant.—Carson v. Edgeworth, 43 Mich. 241.

¶ 99. Plaintiff occupied a house part in the highway and part on defendant's land. Upon being asked to move off because defendant desired to use the land for piling logs, he refused and when informed that men would be sent to grade the land, he stated that he would stop them "with cold lead," whereupon defendant caused his arrest for the threat, but the proceedings were dropped because of some irregularity. Plaintiff sued for malicious prosecution. Held, that evidence that defendant had other land which he could use for piling the logs was inadmissible, since his right to evict was not dependent upon a necessity for immediate use of the premises.—Thurkettle v. Frost, 137 Mich. 115.

¶ 100. In an action for malicious prosecution for causing the arrest of plaintiff for the larceny of an organ, testimony by a witness that plaintiff had inquired of him what defendant could do if she moved the organ away, and that he replied that it could be replevined, has a tendency to prove, but did not constitute an express admission by plaintiff of want of title conclusive on that issue.—McClay v. Hicks, 119 Mich. 65.

¶ 101. Testimony of plaintiff in a suit for malicious prosecution, to the effect that he had had some dealings before with the defendant, and that he had owed defendant money, was properly admitted, but even if it were error to admit it, such error would be harmless.—Bartlett v. Jenkins, 150 Mich. 682.

¶ 102. It is permissible to show whether defendant appeared to be pleased or displeased when the plaintiff was released on his own recognizance, but not to ask a witness for his conclusions as to whether defendant was pleased or not.—Fleckinger v. Taffee, 149 Mich. 678.

¶ 103. In an action for malicious prosecution it cannot be shown what the witnesses in the criminal case testified to, in order to show that the discharge of the plaintiff constituted a miscarriage of justice.—Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

¶ 104. The existence of probable cause being established, the defendant's motives in causing the arrest of plaintiff are immaterial, such as the fact that they offered to refrain from such prosecution if plaintiff would repay the money he had misappropriated.—Rankin v. Crane, 104 Mich. 6.

§ 23. ——Files and documents as evidence.

Filing of second complaint as evidence of malice, see also post ¶ 144.
Admissibility of documents as such, see Evidence, VIII, C.
Files of criminal case as proper evidence and foundation for same, see also Evidence §§ 548, 549.

¶ 105. That the magistrate, after being advised of all the facts, so negligently drew the complaint and warrant upon which plaintiff's suit for malicious prosecution is founded that they were not in proper form, is no ground for rejecting them when offered in evidence.—Cooney v. Chase, 81 Mich. 203.

¶ 106. The files in an attachment suit brought against plaintiff by one of the defendants are inadmissible in an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment brought by the manager of a paper who had been arrested for embezzlement of the funds of the company drawn out in excess of his salary, the manager claiming that he was in fact the owner of the property, where such files throw no light upon the issues involved.—Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300.

¶ 107. In an action for malicious prosecution, where it appeared that immediately upon the making of the complaint in question, the defendant transferred at a large discount, a note for $115 signed by plaintiff's father to one H, and that the defendant advised the father to call on H to aid him, and that H upon the father giving him a deed to his farm, promised to advance $200 to aid plaintiff in his trial, and that instead of giving the father the money, H gave him such note, it was not error to admit the note and deed in evidence, as it was a question for the jury to determine whether the complaint was made in good faith or for the purpose of collecting the note.—Brown v. Riggs, 123 Mich. 208.

¶ 108. In an action for malicious prosecution based upon violation of the local option law, the discharge of the plaintiff was admissible only to show the termination of the prosecution, and not for the purpose of showing the motives of the magistrate.—Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

§ 24. ——As to belief or probability of cause.

See also ante ¶¶ 27, 28, post ¶ 143.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post § 31.
Conclusion of defendant that he stated "all he knew" to attorney, see Evidence ¶ 1362.

¶ 109. In an action for malicious prosecution based on an arrest for a threat to shoot, evidence of plaintiff's previous good reputation is admissible as bearing upon the question of probable cause.—Thurkettle v. Frost, 137 Mich. 115.

¶ 110. In an action for malicious prosecution against a father for aiding and supporting his son in instituting and maintaining a prosecution against plaintiff on a charge of adultery with the son's wife, the fact that the wife may have been a hard working woman did not bear upon the question of whether she was guilty of adultery.—Goode v. Eslow, 151 Mich. 48.

¶ 111. In an action for malicious prosecution, where the question of want of probable cause is left to the jury, evidence of all the facts surrounding the transaction which was the cause of the prosecution may properly be admitted.—Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

¶ 112. In an action for malicious prosecution based upon a violation of the local option law, evidence as to other similar offenses is admissible only as bearing upon plaintiff's character and veracity and upon defendant's good faith.—Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

¶ 113. In an action for malicious prosecution for a specific theft it is not admissible to show that plaintiff had committed a different theft.—Patterson v. Garlock, 39 Mich. 447.

¶ 114. In an action for maliciously prosecuting a criminal charge it is proper to refuse to allow defendant to ask the prosecuting attorney whether before complaint was made he was satisfied there was good ground for it; the prosecuting attorney's good faith in the prosecution constitutes no defense in this action.—Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

¶ 115. In a suit for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, a letter from the prosecuting attorney, authorizing the commencement of the prosecution, is admissible as tending to show motive, and probable cause that an offense has been committed, and that the usual course was taken in such cases.—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96.

¶ 116. Evidence of what third persons had told the witness plaintiff had said to them about his purposes is hearsay, and in an action for malicious prosecution it is inadmissible, on the part of the defense, to excuse the arrest of the plaintiff.—Labar v. Crane, 56 Mich. 585.

¶ 117. Facts which came to the knowledge of defendant's counsel while investigating the alleged offense, and which were communicated to them before they caused plaintiff's arrest, may be given in evidence on the question of probable cause.—Gallaway v. Burr, 32 Mich. 332.

¶ 118. When a plaintiff in a suit for malicious prosecution is shown to have taken and appropriated to his own use property belonging to defendant, proof of an attempt by defendant to settle the matter and obtain his own does not of itself tend to show a want of criminal intent upon plaintiff's part, or a belief in his innocence upon defendant's part.—Harris v. Woodford, 98 Mich. 147.

¶ 119. In an action for malicious prosecution of an attachment the testimony of plaintiff's bookkeeper as to her knowledge of his business and financial affairs at the time of the attachment, and his efforts to borrow money, was admitted, she having previously communicated such facts to defendants, was competent and admissible as bearing upon the questions of probable cause and malice, and to enable the jury to say whether defendants did more than what careful and prudent men would have done under like circumstances.—LeClear v. Perkins, 108 Mich. 131.

¶ 120. Whether the mayor of a city was acting officially or in his private capacity in attempting to examine the books in a city office is a material inquiry in an action for malicious prosecution based upon the commencement by him of criminal proceedings for an alleged conspiracy to obstruct him in the exercise of his right, and evidence tending to show that he was merely seeking to aid a newspaper reporter in obtaining access to the records is relevant to this issue.—Tryon v. Pingree, 112 Mich. 338.

¶ 121. A company was formed to take over a newspaper, the former owner holding stock and being made manager at a weekly salary. After some years he was arrested at the instance of certain stockholders for embezzlement of funds of the company during a specified period. He claimed that he was really the owner and that the stock was issued to be held as security until debts guaranteed by the stockholders were paid, and that the money drawn out in excess of his salary was applied to those debts. Held, in an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, that evidence was admissible on the issue of probable cause, showing the transactions since the company was organized, and was not limited to the time during which the embezzlement was alleged to have occurred.—Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300.

¶ 122. In an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment by the manager of a paper who had been arrested for embezzlement of funds of the company drawn out in excess of his salary, where the manager claimed that he in fact owned the paper, and that the company, stockholders of which had caused his arrest, was organized simply to provide security for funds advanced, evidence of what was done with the property after plaintiff's connection therewith had ceased is inadmissible.—Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300.

¶ 123. In an action for malicious prosecution for criminally prosecuting plaintiff who let a horse out of defendant's stable and took a basket therefrom while performing services as a hired man for defendant's tenant whose contract permitted the use of such horse and also farming tools, evidence as to the size of defendant's farm was proper as bearing upon the rights of the tenant, and of the plaintiff as his hired man, to handle the horse and use the basket in question.—Gould v. Gregory, 133 Mich. 382.

¶ 124. Where plaintiff, arrested for defending possession by force, had purchased certain buildings and admitted that he had no title to the land but claimed that the purchase included the right to occupy the land, a simple bill of sale of the property to his vendor with a chattel mortgage back for the purchase price is admissible to show no right and that plaintiff did not in good faith believe that he had a right to occupy the land and to defend it by force.—Thurkettle v. Frost, 137 Mich. 115.

¶ 124a. Evidence tending to show that after plaintiff's discharge from jail on a charge of larceny he sent underclothing to an alleged accomplice at the jail, is admissible in an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, where plaintiff had testified that at the time of his arrest such alleged accomplice was a total stranger to him, and that he had had no dealings with him, since their relations were relevant and this tended to show what their relations were.—Lanaky v. Prettyman, 140 Mich. 40.

¶ 125. In an action for malicious prosecution resulting from the arrest of defendant for breaking a window in a church it is competent to show in order to discredit good faith that the justice of the peace endeavored to obtain protection for defendant against a possible action for malicious prosecution.—Gurden v. Stevens, 146 Mich. 489.

¶ 126. Evidence of the condition of plaintiff's business, and of his assets and credit when affidavit was made, may be admitted to show want of probable cause for attachment.—Grimes v. Bowerman, 92 Mich. 258.

§ 25. ——As to advice of counsel or magistrate.

Evidence as to what prosecuting attorney or magistrate believed, see also ante § 24.

¶ 127. In an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, it is competent for the justice of the peace who issued the warrant to state fully what took place when the parties first appeared before him, and what proceedings were had; and he may be asked on cross-examination by defendant, "what conduct before him in the proceedings, or in his presence or hearing, on the part of the defendant, disclosed to him any maliciousness or overanxiety to prosecute the criminal case, if any."—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96.

¶ 128. In an action for malicious prosecution resulting from the arrest of plaintiff from breaking a window in a church, the opinion of the justice of the peace who issued the warrant as to the plaintiff's guilt and of his opinions of defendant's statements were not material to the issue, but where it is claimed that he and defendant had conspired to extort money for the payment of the glass when both knew the breaking was not malicious, evidence of his good faith is admissible, and the defendant may negative the claim of conspiracy even though the justice's opinions necessarily appeared in the testimony.—Gurden v. Stevens, 146 Mich. 489.

¶ 129. In an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment where defendants set up that they had stated the facts to the prosecuting attorney and had no further connection with the arrest, it is error to exclude evidence by the prosecuting attorney as to directions given to the officer making the arrest, the plaintiff already having testified as to the place and particulars of the arrest.—Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300.

¶ 130. In an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, the defense being probable cause, the prosecuting attorney who was present and heard all the testimony, should be permitted to testify whether any testimony had been given relative to facts known to defendant, which had not been placed before him before the criminal prosecution was commenced.—Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300.

¶ 131. In an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, where the manager of a paper had been arrested at the instance of stockholders, for embezzlement, an expert who had been employed by defendants to examine the company's books after the matter had been laid before the prosecuting attorney should be permitted to testify as to what he had learned and what he reported to the prosecuting attorney, such evidence being admissible on the issue of probable cause.—Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300.

¶ 132. In an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, it is error to exclude evidence by defendant as to what he told the prosecuting attorney, such evidence being admissible to show whether or not the facts were fully laid before the prosecuting attorney.—Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300.

¶ 133. In a suit for malicious prosecution, the testimony of the justice who issued the warrant for plaintiff's arrest as to whether or not he considered, from defendant's statement of the facts, that there was probable cause for making the complaint, is immaterial and inadmissible.—Bartlett v. Jenkins, 150 Mich. 682.

¶ 134. In a suit for malicious prosecution, testimony of a witness who was present, as to what occurred when plaintiff obtained from defendant's wife the wheat which defendant prosecuted him for stealing, is admissible as throwing light upon plaintiff's innocence, and as bearing on the state of facts necessary to be known by counsel who advised the prosecution, provided it shall appear that such facts came to the knowledge of defendant.—Bartlett v. Jenkins, 150 Mich. 682.

¶ 135. In a suit for malicious prosecution, where probable cause based on advice of counsel is one of the defenses, it is proper to ask defendant on cross-examination if he paid his counsel, and the time and amount of such payment.—Bartlett v. Jenkins, 150 Mich. 682.

¶ 136. In a suit for malicious prosecution of plaintiff for stealing wheat, one of the defenses being probable cause, based on advice of the prosecuting attorney, it is competent to prove on cross-examination of defendant, that he told the prosecuting attorney that he (defendant) and plaintiff had a talk about the wheat, whereupon the prosecuting attorney said that had he known this fact he would not have endorsed the complaint.—Bartlett v. Jenkins, 150 Mich. 682.

¶ 137. In an action for malicious prosecution in establishing the defense that the prosecution was commenced by the advice and direction of the prosecuting attorney, quære whether the prosecuting attorney may testify as to what investigation he made for himself on his own motion in addition to the information obtained from the defendant. —McLeod v. Crosby, 128 Mich. 641.

§ 26. ——As to malice.

Mental excitement as factor for consideration on question of malice, see ante ¶ 57.
Evidence to show malice in action against sheriff for wrongful attachment, see Attachment ¶ 405.

¶ 138. In a suit for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution the plaintiff may show exhibition of feeling on the part of the defendant after the suit was brought, as having some tendency to show motive, if connected with the matter in controversy, but not otherwise.—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96.

¶ 139. While it is true that every kind of ill feeling is not necessarily indicative of malice, yet malice may be proved by evidence of defendant's conduct and declarations; and if such conduct resulted in a wrong done to plaintiff, statements indicating ill feeling towards the plaintiff may be introduced in evidence, as bearing upon the intent with which the wrongful act was committed. Malice may be inferred by the jury from all the facts and circumstances given in evidence, and expressions of ill feeling are circumstances which are proper to be submitted to the jury. Mere expressions of dislike or ill-will by one towards another, unaccompanied by acts, do not constitute malice in the legal sense. But where an act has been done—such as instituting a prosecution—then such expressions become relevant upon the question of malice.—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96.

¶ 140. In suit for malicious arrest and false imprisonment the statements made by the defendant, after his arrest, concerning his motives and doings in regard to the proceedings, are receivable as admissions against him to show the malice; so also are all of his conversations with and threats made to the party arrested before the arrest.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300; Josselyn v. McAllister, 25 Mich. 45.

¶ 141. In an action for malicious prosecution it is admissible as bearing upon the question of malice and probable cause to show the anterior personal relations of the parties, and that the defendant had said he was not personally cognizant of the matters on which he had based the prosecution.—Patterson v. Garlock, 39 Mich. 447.

¶ 142. In an action for malicious prosecution resulting from an arrest for breaking a church window the defendant may show that for months injuries to the church had been serious and frequent, as characterizing the intent and motives of defendant.—Gurden v. Stevens, 146 Mich. 489.

¶ 143. In an action for malicious prosecution, conversations between defendant and the prosecuting attorney concerning plaintiff's prior acts for which she had been arrested at defendant's instance upon a charge like that involved in the present suit, but distinct from it, and a magistrate's record of proceedings had before him three years before upon such charge, do not bear upon the questions of probable cause or malice, and are inadmissible in evidence.—Wilson v. Bowen, 64 Mich. 133.

¶ 144. A second complaint and warrant against plaintiff on the same charge, after he had been discharged because the first papers were defective, and after he had brought suit, were admissible in an action for malicious prosecution as tending to show malice.—Cooney v. Chase, 81 Mich. 208.

¶ 145. Evidence that defendant caused notice of plaintiff's arrest to be published in the newspapers was admissible in an action for malicious prosecution, not only as an element of damage but as tending to show malice.—Cooney v. Chase, 81 Mich. 208.

¶ 146. In an action for malicious prosecution, where for the purpose of establishing malice a witness for plaintiff had testified that defendant had stated that "somebody had been down to his cottages and had broken into the boathouse and knocked holes into the boats," and that he thought that the plaintiff had done it; testimony as to the number of cottages owned by defendant was proper.—Gould v. Gregory, 133 Mich. 382.

§ 27. ——As to injury and gravity thereof.

Evidence as to damages, see Damages § 316.

¶ 147. Evidence that a notice of the attachment suit was published in a daily paper, and proof of that paper's circulation, are admissible, such publication tending to injure plaintiff's credit and business.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 148. In action for malicious attachment it is proper to show that plaintiffs' business reputation was good before the issue of the attachment.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 149. In an action for malicious attachment a third party's refusal, after issue of the attachment, to deliver an article of merchandise to plaintiff without payment before delivery is admissible; whether such refusal was the result of the attachment proceedings or was attributable to other causes is for the jury.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 150. Under a declaration which avers that by reason of the malicious prosecution plaintiff's credit was impaired so that his creditors demanded security for their debts, and consequently he was obliged to mortgage his property, it is competent for him to show that he was a merchant, that he bought goods in a certain city, that he was indebted to several parties for goods, that said parties, on hearing of the pendency of the charge, refused him further credit, and required a chattel mortgage, which he was obliged to give in order to avoid suit.—Fine v. Navarre, 104 Mich. 93.

§ 28. ——As to responsibility or participation.

As to scope of agency or service, see Agency, II; Master and Servant, IV.

Evidence as to conspiracy to prosecute, see Conspiracy § 6.

¶ 151. Advising persons not to become sureties for one who has been arrested does not tend to show that those who give such advice have conspired with the person who caused the arrest, and are therefore liable with him to an action for malicious prosecution. Nor does their enmity toward the person arrested, nor their wish to drive him out of town.—Labar v. Batt, 56 Mich. 589.

¶ 152. In an action for malicious prosecution for criminally prosecuting plaintiff who let a horse out of defendant's stable and took a basket therefrom, while performing services as a hired man for defendant's tenant whose contract permitted the use of such horse and also farming tools, evidence as to such tenant's contract was proper, even though plaintiff was not acting under the tenant's orders at the time in question, as the jury might properly have inferred that plaintiff entered the barn and did the acts complained of, because of his obligations as such hired man.—Gould v. Gregory, 133 Mich. 382.

§ 29. Explanation and rebuttal.

¶ 153. The admission of testimony in a malicious prosecution case, to show that defendant did not explain the entire transactions in question to the prosecuting attorney at the time of making the complaint which led to plaintiff's arrest, offered in rebuttal after it was apparent that defendant did not rely upon the advice of such attorney was error; although defendant had attached a notice to his plea that he would rely upon the advice of such attorney, defendant's counsel having stated in open court that he did not rely upon the advice.—McClay v. Hicks, 119 Mich. 65.

§ 30. Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

As to various elements of the tort, see post §§ 31-34.

Sufficiency of admission of want of title to goods charged to have been stolen, see also ante ¶ 100.

Sufficiency of case as jury question, see post §§ 35-38.

Admissibility of evidence, see ante §§ 22-29.

¶ 154. In an action for malicious prosecution there must be established the fact of the alleged prosecution and that it terminated in plaintiff's favor, that defendant had not probable cause, and that he acted from malicious motives.—Thomas v. Bush, 200 Mich. 224.

¶ 155. To entitle plaintiff to recover in an action for malicious prosecution it must be established by a preponderance of evidence that the prosecution was begun and came to a legal termination in plaintiff's favor, and that in doing so defendant was actuated by malicious motives.—Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

¶ 156. One is properly found guilty of having instituted a malicious prosecution for larceny, where his information was obtained from a discharged convict then under criminal accusation, where the source of information was not disclosed to the magistrate from whom the warrant was obtained, where the arrest was made in the nighttime, defendant being present, and where the prosecution was voluntarily abandoned.—Chapman v. Dunn, 56 Mich. 31.

¶ 157. In an action for malicious prosecution in procuring plaintiff's arrest upon a criminal charge, evidence of a statement made by the prosecuting attorney long subsequent to the arrest, that he had told complaining witness, now the defendant, to investigate and withhold the warrant until the suspected person could be identified, is not substantive proof that defendant was so instructed, and accordingly was liable rather than the prosecuting attorney.—Eno v. Allen, 113 Mich. 399.

§ 31. ——As to probability of cause.

See also ante ¶ 156.
Effect of proof of advice of counsel sought and received, see ante § 10.
Decision or verdict in the prosecution as conclusive on question of probable cause, see post § 32.

¶ 158. Probable cause is shown where a defendant in an action for malicious prosecution of attachment fully and fairly placed the facts within his knowledge before counsel and acted upon his advice, although such advice may not have been justified by the facts stated.—Kompass v. Light, 122 Mich. 86.

¶ 159. Defendant in an action for malicious prosecution may testify whether, when he made the complaint upon which proceedings were instituted against the plaintiff, he believed it to be true. Such belief, however, is a question for the jury, and defendant's testimony has no more weight than that of any other witness.—Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366.

¶ 160. Evidence that offer to refrain from prosecution was made on condition that misappropriated money be repaid does not establish want of probable cause otherwise appearing to have existed.—Rankin v. Crane, 104 Mich. 6.

¶ 161. Where an employee procured to be discounted at a bank outside of the state a note received from a customer of his employer, and appropriated part of the money in payment of his unearned salary for the rest of the year for which he was hired, it was held, in an action by him for malicious prosecution after his employer had caused his arrest for embezzlement, that the jury should have been instructed that the evidence did not establish want of probable cause, and that it did establish probable cause.—Rankin v. Crane, 104 Mich. 6.

¶ 162. In an action against a railroad company for malicious prosecution in causing the arrest of plaintiff for knowingly receiving stolen property, evidence that plaintiff was seen with one who stole the goods and then fled the country, that the same were afterwards found upon the train with parcels belonging to plaintiff, that they were taken to his house by one who accompanied him, and that defendant had suffered from numerous thefts along its line, sufficiently shows probable cause for instituting the prosecution.—Fletcher v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 109 Mich. 363.

¶ 163. In an action with a count for malicious prosecution, there was evidence that defendant aided in procuring the arrest of plaintiff upon a charge of larceny for taking wood from land to which he knew that she made a bona fide claim of title and possession; and that, when plaintiff was discharged by the justice, defendant said to her: "You beat me. I will take you before my justice, where you will be beaten." Held, sufficient evidence of want of probable cause.—Loranger v. Loranger, 115 Mich. 681.

¶ 164. In an action for malicious prosecution for obstructing a highway, evidence that the defendant, a highway commissioner acting under the advice of the prosecuting attorney, signed and swore to a complaint, that the circuit court had sustained the validity of the proceedings to lay out the highway, is sufficient to sustain a finding of probable cause, Comp. L. 1897, § 4157, making the unlawful obstruction of a highway a penal offense.—Fowles v. Hayden, 129 Mich. 586.

¶ 165. In an action for malicious prosecution, want of probable cause was shown, where, although plaintiff was charged with breaking and entering defendant's barn with intent to steal a horse and basket, it appeared that plaintiff was the hired man of defendant's tenant, and that under the latter's contract the defendant was to furnish two teams and tools, and that the horse in question was one of those furnished such tenant and had been used by plaintiff as such hired man, and where at the time in question the stable door was only lightly fastened, and the horse was loose in its stall, and plaintiff let the horse out into an adjoining pasture to get food and water, and where he took the basket to the tenant for use in loading potatoes, although in doing such acts, he acted without the tenant's orders.—Gould v. Gregory, 133 Mich. 382.

¶ 166. Defendant had plaintiff arrested for cutting trees in a highway. Plaintiff, before the arrest, refused to state to defendant by what authority he cut the trees. In a suit for malicious prosecution, held, the plaintiff's refusal could not be held to be an acknowledgment that he acted without authority.—De Boer v. Adams, 159 Mich. 560.

¶ 167. Defendant was employed by a dairy and food commissioner. An analysis made in the commissioner's office of a certain quantity of milk sold by plaintiff showed the same to be adulterated. Defendant, with this information, was sent to prosecute the plaintiff, and signed the complaint against him. There was no evidence of defendant's connection with any conspiracy or of any ill-will against plaintiff. Held, no lack of probable cause was shown.—Birdsall v. Smith, 158 Mich. 390.

¶ 168. In an action for damages for malicious prosecution, evidence held sufficient to show probable cause for making the arrest. —Gilecki v. Dolemba, 189 Mich. 107.

§ 32. ——Conclusiveness and effect of decision rendered in the prosecution.

Conviction for minor charge as conclusive on favorable termination of felony charge, see also ante ¶ 68.

Judgment of conviction as evidence of probable cause, see also Former Adjudication § 11.

Conclusiveness and effect of discharge on habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus § 14.

¶ 169. The conclusion reached by a justice upon examination in a criminal proceeding as to whether there is probable cause for commitment is not final upon that question. —Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366.

¶ 170. That plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution was discharged upon examination is not conclusive evidence of want of probable cause on defendant's part in making complaint against him.—Perry v. Sulier, 92 Mich. 72.

¶ 171. In malicious prosecution the disagreement of the jury in the preceding prosecution and a subsequent nolle pros. do not conclusively show probable cause where the plaintiff's testimony is sufficient to show want of probable cause.—Burbanks v. Lepovsky, 134 Mich. 384.

¶ 172. Probable cause in malicious prosecution is not shown conclusively by the fact that the plaintiff was required to appear at circuit court, and that the jury disagreed.— Burbanks v. Lepovsky, 134 Mich. 384.

¶ 173. What is probable cause is not contingent upon the fact of the guilt of the accused, and his discharge upon examination is not of itself conclusive evidence of want of probable cause for arrest and prosecution.— Lansky v. Prettyman, 140 Mich. 40.

¶ 174. A prima facie case may be made by showing that plaintiff was discharged from the prosecution against him; but it is not conclusive.—Rankin v. Crane, 104 Mich. 6.

¶ 175. The weight of authority denies the rule that discharge by a magistrate upon the request of the prosecuting attorney is prima facie evidence of want of probable cause in a case of malicious prosecution.—Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391.

¶ 176. An acquittal in a criminal prosecution does not necessarily show want of probable cause in a malicious prosecution case.— Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391.

¶ 177. Where a plaintiff was arrested by a defendant officer for peddling meat without a license, and convicted by a justice of the peace, the conviction is conclusive proof of probable cause, and no action for malicious prosecution will lie in the absence of evidence that the conviction was secured by fraudulent means.—Schnider v. Montross, 158 Mich. 268.

Sufficiency of proofs as jury question, see post § 38.

¶ 178. In malicious prosecution proof of malice is essential, and want of probable cause is not alone sufficient to base a verdict upon.—Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391.

¶ 179. Malice may be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222; Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

¶ 180. In a case of malicious prosecution proof of malice is necessary, but it may be deducible from the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction, and is inferable from absence of probable cause.—Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391.

¶ 181. Evidence held to be such as to permit an inference of malice in an action for malicious prosecution.—Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

¶ 182. In an action for damages for malicious prosecution, evidence held sufficient to show lack of malice.—Gilecki v. Dolemba, 189 Mich. 107. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 183. When one resorts to the best means in his power for information before instituting legal proceedings against another it will be such a proof of honesty as would disprove malice and operate as a defense in proportion to his diligence.—Stanton v. Hart, 27 Mich. 539.

¶ 184. Malice in making an affidavit for an arrest cannot be disproved by evidence of acts of the person arrested which were unknown to the affiant, nor by showing additional facts having no bearing on the facts set forth in the affidavit as grounds of arrest, nor by matters ex post facto.—Josselyn v. McAllister, 25 Mich. 45.

¶ 185. The institution of a criminal prosecution for the recovery of a private claim is strong, if not conclusive, evidence of malice. —Gallaway v. Burr, 32 Mich. 332.

¶ 186. Malice was inferred in a malicious prosecution case, where defendant had criminally prosecuted plaintiff who let a horse out of defendant's stable and took a basket therefrom while performing services as hired man for a tenant of defendant, whose contract entitled him to use such horse and also farming tools; and where there was testimony that before the commission of the alleged crime, defendant had stated that plaintiff's "place was in Jackson, and that he would like to see him there."—Gould v. Gregory, 133 Mich. 382.

§ 34. ——Of abuse of process.

¶ 187. In an action for the malicious prosecution of an attachment suit, evidence that officers went to the debtors' store with the writ, showed it to one of the firm, and remained there for the purpose of preventing any goods going out of the store, shows a sufficient service of the writ or taking possession of the goods to maintain a charge of abuse of process.—Brand v. Hinchman, 68 Mich. 590.

¶ 188. In malicious prosecution, where two witnesses had testified that one of defendants had urged his brother and codefendant to cause the arrest, his connection with the transaction is for the jury, although it is urged that this occurred after the complaint was made, and before the arrest and subsequent proceedings.—Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391.

Navarre, 104 Mich. 93; Rogers v. Olds, 117 Mich. 368; Kompass v. Light, 122 Mich. 86; Davis v. McMillan, 142 Mich. 391; Fleckinger v. Taffee, 149 Mich. 678; Thomas v. Bush, 200 Mich. 224.

¶ 190. Where the facts are conceded in an action for damages for malicious prosecution the question of want of probable cause is one of law for the court.—Gilecki v. Dolemba, 189 Mich. 107.

¶ 191. The existence of probable cause for an alleged malicious prosecution depends on the state of facts found by the jury under proper instructions as to the rule of law to be applied according as they find one state of facts or another.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 192. In an action for malicious prosecution, where the parties themselves give contradictory testimony as to the acts which were the cause of the prosecution, the question of want of probable cause was properly left to the jury.—Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

¶ 193. The supervisor of a township was arrested on the charge of having wilfully neglected to require from a resident taxpayer a statement of his taxable property, and after the determination of the case he sued the complaining witness for malicious prosecution. The only witness, aside from plaintiff, who positively knew whether plaintiff had endeavored to procure such a statement, was the tax-payer himself, and he testified that he had no recollection of having had any conversation with defendant, prior to plaintiff's arrest, relative to plaintiff's having left a statement with him to make out, and that he did not think that he had such a conversation. Defendant offered testimony tending to show that the tax-payer had stated to one K that he was not required by plaintiff to furnish the statement. Held, that it was at least a question for the jury as to whether defendant was justified in making the complaint without making direct inquiry, of the only person other than plaintiff who was cognizant of the facts.—Thompson v. Price, 100 Mich. 558.

¶ 194. In a suit for malicious prosecution in causing plaintiff's arrest for engaging in the business of selling spirituous and intoxicating liquors without having paid tax and posted receipt and notice as required by law, the proof to sustain the complaint was that defendant had sent a third party to plaintiff to buy whisky, which he did, bringing it to defendant in a colored bottle furnished for that purpose, and that, on tasting the contents of the bottle the next day, it was found to be whisky. Plaintiff denied selling any whisky to said party, but admitted that he sold him light wine, made from native grapes, and claimed that, while he was not authorized to sell whisky, he had a "beer license." Held, that a request on defendant's part for an instruction that there was probable cause for making the complaint was properly refused, it being a question for the jury.—Fine v. Navarre, 104 Mich. 93.

¶ 195. Whether a mayor's demand for an examination of books of a department of the city government was in the line of his office or was prompted by a personal desire to obtain information for use by a newspaper, is a jury question where the facts stand disputed on the evidence, the action being one for malicious prosecution of a criminal charge against the persons who resisted such demand, accusing them of obstruction of a function of government.—Tryon v. Pingree, 112 Mich. 388.

¶ 196. Plaintiff, De Boer, under the authority of the overseer of highways, was engaged in cutting some trees in a highway. Defendant, an abutting owner, approached and objected. Plaintiff refused to answer all questions as to his authority and his name. There was evidence that the trees or grubs cut were in the middle of the road; that defendant knew they had been cut twice before; and that he had been previously told that a certain person other than the plaintiff had been requested by the overseer to cut the trees. Held, in a suit for malicious prosecution the question of probable cause was for the jury.—De Boer v. Adams, 159 Mich. 560.

¶ 197. Held, in an action for malicious prosecution, that it cannot be said as a matter of law from the evidence that plaintiff was guilty of forgery and uttering forged instruments, as charged, and that there was probable cause for prosecution in both cases. —Prine v. Singer Sew. Mach. Co., 176 Mich. 300.

§ 37. ——Advice of counsel and sufficiency of disclosure.

¶ 198. The advice and concurrence of a public prosecutor is not a good defense to an action for malicious prosecution unless it appears that defendant fully and fairly disclosed to such officer everything within his knowledge tending to cause or exclude belief in plaintiff's guilt; and whether such disclosure was made is a question for the jury to determine, and not for the court.—Webster v. Fowler, 89 Mich. 303.

¶ 199. One who, in making a criminal complaint, follows the advice of a magistrate before whom all the facts claimed to constitute the offense have been laid by police officers detailed to make an investigation, acts upon such probable cause as in matter of law when undisputed constitutes a defense to an action for malicious prosecution.—Rogers v. Olds, 117 Mich. 368.

¶ 200. Where, in an action for malicious prosecution, the evidence is conflicting as to whether defendant made a full and fair statement to the magistrate who issued the warrant of all the facts within his knowledge tending to cause or to exclude belief in plaintiff's guilt, the question whether he made such a disclosure should be submitted to the jury.—Govaski v. Downey, 100 Mich. 429.

¶ 201. Defendant testified that he talked with the tax-payer upon the subject, and was informed that plaintiff did not ask for any statement of the tax-payer's taxable property, and that he communicated this fact to the prosecuting attorney. Held, that, if this was true, it was the most important fact which was stated to the prosecuting attorney to form a basis for his judgment; that, the tax-payer having testified that, according to his recollection, he never made any such statement to defendant prior to the arrest of plaintiff, it would follow, if the jury accepted this testimony, that defendant did not fairly disclose the facts, and only the facts, within his knowledge, to the prosecuting attorney, and that it was a question for the jury as to whether he did or did not.—Thompson v. Price, 100 Mich. 558.

¶ 202. Plaintiff and defendant were members of the city common council. Defendant signed a criminal complaint against plaintiff, charging dishonesty in connection with a city paving contract. It appeared that defendant had brought to the prosecutor a witness who stated that plaintiff had told him he had made money out of the paving contract. Defendant in good faith disclosed all facts fairly to the prosecutor, and acted on his advice in signing the complaint. Held, in an action for malicious prosecution, that as a matter of law defendant had probable cause. —Smith v. Tolan, 158 Mich. 89.

¶ 203. The case was properly submitted to the jury both on the question of a full and fair disclosure to counsel and advice from him and on the question of probable cause, where the charge was for obtaining money by false pretenses consisting in selling clover seed by sample and delivering it in bags surfaced with good seed on top and bad seed below where it would not be found, and where defendant buyer shipped it away to a wholesaler and received back, as he claimed, the identical bags in the same condition as they came from plaintiff, but evidence on plaintiff's behalf tended to show that the bags delivered by him had been filled from the clover huller so that they could not have been surfaced or tampered with, and that the seed in the bags at time of trial was different from that he sold; since under such evidence the jury might find that the tampering was done by defendant, and since that if so found was inconsistent with any cause to prosecute plaintiff and with a full and fair statement to counsel.—Phiscator v. Rice, 147 Mich. 411.

§ 38. ——Malice.

¶ 204. The question of malice in an action for malicious prosecution is for the jury alone.—Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222.

¶ 205. The question of malice in an action for malicious prosecution is always for the jury when there is any evidence tending to establish it.—Hickey v. Shellenbarger, 180 Mich. 548.

¶ 206. In an action for malicious prosecution based upon an arrest under the statute providing for recognizances to keep the peace, it being alleged that plaintiff had threatened to shoot defendant, it is for the jury to determine from all the circumstances whether defendant was actually in fear that plaintiff would execute his threat, since otherwise the complaint was malicious.—Thurkettle v. Frost, 137 Mich. 115.

¶ 207. In an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution where the facts show that the defendant police officer had arrested the plaintiff while making a public address in a public place in violation of a city ordinance, and he thereafter swore to a complaint charging plaintiff with the use of indecent and immoral language constituting disorderly conduct without having read such complaint, that plaintiff was later arrested under a warrant issued on the complaint, and on the trial the arresting officer testified that no indecent or immoral language had been used on the occasion of the original arrest whereupon the accused was discharged; if it cannot be said as a matter of law that there was an absence of testimony showing malice, it was error for the court to withdraw from the jury the proceedings taken after the original arrest, and the responsibility of the defendant for what actually occurred.—Meyer v. Lally, 143 Mich. 578.

¶ 208. Where after a conviction for assault and battery, the assaulted party began an action for damages and caused a capias to issue, in which there was a verdict of no cause of action, whereupon the defendant in the capias suit brought an action for malicious prosecution, in which latter suit the record conclusively established that an unjustifiable assault had been committed upon the defendant and where it also appeared that the defendant had acted upon the advice of his attorney to whom the facts were fully known, in suing out the capias; the court should have held as a matter of law that there was probable cause and should have directed a verdict for the defendant.—Davis v. McLaughlin, 122 Mich. 393.

¶ 209. In a suit for malicious prosecution, the prosecuting attorney made an independent investigation of the alleged perjury of the plaintiff in swearing to the value of property, in a saloon bond, before permitting the defendant to press the prosecution. On an occasion previous to making the complaint, defendant had expressed an opinion that the bond was all right. Held, that evidence of this admission by defendant was immaterial, and he was entitled to a directed verdict.—Christy v. Rice, 152 Mich. 563.

¶ 210. The defendant went to the prosecuting attorney and asked him to prosecute the present plaintiff for perjury in swearing falsely as to the value of his property, in presenting a saloon bond. The prosecutor refused to do so until he had made an independent investigation. The prosecutor then prosecuted the plaintiff, and he was acquitted. Plaintiff sued for malicious prosecution. Held, the court should have directed a verdict for defendant, despite the fact that the prosecutor could not name in his testimony any one whom he had questioned in his special investigation.—Christy v. Rice, 152 Mich. 563.

¶ 211. Plaintiff, De Boer, under the authority of the overseer of highways, was engaged in cutting some trees in a highway. Defendant, an abutting owner, approached and objected. Defendant then went to the prosecuting attorney and told him that plaintiff was cutting the highway trees; that defendant asked him who he was, and plaintiff told him that was for defendant to find out; and that when asked for his authority to cut the trees plaintiff told him that that was his (plaintiff's) business. The prosecuting attorney issued the warrant for plaintiff's arrest. In a suit for malicious prosecution, the court directed a verdict and refused to submit to the jury the question whether defendant made such a full and frank disclosure to the prosecuting attorney as to relieve him from liability. Held, this was error, in view of evidence that defendant previously had been told that another person had been requested by the overseer to cut the trees.—De Boer v. Adams, 159 Mich. 560.

§ 40. ——On proofs as to advice of counsel.

Direction of verdict on proof of independent investigation and action by prosecuting attorney, see ante ¶¶ 209, 210, 211.

¶ 212. In an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, advice of counsel is not a conclusive defense so as to require a directed verdict where it is claimed that all the facts were not communicated to counsel and there is evidence bearing upon such claim.—Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300.

¶ 213. Advice of counsel is not such conclusive defense to an action for malicious prosecution as to require a directed verdict for defendant, since it is for the jury to determine whether the facts were fully and truly stated to counsel, and especially where there is conflict as to what actually was stated.—Thurkettle v. Frost, 137 Mich. 115.

¶ 214. Verdict for defendant in malicious prosecution is properly directed where it appears that, having missed money apparently by stealing, defendant took an affidavit presented to a justice and submitted it to an experienced lawyer with a full statement of facts, was advised to investigate further and did so, reported further and was then advised to prosecute, and resubmitted the affidavit to the justice who issued a warrant to arrest plaintiff who on examination was discharged.—Perry v. Sulier, 92 Mich. 72.

¶ 215. Where in a suit for malicious prosecution the undisputed evidence showed that defendant, by himself and by disinterested witnesses, placed all of the facts upon which his compliant against plaintiff for perjury was predicated before the prosecuting attorney, who advised such criminal prosecution, and that defendant acted upon such advice in making the complaint, the jury should have been instructed that plaintiff had failed to show that there was a want of probable cause to make the complaint.—Huntington v. Gault, 81 Mich. 144.

¶ 216. A directed verdict for the defendant in an action for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment is erroneous where the testimony for the plaintiff shows that he was not guilty of the offense charged, that defendants had no reason for believing him guilty, that the prosecuting attorney was not informed of all the material facts, and that he would not have advised a prosecution if he had been; the truth of these matters is for the jury.—Burbanks v. Lepovsky, 134 Mich. 384.

¶ 217. Where, in a malicious prosecution suit, there is a conflict of evidence as to whether the defendant told the truth in disclosing his case to the prosecuting attorney for advice, the court properly refuses to direct a verdict for him.—Kelley v. Paulsen, 162 Mich. 169.

¶ 218. In an action for malicious prosecution, held, that it is proper to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant on the ground that the evidence shows that the prosecutions, which were for forgery and uttering forged instruments, were under the direction of the prosecuting attorney after defendant stated to him all the material facts in his knowledge, where it appears that certain facts were withheld by defendant.—Prine v. Singer Sew. Mach. Co., 176 Mich. 300.

¶ 219. In an action for the malicious prosecution of an attachment, proof that defendant placed all of the facts before his counsel, and acted upon his opinion, will establish probable cause; but where it appears that part of the indebtedness alleged in the affidavit for the writ to be due and payable consisted of a note which, to the knowledge of defendant, was not then due, and that defendant did not consult his counsel as to his right to include the same, it is error to direct a verdict for defendant.—Wiesinger v. First Nat. Bank, 106 Mich. 291.

§ 41. ——For one of several coparties.

¶ 220. Where, in an action for malicious prosecution against a railroad company and one of its employees for the arrest of plaintiff, on the complaint of such employee, for the alleged larceny of property belonging to the company, there is no evidence showing or tending to show that the employee was instructed by any officer or employee of the company to make the complaint, or that he was acting in the line of his duty to the company in making it, a verdict is properly directed in favor of the company.—Govaski v. Downey, 100 Mich. 429.

¶ 221. It was assignable error for the court to refuse defendant's request to charge the jury, in an action on the case for malicious prosecution of a suit in replevin, that the burden of showing the existence of the want of probable cause in suing out such writ is upon the plaintiff, and such error was not cured by the less specific instruction given by the court that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff, as in any suit, and it was for the jury to say from the testimony whether the evidence satisfied them that there was no probable cause on the part of the defendants in instituting the suit.—Harris v. Thomas, 140 Mich. 462.

¶ 222. In an action for maliciously prosecuting a charge of assault growing out of a threat to "break his (defendant's) head" with a wagon stake unless he replaced certain property which he had taken, a judge, in instructing as to the amount of force that might have been used in defense of property without constituting an assault, may, without usurping the jury's function, say that it would not be justifiable to strike over the head with a stick.—Carter v. Sutherland, 52 Mich. 597.

¶ 223. In an action for malicious prosecution by capias for trespass to land and removal of timber an instruction that "the wilful overstatement in the affidavit for capias of the amount of timber taken by the plaintiff off of the land, by plaintiff in former suit is competent evidence of malice on the part of the defendant in this action for malicious prosecution" is properly refused as involving a statement of fact which was not conclusively proven but should have been left for the jury.—Steadman v. Keets, 129 Mich. 669.

¶ 224. It was not error in an action for assault and battery and malicious prosecution, for the court to refuse to charge the jury that even if the defendant did commit an assault on the plaintiff after the latter discharged his revolver, that fact could not affect the plaintiff's guilt of assaulting defendant, or defendant's right to prosecute him therefor, where the court, after charging the jury as to what they must find in order to justify them in finding a verdict for assault and battery, said: "Now, that is one part of the case. The other is for malicious prosecution"; and followed with a statement of the law applicable to that branch of the case.—Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

¶ 225. In an action for malicious prosecution brought against one charged to have aided and abetted another, an instruction upon the effect of knowledge not possessed by the prosecutor on the part of one who aids in a prosecution, should not be given where there is no evidence tending to show such knowledge.—Goode v. Eslow, 151 Mich. 48.

¶ 226. Plaintiff sued defendant for malicious prosecution in getting out an injunction against plaintiff without probable cause and serving the same on him to stop an auction sale of plaintiff's personal property. Held, that where it was clear defendant had no probable cause, and he introduced no evidence to rebut the presumption of malice, it was not error for the court to instruct the jury that the only question for them was one of damages.—Krzyszke v. Kamin, 168 Mich. 290.

§ 43. ——As to belief, probable cause, and advice of counsel.

See also ante ¶ 161.

¶ 227. Where the evidence as to the facts claimed by plaintiff to show want of probable cause is conflicting, the court should instruct the jury clearly what facts, when established, will justify a finding of want of probable cause, and a general charge is not sufficient.—Rankin v. Crane, 104 Mich. 6.

¶ 228. In an action for malicious prosecution the court must instruct the jury what facts in the case if found by them would constitute probable cause and general instructions on the subject are insufficient.—Slater v. Walter, 148 Mich. 650.

¶ 229. A charge in a malicious prosecution case which failed to point out what facts would constitute probable cause, but left the jury to determine the question according to their best judgment, was erroneous.—McClay v. Hicks, 119 Mich. 65.

¶ 230. An instruction, in a suit for malicious prosecution, that probable cause cannot exist where good faith is lacking, may be proper, if the case admits of the question. —Harris v. Woodford, 98 Mich. 147.

¶ 231. Where an action is brought against a father for aiding and abetting a malicious prosecution instituted by the son, an instruction is erroneous which is so worded as to render it doubtful whether language requiring plaintiff to so establish absence of probable cause and malice related to the son or to the father.—Goode v. Eslow, 151 Mich. 48.

¶ 232. The question of what constitutes probable cause is a mixed question of law and fact, and therefore it is proper for the court to direct the attention of the jury to a statement of what information, claimed to have been in the possession of the complaining witness, would be sufficient to constitute probable cause if the information was derived from reliable sources, and was acted upon in good faith and in belief of its truth. —Goode v. Eslow, 151 Mich. 48.

¶ 233. Where plaintiff had been discharged from arrest because the warrant against him was defective, a charge on the subject of probable cause that "if the discharge of the plaintiff from the first complaint was because the recorder, from the facts stated to him when the complaint was taken, afterwards concluded that there was no probable cause to suspect that plaintiff had been guilty of any offense, then you may consider this fact, with the other facts in the case, in determining whether there was or was not probable cause for the prosecution; but if you find that plaintiff was discharged from the first complaint because of the opinion of the recorder or prosecuting attorney that the complaint did not set forth the offense with legal accuracy, and could not be maintained for that reason, and that alone, then the discharge by the recorder does not in any way tend to prove either that there was or was not probable cause," was as favorable as defendant in an action for malicious prosecution could ask.—Cooney v. Chase, 81 Mich. 203.

¶ 234. Since a mayor's demand for inspection of books of a city department is not an official act or function of government, if made for the real purpose of furnishing information to a newspaper; a concerted obstruction of his access to the books is not an obstruction of a function of government by conspiracy. Accordingly in an action for maliciously prosecuting a charge of criminal obstruction, there being evidence putting the mayor's real motive in issue to the jury, it was error to refuse a charge that there was no probable cause if he had no official motive in seeking the books.—Tryon v. Pingree, 112 Mich. 338.

¶ 235. In an action for malicious prosecution where the prosecutions, which were for forgery and uttering forged instruments, were dismissed on motion of the prosecuting attorney, it is reversible error to instruct that the introduction of the records showing that plaintiff was discharged of the complaints in question prima facie established want of probable cause on the part of the man prosecuting, though a very full instruction is given in reference to what constitutes probable cause.—Prine v. Singer Sew. Mach. Co., 176 Mich. 300.

¶ 236. In a suit for malicious prosecution, an instruction that plaintiff's discharge has been sufficiently shown by the evidence is not objectionable, where such discharge has been established by undisputed proof.—Bartlett v. Jenkins, 150 Mich. 682.

¶ 237. An instruction, in a suit for malicious prosecution for the arrest of the plaintiff on a criminal charge, that if defendant acted upon the advice of counsel learned in the law, after placing all of the facts before him, no recovery could be had, is properly qualified by the statement that the jury might take into account the fact whether defendant paid the counsel anything, or employed him in any way as his counsel, or distinguished him from a magistrate; it appearing that he was a justice of the peace as well as an attorney at law.—Cooney v. Chase, 81 Mich. 208.

¶ 238. Defendant's requests to charge were properly refused, for the reason that two important elements were omitted necessary to be shown in an action for malicious prosecution for commencing a criminal suit, namely, that defendant made a full and fair statement of all the facts known to him to the prosecuting attorney, who authorized the issuance of the warrant, and to his private attorney, who advised him in the premises, and that he acted upon such advice in good faith.—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96.

¶ 239. Where defendant alleges that he acted upon the advice of the magistrate who drew the warrant, it is proper to charge that he could not rely upon the magistrate's opinion.—Cooney v. Chase, 81 Mich. 203.

¶ 240. Where it appears that defendant in procuring a warrant for plaintiff's arrest on a criminal charge was actuated by hatred and vengeance and that he persistently urged that a warrant issue, though he must have known there was no intent to steal, it is proper to charge that if defendant stated to the justice all the facts within his knowledge, and merely followed the justice's advice, he was not liable, but that it must appear that the conclusion that plaintiff was liable to a criminal prosecution was the operation of the justice's mind based on a full statement by defendant, and not merely the operation of defendant's mind.—Holmes v. Horger, 96 Mich. 408.

¶ 241. An instruction to the jury in an action for malicious prosecution, as to defendant's statement to the prosecuting attorney that if the jury were satisfied, that plaintiff stated fairly to the prosecuting attorney all the material facts in the case, honestly and in good faith, and that the prosecuting attorney advised him to commence the prosecution, and that he acted under such advice, that would be a defense, was sustained; since, although as an abstract proposition, such an instruction might make it necessary for the defendant, who was unlearned in the law, to decide, at his peril, what facts it was material for him to disclose to the prosecuting attorney, whereas, the law only required him to disclose such facts as a man of ordinary intelligence was bound to know were material, in this case, defendant, being a party to such occurrences, need make no mistake as to the facts, or as to which of them were material, and as the story told by him in this case must be assumed to be the same as what he told the prosecuting attorney, the story told the prosecuting attorney was wilfully false, the jury finding that plaintiff's story and not that of defendant was true.—Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350.

¶ 242. A portion of the charge in a suit for malicious prosecution stating that defendant "has got to prosecute with knowledge that he obtains from the counsel whose advice he sought, without malice, or else it was no protection whatever," fairly construed in connection with words that preceded it calling for fairness and honesty, merely indicated that the defendant, to be protected by the advice of counsel, must act on that advice in good faith, and was therefore not error.—Adkin v. Pillen, 136 Mich. 682.

¶ 243. An instruction on advice of counsel given in an action for malicious prosecution held not to be open to the criticism that the court instructed that mere belief that plaintiff committed the offense charged was sufficient cause to make a defense in the action.—Gurden v. Stevens, 146 Mich. 489.

¶ 244. In an action for malicious prosecution an instruction that the advice of the prosecuting attorney followed in good faith after a full and fair statement of all the material facts in the case was a defense to an action for malicious prosecution of a criminal action, approved.—Whittemore v. Walter, 193 Mich. 365.
